The guarantor of a promissory note which is unambiguous as to his liability is precluded from showing an oral agreement accompanying the signing of the instrument that he would never actually be called upon to pay it.

13. Appeal and Error ⇨78(3)

Where parties to cross-complaint are not identical with parties to the original action, order dismissing cross-complaint amounts to a final adjudication between cross-complainants and new parties joined by the cross-complaint and is appealable judgment. West's Ann.Rules on Appeal, rule 2(b) (2).

14. Appeal and Error ⇨356

Where defendants never appealed from an order dismissing their cross-complaints in which new parties were joined so that as to such cross-defendants the judgment had become final, purported appeal as to such parties must be dismissed.

15. Appeal and Error ⇨1180(1)

Where ruling dismissing cross-complaints as to plaintiff bank striking affirmative defense and denying defendants' motion to amend were interlocutory in character and judgment in favor of the bank must be reversed, interlocutory rulings were set aside and the parties restored to the position in which they found themselves at the out-set of the proceedings.

In action on a note, pleadings of cross-complaint negatived the charge that the cross-plaintiff was in full possession of the facts constituting the alleged fraud at the time the renewal note was executed and she was not estopped from denying the obligation on the ground of alleged fraud.

18. Pleading ⇨360(9)

Allegations of cross-complaint were required to be accepted as true on motion for dismissal.

In an action to enforce payment of a promissory note, defendants appeal from a money judgment rendered upon a directed verdict of the jury in favor of plaintiff.

The fundamental issue presented is whether the court erred in not permitting certain defenses based on fraud to be tried by the jury. Other questions raised are (1) the propriety of the dismissal of defendants' cross-complaints at the time of trial without affording leave to amend, and (2) whether parol evidence is admissible to show an agreement between the payee of the note and a guarantor thereof, by which the former promised not to enforce the latter's liability thereon.

Plaintiff bank instituted the within action for the unpaid balance on a promissory note excuted by defendant Lamb Finance Company. In its second count, the bank sought recovery against co-defendant Leah Lamb Poyet, who had guaranteed, by a writing on the reverse side of the note, to pay the indebtedness evidenced by said note. Defendants answered with general denials and eleven affirmative defenses. Mrs. Poyet and the Lamb Finance Company filed cross-complaints against plaintiff, W. N. Newton, assistant manager of plaintiff's Hollywood Main Office, W. A. Angione, former president and director of the Lamb Finance Company, and F. J. McFarland, former accountant of the Lamb Company. The cross-complaints primarily sought damages of $500,000 based on the alleged fraudulent activities of the cross-defendants in connection with certain transactions affecting the cross-complainants.

At the outset of the trial, while the parties were in the chambers of the court, the cross-defendants moved for dismissal of the cross-complaints on the ground that no cause of action was stated. Mrs. Poyet and the company moved for leave to amend. This latter motion was denied, the cross-defendants' motion was granted, and the cross-complaints dismissed. A motion to strike defendants' eleventh affirmative defense was likewise granted.

Prior to the impanelment of the jury, plaintiff bank moved for segregation of what termed the legal and equitable issues. It requested that the court try without a jury the first, sixth, seventh and ninth affirmative defenses on the theory that these constituted equitable defenses on which defendants were not entitled to trial by jury. This motion was granted, the court directing that these defenses were to be tried by the court subsequent to the trial of the legal issues by the jury. After four days of trial, the jury was excused. Trial was then resumed before the court only on the four remaining defenses, two of which were grounded on fraud in the inducement or procurement of the note. At the conclusion of this phase of the trial, plaintiff moved for a directed verdict. The court granted said motion, recalled the jury and directed the return of a verdict for plaintiff. The court then signed and filed its findings and rendered judgment for plaintiff. This appeal followed.

[2] In Ripling v. Superior Court, 112 Cal.App.2d 399, 247 P.2d 117, the court gives cogent expression to the principles determinative of a litigant's right to a trial by jury. These principles, as far as they are here germane, may be epitomized as follows: (1) If the gist of the action as framed by the pleadings is such that the issues raised were cognizable at law in 1850, a trial by jury is a matter of right; (2) even though the case involves equitable principles, if it is one where the common law courts could and would grant relief, trial by jury is preserved; (3) where law and equity possess concurrent jurisdiction to provide relief, the mere existence of a remedy in equity cannot operate to defeat a party's right to elect to proceed at law; (4) it is only where the issues to be tried are exclusively cognizable in equity that a suitor is deprived of the right to a jury trial; (5) those issues that are legal in nature are triable to a jury. 112 Cal.App.2d at pages 401-402, 407, 247 P.2d at pages 118-119, 121. Where an action presents issues of both a legal and equitable nature, a party is entitled to trial by jury of any legal issue remaining after the equitable aspects of the case have been determined by the court. Connell v. Bowes, 19 Cal.2d 870, 123 P.2d 456.

Adverting now to the essential allegations of the affirmative defenses which the court removed from the jury's consideration, it plainly appears therefrom that defendants rely on plaintiff's fraud in the inducement of the execution of the note to defeat their liability thereon.¹ Out of the prolix and indiscriminate welter of allegations which have been incorporated into the answers with noticeable disregard for the niceties of pleading or the precepts of grammar, these significant facts may be culled: That defendant Leah Lamb Poyet was one of the incorporators and later sole stockholder in defendant Lamb Finance Company (sometimes referred to as the company) in January, 1952. W. A. Angione became president and a director of the company in March, 1952, and became acquainted with Mrs. Poyet's financial worth. Angione advised her to transfer certain personal bank accounts and the company's bank account to the Hollywood main office of plaintiff bank upon representations that he had known W. N. Newton, the assistant manager thereof, for many years and that Newton would deal fairly and honestly with her. Unknown to Mrs. Poyet at the time, Angione had informed Newton that he was advising Mrs. Poyet to transfer her deposits to his bank and it was arranged that Newton would ingratiate himself with Mrs. Poyet and Angione would induce her to establish her account in Newton's branch and under his control. On March 3, 1952, Angione introduced her to Newton at plaintiff's Hollywood branch office. Newton told her he would personally arrange to make her deposits in her account and would extend various courtesies to her. Mrs. Poyet thereafter opened her personal account at the Hollywood branch and also transferred $50,000 in cash in an account opened for defendant company, which Mrs. Poyet told Newton was not to be used until a permit was issued by the Corporation Commissioner. Newton assured Mrs. Poyet that he would see to it that she and the company would at all times be protected. He also advised her that Angione was extremely reliable and a man of integrity. Relying on such representations, she left the company's matters entirely in Angione's hands. Thereafter, pursuant to a conspiracy between them and unknown to Mrs. Poyet, Newton permitted Angione to overdraw the company's account in approximately $20,000. Thereafter, on Newton's representation that the company's business was good, that Angione was managing the business well and that the bank would approve a line of credit to the company in the amount of $200,000, a promissory note was executed by Mrs. Poyet on behalf of the company in favor of the bank in the sum of $50,000, Newton stating he would credit this sum to the company's account. Newton also procured her to sign the note as guarantor, stating the bank would never hold her personally liable but would liquidate the note out of the line of credit to be advanced. Newton failed to disclose that Angione had overdrawn the account at the time the note to the bank was executed. Thereafter, the note was periodically renewed upon maturity, Newton failing to advise her that Angione had again overdrawn the company account, and assuring her that the bank would extend the credit applied for although the application had in fact been denied. It is alleged that had defendants known the true state of affairs which Newton misrepresented and concealed, the various notes would not have been executed or renewed.

In support of the trial court's removal of the issues referred to from the jury, plaintiff contends that the defendants' "constitutional right to a jury trial did not extend to the equitable issues of fraud raised in the answers." It argues "that the defense of fraud in the inducement asserted to defeat an obligation on a contract raises issues solely equitable in nature." This position is manifestly untenable.

[3,4] The underlying fallacy permeating plaintiff's argument is its contention that where fraud in the inducement of an instrument, as distinguished from fraud in its execution, is interposed by way of defense to the enforceability of the instrument, the issues thereby presented are exclusively cognizable in equity. This is without historical foundation. Equity jurisdiction is not automatically conferred by a mere charge of fraud made affirmatively or defensively. Casaretto v. DeLucchi, 76 Cal. App.2d 800, 808, 174 P.2d 328. From earliest times, law and equity have exercised concurrent jurisdiction in divers types of controversies to suppress and relieve against fraud. "Again, it hath been said that fraud, accident and trust are the proper and peculiar objects of a court of equity. But every kind of fraud is equally cognizable, and equally adverted to in a court of law * * *." Cooley's Blackstone, 4th Ed., Vol. II, Book III, p. 1178. Lord Mansfield, in the case of Bright v. Eynon (1 Burrow, 391, 395), remarks "fraud or covin may, in judgment of law, avoid every kind of act." That case was a suit upon a note, to which defendant interposed a written discharge. Lord Mansfield granted a new trial so that the jury might consider whether the discharge was obtained from the payee by fraud and imposition. Chief Justice Kent, in delivering the opinion of the court (in 1813) in the case of Jackson ex dem. Gilbert v. Burgott, 10 Johns. N.Y., 457, says "courts of law have concurrent jurisdiction in all cases of fraud. Fraud will invalidate in a court of law as well as in a court of equity and annul every contract and every conveyance infected with it." at page 462. In 1838, speaking for the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Swayze v. Burke, 12 Pet. 11, 9 L.Ed. 980, Mr. Justice McLean states: "That fraud is cognizable in a court of law as well as in a court of equity is a well established principle. It has been often so ruled in this court." In Crane v. Bunnell & Boutwell, 10 Paige, N.Y., 333, an action at law had been brought on a note, to which the defense was asserted that it had been procured by fraudulent misrepresentations regarding a land transaction. Defendant then filed a bill in chancery alleging the same fraudulent misrepresentations as a basis for cancelling the note and enjoining the action at law. The chancellor, conceding he possessed concurrent jurisdiction in cases of fraud, refused to allow the cause to be removed from the court of law which had first taken cognizance. He pointed out that fraud in the inducement in making the note was equally available as a defense in the suit at law, where the parties could have the benefit of a jury trial. At page 340. In Dutil v. Pacheco, 1863, 21 Cal. 438, our Supreme Court dismissed a bill in equity to set aside a judgment in an action growing out of a fraud inducing the sale of property. The court observed that such fraud was a defense which could have been raised in the action at law in which the judgment was rendered.

[5] It is clear that having pleaded fraud defensively to avoid their apparent obligation on the note, defendants were entitled to trial by jury of the issue so raised. The general rule is stated in 50 C.J.S., Juries, § 46, page 758, as follows: "As respects the right to a jury trial, courts of law and courts of equity both have jurisdiction of the issue of fraud in proper cases, and, where the facts constituting the fraud and the relief sought are cognizable in a court of law, the parties are entitled to a jury trial; but, where the case made by the pleadings involves the application of the doctrines of equity and the granting of relief which can be obtained only in a court of equity, the parties are not entitled to a jury trial. So, where fraud is pleaded as a defense in an action at law, the issue is triable by the jury, and in a suit in equity, by the court." Professor Pomeroy, in Vol. III of his treatise on Equity Jurisprudence (5th Ed.), remarks (sec. 872, p. 419): "Fraud in some of its phases, has long been an occasion for the exercise of jurisdiction both in law and in equity. The various reliefs on the ground of fraud which are possible from the nature of the legal and equitable modes of procedure and remedies are the following:

"At law * * * 2. The affirmative relief whereby the defrauded party suffers the transaction to stand and by action recovers pecuniary damages as compensation for the injury maintained by him from the deceit; 3. Defensive relief, whereby the party sets up the fraud as a defense, and thereby defeats any action brought to enforce the apparent fraudulent obligation."

The defense of fraud in the inducement to defeat an apparent contractual obligation or to avoid the effect of various types of written instruments is well recognized in California as raising a legal issue triable before a jury. In Kearney v. Bell, 160 Cal. 661, 117 P. 925, plaintiff sued on an account stated. Defendant's answer contained a defense that she had been induced to execute the account stated by virtue of plaintiff's false representations. At the outset of the trial by jury, plaintiff's motion that the court alone try what he termed the equitable defense of fraud was denied. This ruling was urged as error upon the appeal. In repelling plaintiff's argument, the court observed, 160 Cal. at page 663, 117 P. at page 926: "'An account stated is a contract, and like any other contract may be avoided by showing that the assent of one party thereto was procured by the fraud of the one seeking to enforce the contract. Such a defense is a legal and complete defense' * * * The action upon an account stated is an action at law, and we know of no reason why the defense that the defendant's assent to the account stated was procured by fraud may not be passed upon by the jury, under the instructions of the court. This is what was done in this case, and there was no error in so doing.'"

In Ito v. Watanabe, 213 Cal. 487, 488, 2 P.2d 799, 800, plaintiff sued for the balance of the purchase price under a contract for the sale of a business. Defendant's answer alleged fraudulent misrepresentation inducing the making of the contract, partial failure of consideration, and a prior notice of rescission. Eleven special interrogatories were submitted to the jury, four of which related to the alleged fraudulent misrepresentations, upon which the jury found in defendant's favor. Plaintiff moved the court to disregard this verdict and enter judgment in his favor, which it did. In support of the court's disregard of the jury's verdict, plaintiff maintained that the answer raised only equitable issues, a jury trial was unnecessary, and its verdict only advisory. The court stated: "The present action is brought by the seller for the balance of the purchase price, and the buyer is defending on the ground of fraud, and alleging a prior rescission * * *. Fraud is the issue, and, as raised in this case, it is a legal issue. No equitable doctrine is involved and no equitable remedy is sought [citation]."

Landreth v. Ducommun, 8 Cal.2d 694, 68 P.2d 231, offers an interesting parallel to the matter before us. There, plaintiff sued upon a promissory note. Defendant's answer relied principally upon fraud in the inducement as a bar to his liability upon the note. Upon plaintiff's motion the court directed the jury to render a verdict in her favor. Upon appeal defendant claimed that there was sufficient evidence of fraud to require submission of the case to the jury. The Supreme Court held it to be reversible error to direct a verdict for plaintiff where the state of the record warranted the jury's determination on the issue of fraud in the inducement.

In Wilson v. San Francisco-Oakland Terminal Railway, 48 Cal.App. 343, 191 P. 975, plaintiff brought an action to recover for personal injuries. Defendant pleaded a release executed by plaintiff as a defense to the action. Plaintiff offered to prove the release was obtained from him by various fraudulent misrepresentations of defendant's agents. The court refused to entertain such evidence and directed the jury to enter a verdict for defendant. Upon appeal the case was reversed, the court holding that the question of whether the release was obtained through the fraud alleged is a question for the jury.

[6, 7] The authorities and texts referred to unmistakably establish that where fraud in the inducement is relied upon as a defense to a legal demand based upon a simple contractual obligation, the issue thus raised is properly triable to a jury.² For the proposition that only equity can vitiate a contract where fraud occurred in its inducement, plaintiff relies upon Hartshorn v. Day, 19 How. 211, 15 L.Ed. 605, and George v. Tate, 102 U.S. 564, 26 L.Ed. 232. The Hartshorn case related to a sealed assignment of a patent; the George case to a bond. These instruments were specialties at the common law. In each case it was held that fraud relating to the consideration for the sealed instrument could not be shown in an action at law. In the George case, which cites the earlier decision, the court said: "It is well settled that the only fraud permissible to be proved at law in these cases is fraud touching the execution of the instrument * * *." (Italics added.) It is clear from the italicized language that the rule announced applies to contracts falling within the class of sealed instruments or specialties, which enjoyed a peculiar sanctity at common law. This limited interpretation of the language in the George and Hartshorn cases is, after close analysis, set out in American Sign Co. v. Electro-Lens Sign Co., D.C., 211 F. 196, where the court notes that all of the cases cited involved contracts under seal. As pointed out by Professor Ames in 9 Harv.L.R. 49, a seal was a sacred thing at common law. It showed that the document to which it was attached was executed with studied formality and could not be lightly abrogated. The seal was accorded such reverence, that neither fraud in the inducement, illegality, payment of the obligation, nor failure of consideration would be heard as a defense in an action at law upon sealed contracts. 9 Harv.L.R. 49, 51-54. Such considerations do not prevail in this contemporary age in an action on a promissory note. Fraud in the inducement is available as a defense against the holder, not in due course, of a negotiable instrument. Landreth v. Ducommun, 8 Cal.2d 694, 699, 68 P.2d 231. In the American Sign Company case, supra, the court held that fraud in the inducement interposed by way of defense to an action on a promissory note raises issues cognizable at law. This case is cited as authority for the same proposition in Ito v. Watanabe, 213 Cal. 487, 489, 2 P.2d 799.

[8, 9] Plaintiff asserts that by reason of the prayer, the litigation was transmuted into an equitable proceeding, citing First National Bank of San Pedro v. Superior Court, 71 Cal.App. 64, 234 P. 420. The case cited was one in which a proceeding originally commenced as an action at law was transformed by subsequent pleadings into

2. Plaintiff has cited no California authority to the contrary. On the other hand, the reports are replete with cases in which jury trials are granted in causes where fraud in the inducement has been raised as a defense to a simple contract. In addition to Landreth v. Ducommun, supra, reference may be made to cases where such defense was tried to a jury in actions to enforce a promissory note. Simon Newman Co. v. Lassing, 141 Cal. 174, 74 P. 761; Conner v. Butler, 113 Cal.App. 502, 298 P. 546; J. B. Colt v. Freitas, 76 Cal.App. 278, 244 P. 916.

a suit in equity for a partnership accounting and for the termination of the partnership relationship. The prayer in the instant action does not require the invocation of equitable relief or remedies. The prayer "for the sum of $500,000.00 as damages" is a request for a money judgment based on allegations sounding in tort and which, if established, would constitute a counterclaim predicated on deceit. Both the remedy pursued and the relief asked are legal in nature. It is also prayed that "plaintiff take nothing by its action" and that defendants "be released of any and all liability by reason of the notes, endorsements and guaranties." It is suggested that the latter is a prayer for affirmative relief and indicates the equitable character of the action. A similar contention was repelled in Locke v. Moulton, 108 Cal. 49, 52-53, 41 P. 28, where the court points out that the essential relief sought by defendant is that plaintiff take nothing by the action. A judgment that plaintiff take nothing would effectively release defendants of liability by reason of the notes and guaranty.

[10] It is also urged that even if the issue of fraud had been tried to the jury, the court would have been justified in directing a verdict for plaintiff because "there was no competent evidence of fraud introduced sufficient to justify sending the case to the jury." Having read the voluminous evidence and having examined the numerous exhibits introduced, we are convinced that there was substantial evidence upon which the jury might have found that Mrs. Poyet was a victim of fraud in executing the notes in question. There was evidence that Newton told Mrs. Poyet that the money deposited in the company's account would not be used until a stock permit had been issued, that Newton would keep her informed of any irregularities in the company's accounts, that prior to the execution of the first note Newton failed to inform her that Angione had overdrawn the company's account, that Newton instead told her the company was in good condition, and that Newton assured Mrs.

Poyet that the bank intended to extend a line of credit to the company at a time when he knew credit had been denied. Mrs. Poyet testified that not until February, 1954, did she learn that the company's account was overdrawn over $20,000 as of August 6, 1952. The jury might have believed, in the light of such evidence, that but for Newton's misstatements and concealments on these subjects peculiarly within his knowledge, which cast the financial position of the company in a more favorable light than was warranted by the facts known to Newton, Mrs. Poyet would not have executed the notes. Landreth v. Ducommun, supra, 8 Cal.2d at page 699, 68 P. 2d at page 233.

Since defendants were deprived of a jury trial to which they were entitled, the cause must be reversed to grant them their day in court.

[11, 12] It might be useful, in the event of a new trial, to consider defendants' assignment of error based on the court's exclusion of evidence offered by Mrs. Poyet for the purpose of proving an alleged oral agreement, made on the part of Newton at the time of the execution of the note, to the effect that her guaranty was a matter of form and no personal liability would attach to her as a result of the transaction. The court properly sustained plaintiff's objection to the reception of such testimony, which contradicted the plain language of the guaranty signed by Mrs. Poyet, as incompetent under the parol evidence rule. In Newmark v. H. and H. Products Mfg. Co., 128 Cal.App.2d 35, 37, 274 P.2d 702, 703, this court stated: "Parol evidence of fraud to establish the invalidity of a written instrument induced by a promise made without any intention of performing it is only permissible in the case of a promise to do some additional act which was not covered by the terms of the contract and such evidence is not admissible in the case of a promise directly at variance with the terms of the written instrument. [Citations.]" It is well settled that the maker or guarantor of a promissory note which is unambiguous as to his liability thereon is precluded from showing an oral agreement accompanying the signing of the instrument that he would never actually be called upon to pay it. Shyvers v. Mitchell, 133 Cal. App.2d 569, 572-574, 284 P.2d 826; Shaw v. McCaslin, 50 Cal.App.2d 467, 471, 123 P.2d 102; see Bank of America Nat. Trust & Savings Ass'n v. Pendergrass, 4 Cal.2d 258, 263, 48 P.2d 659. The case of Shyvers v. Mitchell, supra, is squarely in point. The court below admitted oral evidence that at the time respondent signed a promissory note as guarantor, one Partridge, president of the payee bank, represented that respondent would never be held liable thereunder. One of appellant's contentions on appeal was that the court erred in admitting Partridge's statements that respondent would not be required to pay the note he guaranteed. This contention was sustained, the court stating, 133 Cal.App.2d at pages 573-574, 284 P.2d at page 830: "We think it is clear that evidence of the promises of Partridge hereinbefore set forth could not properly be received or considered as constituting a defense to the action, for to do so would in our opinion, violate the parol evidence rule. While it may be true that 'where the execution of a contract has been induced by a promise made without any intention of performing it, this constitutes such fraud in obtaining the contract that it may be declared null and void' [citation], yet when that promise which, because it is squarely against the terms of the writing, does by its very nature, if counted on, supersede that writing, then, even though it be made with intent on the part of the promisor that the promise will not be kept, evidence of it can neither be received nor counted upon to support a finding of fraud. [Citation.] If the judgment in the instant case depended upon the admission of the promises of Partridge we would be required to hold that it was reversible error to admit them and that the judgment was without evidentiary support." That states the rule here applicable.

[13, 14] Defendants also contend that it was error for the trial court to dismiss their cross-complaints on the ground that they failed to state a cause of action, without affording them an opportunity to amend their pleadings. As has been stated, defendants filed cross-complaints against the bank and joined as new parties therein cross-defendants Angione, Newton and McFarland. On September 28, 1955, the motions of each of the cross-defendants to dismiss the cross-complaints were granted with an award of costs except as to plaintiff. The order embodying this ruling was entered in the permanent minutes on September 30, 1955, there being no direction that a written order be filed, Rules on Appeal 2(b) (2). Where the parties to the cross-complaint are not identical with the parties to the original action, the order dismissing the cross-complaint amounts to a final adjudication between the cross-complainants and the new parties joined by the cross-complaint and is an appealable judgment. Keenan v. Dean, 134 Cal.App.2d 189, 191, 285 P.2d 300; Herrscher v. Herrscher, 41 Cal.2d 300, 303, 259 P.2d 901; Kennedy v. Owen, 85 Cal.App.2d 517, 520, 193 P.2d 141. Defendants have never appealed from this order. Therefore, as to cross-defendants Angione, Newton and McFarland such judgment has become final, the time for appeal therefrom having elapsed. As to these parties the purported appeal must be dismissed.³

[15, 16] As to the plaintiff bank, the rulings dismissing the cross-complaints, striking the eleventh affirmative defense and denying defendants' motions to amend their cross-complaints were interlocutory in character. Since the judgment in favor of plaintiff bank must be reversed and the cause remanded for a new trial, these interlocutory rulings are, of course, set aside and the parties restored to the position in which they found themselves at the outset of the proceedings. Hall v. Superior Court, 45 Cal.2d 377, 381, 289 P.2d 431. After an unqualified reversal, the trial court may, in its discretion, permit such amendment of the pleadings as may be proper and appropriate... Holt v. Morgan, 128 Cal.App.2d 113, 118, 274 P.2d 915; Mitchel v. Brown, 78 Cal.App.2d 58, 62, 176 P.2d 957; Heidt v. Minor, 113 Cal. 385, 388, 45 P. 700.

[17-20] Apart from certain criticisms directed to the insufficiency of the cross-complaints to state the requisite elements of actionable fraud, which could ordinarily be supplied by amendment, plaintiff asserts that the pleadings are, in effect, incurably defective because of certain admissions and allegations destructive of defendants' cause of action predicated on fraud. It contends that the pleadings affirmatively show that Mrs. Poyet discovered the alleged fraud prior to the execution of the renewal note in October, 1953. It urges that by renewing the notes with knowledge of the antecedent fraud, she ratified the prior transactions and waived the fraud. It is true that there are numerous cases holding that the renewal of a note with full knowledge of the exercise of fraud in procuring the original may estop the maker from denying the obligation on that ground. However, the allegations of the lengthy pleadings, which need not be discussed in detail, negative the argument that Mrs. Poyet was in full possession of the facts constituting the frauds charged at the time the renewal was executed. There are allegations that Mrs. Poyet did not discover the full extent of Newton's alleged duplicity, misrepresentations and fraudulent concealment of the truth until after the note was last renewed. One example is Newton's statement to her that the bank was granting the company a line of credit far in excess of the amount of the note and that capital would thus be available to pay off the face of the note. Newton reiterated this statement when the note was renewed in October, 1953, and also concealed the fact that the bank had previously rejected the application, a fact that Mrs. Poyet did not discover until November or December, 1953. Furthermore, accepting, as we must, the veracity of this allegation, it would thus appear that fraud infected the renewal of the guaranty. The principle governing guaranty contracts is thus stated in American Nat. Bank of San Francisco v. Donnellan, 170 Cal. 9, 22-23, 148 P. 188, 193: "The contract of surety imparts entire good faith and confidence between the parties in regard to the whole transaction. Any concealment of material facts, or any express or implied misrepresentation of such facts, or any undue advantage taken of the surety by the creditor, either by surprise or by withholding proper information, will undoubtedly furnish a sufficient ground to invalidate the contract." Story, Eq.Jur. § 324. 'If the creditor conceal any fact unknown to the proposed surety which, had he known it, would have deterred him from becoming surety * * * it is a fraud upon him, and relieves him from obligation. Especially is this so where the obligation is entered into at the request of the person to whom the security is given.' [Citation.]"

[21] It is asserted, however, that the pleadings show that Mrs. Poyet discovered some elements of the claimed fraud prior to the execution of the renewal note here sued upon, and that "these earlier discoveries would put Mrs. Poyet upon inquiry and would charge her with all knowledge which a diligent investigation would have discovered." This claim is without merit as a statement of a proposition of immutable law. As stated in French v. Freeman, 191 Cal. 579, 589, 217 P. 515, 519: "We cannot say as a matter of law that when plaintiff discovered the shortage of chickens he was put on constructive notice as to the other frauds. The rule that a person who has discovered that he has been cheated in one particular is put on inquiry as to other possible frauds must be applied with reference to all the circumstances of the case, and is, of course, a question for the trial court to determine."

that defendants' waived fraud as a defense. However, whether there was an implied waiver of the defense of fraud is not ordinarily decided as a matter of law but is essentially a question of intention—an issue of fact which can be resolved only when the trier has before it the evidence bearing on that issue. In French v. Freeman, supra, 191 Cal. at page 590, 217 P. at page 519, the rule is thus stated: "The question of waiver or nonwaiver was one of fact for the trial court to pass upon, and the acts or conduct which defendant claims constituted said waiver were the evidence to be considered in determining the ultimate fact of waiver or nonwaiver * * * Whether or not a person has ratified a voidable contract, or elected to affirm it rather than to rescind it, depends primarily upon his intention, and this is shown by his declarations, his acts, or his conduct, which are matters of fact. The question is therefore a question of fact for the determination of the jury." In Conner v. Butler, 113 Cal.App. 502, 514, 298 P. 546, 551, it is said: "The defense to the note on the ground of fraud was not waived by the mere renewal of the note. There is a conflict of evidence regarding the defendant's knowledge of alleged fraud at the time he renewed the note. * * * 'Ratification of a fraudulent transaction can only be made where there is a full knowledge of the facts constituting the fraud [citation] and depends primarily on the intention of the party as shown by his declarations, acts, and conduct [citation].'" In Chung v. Johnston, 128 Cal. App.2d 157, 164, 274 P.2d 922, 926, the court states: "In the case of fraud the courts are reluctant to spell out a ratification unless the evidence thereof is clear. * * * Waiver of fraud is a question for the determination of the trier of fact. [Citation.] No general rule fits all cases. The question whether acts of the defrauded party do or do not constitute a waiver must be determined in connection with the circumstances of each case [citation]." It has been said that a claimed waiver of fraud by the subsequent acts of the party imposed on "ought to be watched with the utmost strictness, and to stand only upon the clearest evidence as an act done with all the deliberation that ought to attend a transaction the effect of which is to ratify that which in justice ought never to have taken place.'" Green v. Duvergey, 146 Cal. 379, 391, 80 P. 234, 239. It cannot be said as a matter of law from the pleadings that Mrs. Poyet had full knowledge of the facts and clearly intended to waive the alleged antecedent fraud at the time she renewed the notes. See Brakhage v. McCaslin, 52 Cal.App.2d 382, 386, 126 P.2d 378. On the contrary, the matter of waiver was an issue of fact to be decided by the jury after a consideration of all the circumstances of the particular case. Hefferan v. Freebairn, 34 Cal.2d 715, 722, 214 P.2d 386; Friedberg v. Weissbuch, 135 Cal.App.2d 750, 756, 287 P.2d 785; Lobdell v. Miller, 114 Cal.App.2d 328, 338, 250 P.2d 357. For the foregoing reasons the cross-complaints were not vulnerable to a general demurrer.

[25] It is not amiss at this point to comment on the draftsmanship reflected by defendants' pleadings, which were not authored by present counsel. The cross-complaints are most egregious examples of maladroitness pleading, being over-freighted with surplusage, and in places obscure, ambiguous, equivocal and confusing. Some of the language which plaintiff relies upon and narrowly construes as purported admissions that Mrs. Poyet discovered certain matters relating to the frauds charged at a time earlier than that to which she testified under oath, may as readily be the product either of tangled syntax or inadvertent mistake or general ineptness in stating facts. In dismissing the cross-complaints without allowing an opportunity to amend, the judge stated: "The reason for the court's ruling is simply this: This is a trial department, and this case has come in here and it is claimed to be at issue by all of the parties. It has come here for trial. This is a trial department. That is the reason." Defendants' pleadings were never amended and present counsel was never given an opportunity to clarify ambiguities, amend insufficiencies, eliminate surplusage or explain mistaken statements, if any. Such an opportunity should be afforded, particularly with respect to explanation of any purported admissions shown to be the result of excusable inadvertence or unfortunate choice of phraseology. See Meyer v. State Board of Equalization, 42 Cal.2d 376, 386, 267 P.2d 257; Jorgensen v. Dahlstrom, 53 Cal.App.2d 322, 330-331, 127 P.2d 551; Jackson v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co., 95 Cal.App.2d 204, 211, 212 P.2d 591, 595. The controlling philosophy underlying this latter consideration is well expressed in the Jackson case, last cited, as follows: "We think the correct rule with respect to reference to former pleadings which have been substituted by amended pleadings filed by leave of court is that the abandoned and substituted pleadings may be considered only for certain limited purposes, but not to bind the pleader to an untrue and erroneous admission against interest which was inadvertently contained therein, but which has been subsequently disavowed and corrected in an amended pleading filed by leave of court, in which or accompanying which, satisfactory explanation is made of the reason which caused the original erroneous statement. Otherwise, it would be useless and futile to correct an innocent mistake of fact by stating the truth with respect thereto and explaining the cause of the erroneous statement. The primary function of our courts of justice is to ascertain the truth and real facts of a case and to administer justice accordingly. If courts were to bind litigants to inadvertent untrue statements of facts and forbid them the inherent right to correct the false by substituting the true facts, they would become partisans to miscarriages of justice. Our courts not only permit, but strive to elicit, the true facts of all cases, and to render justice by applying the law to such facts."

The judgment in favor of plaintiff bank is reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial, with directions to consider such applications as may be made for an amendment of the pleadings. As to cross-defendants W. N. Newton, W. A. Angione and F. J. McFarland, the purported appeal is dismissed.

CRAG LUMBER COMPANY, Inc., a corporation, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

H. C. CROFOOT and H. C. Crofoot, Jr., individually and doing business as The Crofoot Lumber Company, a co-partnership, Defendants and Appellants.

Civ. 8768.

District Court of Appeal, Third District,
California.

Oct. 1, 1956.

As Modified on Denial of Rehearing

Oct. 26, 1956.

Hearing Denied Nov. 28, 1956.

Purchaser's action for breach of contract. The Superior Court, Mendocino County, Hale McCowen, J., rendered judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Schottky, J., held that evidence sustained finding that vendor had rendered performance impossible by failing to make payments under another contract by which it procured land sold, and that purchaser had not been guilty of any breaches of its contract.

Modified and affirmed.

1. Election of Remedies \S 7(1)

Where affidavit for attachment stated that it was based upon written contract, procuring of writ could not be held to constitute an election by purchaser to pursue remedy of restitution, treating contract as rescinded, rather than remedy of damages for breach of contract.

2. Vendor and Purchaser \S 350

In purchaser's action for breach of contract, evidence would not sustain vendor's contention that purchaser had assumed vendor's obligation to third party from whom vendor procured land in question.

3. Vendor and Purchaser ⇨350

In purchaser's action for breach of contract, evidence sustained finding that vendor had rendered its performance impossible by failing to make payments under another contract by which it procured land sold and that purchaser had not been guilty of any breaches of its contract.

4. Logs and Logging ⇨2

Where, under terms of contract, purchaser was to receive title to real property, as well as to timber, contract was one for sale and conveyance of real property, notwithstanding fact that main purpose for purchase of realty was to obtain timber standing thereon, and Civil Code section relating to detriment caused by breach of agreement to convey an estate in real property, rather than general statute on damages, was applicable to action for vendor's breach of agreement. West's Ann.Civ. Code, §§ 3300, 3306.

5. Vendor and Purchaser ⇨351(1)

Code section relating to detriment caused by breach of agreement to convey an estate in real property prevails over the general statute on damages; but recovery in case governed by special section is limited to those items of damages mentioned therein. West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 3300, 3306.

6. Logs and Logging ⇨2

Quoted phrase, in code section authorizing, in case of bad faith breach of agreement to convey, recovery of, inter alia, expenses properly incurred in preparing to "enter upon the land", has reference to taking of possession rather than to things done to put land to general use; and purchaser of timber lands could not recover, upon vendor's breach, for expenditures made for access roads and for depreciation in value of mill constructed by purchaser to process timber cut from land. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 3306.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Enter upon the Land".

7. Vendor and Purchaser ⇨352

Whether or not purchaser had failed in any duty to minimize damages was a question for trial court to determine upon conflicting evidence in action for breach of contract to convey realty.

8. Damages ⇨62(1)

Duty to minimize damages does not require an injured person to do what is unreasonable or impracticable.

Spurr & Brunner, Ukiah, Sullivan, Roche, Johnson & Farraher, San Francisco, for appellants.

Morris M. Grupp, San Francisco, for respondent.

SCHOTTKY, Justice.

Plaintiff commenced an action against defendants, the complaint setting forth two causes of action. The first cause of action alleged in part:

"That within four years last past, in the County of Mendocino, State of California, defendants above named and each of them became indebted to plaintiff on an open book account as and for moneys had and received by the defendants, moneys expended by the plaintiff on behalf of said defendants and moneys paid to said defendants, all at the specific instance and request of said defendants, and each of them, in the sum of Thirty-Eight Thousand, Two Hundred Thirty-Seven and 50/100 Dollars ($38,237.50), plus interest at legal rate thereon from the 30th day of April, 1948, to date, all of which was pursuant to a written contract between the parties."

The second cause of action alleged that defendants entered into a written contract with plaintiff, and alleged further:

That by virtue of said contract, plaintiff paid to defendants $31,250 in reliance upon the representations of defendants that said defendants were the then owners of said lands; that but for said representations, plaintiff would not have paid the said sum;

That in further reliance upon the representations, plaintiff proceeded to and did construct a mill at a cost to plaintiff of the sum of $174,000; that defendants knew that plaintiff intended to construct a mill; that but for the representations of defendants, plaintiff would not have built said mill; that defendants knew that if their representations were false and fraudulent said mill would not be worth the sum to be expended;

That in reliance upon the representations of defendants plaintiff cut timber from a portion of said land;

That thereafter plaintiff confirmed the fact to be that defendants did not own the lands and that said defendants knew that they did not own the said timber lands and that said defendants knew their representations with reference to ownership were false and untrue and that said defendants' warranty of title was false, fraudulent, and was knowingly made by them as a fraudulent and false warranty;

That by reason of defendants' false and fraudulent representations, plaintiff was obliged to pay $4,950;

That defendants were placed in a position, by reason of their own wrongful and fraudulent representations, which made performance of the contract (with plaintiff) on their part impossible of performance; that plaintiff was damaged by reason thereof in various items of damages totaling $114,275;

That in doing the things alleged, and in knowingly, falsely and fraudulently representing to plaintiff that they, the defendants, were the owners of the said lands, and in knowingly, fraudulently and falsely warranting title, defendants acted maliciously, illegally, and were guilty of a wanton disregard of the rights and feelings of plaintiff, and by reason thereof plaintiff demanded exemplary and punitive damages against the said defendants.

On the same day that the complaint was filed a writ of attachment was issued, the affidavit therefor alleging: "that the Defendants in the said action are indebted to plaintiff in the sum of Thirty-Eight Thousand, Two Hundred Thirty-Seven & 50/100 Dollars ($38,237.50), of the United States, over and above all legal set-offs and counter-claims upon an written contract, for the direct payment of money, to-wit: ——— and that such contract was made and is payable in this State, * * *."

After filing the original complaint plaintiff filed an amendment whereby it substituted the Exhibit "B" to the original complaint for a different exhibit. A demurrer to the original complaint as thus amended having been sustained, the plaintiff filed the second amended complaint herein upon which the issues were joined at the trial.

The second amended complaint also contained two causes of action, the first alleging that:

"* * * defendants above named became indebted to plaintiff upon an open book account for moneys paid over to and loaned to said defendants and moneys paid on behalf of said defendants, all at the specific instance and request of said defendants, and each of them, in the sum of Thirty-Eight Thousand, Two Hundred Thirty-Seven and 50/100 Dollars ($38,237.50), plus interest at legal rate thereon from the 30th day of April, 1948, all of which said money was had or received by the defendants for the use and benefit of the plaintiff."

The second cause of action set forth the contract between defendants and plaintiff and alleged various items of damages resulting to plaintiff because of defendants' "breach of said contract in bad faith."

The defendants' answer, after a general denial of the two counts contained in plaintiff's second amended complaint, set up two affirmative defenses to the first cause of action and three affirmative defenses to the second cause of action.

The affirmative defenses to the first cause of action are (1) that no book account existed between the parties, and (2) that since no book account existed and this is an action on an implied contract, the action is barred by the provisions of section 339, subdivision 1, of the Code of Civil Procedure, the complaint having been filed more than two years after the cause of action arose.

The affirmative defenses to the second cause of action are (1) that plaintiff has irrevocably elected to rescind the contract and is estopped to sue for damages for breach thereof, (2) that the action is barred by the provisions of section 338, subdivision 4, of the Code of Civil Procedure, and (3) that plaintiff, after October 1, 1948, with full knowledge of the facts, assumed the obligations of defendants under the North Coast contract and is estopped to claim damages herein.

The action was tried by the court sitting without a jury. At the conclusion of plaintiff's evidence defendants made a motion for a nonsuit and the court granted the motion as to count one upon the ground that plaintiff had not proved a book account, but denied the motion as to count two. After the trial had been concluded the court found generally in accordance with the allegations of count two and against the affirmative defenses of defendants, and found that plaintiff was entitled to recover the following items of damages from defendant:

A. $31,250 paid on account of purchase price as provided in contract, Exhibit A to plaintiff's second amended complaint, together with interest at legal rate from April 30, 1948, to the date of judgment.

B. For the sums of $781.25 interest and $313.60 taxes paid by plaintiff to defendants by paying said sums, at the specific instance and request of defendants to the North Coast Development Company on behalf of said defendants.

C. For the sum of $1,512.95, for the cost of constructing the roads on the lands in question, so expended in preparation to properly enter upon the land, and which sum the court found to be the reasonable expenditure for that purpose.

D. For the sum of $318 spent for surveying the land in preparation to properly enter upon the land, which sum the court found to be the reasonable sum expended for that purpose.

E. For the sum of $44,400, being the appreciated value of the timber on the lands in question and the sum which said timber appreciated from its value on April 29, 1948, to the date of the breach of the contract.

F. For the sum of $40,000, being the depreciation in the value of the mill from its reasonable value prior to the breach as compared with its value after the breach of the contract in question.

Judgment was accordingly entered in favor of plaintiff in the sum of $118,575.80, with interest on $31,250 from April 30, 1948, and defendants have appealed from said judgment and in arguing for a reversal of the judgment make the following major contentions: I. Respondent rescinded the contract, electing to pursue its remedy for restitution, in assumpsit, by levying an attachment, and was forever thereafter debarred from pursuing the remedy for damages for breach of contract; II. Respondent is estopped to maintain this action by virtue of its breach of the assumption agreement; III. Respondent could not maintain this action because it was first in breach; and IV. The damages awarded are excessive.

Before discussing these contentions we shall give a brief summary of the factual situation, as shown by the record and as found by the trial court, bearing in mind the familiar rule that where there is a conflict in the evidence such conflict must be resolved in favor of respondent.

On April 8, 1948, North Coast Development Company (hereinafter referred to as North Coast), through S. Orie Johnson, sales agent for North Coast, in consideration of $10,000, gave H. C. Crofoot an option to buy certain timber lands, in which were included the lands in controversy here. Crofoot gave North Coast his check for $10,000, payment of which was refused upon presentation to the bank. Under date of April 15, 1948, Johnson notified Crofoot to return the option, and this was done by Crofoot on April 20, 1948.

On April 21, 1948, Mr. Lessard, as president of plaintiff, Crag Lumber Company, paid Crofoot $10,000 as a deposit on the purchase price of the land in question, for which Crofoot Lumber Company (hereinafter referred to as Crofoot) gave a receipt which read in part as follows:

"The Crofoot Lbr. Co. guarantees 25 Million feet of Redwood and Fir timber. Approx. 80% Redwood, 20% Fir and all right of way to said timber guaranteed.

"The stumpage price for said timber to be at the rate of $3.75 per thousand."

During the negotiations Crofoot was told that the land and timber were being purchased for operating purposes, and that Crag planned on building a mill, to saw lumber for sale.

Under date of April 29, 1948, Crofoot (first party) as seller, and Crag Lumber Company (hereinafter referred to as Crag) as buyer, executed a contract (the one in litigation, and hereinafter referred to as Contract 1) for the sale and purchase of certain lands situated in the "Dago Creek Area," in Mendocino County, for $93,750, or $3.75 per thousand feet, Spaulding Scale, for the redwood and fir timber on the land, whichever of the two amounts is the greater, but in any event not less than $93,750, as a guaranteed minimum payment.

Said contract represents that "first party [Crofoot] owns certain lands described in Exhibit 'A', attached hereto * * *" and "first party hereby warrants his said title to said lands and timber situated thereon. * * *"

Payment of the purchase price was to be made as follows: $31,250 upon the execution of the contract, receipt of which was admitted. "This amount shall be applied as the last payment due under the terms of this paragraph, and shall be held [emphasis added] by the first party as a guarantee for the faithful performance of this contract by second party." The balance was to be paid in three installments of $20,833.34 each, on the 29th day of April of 1949, 1950, and 1951, together with interest at the rate of two and one-half per cent (2½%) per annum on the deferred payments.

Crag, inferentially, was given the right to enter upon the land and cut, but "before beginning the removal (emphasis added) of timber from any forty (40) acre tract, described in Exhibit A, to make complete payment in advance therefor to first party on the basis of the Donohoe estimate set forth in Exhibit A." Upon payment of $93,750 Crofoot was "to convey to second party, by a good and sufficient deed, all the real property described in Exhibit A," with certain reservations of hardwood, and certain other timber.

At the date of this contract Crofoot had no interest in the land or timber which he had agreed to sell to Crag. He had been negotiating with North Coast, and an oral agreement for the purchase of the land and timber in question had been reached, but no contract had been executed.

Thereafter, a contract dated April 28, 1948, was executed on May 10th, following. In this contract (hereinafter referred to as Contract 2) Crofoot, the purchaser, agreed to pay North Coast, the seller, $80,000, in three installments of $10,000 each, on or before October 1, 1948, January 1, and

March 1, 1949, respectively, and four payments of $12,500 each, payable on or before June 1, September 1, and December 1, 1949, and April 1, 1950, respectively.

With respect to cutting and removing timber this contract provided:

"It is distinctly understood that while the Parties of the First Part may enter upon said property under this Agreement, that the said Parties of the First Part shall not remove any timber from any of the property covered by this Agreement, except as hereinafter specified. Should Parties of the First Part desire to remove the timber from any group or subdivision as mentioned in 'Exhibit A', said Parties of the First Part shall first notify in writing, deposited in the United States mails by postage prepaid addressed to North Coast Development Company, 2400 Warring Street, Berkeley 4, California, the group or subdivision which said Parties of the First Part desires to cut. Before any cutting is done [emphasis added.] Parties of the First Part shall make payment for each group or subdivision named in the written notice in the amount specified in 'Exhibit A' for the particular group or groups mentioned; such payment or payments shall apply against the sums agreed to be paid as specified in Paragraph 2 hereof."

With respect to the sale of any of said lands, the contract provided:

"Said Parties of the First Part shall have the right to sell any of the property mentioned in 'Exhibit A' subject to the other terms of this Agreement provided first that the amount is paid to the Party of the Second Part for the group desired to be sold as specified and in the amount specified in 'Exhibit A'."

The provisions of the contract concerning default in payments are as follows:

"In case of default of any indebtedness, either of principal, interest, or otherwise, due hereunder, the maturities of the entire balance of all amounts payable hereunder shall be accelerated and such balance shall become due within thirty days following date of mailing postage prepaid of written notice from Party of the Second Part addressed to Parties of the First Part at Redwood Valley, California."

A third contract, dated April 28, 1948, was executed on May 8, 1948, wherein North Coast agreed to sell, and Crofoot to buy, 742 acres of land and timber, outside of the Dago Creek area, at a price of $49,250, of which $25,000 was paid upon the execution of the contract, and the balance payable in three installments, two of $9,000 each, due on the first days of June and July, and the third of $6,250, due on August 1, 1948. It is to be noted that the initial payment of $25,000 was made from the Crag payment of $31,250 on Contract 1. The full price was paid by September 8, 1948, and the land deeded to Crofoot.

Following the execution of Contract 1, Crag secured a mill site, built a mill at a cost of approximately $130,000; had the land surveyed at a cost of $318.00; constructed logging roads on the property at a cost of $1,512.95; brought in loggers, logging equipment, and began falling timber preparatory to milling it.

By October 1, 1948, Crag had felled about 950,000 feet of timber, and Lessard, President of Crag, received word from Johnson, the sales agent for North Coast, to call and see him. At the conference between these two gentlemen Lessard learned for the first time that Crofoot did not own the property and had therein only the rights given by Contract 2, by which he was required to pay in advance before any timber was felled, and permitted to sell only land for which he had paid in full. At that time Lessard was notified by Johnson to stop cutting timber until some settlement was made, and thereafter Crag withdrew from the land and did no more cutting.

The payment of $10,000, due October 1, 1948, on Contract 2 was not made by Crofoot, and pursuant to the acceleration clause in that contract North Coast wrote Crofoot on October 4, 1948, as follows:

"Under your timber purchase agreement No. 2 with us dated April 28, 1948, payment of $10,000.00 was due October 1, 1948.

"Inasmuch as the October 1 payment has not been received, your contract is now in default, and all unpaid balances are now due and payable, as provided in Section 8 of said purchase agreement, as follows:

70,000.	balance of contract
1,600.	interest to November 1
81,600	total due"

Under date of October 18, 1948, Mr. Johnson wrote Crofoot as follows:

"On October 5 you came to this office asking for an extension of time on your Purchase Agreement No. 2 dated April 28, 1948 with the North Coast Development Company, on which nothing has been paid, and concerning which that company sent you under date of October 4, 1948 official notice that the contract was in default.

"At that time you assured us that you could pay $10,000 against this contract not later than the following Monday, October 11, and that you would like to have the January 1 and March 1 payments of $10,000. postponed until April 1, 1949, at which time you would pay $20,000, and meet the other payments as specified in the contract. The way we left the matter was that you should send in the $10,000 as soon as possible, and we would take the matter up with the officers of the North Coast Development Company, and see what arrangements could be worked out. To date we have heard nothing further from you.

"When you were in our office you assured us that the property under contract had not been jeopardized in any manner. I told you it was my understanding that Mr. Lessard had paid you a substantial deposit against this property. You admitted he had paid you $25,000 against a contract to furnish him 25 million feet of stumpage, and although you expected to fulfill your obligation to Mr. Lessard by furnishing him the timber on this North Coast contract, that you were not obligated to deliver him this specific property.

"Recently Mr. Lessard came to see us, and stated he had paid you \$31,000., and had an agreement with you to purchase the North Coast property on Dago Creek, which is the property covered by your Agreement No. 2 with the North Coast Development Company, and that another payment of \$20,000 would be due you January 10, 1949. Mr. Lessard also admitted he had cut 300,000 to 400,000 feet of timber on the 40 near Hendy Grove, presumably the NE $\frac{1}{4}$ of the NE $\frac{1}{4}$ of Section 23, Township 14 N, Range 15 W, although he did not give us the legal description of the 40 on which he had cut. If this is the case, you are in additional default of \$4,950.00—under the terms of your contract with North Coast, Group 8 of Exhibit A."

It appears from the testimony of Miss Schellenger, Secretary of North Coast, who was present at the conference of October 5, 1948, between Johnson and Crofoot, that Crofoot told Johnson he had not agreed to sell Crag the timber in Dago Creek area but only to furnish it 25,000,000 feet. This, in spite of Contract 1.

Pursuant to the suggestion of Johnson in his letter of October 18, 1948, a meeting of Crofoot, Lessard and a North Coast representative was held at the office of Mannon and Brazier in Ukiah, California, on October 30, 1948. At that conference Crofoot agreed to deliver to Mannon and Brazier, on or before November 4, 1948, a cashier's or certified check, payable to North Coast, for $11,913.60, in payment of the following items: $1,600 interest to October 28, 1948, on $80,000 (the purchase price specified in Contract No. 2), $10,000, installment of principal which accrued October 1, and $313.60, the first installment of taxes. Crag agreed to pay within fifteen days $4,950 for the timber cut on the land, to be applied as a credit on the January 1st installment of $10,000, to accrue on Contract No. 2.

None of these payments were made within the times specified, but about December 1, 1948, North Coast was paid $11,913.60 by Crofoot, of which $1,094.85 was advanced by Crag. This advance covered $313.60 for taxes, and $781.25 interest for six months at two and one-half per cent (2½%) on the balance of the Crag-Crofoot contract. On December 20th Crag paid North Coast $4,950 for the timber trespass, which was credited on the installment of $10,000 to accrue January 1, 1949, on the North Coast-Crofoot contract, leaving a balance of $5,050 to be paid by Crofoot on the date last mentioned.

Sometime during November, 1948, the exact date of which is not fixed by the evidence, H. C. Crofoot, Sr., and Mr. Lessard had a meeting in Ukiah, at which one of the topics discussed was the course which the payments from Crag to Crofoot were to take. Lessard told Crofoot that in the future he would like to make those payments direct to North Coast, undoubtedly for the purpose of channeling them to the owner so that they could not be diverted by Crofoot for some other purpose. According to Crofoot, it was agreeable to him, and from that time on he paid no attention to the payments accruing on that contract as he considered that Crag had assumed his obligations thereunder.

Under the terms of the North Coast-Crofoot Contract 2, $10,000 was to be paid on January 1, 1949. On December 21, 1948, Crag had paid $4,950, which was credited against this installment, leaving a balance of $5,050. By January 5th Crofoot had not paid that balance, and a reminder was sent to Crofoot. Under date of January 8, 1949, Earl Sherman, for Crofoot, wrote that "Mr. Crofoot is feeling much better now and is able to be up and around and has asked me to inform you that he will be able to come down to see you January 14th."

Payment of the above mentioned balance not having been made by January 17th, a registered letter was sent by North Coast to Crofoot, reminding him of the failure to pay and advising that principal of $65,000 and interest in the amount of $433.66 were immediately due.

Under date of February 28, 1949, B. M. Schellenger, Secretary of North Coast Development Company, wrote Crofoot as follows:

"Inasmuch as we have not received the check, which you assured us would be in our hands not later than Wednesday of last week, we have no recourse but to place your defaulted contract in the hands of Mannon and Brazier, Ukiah, California. The file is going forward to them today. We ask that you communicate with Mr. Brazier, instead of this office, in connection with all matters relating to this contract."

To this letter under date of March 10 1949, Crofoot replied as follows:

"I have been meaning to get in touch with you, but I haven't been feeling too well again, and unable to do anything. The lumber business has been bad as I guess you know.

"I had a chance to sell the Mill and Timber in the Orr Springs, area. I am going to close up the deal on the 18th as you can see by the attached notice. The timber I have to let go on a cutting basis which will work out in a term of years.

"Mr. Lessard came down and I guess he is having some delays on his loan but felt sure it would be through by the 1st. He said he would be able to take care of his payment at that time. I will take care of the balance of the payment on closing this mill deal."

No further payments were made, and in an attempt to save the situation Crag made an offer to Crofoot to assume and pay the balance of Contract 2 in full, if Crofoot would pay $16,664.60, the amount of the delinquent interest and principal. As a memorandum of the proposed agreement, Lessard prepared, executed for Crag, and left with Crofoot, the following:

"April 27th, 1949

"1. Crofoot agrees to assign North Coast Dev. Co. contract #2 (Dago Creek) to Crag.

"2. Crofoot agrees to furnish prior to May 15, 1949 the sum of $16,664.60 to be paid to North Coast Dev. Co. in order to bring said contract up to date.

"3. Crag agrees to assume and pay balance of said contract in full.

"4. Balance due under Crofoot-Crag contract to be paid quarterly commencing July 1, 1949 (12500 each), other terms to remain in effect.

"5. Crag to receive credit on Crofoot-Crag contract for all sums paid or to be paid on North Coast-Crofoot contract (Dago Creek) by Crag.

"Crag Lumber Co Inc
"By Ed Lessard Pres."

This agreement was never executed by Crofoot and Crag did not pay the installment of $20,833.44 due on contract No. "1" on April 29, 1949, and the Crofoots did not make the payment to North Coast which was necessary to relieve them from default under their contract with North Coast, and sometime later, the exact date of which is not shown by the evidence, the "Dago Creek lands" were sold by North Coast to a third party.

The record shows that on November 21, 1950, a letter was written to North Coast by R. K. Shore, a certified public accountant, stating that H. C. Crofoot had retained him to audit his affairs for the past three years and stating that Crofoot's records contained certain data that he (Shore) wished to verify. A part of the letter stated: "Contract #2, being in default, was revoked and the entire $14,950 paid by Mr. Crofoot forfeited in March 1949." At the end of the letter was the statement: "You are hereby authorized to comply with the above request," signed by H. C. Crofoot.

Appellant H. C. Crofoot testified that defendants had between $60,000 and $70,000 in two banks, and at any time could have paid any outstanding obligations. For failing to pay North Coast, he offered the excuses that he did not know that the North Coast contract was in default, and that Crag had agreed to make the payments on that contract, that he paid no further attention to it, and assumed that the payments had been made.

[1] Appellants' first major contention is that respondent rescinded the contract between appellants and respondent by electing to pursue its remedy for restitution upon an implied contract by levying an attachment, and was thereafter debarred from pursuing the remedy for damages for breach of contract. In support of this contention appellants assert: (a) The pursuit of the remedy for restitution, by count one of the original complaint, constituted a rescission of the express contract between the parties; (b) the attachment obtained by respondent was based on count one of the original complaint; (c) by obtaining the levy of an attachment, respondent elected to pursue its remedy for restitution upon implied contract.

Appellants argue that in an action based upon a breach of contract, the injured party has the election to pursue either the remedy of restitution treating the contract as rescinded and suing to recover what he has paid, or sue for damages, but that he cannot do both. They cite Boshes v. Miller, 119 Cal.App.2d 332, at page 337, 259 P.2d 447, 449, a case involving a breach of contract, where the court said:

"* * * He could have treated the contract as rescinded because of defendants' breach, and sued for the amount by which defendants had been unjustly enriched, or he could have stood on the contract and sued for damages resulting from the breach. He could not do both, and if he recovered on one theory he could not recover on the other. He could not take out his money, which was the consideration for the contract, and at the same time enforce the contract. As long as the contract had not been modified, superseded or rescinded his action was on the contract."

Appellants also state that it is the settled law in California that when a plaintiff, in pursuit of one of several inconsistent remedies, obtains an attachment, he gains an advantage over his adversary and that act constitutes an irrevocable election to pursue that remedy. They quote the following from Steiner v. Rowley, 35 Cal.2d 713, at page 720, 221 P.2d 9, at page 13:

"Concerning the effect of the writ of attachment obtained by the Steiners, the doctrine of election of remedies is based upon the principle of estoppel. 'Whenever a party entitled to enforce two remedies either institutes an action upon one of such remedies or performs any act in pursuit of such remedy, whereby he has gained an advantage over the other party, * * * he will be held to have made an election of such remedy, and will not be entitled to pursue any other remedy for the enforcement of his right.' De Laval Pac. Co. v. United Cleaners & Dyers Co., 65 Cal.App. 584, 586, 224 P. 766, 767 * * *

"An action for tort in which exemplary damages are sought is inconsistent with one for money had and received. Civ.Code, sec. 3294. The Steiners were therefore required to make a timely election of remedies.

Pleading the two causes of action in the alternative did not constitute an election because inconsistent counts are permissible [citing cases] and an election cannot be forced by demurrer [citing case]. But the Steiners also obtained an attachment. This was a positive act of a plaintiff 'in pursuit of * * * [the contractual remedy] * * * whereby he has gained * * * advantage over the other party. * * *' De Laval Pac. Co. v. United Cleaners & Dyers Co., 65 Cal. App. 584, 586, 224 P. 766, 767."

Respondent in reply argues that the attachment was not issued upon an implied contract; that there was no action on implied contract filed, and respondent points out that the affidavit for attachment states specifically that the attachment was based "upon a written contract for the direct payment of money."

The record shows that after the filing of the Second Amended Complaint and before trial, appellants moved the trial court for an order declaring that respondent, by obtaining an attachment, had elected to pursue its remedy upon an implied contract for restitution, and to dismiss Count Two upon the grounds that respondent, having elected to pursue its remedy for restitution, was debarred from seeking damages for breach of contract. Respondent filed an affidavit in opposition to said motion, alleging, among other things, that the attachment was not based upon Count One of the original complaint but was based on various items of damage suffered by respondent because of appellants' breach of the written contract incorporated as Exhibit "A" in the second cause of action.

It is to be noted that the affidavit for attachment does not refer specifically to either cause of action but does state that it was based upon a written contract. It is apparent also that respondent was seeking to recover damages suffered by it because of appellants' alleged breach of contract. It is true that the amount set forth in the affidavit for attachment and in the writ of attachment was $38,237.50, the same as the amount set forth in the first cause of action, but it is also true that this sum of $38,237.50 includes more than the sum of $31,500 which respondent had paid to appellants under the contract, and includes the sums of $4,950 paid by respondent to North Coast Development Company on behalf of appellants; $1,300 spent to construct necessary roads on the land; $512.50 for rights of way which under the contract were to be provided by appellants; and $225. In this state of the record we do not believe that the trial court erred in denying appellants' motion to dismiss Count Two upon the ground that respondent was debarred from seeking damages for breach of contract. As stated in Steiner v. Rowley, supra, and quoted by appellants: "Concerning the effect of the writ of attachment obtained by the Steiners, the doctrine of election of remedies is based upon the principle of estoppel."

The record shows further that after the conclusion of the trial in which a non-suit had been granted as to Count One, but before the case was decided by the trial court, appellants made a motion to dissolve the attachment upon the ground that it was based upon Count One as to which the non-suit had been granted. After a full hearing at which all of the exhibits which were before the court at the trial were introduced in evidence, the court denied said motion.

The court also, in its findings as to the affirmative defense of appellants to the second cause alleging that respondent had irrevocably elected to rescind the contract and was estopped to sue for the breach thereof, found substantially as follows:

That it is not true that by the first cause of action of the original complaint plaintiff sued upon implied contract; that plaintiff sued on an open book account alleging that the sum sued for was "pursuant to a written contract" but did not refer to any specific contract; that Exhibit "A" was for the first time referred to and incorporated into the complaint by the second cause of action, which seeks to recover damages for the breach of Exhibit "A" to the second amended complaint; that upon the filing of the original complaint, plaintiff obtained the issuance of a writ of attachment and the defendants' bank account has ever since been held under levy; that the issuance of the attachment was not based upon the first cause of action of the original complaint, but was based on the sum alleged due under a written contract as set forth in the "Affidavit for Attachment Against Resident"; that thereafter plaintiff filed a second amended complaint prior to any motion to dismiss the attachment and thereafter upon defendants' demand a bill of particulars was filed by plaintiff, setting forth the items allegedly constituting the items of the book account, the basis of the first cause of action; that no combination of said items constitutes or equals the amount for which the attachment was issued; that the second cause of action based upon the written contract, Exhibit "A", contained, among others, six items of damages which totalled the exact amount of the attachment and the exact amount referred to in the "Affidavit for Attachment Against Resident" and under said second amended complaint, the only count which contained a written contract as set forth in the said affidavit was the second count; that the attachment being so issued on the basis of the affidavit setting forth therein that the same was based upon an indebtedness arising out of a written contract was based upon the second cause of action and not upon the first cause of action.

While it must be stated that the record shows a somewhat unusual and confusing situation so far as the pleadings are concerned, we do not believe that either reason or authority would justify us in holding that the issuance of the attachment in the instant case constituted an irrevocable election to rescind the contract or to estop or debar respondent from proceeding with the second cause of action for breach of contract. It is evident that what respondent was seeking to do was to recover alleged damages for breach of the contract and it would be an extremely technical and unrealistic construction of the authorities to hold otherwise.

[2] Appellants' second major contention is that respondent is estopped from maintaining this action by virtue of its breach of the assumption agreement. Appellants contend that when respondent, in October of 1948, advised appellants that it would assume the payment obligations of the North Coast contract, with full credit for what had already been paid and with adjustment upon the final cut, which is supported by all of the subsequent conduct of the parties, and thereafter failed to make such payments, respondent became estopped from asserting the failure to make such payments by appellants as the cause for alleged damages. With reference to the fact that the so-called assumption agreement was not in writing, appellants argue that it would be a fraud upon them to allow respondent to assert the statute of frauds with reference to it. It appears from the record that nearly seventeen months after filing their answer to respondent's second amended complaint, appellants filed an amended answer in which they for the first time set up the defense that respondent, with full knowledge of appellants' contract with North Coast, "promised and agreed with defendants to assume and pay the future payments under said contract and defendants promised and agreed to credit such payments as they were made upon the contract between plaintiff and defendants referred to as Exhibit A in plaintiff's Second Amended Complaint," and that "Thereafter, and relying upon said promise and agreement aforesaid, said defendants, and each of them, made no further payments to said North Coast Development Company but depended and relied upon said plaintiff to make said payments as they became due for its own protection and to take credit therefor upon its said contract with defendants."

Respondent points out that the trial court found that these allegations were not true, and asserts correctly that this issue is a factual one and that the trial court's findings upon it are supported by the record. We have read the record and the exhibits carefully and the evidence upon this issue is highly conflicting. It resolved itself very largely into a question of whether the court believed the testimony of appellant Crofoot or Mr. Lessard, President of Crag Lumber Company, and the court evidently chose to disbelieve the testimony of Crofoot. We are satisfied that there is support in the record for the court's finding upon this issue. There appeared to be a willingness upon respondent's part to assume the payments under Crofoot's contract with North Coast if Crofoot complied with certain conditions and made certain payments. This is indicated by the following excerpt from Lessard's testimony quoted by appellants in the supplement to their opening brief:

"I told him that if this thing were brought up to date and everything was cleaned up, that we could make future payments, if he would turn the contract over to us, but with full credit for the moneys already paid, and that the $80,000.00 contract [North Coast-Crofoot contract] was to be thrown aside."

But there is testimony to support a finding that appellants did not make such payments or perform said conditions.

[3] Appellants' third major contention is that respondent could not maintain this action because respondent was first in breach of its contract with appellants. Appellants contend that respondent has been guilty of three breaches of its contract, which are: (1) failure to make its payment under the terms of the contract when it became due on April 29, 1949; (2) failure to pay for the stumpage on the 40 acre section from which it removed timber "before beginning the removal"; and (3) its failure to account to appellants for the exact stumpage removed from said 40 acres and pay the difference between the advance payment called for under its contract and the amount due based on the actual removal. The default with regard to the second point only was cured. Appellants argue that $16,978.19 was due from Crag to Crofoot on April 29, 1949, which was more than was due from Crofoot to North Coast, but for the acceleration of payments, and that North Coast was willing to waive the acceleration had the $16,978.19 been paid.

Appellants contend further that there was no anticipatory breach on April 29, 1949, which would excuse Crag's duty to perform its obligation under the contract and make the payment due. They argue that even though they may have been in default, it was not impossible for them to perform their contract with respondent, as they might have reinstated their contract with North Coast.

Respondent in reply argues that appellants' contention that respondent was first to breach the contract cannot be sustained. They state that respondent could not reasonably be required to make a payment to appellants on April 29, 1949, which was two months after appellants' contract with North Coast was forfeited and terminated, and the Crofoots had been in breach of the Crag-Crofoot contract in failing to protect Crag's rights to cut and remove timber, its rights to possession and its ultimate right to get title. They state further that these present rights were the most important part of the contract and from the very outset Crofoot was in breach because respondent was given a right to cut trees without paying for them "until before 'removal'"; that appellants gave away something they did not have, unless they first met a condition precedent, to-wit: pay North Coast before respondent cut. They point to the testimony that when North Coast learned of respondent's entry, it instructed respondent not to cut any more timber on their property; that Crofoot did more than "indicate" that "he will not perform," and he did more than render "substantial performance apparently impossible," either one of which is all that is needed for anticipatory breach; he rendered substantial performance impossible.

It is apparent from the record that there is a sharp conflict in the evidence upon this issue but we are convinced that the record supports the finding and conclusion of the trial court that respondent was not guilty of any breaches of its contract with appellants but that appellants by failing to make the payments under their contract with North Coast were responsible for the forfeiting of their contract with North Coast, thus rendering it impossible for them to perform under their contract with respondent. Appellants have pointed to testimony which would have sustained a finding in their favor, but the trial court was not bound to find in accordance with this testimony in view of the testimony in conflict with it.

Appellants' next contention is that if respondent is entitled to any damages at all (and appellants have contended most earnestly that they are not), the amount of damages awarded is excessive.

In their opening brief appellants contend that the amount of damages to which respondent is entitled (if at all) is limited by section 3306 of the Civil Code which reads:

"The detriment caused by the breach of an agreement to convey an estate in real property, is deemed to be the price paid, and the expenses properly incurred in examining the title and preparing the necessary papers, with interest thereon; but adding thereto, in case of bad faith, the difference between the price agreed to be paid and the value of the estate agreed to be conveyed, at the time of the breach, and the expenses properly incurred in preparing to enter upon the land."

Respondent in its brief states:

"But, conceding for a moment that it was not a proper item under Section 3306 of the Civil Code, respondent cannot accept appellants' interpretation, that no other damage is recoverable in this action other than those allowed under Section 3306 of the Civil Code.

"As we have heretofore pointed out, the Crag-Crofoot contract is more than a contract to convey land. The land values were of little significance to the parties themselves."

Appellants in their closing brief state

"This cause was pleaded and tried and the judgment of the trial Court rendered upon the theory that the contract involved was one for the conveyance of real property and the measure of damages provided in Section 3306 of the Civil Code was applied. It was and is the contention of appellant that the contract was not one for the sale and conveyance of real property and the measure of damages for a breach is that provided in Section 3300 of the Civil Code. The Court committed reversible error in adopting the measure of damages expressed in Section 3306 rather than Section 3300 of the Civil Code for which reason the judgment should be reversed and a new trial had so that the proper measure of damages, if any, will be applied."

Section 3300 of the Civil Code reads:

"For the breach of an obligation arising from contract, the measure of damages, except where otherwise expressly provided by this Code, is the amount which will compensate the party aggrieved for all the detriment proximately caused thereby, or which, in the ordinary course of things, would be likely to result therefrom."

Appellants' principal attack upon the damages awarded by the court is upon the item of $40,000 for depreciation in the value of the mill. In their opening brief appellants argue that such damages are not provided for by section 3306 of the Civil Code, and in their closing brief appellants argue that the court committed reversible error in adopting the measure of damages expressed in section 3306 rather than in section 3300 of the Civil Code.

It is apparent that there was doubt in the minds of counsel and the court as to which section or sections entitled respondent to recover damages, but it is also clear from the record that what was at issue in the instant case was whether or not appellants had breached their contract with respondent and, if so, what damage had resulted to respondent by reason of such breach. As we have hereinbefore pointed out, the record supports the findings of the trial court that the appellants, by failing to make the payments under their contract with North Coast, were responsible for the forfeiting of their contract, thus rendering it impossible for them to perform under their contract with respondent. The following statements of the trial court in its order for findings are supported by the record:

"[Appellant] H. C. Crofoot, testified that defendants had between $60,000.00 and $70,000.00 in two banks, and at any time, could have paid any outstanding obligations. For failing to pay North Coast, he offered the excuses that he did not know that the North Coast contract was in default, and that Crag had agreed to make the payments on that contract, that he paid no further attention to it, and assumed that the payments had been made. Neither of these excuses carry any weight, when considered in the light of the other evidence in the case.

"From the very outset, Crofoot was in breach of Crag contract, by selling timber to be paid for on removal; when their right, and this acquired after the execution of Contract No. '1', was to cut the timber only after notice in writing had been given to North Coast, and payment in advance made for the timber to be cut. Of the deposit made by Crag, to *'be held * * * as a guarantee for the faithful performance'*, of the contract, $25,000.00, was used by Crofoot, not as a payment on the contract in question, but applied on the purchase of other lands, for which payment in full was made, by September of 1948, and those lands conveyed to Crofoot.

"Under the facts of this case, no conclusion, other than [that] the breach was wilful and the product of bad faith, can be reached."

After finding as to the various items of damage hereinbefore set forth, the court concluded:

"That the acts and omissions of the defendants as found by this Court in the findings of fact constitute a breach, in bad faith, as of February 28, 1949, of the contract, Exhibit A to plaintiff's second amended complaint; and by said acts and omissions defendants wilfully placed themselves in a position under which they could not then or ever carry out the terms and conditions of said contract, Exhibit A to plaintiff's second amended complaint, on their, defendants', part to be kept and performed.

"That by reason of the defendants' breach of the said contract wilfully and in bad faith, the plaintiff suffered damages and is entitled to judgment against the defendants and each of them, therefore, as follows:"

[4] Even if we adopted the contention of appellants made in their closing brief, with which respondent agrees, that the proper measure of damages is that provided in section 3300 of the Civil Code, which is "the amount which will compensate the party aggrieved for all the detriment proximately caused thereby", see Kline v. Guaranty Oil Company, 167 Cal. 476, 140 P. 1, respondent could not recover both the appreciation in the value of the timber and the depreciation in the value of the mill. To permit recovery of both would exceed the statutory limit. Civ.Code, sec. 3300. The depreciation in the value of the mill was not a loss suffered by respondent by reason of the breach. Not only such decrease in value, but the total depreciation of the mill, would have been borne by respondent if the contract had been fully performed. A proportionate part thereof would have been chargeable as a necessary expense against the anticipated profits to be realized from the contemplated use of the timber. To permit recovery of the depreciation of the value of the mill, as well as the increase in the value of the timber, would unjustly enrich respondent. Monetarily, it would be in a better position than if the contract had been fully performed. It would receive an amount in excess of that which would compensate it for the loss proximately caused by the breach. Thus, even under section 3300, respondent could not be awarded damages for both the increase in the value of the timber and the amount of the depreciation of the mill. Moreover, we do not believe that in this case the proper measure of damages is that provided for in section 3300. The trial court's finding that the appellants wilfully and in bad faith breached the contract supports an award for those items of damages specified in Section 3306 of the Civil Code. Although, as the parties contend, the timber was the important thing for which they were contracting, nevertheless appellants agreed to convey title to the real property after the completion of the installment payments provided for in the contract. Therefore, the rule announced by this court in Palmer v. Wahler, 133 Cal. App.2d 705, 711, 285 P.2d 8, 12, is inapplicable. We therein declared that "standing timber purchased separately from the land under a contract for severance, thereby becomes personalty for all purposes depending upon the contract of purchase." (Emphasis added.) In the instant case, under the terms of the contract, the respondent was to receive title to the real property, as well as to the timber. The contract did not cease to be one to convey title to real property by reason of the fact that the main purpose for the purchase of the realty was to obtain the timber standing thereon. The trial court found that the appellants, in bad faith, breached the contract. Section 3306 provides:

"The detriment caused by the breach of an agreement to convey an estate in real property, is deemed to be the price paid, and the expenses properly incurred in examining the title and preparing the necessary papers, with interest thereon; but adding thereto, in case of bad faith, the difference between the price agreed to be paid and the value of the estate agreed to be conveyed, at the time of the breach, and the expenses properly incurred in preparing to enter upon the land."

Thus, under said section respondent was entitled to recover the amount paid upon the purchase price "and the expenses properly incurred in examining the title and preparing the necessary papers, with interest thereon." (Emphasis added.) In addition, due to appellants' bad faith, the award properly included the amount of the increase in value of the timber, Civil Code, sec. 3306; Nelson v. Fernando Nelson & Sons, 5 Cal.2d 511, 517-518, 55 P.2d 859, and "the expenses properly incurred in preparing to enter upon the land." Civil Code, sec. 3306. However, interest is not allowable upon such items of special damages. Boshes v. Miller, supra, 119 Cal.App. 2d at pages 336 and 337, 259 P.2d 447. The statute, sec. 3306, does not so provide. Neither does it authorize an award for damages for the depreciation in the value of the mill.

[5,6] We have said that even under section 3300 the depreciation of the value of the mill could not be allowed since it would constitute double recovery, but we think that section does not govern and that the damages herein must be measured by section 3306 of the Civil Code. That section is a special section relating to detriment caused by breach of agreement to convey an estate in real property and, being special, its provisions prevail over the general statute on damages and recovery in a case governed by that section is limited to those items of damages mentioned therein. The section purports to state what damages are recoverable in such case and damages not therein mentioned are thereby excluded and cannot be recovered. The only provision of that section which it is claimed covers the item under discussion is that the item constitutes a cost to respondent to enter upon the land. The trial court found that this item was a cost for entry upon the land and also that the building of access roads to and into the land for the purpose of taking out timber from the land to the mill were costs expended in preparation for such entry. But these costs were not expenditures incurred in preparing to enter upon the land. They were expenditures made in accomplishing the general purposes for which the property was bought, that is, expended in the use of the land. The phrase "to enter upon the land" refers to the taking of possession rather than to things done to put the land to general use. This land was timber land. Its highest and best use was for the marketing or manufacturing into lumber of the timber growing thereon. Nothing was expended in preparing to enter upon the land. The expenditures were made for the use of the land and that use continued for some time until, by reason of appellants' breach of the contract, possession was lost. In view of the foregoing we are convinced that, except for the depreciation in value of the mill and of the moneys expended in the building of access roads, the record supports the judgment, but that the judgment should be modified by striking out the award of damages for such depreciation of the mill and for the cost of such access roads.

Appellants argue also that the allowance of the difference in the value of the timber between the date of the contract and the date of its breach was not proper because, appellants contend, there is no evidence in the record as to what the actual damages of respondent were. However, the following statement in the memorandum opinion of the trial court appears to be supported by the record:

"There is little, or no conflict, in the evidence, on the amount of damages suffered by plaintiff. The only item, on which any evidence was offered by defendant, related to the increase in the value of timber, and that is practically in accord with the evidence offered by the plaintiff."

The court found that appellants by their acts and omissions "wilfully placed themselves in a position under which they could not then or ever carry out the terms and conditions of said contract." While there is considerable conflict in the testimony, we are satisfied that the evidence supports the findings both as to the breach and as to the damages, with the exception of the items allowing damages for the amount of the depreciation in the value of the mill and the cost of the access roads.

Appellants' final contention is that respondent failed to comply with its duty to mitigate damages. Appellants argue that if respondent "had made its payment on April 29, 1949 as called for by the contract no damage would have occurred at all because as Crag thereafter removed timber to provide its mill with the necessary logs as it had contemplated, sufficient moneys would have become due to keep the payments to North Coast current."

Respondent in reply states that appellants overlook the fact that Crofoot's contract with North Coast was terminated two months before April 29, 1949.

[7,8] Whether or not respondent failed in any duty to minimize damages was a question for the trial court to determine upon the conflicting evidence hereinbefore referred to. As stated in Valencia v. Shell Oil Co., 23 Cal.2d 840, at page 846, 147 P.2d 558, at page 561: "The duty to minimize damages does not require an injured person to do what is unreasonable or impracticable."

No other points raised require discussion.

In view of the foregoing we are convinced that, with the exception of the depreciation of the mill and the cost of the roads hereinbefore mentioned, the record supports the judgment, but that the judgment should be modified by striking out the award of damages for said depreciation of the mill and the cost of the roads.

The judgment is modified by subtracting from the total sum thereof, to-wit, $118,-575.80, together with interest at the legal rate on the sum of $31,250.00 of the above amount from April 30, 1948, to the date of judgment, the sum of the amount allowed for depreciation in the value of the mill and the amount allowed for construction of roads, these two sums totaling $41,512.95, and as so modified the judgment is affirmed.

Plaintiff and Appellant,

v.

CITY OF CONCORD, a municipal corporation, and Tony Freitas, and First, Second, Third Does, and XYZ Company, Defendants and Respondents.

Civ. 17000.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 2, California.

Oct. 4, 1956.

Action for false arrest, false imprisonment and assault and battery by minor through guardian ad litem against police officer and municipality. From a judgment of the Superior Court, County of Contra Costa, Hugh H. Donovan, J., dismissing second complaint on ground that issues had been adjudicated in prior action, minor appealed. The District Court of Appeal held that where minor permitted judgment sustaining demurrer to complaint on same cause of action to become final, and second complaint was identical to first except in respect to allegation of estoppel which was determined not to be applicable, first judgment was res judicata, even though erroneous.

Affirmed.

1. Judgment \Leftrightarrow 572(2)

A judgment on a general demurrer will have the effect of a bar in a new action in which the complaint states the same facts which were held not to constitute a cause of action on the former demurrer or, notwithstanding differences in the facts alleged, when the grounds on which the demurrer in the former action was sustained is equally applicable to the second one.

2. Municipal Corporations ⇨724, 747(3)

The operation of a police department by a municipality is a governmental function, and in the absence of a special statute rendering it liable, the municipality is not liable for the torts of its officers in the performance of governmental functions and the same rule applies to damages caused by negligence of municipality itself in exercise of governmental function.

3. Judgment ⇨572(2)

In action for false arrest, false imprisonment, assault and battery by minor through his guardian ad litem against municipality, where previous complaint was dismissed on general demurrer of municipality setting forth governmental immunity from torts of its officers, and second complaint set forth no new allegations against the city except with respect to estoppel which was determined by the court to be irrelevant, the doctrine of res judicata with respect to the municipality was applicable.

4. Municipal Corporations ⇨741(1)

Statute requiring presentation of verified claims for damages to clerk of municipality and officer for personal injuries as a result of negligence or carelessness of officer within 90 days does not apply to causes of action based on intentional torts. West's Ann.Gov.Code, § 1981.

5. Judgment ⇨660

Where no appeal has been taken, an erroneous judgment is as conclusive as a correct one.

6. Judgment ⇨576(1)

Where upon demurrer to complaint against police officer for false arrest, false imprisonment and assault and battery both parties had misapprehended the law as to the applicability of claims statute against public officers, and had induced the court to do the same, judgment had been permitted to become final and second complaint was identical with first, the doctrine of res judicata was applied even though first judgment was erroneous. West's Ann.Gov.Code, § 1981.

7. Judgment ⇨576(1)

Exception to res judicata doctrine in case where rigid adherence would defeat the ends of justice, contrary to important considerations of policy, would not be applied simply because first judgment sustaining demurrer to complaint was erroneous.

PER CURIAM.

Plaintiff appeals from a judgment entered on the sustaining of demurrers to his complaint and dismissal of said complaint on the ground that the issues raised in it had been adjudicated in a prior judgment.

Plaintiff, a minor through his guardian ad litem, had brought an action against the City of Concord (hereinafter called the city) and Tony Freitas, a police officer of the city, for false arrest, false imprisonment, assault and battery allegedly occurred on June 10, 1954. The action against the city was also based on negligence in retaining defendant Freitas in its service as a police officer notwithstanding his reputation for violence. It was further alleged in the first amended complaint in said action that plaintiff served a claim on the City Clerk of the city on February 24, 1955, at which time he had first heard of his legal rights against the city from his guardian ad litem. Demurrers of both the city and Freitas were sustained without leave to amend and judgment for defendants was entered accordingly on May 18, 1955. Plaintiff did not appeal from said judgment but on the same date filed a new complaint, which introduced the present action. Its allegations were literally the same as those of the first amended complaint in the prior action, except that an allegation was added to the effect that immediately after the assault plaintiff's guardian ad litem was informed by the city through its city manager that it was not necessary for her to file a claim on behalf of plaintiff and that the city would take care of everything, that in reliance on said representation, plaintiff failed timely to file a verified claim and that the city therefore is estopped to rely on said failure. The demurrers sustained to said complaint are mentioned in the judgment but their character does not appear from the transcript. However, the judgment for defendants must at any rate be upheld on the basis of res judicata.

[1] Whether and in how far a judgment entered on the sustaining of a demurrer is res judicata depends on the character of the demurrer sustained. To plaintiff's first amended complaint, the defendants demurred both generally (no cause of action stated) and specially for ambiguity, uncertainty and unintelligibility, the special demurrers relating to different minor details. The fact that the demurrers to the first amended complaint were sustained without leave to amend shows that it was the general demurrers that were sustained. That such was also the understanding of plaintiff is shown by the fact that in his new complaint he did not try to cure the alleged defects against which the special demurrers were directed. A judgment on a general demurrer will have the effect of a bar in a new action in which the complaint states the same facts which were held not to constitute a cause of action on the former demurrer or, notwithstanding differences in the facts alleged, when the ground on which the demurrer in the former action was sustained, is equally applicable to the second one. Goddard v. Security Title Ins. & Guar. Co., 14 Cal.2d 47, 52, 92 P.2d 804; Keidatz v. Albany, 39 Cal.2d 826, 828, 249 P.2d 264. Under this rule the former judgment is a bar to the present action.

[2, 3] No cause of action against the city is stated in either complaint because in the governmental function here involved it is protected against tort liability by the sovereign immunity. The operation of a police department by a municipality is a governmental function, and in the absence of a special statute rendering it liable, the municipality is not liable for the torts of its officers in the performance of said function. Henry v. City of Los Angeles, 114 Cal.App.2d 603, 250 P.2d 643 and cases there cited. The same rule applies to damages caused by the negligence of the municipality itself in the exercise of a governmental function. Miller v. City of Palo Alto, 208 Cal. 74, 75, 280 P. 108. Fernelius v. Pierce, 22 Cal.2d 226, 138 P.2d 12, on which appellant relies, was an action against individual superior officers of the tortfeasor, to which individuals the sovereign immunity does not extend. The governmental character of the function was one of the grounds adduced by the city for its general demurrer and we must presume that the demurrer was sustained in whole or in part on that ground. The new allegation with respect to the estoppel of the city is wholly irrelevant to this point. The application of the doctrine of res judicata with respect to the action against the city was correct.

[4-6] The general demurrer of defendant Freitas was based solely on the requirement of section 1981 of the Government Code that for certain personal injury and property damage actions against a public officer a verified claim must within 90 days be presented to the officer claimed to have caused the damage, which presentation was not alleged. The contention was unsound. Section 1981, supra, according to its language refers to negligence or carelessness of a public officer only. It does not apply to intentional torts like the ones here alleged. Sarafini v. City & County of San Francisco, 143 Cal.App.2d 570, 300 P.2d 44; cf. Ward v. Jones, 39 Cal.2d 756, 760, 249 P.2d 246. No other ground why no action would lie against the tortfeasor himself appears. However, the general demurrer was sustained and plaintiff did not appeal so that the judgment became final. "An erroneous judgment is as conclusive as a correct one." Panos v. Great Western Packing Co., 21 Cal.2d 636, 640, 134 P.2d 242, 244; Weil v. Barthel, 45 Cal.2d 835, 839, 291 P.2d 30. With respect to the action against defendant Freitas, the complaint in the action before us and the one in the prior action are identical. The only additional allegation, the one concerning the estoppel, relates to defendant city only. The adjudication in the prior action was then conclusive in this respect.

[7] We are aware of the fact that in rare cases exceptions to the application of the res judicata doctrine have been made when rigid adherence would defeat the ends of justice, contrary to important considerations of policy. See Greenfield v. Mather, 32 Cal.2d 23, 35, 194 P.2d 1; 50 C.J.S., Judgments, § 592, p. 13; 30 Am. Jur. 909. However, such exception is not applied simply because the decision is erroneous. Even in Greenfield v. Mather, supra, which goes further in this direction than any other case known to us, many circumstances were stated showing the exceptional character of the case, in which many appeals to the Supreme Court had been taken and in which conflicting decisions had been given on points not clearly in issue, and even in that case three Justices dissented. Here, both parties misapprehended the law and induced the court to do the same and plaintiff permitted the decision to become final although appeal was available. There is no reason to permit him to relitigate the point, contrary to the purpose of the res judicata doctrine that there be an end to litigation when once a final decision as to a point has been obtained by the parties.

Judgment affirmed.

PEEK, Justice.

These are consolidated appeals from orders denying plaintiffs' motions to vacate judgments of dismissal, which judgments were entered pursuant to orders of the court sustaining defendants' demurrers without leave to amend.

For convenience, counsel for all of the parties stipulated that the record in the case of Beckley v. Reclamation Board, case number 9453 in the trial court, could serve as the clerk's transcript on all four appeals. The record in that case shows that plaintiff's notice of motion to vacate the judgment was made upon the grounds that it was entered through the mistake, inadvertence, surprise or excusable neglect of counsel; and upon the grounds that the judgment as entered was contrary to the provisions of sections 595, 1054 and 1054.1 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and therefore void.

In support of said motion, affidavits were filed by plaintiff's attorneys, Earl D. Desmond and E. Vayne Miller, and by F. G. Hammett, manager of the Sacramento office of the Western Union Telegraph Company. Attorney Desmond, by his affidavit, averred that he and Mr. Miller were the sole attorneys of record for the plaintiff; that he was a member of the Senate of the California Legislature; that he was in attendance at the second portion of the regular 1953 session of the Legislature from February 24, 1953, until its adjournment on June 10, 1953; that after said demurrer to the first amended complaint had been submitted to the trial court, affiant and Mr. Miller were served notice on or about May 11, 1953, that said demurrer had been sustained without leave to amend; that in the belief that said complaint could be amended to state a cause of action, affiant sent the following telegram on May 20, 1953, to the trial court: "Request entry judgment George Beckley Erissey and Seaver against state be not executed by Earl D. Desmond and E. Vayne Miller, Sacramento, for appellants.

Court until June 10th. Legislative duties necessitate continuance so I can study proceedings." Affiant further averred that on June 5 and again on June 19, 1953, he sent telegrams requesting that judgments not be entered until June 19 and June 26, respectively; that affiant believed the trial court would grant an extension of time and not enter a judgment prior to June 26, or that the trial court would inform counsel of the denial of his request; that affiant believed the trial court would not enter judgment prior to the time extended by the Code of Civil Procedure which would have been 30 days after the adjournment of the Legislature; and that affiant believed that the statutory provisions were mandatory upon the court after the receipt of said telegrams.

Mr. Hammett stated in his affidavit that each of the telegrams sent by Senator Desmond was, according to the company's records, received by the trial court.

Mr. Miller stated in substance the same facts as set forth by Senator Desmond, and in addition averred that by reason of the trial court's failure to grant the statutory or a reasonable continuance to Senator Desmond, and that because on June 24 and July 13, 1953, the judgment did not appear in the "document file" of the action, although it had been entered in the "Judgment Book", that it was not until August 4 that affiant learned from a deputy county clerk that the judgment had been rendered and entered on June 4.

Except for the hearsay statements contained in a counter-affidavit filed by Mr. Shank, a deputy attorney general, the statements contained in the affidavits of plaintiff's counsel and Mr. Hammett concerning the telegrams are uncontradicted. In his affidavit Mr. Shank stated that he personally conferred with the trial judge on September 23, 1953, and that the judge stated to him that he had received two telegrams, one dated June 6, 1953, and the other dated June 19, 1953, but that "he had not received a telegram dated May 24, 1953, and had no knowledge of such a telegram." (This is presumably the telegram of May 20.) Contrary to defendants' claim, the trial court's memorandum of decision does not indicate whether or not he received that telegram prior to the entry of the judgment.

On December 3, 1953, counsel for plaintiff filed a proposed amendment to the first amended complaint. Thereafter on December 15, 1953, the motion to vacate the judgment was denied, as was plaintiff's motion to set aside the order on the motion to vacate and permit consideration of plaintiff's proposed amendment to the first amended complaint. Plaintiff's appeal is from both orders.

The pertinent portions of section 595 of the Code of Civil Procedure are as follows:

"The trial of any civil action, or proceeding in a court, * * * shall be postponed when it appears to the court, * * * that * * * any attorney of record * * * is a member of the Legislature of this State and that the Legislature is in session * * *. When the Legislature is in session * * * such action or proceeding shall not, without the consent of the attorney of record therein, be brought on for trial or hearing before the expiration of thirty (30) days next following final adjournment * * *."

Section 1054.1 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides in part that,

"When an act to be done, * * * relates to the pleadings in the action, * * * the time allowed therefor, * * * shall be extended * * * when it appears to the judge * * * that an attorney of record for the party applying for such extension is a Member of the Legislature of this State, and that the Legislature is in session * * *. When the Legislature is in session or in recess, extension shall be to a date not less than thirty (30) days next following the final adjournment of the Legislature * * *."

[1] In the case of Burnett v. King, 33 Cal.2d 805, 205 P.2d 657, 12 A.L.R.2d 333, a somewhat similar question was presented relative to the interpretation of certain mandatory requirements of the statute there in question. It was there stated, 33 Cal.2d at page 807, 205 P.2d at page 658:

"It has been held repeatedly, and recently, that where a statute requires a court to exercise its jurisdiction in a particular manner, follow a particular procedure, or subject to certain limitations, an act beyond those limits is in excess of its jurisdiction."

[2,3] Applying the enunciated rule to the facts herein, if the hearsay statement contained in the affidavit of Mr. Shank be disregarded, as it must, Franklin v. Nat. C. Goldstone Agency, 33 Cal.2d 628, 631, 204 P.2d 37; Gay v. Torrance, 145 Cal. 144, 151-152, 78 P. 540, then not only was there the presumption that the telegram of May 20 was received by the trial court, Eppinger v. Scott, 112 Cal. 369, 42 P. 301, 44 P. 723, but there was also the direct statement contained in the Hammett affidavit that the telegram was received. Hence on this record we must consider that the telegram was received.

[4] Necessarily, therefore, when it appeared to the trial court that Senator Desmond was in attendance at a regular session of the Legislature, that court was without power other than to continue the case in accordance with the mandatory provisions of the quoted sections. Stated otherwise, by failing to act in the particular manner prescribed by those sections, the trial court exceeded its power, and such act was in excess of its jurisdiction and void. Bottoms v. Superior Court, 82 Cal. App. 764, 768, 256 P. 422; see also Barton-Mansfield Co. v. Higgason, 192 Ark. 535, 92 S.W.2d 841.

[5] Furthermore, by reason of the inherent power of the court to set aside a void judgment, even on its own motion, it was immaterial how such invalidity was brought to the attention of the court (29 California Jurisprudence, Sec. 120, p. 38); and therefore it becomes unnecessary to discuss the contentions made by defendants in support of the orders.

The orders are reversed.

PETERS, Presiding Justice.

Defendant was charged with three violations of section 337a of the Penal Code, in that (1) he kept or occupied a place for the purpose of recording bets; (2) that he recorded bets; and (3) that he made a bet upon the result of a race. He waived a jury trial. He was convicted on counts 1 and 2, and acquitted on count 3. He appeals from the judgment of conviction.

The principal point involved on this appeal is whether the basic evidence admitted over objection was obtained by means of an illegal search of defendant and of his automobile.

The facts are not substantially in dispute. In June of 1955 a police officer, in civilian clothes, was assigned the duty of keeping a designated pool hall and adjoining restaurant under surveillance. He performed this duty from June 9th to June 30th, 1955. Each working day during this period he observed the defendant, whom he had known before he became a policeman, from about 10 a.m. to 4:30 p.m., "loitering around the pool hall and the restaurant. Occasionally he would come in; might shoot a game of pool, but, as a general rule, he would walk into the pool hall, perhaps talk with some of the men that were there, then return to the restaurant, and sit at the counter." While in the restaurant "Practically each day that I would see him there, he would have the newspaper turned to the racing sheet. Men would come in and out of the restaurant, sit at the counter with him, and converse"; about 10 or 15 men would come into the restaurant each day and talk with defendant; "Other than have a conversation together, there was nothing that I saw," except that normally the men and defendant would look at the racing section of the paper, but he observed no one pointing toward any names in the paper, nor did he overhear any conversation, nor did he observe defendant make any notations, nor did he see any money pass between them, nor did he see defendant make or receive any telephone calls. Defendant did not appear to be working in either the restaurant or the pool hall.

Once during the period of observation the officer asked defendant if he was still working at the shipyard. Defendant said that he was not, "that he didn't have any regular employment; that he did odd jobs, such as painting, to get the money and support himself."

On June 30th the officer entered the restaurant and told defendant that he wanted to talk to him on police business. The defendant accompanied the officer, and outside the restaurant, by pre-arrangement, they met the police sergeant who had received the officer's daily reports. The sergeant asked defendant if he was working; de-defendant said that he had been out of work for about two months, and that he was supporting himself by "doing odd jobs, painting, and anything that he could get hold of." The sergeant thereupon placed defendant under arrest for vagrancy, and, without the permission of defendant, immediately searched defendant's person. In defendant's watch pocket the sergeant found a piece of tissue paper on which was recorded a bet placed on a horse in the 8th race at Hollywood Park that day. Defendant stated that he had placed that bet for himself with a newspaper vendor. In defendant's rear pocket was a racing form dated June 30th. In defendant's wallet was found $103 in currency, which defendant told the officers was to pay an overdue bill for the repair of his automobile. The sergeant then asked defendant where his automobile was parked, and defendant mentioned a place nearby. Then the sergeant "told him we would like to look at the car to see what was in it," and the defendant "furnished us the keys, and give us—gave us permission to search his car." The trial judge, significantly enough, when the sergeant so testified, stated "Uncoerced, I'm sure." The officers did not tell the defendant that he did not have to permit the search.

Upon searching the car the officers noted a large pocket on the back of the front seat. In this pocket the officers found several slips of paper and two racing forms dated June 29th and June 30th, respectively. On the slips of paper were recorded bets written in a code usually used by bookies. The defendant told the officers that these articles were not his, that he had not put them in the car and that he did not know how they had got there. No attempt was made to prove that the recorded bets were in the handwriting of the defendant.

The defendant testified that he lived with his wife next door to the restaurant; that he had known the proprietor of the restaurant for about four years; that the proprietor was repairing the establishment and had asked him, as long as he was not working, to assist her with odd jobs about the place, which he did. The proprietor of the restaurant corroborated defendant. As to the $103 found on defendant, he testified that his wife had given him $50 from her paycheck to pay an overdue repair bill on his automobile. This was corroborated by defendant's wife. Forty dollars, defendant testified, he had borrowed from his mother for the same purpose. He had intended paying the repairman $100 on a past due bill of about $166. It was stipulated that the repairman, if called, would testify that the day before defendant was arrested defendant had telephoned to him and promised to pay $100 on the bill on the 30th. This stipulation was based upon the fact that a deputy district attorney had interviewed the repairman who corroborated defendant.

The trial judge was troubled over the admissibility of the evidence found in the automobile, and the validity of the search. He was particularly troubled over the fact that the defendant was arrested for vagrancy when he obviously was suspected of and searched for evidence of bookmaking. The court admitted the evidence subject to a motion to strike, and, thereafter, the matter was argued at some length. The court finally ruled that the evidence was admissible and found the defendant guilty of recording and registering bets, and of keeping a place (his car) for that purpose, but not guilty as to count 3—placing a bet.

[1] The only evidence that defendant recorded bets or kept a "place" for that purpose is the evidence found in the search of the automobile. If that search was illegal, the evidence so secured was inadmissible. People v. Cahan, 44 Cal.2d 434, 282 P.2d 905. Since the decision of the Cahan case, in April of 1955, the Supreme Court has decided more than a score of cases in which it has reaffirmed the rule there stated, elaborated on it, explained it, and attempted, with obvious success, to fix its general scope and limits. See Shepard's California Citations, August, 1956, p. 224. Although not expressed in these words, after reading all of these cases, it is apparent that the central theme of all of them is that the Supreme Court is attempting to lay down rules that will be reasonably fair to the defendant and will also be reasonably fair and afford reasonable protection to the public. In the vast number of cases involving the point, the basic question is, would a reasonable officer, in possession of the facts known to him, have made the arrest and engaged in the search of the person or place involved? If so, the arrest and search were held to be proper, but if not, the search, at least, was held to be unreasonable, and the evidence secured in such search held to be inadmissible. The majority of the Supreme Court apparently believed that this was the only practical method to protect the constitutional guarantee of freedom from unreasonable searches and seizures. The court had observed the deliberate disregard of this constitutional guarantee by some law enforcement officers who openly advocated and practiced the policy that the end justifies the means. The new rule is sound, is predicated on the federal rule, and is based on fundamental principles of morality. Certainly, it cannot be the law that it is necessary for proper law enforcement that the law be broken in order to enforce it. For these reasons, we believe that the new rule is not only sound, but should be zealously protected by the courts against any unreasonable attempt to limit or to circumscribe it.

The present case is a good example of over-zealous law enforcement. The arrest for vagrancy was an obvious subterfuge to try and secure evidence of bookmaking, and when that arrest, and the search of the person, failed to produce evidence of that activity, the police officers determined to search defendant's automobile. It is significant, so far as the record is concerned, that the officers did not even know defendant had an automobile until he so informed them during the improper search of his person. It is also significant that there is not one word of evidence to indicate that defendant had a past record of bookmaking, or of any other offense, that he had been reported to the police for engaging in bookmaking or other offense, had ever annoyed or molested anyone, or even had ever acted in a suspicious manner. All that appears in the record is that the police, for some undisclosed reason, decided to keep a certain restaurant and pool hall under surveillance. Whatever that reason may have been, it certainly was not for the purpose of finding evidence that defendant was a vagrant. During that three-week period of surveillance, defendant was observed daily. During that time he was not observed committing one illegal or even suspicious act. He was observed reading the racing news in a daily newspaper, and occasionally talking with other visitors in the restaurant, apparently about the racing news. No money passed, no violations of law were observed, no pointing at names in the newspaper was observed, no telephone calls were made or received. There is no indication in the record that defendant was unkempt in appearance, annoyed or attempted to annoy anyone, or was without funds. In the one conversation the police had with defendant before his arrest he frankly stated that he was not presently regularly employed, but was doing odd jobs to support himself until he could secure regular employment. If those facts warrant the arrest of a person for vagrancy, then there is hardly a person walking the streets or visiting public places who cannot be lawfully arrested for vagrancy and searched against his will.

It is true that the vagrancy statute, sec. 647 of the Penal Code, and particularly subdivision 1 thereof,¹ defines vagrancy in very broad terms. That subdivision of the section is apparently based on the outdated concept that it is a criminal offense not to work. Under it, every unemployed person, every housewife and every retired person

1. Section 647, subd. 1, of the Penal Code provides: "Every person (except a California Indian) without visible means of living who has the physical ability to work, and who does not seek employment, nor labor when employment is offered him; * * *

Is a vagrant."

conceivably could be arrested for vagrancy. If it be assumed that the section is constitutional, we certainly do not think it should be interpreted as broadly as respondent contends.

[2] For these reasons we do not think that the arrest for vagrancy was a proper one. Ipso facto, the search of the person, predicated on such illegal arrest, was improper. It is equally apparent that the facts known to the officers did not constitute any grounds, far less reasonable grounds, for the officer to believe that defendant had violated any of the offenses prohibited in section 337a of the Penal Code. Nothing that defendant was observed doing was illegal, or even reasonably suspicious. It is certainly not illegal or even reasonably suspicious to read, look at or discuss with others the sport page of a newspaper. If it is not a crime to do this for one day it does not become a crime, or a reasonably suspicious circumstance, standing alone, when it is done for 21 days.

Thus, it is apparent that the arrest and search of the person of defendant were unreasonable and illegal. This makes it unnecessary to discuss the rules that might be applicable were the arrest for vagrancy a valid one.

[3,4] The only incriminating evidence that was introduced against defendant on the two charges upon which he was convicted was secured upon the search of the automobile. Respondent argues that defendant consented to this search. It is true that one of the arresting officers testified that defendant "furnished us the keys, and give us—gave us permission to search his car." This so-called "permission" was granted after defendant was improperly arrested and improperly searched. Without the purported consent, the search of the car would have been improper even if the arrest and search of the person had been proper. Hernandez v. Superior Court, 143 Cal.App. 2d 20, 299 P.2d 678. While the question of consent is one of fact, People v. Gorg, 45 Cal.2d 776, 291 P.2d 469, it is obvious that a "permission" granted after a person has been improperly arrested and searched, while he is still in custody, and without informing him of his legal right to refuse permission, is not a real or proper consent. The search of the car, under the circumstances, was clearly unreasonable.

The judgment appealed from is reversed.

Edward P. PARK, Labor Commissioner of the State of California, Defendant and Appellant.

Civ. 21288.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Oct. 3, 1956.

Rehearing Denied Oct. 25, 1956.

Hearing Denied Nov. 28, 1956.

Action by four employment agencies licensed by Labor Commissioner to have declared invalid and void rules and regulations governing procedure for hearing and determining controversies between employment agencies and applicants required to be submitted to Labor Commissioner and to restrain Labor Commissioner from enforcing and administering such rules. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Clarence M. Hanson, J., entered judgments adverse to Commissioner and Commissioner appealed. The District Court of Appeal, White, P. J., held that under statute providing that Labor Commissioner shall hear and determine controversies between employment agencies and applicants and containing provision that Labor Commissioner may certify that there is no controversy within meaning of section where agency presents substantial evidence that applicant acknowledges fee to be due, such provision is void for uncertainty but statute as it was before such provision was added by amendment remains in full force.

WHITE, Presiding Justice.

This action was commenced by four employment agencies licensed by the Labor

Commissioner of the State of California to have declared invalid and void the rules and regulations governing the procedure for hearing and determining controversies between employment agencies and applicants required to be submitted to the Labor Commissioner under the provisions of Section 1647 of the Labor Code, and to restrain the Labor Commissioner from enforcing and administering these rules.

The Labor Commissioner has appealed from the judgment rendered, permanently enjoining and restraining him and his assistants, deputies, officers, agents, clerks, servants, employees and attorneys, from enforcing and administering against the plaintiffs Section 1647 of the Labor Code and Sections 11976 to 11983, both included, of Title 8 of the California Administrative Code; declaring that each of said sections of the Administrative Code is void and without legal force and effect, inconsistent with the Labor Code, beyond the statutory authority conferred upon the Labor Commissioner; that said sections are "not uniform in their requirements or operation and constitute an abuse of administrative discretion and upon the further ground that said sections are promulgated as rules of procedure in furtherance of Section 1647 of the Labor Code which said section of the Labor Code is unconstitutional and void";

"That it is declared that Section 1647 of the Labor Code is void for uncertainty: (a) in that what may or may not be classed as controversy within the provisions of Division II, Part 6, Chapter 1 of the Labor Code is not stated or defined therein; (b) in that it is uncertain whether that Section of the Labor Code requires that both parties must join together in submitting the controversy or else it cannot be submitted, nor action or hearing thereon had; (c) in that if it was intended that either party might act individually that section of the Labor Code fails to say so; (d) in that if either party may initiate the submission of a controversy there is no provision requiring him or the Labor Commissioner to give notice to the adverse party and therefore said section of the Labor Code is in violation of Article I, Section 13, of the Constitution of the State of California and of Amendment 14, Section 1 of the Constitution of the United States and the enforcement of said section of the Labor Code constitutes a denial of due process of law.

"That it is declared that the failure of an applicant for employment to pay the employment agency an undisputed fee does not constitute a controversy to be determined by the Labor Commissioner within the provisions of Division II, Part 6, Chapter 1 of the Labor Code and it is further declared that the employment agency is not required as a condition precedent to the enforcement of collection of said undisputed fee to procure from the Labor Commissioner a certification that no controversy exists."

[1] If, as concluded by the trial court, Section 1647 of the Labor Code "constitutes a denial of due process of law" and is unconstitutional, then the judgment must be affirmed. We will, therefore, first consider that question. Said section 1647 provides:

"In all cases of controversy arising under this chapter the parties involved shall refer the matters in dispute to the Labor Commissioner, who shall hear and determine the same, subject to an appeal within 10 days after determination, to the superior court where the same shall be heard de novo. To stay any award for money, the party aggrieved shall execute a bond approved by the superior court in a sum not exceeding twice the amount of the judgment. In all other cases the bond shall be in a sum of not less than one thousand dollars ($1,000) and approved by the superior court.

"The Labor Commissioner may certify that there is no controversy within the meaning of this section, where the agency presents substantial evidence that the applicant acknowledges the fee to be due."

Appellant Labor Commissioner contends that the Supreme Court has affirmed the constitutionality of Section 1647 of the Labor Code by its decisions in Collier & Wallis, Ltd. v. Astor, 9 Cal.2d 202, 205-206, 70 P.2d 171; Garson v. Division of Labor Law Enforcement, 33 Cal.2d 861, 864-865, 206 P.2d 368; and Robinson v. Superior Court, 35 Cal.2d 379, 388, 218 P.2d 10, and, therefore, the judgment to the contrary in the instant action is erroneous.

In Collier & Wallis, Ltd. v. Astor, supra, the judgment in favor of an employment agency was reversed for the reason that the controversy had not been referred to the Labor Commissioner before the action was filed in court. Therein, the provision of said section 1647 for an appeal to Superior Court after the determination by the Labor Commissioner is attacked, and, 9 Cal.2d at pages 205 and 206, 70 P.2d at page 173, the Supreme Court held that said section does not attempt to invest in the Labor Commissioner the right to exercise any judicial function; and, since said section provides for a trial de novo in the Superior Court, it does not "contravene any provision of our State Constitution fixing and defining the appellate jurisdiction of the Superior Courts".

Collier & Wallis, Ltd. v. Astor, supra, is not determinative of any questions as to the constitutionality of said statute, other than the questions therein discussed. Oakland Paving Co. v. Whittell Realty Co., 185 Cal. 113, 119-120, 195 P. 1058; Worthley v. Worthley, 44 Cal.2d 465, 471-472, 283 P.2d 19. No constitutional questions were decided in the Garson and Robinson cases, supra.

In the instant action, the trial court determined that Section 1647 of the Labor Code violates the State and Federal Constitutions because it contains no provision requiring either party to give notice to the adverse party, and said section "constitutes a denial of due process of law". No decision on this point has been cited or found by us.

As said by Justice Schauer, speaking for the court in In re Porterfield, 28 Cal.2d 91, 103, 168 P.2d 706, 714, 167 A.L.R. 675:

"We unequivocally recognize and affirm that it is the duty of courts to be most vigilant and vigorous in protecting individuals, as well as minority and majority groups, against encroachment upon their fundamental liberties. Those freedoms are vastly more consequential than any object to be attained by business or professional regulations and the integrity of the former is not to be compromised to save the latter. It is a general rule, also, that the power of the courts, from its very nature, must be exercised with the utmost caution. Laws are enacted by and for the people. The people have a right of experimentation, of evolution through trial and error. Constitutionality of purpose and application is generally to be presumed. It has often been said that it is only when it clearly appears that an ordinance or statute passes definitely beyond the limits which bound the police power and infringes upon rights secured by the fundamental law, that it should be declared void. [Cases cited.]

"The choice, then, which the courts must make—to say where the individual's freedom ends and the State's power begins—is a delicate one. * * *

Appellant urges that, since Section 1647 provides for hearing by the Labor Commissioner and does not expressly negative the requirement for notice, the requirement for reasonable notice will be implied, as in Carroll v. California Horse Racing Board, 16 Cal.2d 164, 105 P.2d 110; Fascination, Inc., v. Hoover, 39 Cal.2d 260, 271, 246 P.2d 656; Keenan v. San Francisco Unified School Dist., 34 Cal.2d 708, 714, 214 P.2d 382; Ratliff v. Lampton, 32 Cal.2d 226, 233, 195 P.2d 792, 10 A.L.R.2d 826; and McDonough v. Goodcell, 13 Cal.2d 741, 751, 91 P.2d 1035, 123 A.L.R. 1205. The respondents contend that the decisions just cited do not apply in the instant action because here the actual taking of property and not merely the refusal to issue or the revocation of a license or the dismissal from public employment is involved.

In their brief, respondents state that "in the case at bar, the statute itself must expressly provide for notice and hearing and failing to do so it falls within the constitutional proscription of the due process clauses of the State and Federal Constitutions". To support that statement, they cite and rely upon Modern Loan Co. v. Police Court, 12 Cal.App. 582, 586, 587, 108 P. 56; In re Grout, 105 App.Div. 98, 93 N.Y.S. 711; Roller v. Holly, 176 U.S. 398, 20 S.Ct. 410, 44 L.Ed. 520. None of the last cited cases is applicable to the situation now engaging our attention. The Modern Loan Co. case, supra, held a certain procedure for summary disposition of personal property taken by search warrant was invalid. In re Grout, supra, involved a statute authorizing imprisonment for contempt because of a refusal to answer questions of the Comptroller of New York. In neither case did the statute provide for a hearing before the taking of the property or liberty. Roller v. Holly, supra, decided in 1900, holds that a Texas statute requiring only five days' notice to be given to any defendant residing anywhere in the world to appear in Texas and defend an action to foreclose a vendor's lien upon real property was unreasonable and violated the due process clause of the Constitution. See Whitcomb v. Emerson, 46 Cal.App.2d 263, 271, 115 P.2d 892; and Carpenter v. Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co., 10 Cal.2d 307, 335, 74 P.2d 761.

In our opinion, the provision of said section 1647 that the Labor Commissioner "shall hear and determine" the controversies between employment agencies and applicants implies the condition precedent that both parties shall be given reasonable notice and the opportunity to be heard. Carroll v. California Horse Racing Board, supra.

Section 1646 of the Labor Code provides that "The Labor Commissioner may promulgate rules and regulations, not inconsistent with this chapter for the purpose of enforcing and administering this chapter." The Administrative Procedure Act, Gov. Code, Sec. 11370 et seq., provides the methods and procedures for adopting such rules and regulations. It is not claimed that any of the rules and regulations hereafter discussed were not duly and regularly adopted after a fair hearing.

The trial court in the instant action has declared the sections of the Administrative Code, 11976 to 11983, both included, void.

Under the provisions of section 11978, the Labor Commissioner shall give to each of the parties notice of the time and place of the hearing for the determination of a controversy. The notice required to be given to the parties is by "ordinary mail; or the agency may serve personal notice in the manner prescribed by the Code of Civil Procedure for service of summons in a civil action, or may request the Labor Commissioner to make service by registered mail, the agency paying necessary costs. * * * Evidence that the party has received the notice of hearing must be established prior to or at the time of hearing."

[2] The character of the notice required to constitute due process varies with the nature and purpose of the proceeding. People v. One 1941 Chrysler 6 Touring Sedan, 81 Cal.App.2d 18, 34, 183 P.2d 368. The notice in each case must be such that it is reasonably probable that the person proceeded against will learn of the proceeding and be given a reasonable opportunity to appear. Most of the hearings concerning fees earned by the agencies are requested by the agencies, in which cases the agencies are aware of the proceedings. In matters referred to the Labor Commissioner by applicants, there is no showing that the agencies have been in any way prejudiced by lack of notice or short notice.

[3] Administrative rules and regulations are presumed to be reasonable in the absence of proof to the contrary and courts will not substitute their judgment for that of the administrative agency unless it is clearly shown that the regulation is so unreasonable as to be arbitrary or capricious, or in excess of the authority vested in the agency. Nelson v. Dean, 27 Cal.2d 873, 881, 168 P.2d 16, 168 A.L.R. 467; Rible v. Hughes, 24 Cal.2d 437, 445, 150 P.2d 455, 154 A.L.R. 137; Fillmore Union High School Dist. v. Cobb, 5 Cal.2d 26, 33, 53 P.2d 349. There is no showing that the regulations here assailed are either arbitrary or capricious.

[4] Nor does the lack of a specification of the time which must elapse between the receipt of such notice and the hearing justify the court in substituting its judgment for that of the Legislature and the Labor Commission.

The fact that the employment agencies are required to remain at the address which is licensed by the Commissioner, Labor Code, §§ 1581, 1592, 1593 and 1594, and can be reached there by ordinary mail and by telephone, while the applicants involved in such hearings are usually, according to respondents' pleading and testimony, "migratory and financially irresponsible", is reason enough for the Administrative Code's differing requirements for notice to them of hearings pursuant to said section 1647 of the Labor Code.

[5] The trial court decided that section 1647 is void for uncertainty in that it cannot be ascertained therefrom whether both parties are required to join together in submitting the controversy. The section provides that "the parties involved shall refer the matters in dispute". Since both the parties and the matters are plural, either alone may submit any controversy.

[6] The trial court further decided that said section is uncertain as to "what may or may not be classed as a controversy". Mr. Justice Carter, in 1949, speaking for the Supreme Court in Garson v. Division of Labor Law Enforcement, 33 Cal.2d 861, 866, 206 P.2d 368, 371, said: "As we have seen, the statute is broad and comprehensive and it is indicated * * * that the Commissioner is empowered to hear and determine all such disputes including the existence of the contract, termination, liability thereunder and the like." (Emphasis added.) Section 11975 of the Administrative Code formerly provided that refusal or failure to pay a fee admitted by the applicant to be due the agency is not a controversy to be determined by the Labor Commissioner.

In 1953, the last paragraph of section 1647 was added, reading: "The Labor Commissioner may certify that there is no controversy within the meaning of this section, where the agency presents substantial evidence that the applicant acknowledges the fee to be due." Thereafter, section 11975 was repealed and sections 11982 and 11983 were added to the Administrative Code. The new sections provide that the agency must submit a written request for such certification which shall include "a statement as to the nature of the evidence showing the applicant acknowledges the fee to be due"; and the Commissioner may so certify "upon examination of evidence establishing to his satisfaction that the agency is entitled to the fee claimed, that the applicant has acknowledged the fee to be due, and that conditions have not changed since the time the acknowledgment was made".

The apparent meaning of Labor Code Sections 1550-1663, and of Section 1647 in particular, was determined in Garson v. Division of Labor Law Enforcement, supra. The first paragraph of said section 1647 was then the entire section and it remains the same. The paragraph added thereto is ambiguous.

If the Legislature intended by such added paragraph, as believed by respondent and the trial court, to relieve the Labor Commissioner of the duty to hear and determine the liability of the applicant to the agency for fees agreed to be paid, it has not expressed that intention. Whether or not a controversy is "within the meaning" of the section is a question of law and cannot be finally determined by the Labor Commissioner. Certainly the Labor Commissioner could not certify even that the applicant acknowledges the fee to be due without a hearing at which the applicant is given an opportunity to controvert the evidence.

The purpose of the administrative proceedings here involved is to save time for the agency, the applicant, and the courts by having such controversies determined by a specialist, the Labor Commissioner. Most of the disputes referred to him for determination involve unpaid fees. If, at the hearing requested by the agency, he admitted only evidence that applicant had acknowledged the fee to be due, and certified "no controversy", the agency would then have to proceed by court action. When the matter came up for trial, if the court should find from the evidence produced that there is a controversy, the court would have to dismiss the actions as premature and the agency would have to again refer the matter to the Labor Commissioner. Collier & Wallis, Ltd. v. Astor, supra. We do not believe that is what was intended by the Legislature, nor have we been able to determine from the language of the last paragraph of said Section 1647 what was intended. Therefore, we conclude that the last paragraph of said section is void for uncertainty.

Sections 11982 and 11983 which were adopted for the purpose of making said last paragraph effective can, therefore, serve no useful purpose.

However, section 1647, as it was before the amendment of 1953, remains in full force.

[7] Sections 11979, 11980 and 11981 of the Administrative Code provide: that the Labor Commissioner "shall notify each of the parties in writing of his proposed determination"; that within ten days after such notice "either party may file objections" thereto; that "upon receipt of the objections the Labor Commissioner shall review the record, and may cause an additional investigation to be made or hearing to be held"; and that "after expiration of the ten day period for filing objections, or after considering objections if such have been filed, the Labor Commissioner shall issue his determination".

Said sections 11979, 11980 and 11981 are among those covered by the injunction from which the Labor Commissioner has appealed. Respondents, in their brief, state that, since the initial hearing is presided over by a Deputy Labor Commissioner, whose proposed decision and file—in the event written objections are filed—is reviewed by the Assistant Labor Commissioner and sometimes by the legal staff and the Labor Commissioner, who personally makes the decision, such procedure is unconstitutional and void because "the one who decides must hear". The procedure here under consideration is not a denial of due process for the reason that either party may, after such determination, commence an action in the superior court and is there entitled to a complete trial de novo. As stated in Hohreiter v. Garrison, 81 Cal.App.2d 384, 402, 184 P.2d 323, 334: "Due process contemplates that somewhere along the line a fair trial be had—not that there be two or three fair trials".

In so far as the judgment appealed from holds that the last paragraph of Section 1647 of the Labor Code and Sections 11982 and 11983 of the Administrative Code are uncertain and therefore invalid, it is affirmed.

In all other respects, the judgment is reversed and the cause remanded with directions to the court below to amend its Conclusions of Law and render Judgment in accordance with the views herein expressed.

Civ. 21542.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 2, California.

Oct. 11, 1956.

Action against commissioner and captain of state highway patrol by occupants of automobile for their injuries in collision at intersection from which the stop sign was missing. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Bayard Rhone, J., sustained demurrer to amended complaint without leave to amend and rendered judgment of dismissal, and plaintiffs appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Moore, P. J., held that complaint failed to state statutory cause of action in that there was no allegation that commissioner or captain had authority to restore stop sign or that they had the requisite public funds available to them.

Affirmed.

West's Ann.Gov.Code, § 1953.

8. Highways Ⓒ190

Commissioner and captain of state highway patrol have not so assumed responsibility of maintaining stop signs in order and repair as to render themselves liable for continued existence of danger from missing stop sign after having knowledge thereof. West's Ann.Gov.Code, § 1953; West's Ann.Vehicle Code, § 139-37(b).

9. Officers Ⓒ116

Before any common law liability of officer for failure to act may exist, there must have been a duty to act under the circumstances.

10. Automobiles Ⓒ301(3)

Automobile occupants suing commissioner and captain of state highway patrol for injuries sustained in collision at intersection from which the stop sign was missing must allege that commissioner and captain had a duty to act and that such duty was not dependent on their official status, in order to state cause of action on any theory of common law liability for breach of general duty to exercise due care for safety of others.

11. Automobiles Ⓒ301(3)

In action against commissioner and captain of state highway patrol by occupants of automobile for their injuries in collision at intersection from which the stop sign was missing, amended complaint failed to state cause of action on any theory that commissioner and captain undertook to maintain stop signs or to replace signs and were negligent in their attempts.

12. Highways Ⓒ190

Under the statutes, the power and duty to erect and maintain stop signs at intersections of state highways deemed to be dangerous is vested in state department of public works and is vested in local authorities with respect to streets and highways within their jurisdictions, and such power is not vested in the highway patrol. West's Ann.Vehicle Code, §§ 465, 471.

13. Highways Ⓒ190

Under the statutes, commissioner and captain of state highway patrol have no duty to restore absent stop signs at intersection of county road with state highway. West's Ann.Vehicle Code, §§ 465, 471, 473.

14. Automobiles Ⓒ301(3)

Budget disclosed that in fiscal year 1953-1954 the state highway patrol had no funds to use in maintaining stop signs, and hence automobile occupants injured in 1953 collision at intersection from which the stop sign was missing, could not state a cause of action against commissioner and captain of state highway patrol under statute providing that funds must be available to officer to remedy the condition before he can be held liable for injury from dangerous condition of public property, and consequently demurrer to amended complaint was properly sustained without leave to amend. St. 1953, p. 2348; West's Ann.Gov.Code, § 1953 and subd.(c).

Wolford, Johnson & Pike, George Pike, El Monte, for appellants.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Delbert E. Wong, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondents.

MOORE, Presiding Justice.

Appellants demand a reversal of a judgment of dismissal pursuant to an order sustaining a demurrer to the amended complaint without leave to amend as to respondents Caldwell and White. The pleading attempts to declare causes of action for personal injuries against departments of the State government and against Caldwell and White, respectively Commissioner of the California Highway Patrol and Captain of such Patrol in the Seventh Area. The injuries of appellants resulted from an intersectional collision of two automobiles of one of which they were occupants. Such vehicle was operated by appellant Alfred Bartlett along Fawcett Street, an east-west county road and public street, and onto Rosemead Boulevard, a north-south state highway. Appellants assert the liability of respondents by virtue of their failure to maintain a stop sign at Rosemead where it is entered by Fawcett; that by reason of the absence of such stop sign, the driver of the Bartlett car failed to discern the nature of the state highway; that on the day of the accident, December 22, 1953, and since about 1936, a stop sign had been provided for such intersection according to law and had been erected by or on behalf of Los Angeles County; that after it was placed, it was "maintained and cared for and controlled by each and all of said persons and governmental bodies named defendants herein, at the westbound (as well as the eastbound) approaches of Fawcett to Rosemead Boulevard, so as to require vehicular traffic westbound upon Fawcett to stop at the edge of Rosemead on Fawcett before entering Rosemead Boulevard"; that at the time of the accident and for several prior years, Rosemead, at the Fawcett intersection and at others for miles north and south of Fawcett, was a major traffic artery and through highway with stop signs at the entrances of all such intersecting streets and highways; that during all such times and especially at night, the conditions at the intersection of Rosemead and Fawcett were such as to require, in the exercise of ordinary care, the maintenance of a stop sign at the westbound entrance of Fawcett onto Rosemead to give warning of the danger of traffic on Rosemead and render such entrance safe for passage of vehicular traffic along Fawcett into Rosemead; that the "natural growth along Fawcett at the southeasterly corner of the intersection, obscuring the vision of a westbound driver to the customarily rapid approach of northbound traffic nearest said intersection" reasonably required the maintenance of a stop sign at Fawcett's entrance to Rosemead; "that Fawcett at such intersection in the absence of such a stop sign was rendered thereby unsafe dangerous and defective."

"IX

"That said stop sign at the westbound approach for westbound traffic on Fawcett approaching Rosemead was the joint, or in the alternative several, jurisdiction and responsibility of the Department of Public Works, Division of Highways and the officers and employees herein, named thereof, and of the County of Los Angeles, and of the Department of the California Highway Patrol and the division officers and employees thereof named herein, with reference to and as to the replacement, maintenance, care, control and condition of said signs thereof. That each and all of the persons named herein and the governmental bodies had the duties to replace, maintain, inspect, care for, and control said two highways, their intersection and approaches, and the stop signs in place, and in a safe condition for their intended use, and furthermore had the duty with reference to the instruction, regulation and operation of the means and methods of carrying out such erection, maintenance, inspection, control and condition thereof, and with reference to the reporting of missing stop signs and of dangerous and defective highway by reason of the condition of the approaches and stop signs thereof, and with reference to the replacement and repair of said stop sign at said approaches.

"That the County of Los Angeles at all such times had the duty to maintain said Fawcett in a safe condition for its intended use, and to remedy the dangerous and defective condition of Fawcett by reason of its approach into Rosemead as herein alleged and to give warning of said dangerous and defective condition.

"That the Department of the California Highway Patrol on said date and for a long period of time theretofore had the duty, and customarily assumed the working practices and duty, of reporting missing stop signs or damaged stop signs, and either replacing same or requesting the Department of Public Works Division of Highways of California, or the County of Los Angeles, or a municipality under the particular circumstances to replace missing stop signs and otherwise to remedy and give warning to the public of the dangerous and defective conditions claimed by said missing stop sign.

"On December 22, 1953, and for three months, or more prior thereto, the previously erected and maintained stop sign at the westbound approach for westbound traffic, along Fawcett to Rosemead was displaced and missing and not at all in position, so that no warning or notice to stop or warning of the dangers of the through highway, with its usual heavy rapid traffic, not otherwise ordinarily visible without stopping was given in any wise to drivers of traffic proceeding westerly along Fawcett approaching and entering into Rosemead. That on said date the plaintiffs were all occupants of an automobile being driven by the plaintiff Alfred Bartlett in a westerly direction along Fawcett, who was by the absence of the stop sign caused to enter said intersection into Rosemead and to come into collision with a northbound vehicle along Rosemead Boulevard, without stopping for said boulevard, and by reason of said collision each and all of the plaintiffs were seriously permanently and painfully injured and caused to suffer damages as herein alleged.

"That the absence of said stop sign and conditions rendering Fawcett and Rosemead dangerous and defective, as herein alleged, were open and obvious and easily known to the persons complained of and the County of Los Angeles from any routine inspection of the intersection and of stop signs, which routine inspections were regularly carried out by and under the authority of the officers and employees complained of and the County of Los Angeles; and the exercise of ordinary care in the inspection of said stop signs and of the intersection would have caused actual knowledge of said dangerous and defective condition of the property.

"That in fact at the El Monte offices of the California Highway Patrol where Captain Richard White was located, there was a displaced and missing stop sign for a period of several weeks prior to the collision, which in reasonable probability was the one previously in place at said intersection.

* * * * *

"That each and all of the officers and employees herein named as defendants had notice, either actual or constructive, of the defective and of the dangerous condition of said public property and each and all of it herein described, and had the authority and the duty to remedy such condition at the expense of the political and governmental body responsible therefor, and funds for the purpose were immediately available to each and all of such persons, and within a reasonable time after receiving such notice, and being able to remedy such condition, they failed so to do, and furthermore failed to take reasonable steps to give adequate warning of such dangerous and defective condition of the stop sign and the public highways and approaches thereto, and of the public property herein described."

[1] From the foregoing it should be patent that no liability on the part of respondents exists in favor of appellants. If such be true, the court below properly sustained the demurrer without leave to amend. Bauer v. County of Ventura, 45 Cal.2d 276, 291, 289 P.2d 1; Routh v. Quinn, 20 Cal.2d 488, 493, 127 P.2d 1, 149 A.L.R. 215; Saint v. Saint, 120 Cal.App. 15, 23, 7 P.2d 374.

[2-4] The determination of the point raised by the appeal appears to rest largely with the interpretation of section 1953*

• Government Code, § 1953. Liability of officer for damage or injury from defective or dangerous condition of public property.

"No officer of the State or of any district, county, or city is liable for any damage or injury to any person or property resulting from the defective or dangerous of the Government Code which appears on the margin hereof. Because that section had its genesis in the Statutes of 1919, chapter 360, section 1 (which chapter was a reenactment of section 1, chapter 593 of the Statutes of 1911) the decisions construing the earlier statutes are persuasive here. The Act of 1911 was not enacted to create a liability of public officers for negligence in the performance of their duties beyond existing liability. Ham v. County of Los Angeles, 46 Cal.App. 148, 164, 189 P. 462. Inasmuch as respondents' liability is restricted by the limitations prescribed by section 1953, a valid pleading against such officers requires strict compliance therewith. Shannon v. Fleishhacker, 116 Cal.App. 258, 261-262, 2 P.2d 835.

[5] Because the amended complaint does not definitely show that either respondent had the authority to restore the stop sign and that they had the requisite funds available to them from the State or any of its political subdivisions, § 1953, supra, it does not state a cause of action against them.

[6, 7] While it is true that the pleading states fully that respondents knew of the dangerous condition at the intersection of Fawcett Street and Rosemead Boulevard by reason of the absence of the stop sign at the northeast corner, yet the danger alone is not sufficient to make a police officer liable for injuries resulting from the absence of the stop sign. Unless they had the authority to repair the condition and the funds requisite for such performance, a valid cause of action was not alleged against them. Hoel v. City of Los Angeles, 136 Cal.App.2d 295, 306, 288 P.2d 989. If respondents continued to perform their regular duties but neglected to notify the Public Works' officers of the absence of the stop sign and of the resultant danger to the public, they would have been properly subject to discipline by the constituted authority for such neglect. But the entity liable for the presence of such a dangerous condition on a street or highway is the sovereign or such political subdivision as has been authorized to repair conditions defective or dangerous.

[8] Appellants contend that respondents assumed the responsibility of maintaining the stop signs in order and repair and thereby rendered themselves liable for the continued existence of the danger after having knowledge thereof. Such assumption is not justified by either reason or authority. Because an agent goes out of his way to do a good turn for his principal does he thereby assume the duty forever to do so? Because a policeman has for a season conveyed every drunk found on the streets after midnight to the latter's home, is he thereafter liable for the death suffered by an intoxicated man who was allowed to care for himself after midnight with the resultant fall into a manhole? An officer's kindness to the individuals of society will not reasonably enlarge his duties as prescribed by law, even though he has power to "direct traffic as conditions may require." Vehicle Code, § 139.37(b).

[9, 10] Appellants argue that regardless of whether or not a cause of action may be condition of any public property, unless all of the following first appear:

"(a) The injury sustained was the direct and proximate result of such defective or dangerous condition.

"(b) The officer had notice of such defective or dangerous condition or such defective or dangerous condition was directly attributable to work done by him, or under his direction, in a negligent, careless or unworkmanlike manner.

"(c) He had authority and it was his duty to remedy such condition at the expense of the State or of a political subdivision thereof and that funds for that purpose were immediately available to him.

"(d) Within a reasonable time after receiving such notice and being able to remedy such condition, he failed so to do, or failed to take reasonable steps to give adequate warning of such condition.

"(e) The damage or injury was sustained while such public property was being carefully used, and due care was being exercised to avoid the danger due to such condition."

stated against the officers under the applicable provision of the Government Code, a right to relief was alleged against them as individuals for breach of a general duty to exercise due care for the safety of others, citing Bettencourt v. State, 139 Cal. App.2d 255, 293 P.2d 472; Griffin v. Colusa County, 44 Cal.App.2d 915, 113 P.2d 270; Dillwood v. Riecks, 42 Cal.App. 602, 184 P. 35. In the Bettencourt case, defendants negligently raised a bridge; In Dillwood the government employees carelessly burned weeds. However, in this case appellant is complaining of the inaction of the defendants. Before any common law liability for failure to act may exist, there must have been a duty to act under the circumstances. (Rest., Torts, § 314.) Furthermore, to prevail in their argument that a cause of action was stated against these defendants regardless of noncompliance with Government Code section 1953, appellants must point out a duty to act which is not dependent upon the official status of respondent officers. In this they fail.

[11] Appellants particularly seek to bring their pleading within the rule of Griffin v. Colusa County, supra, 44 Cal.App. 2d 915, 113 P.2d 270, which held that two county nurses should have been held answerable for their negligence in failing to care for a patient who had fallen into a delirium. The duty to act was predicated upon the principle that when one undertakes the care of the helpless he must do so with due care while the other is under his charge. (Rest., Torts, sec. 324.) However, the facts alleged indicate no such assumption of personal care here. The amended complaint is devoid of an allegation that respondents undertook to maintain the stop signs or to replace one and were negligent in their attempts.

A Cause of Action Cannot Be Declared Against Respondents.

[12, 13] If the power and duty to erect and maintain stop signs at intersections of a State Highway deemed to be dangerous is vested in the Public Works Department of the State and in local authorities with respect to streets and highways within their jurisdictions, Veh.Code, §§ 465, 471, there is no reason for assuming that the same power is vested in the Highway Patrol. There is no statutory authority so declaring, neither is there cited any judicial declaration to that effect. It is so clear that the State Department of Public Works is obligated to maintain stop signs at dangerous intersections of a state highway that one who runs may read. It is equally certain that local political subdivisions must maintain such signs on their own streets and highways. But appellants seek to extend the State's obligation to the personnel of the State's Highway Patrol and especially to respondents, members of such patrol. At least, it is contended, the officers of the Patrol "had the duty, and customarily assumed the working practice and duty of reporting missing stop signs or damaged stop signs" and either replacing same or requesting the appropriate governmental personnel to replace them or otherwise to remedy and warn the public of such conditions. In support of such contention, appellants cite Gillespie v. City of Los Angeles, 36 Cal.2d 553, 225 P.2d 522. However, it was there pointed out that in that case as well as in the case of Rose v. County of Orange, 94 Cal.App.2d 688, 211 P.2d 45, "the city or county had authority at least to warn of the dangers. They had control over their own highways and authority therefore to post warnings along those highways of the dangers created by conditions contiguous thereto." Gillespie v. City of Los Angeles, supra, 36 Cal.2d at page 557, 225 P.2d at page 525. Now, if the officers of Highway Patrol have no control over the maintenance of State highways, they have no duty to post warnings of the presence of dangerous conditions on Rosemead Boulevard. They have no such duty; therefore, they were free from negligence in not maintaining or restoring absent stop signs at the intersection of county roads with such state highway.

Section 473 of the Vehicle Code merely authorizes officers of the Highway Patrol to remove unauthorized signs, signals or lights, but does not require them to erect or maintain authorized signs. The nearest approach to authority placing responsibility upon the Highway Patrol to restore missing stop signs is Streets and Highways Code, section 127. But that merely requires the patrol to cooperate with the Department of Public Works in the enforcement of the closing or restriction of the use of any street or highway. While it is true that it has been held, White v. Towers, 37 Cal.2d 727, 733, 235 P.2d 209; 28 A.L.R. 2d 636, that duties of public office include (1) those lying squarely within its scope, (2) those essential to the accomplishment of the main purposes of the office and (3) those incidental to a proper fulfillment of the office which serve to promote its principal purpose, yet such holding refers merely to the scope of activities in which a public officer may engage while in the performance of his own duties and still be immune against civil liability for malicious prosecution. The granting of such immunity is to encourage officers in the performance of their duties. To impose civil liability upon members of the Highway Patrol for failure to maintain stop signs in the absence of a statutory duty to do so would be calculated to hinder them in the performance of their duties and to discourage their performance of clearly defined duties.

Inasmuch as the statutes have expressly imposed upon the State Department of Public Works, and not upon respondents, the duty of maintaining state highways, Veh. Code, §§ 465, 471, it could not have been intended to require another agency to do the same thing. Such requirement would not have been consonant with the doctrine of division of labors. Also, it would create a conflict of statutes and "lead to anomalous and unreasonable results." Gillespie v. City of Los Angeles, supra, 36 Cal.2d 553, 559, 225 P.2d 522, 526. It cannot be that the Legislature could have intended to throw such an important field of activity into confusion as would result from the efforts of two coordinate agencies to discharge their duties over the same highway. To do so would have been to defeat the uniformity of the state highway system. (Ibid.)

Funds Available.

[14] Appellants alleged that "each and all of the officers and employees herein named as defendants * * * [1] had the authority and the duty to remedy such condition at the expense of the political and governmental body responsible therefor, and [2] funds for the purpose were immediately available to each and all such persons."

No facts are alleged as a basis for the two conclusions. On the contrary, the facts of which the court takes judicial notice contradict the allegations. Griffin v. Colusa County, supra, 44 Cal.App.2d 915, 918, 113 P.2d 270. Inasmuch as the accident of appellants occurred December 22, 1953, it fell within the fiscal year 1953-1954. The budget for that year only may be consulted in order to ascertain whether the Legislature had set aside funds for the Highway Patrol to use in maintaining stop signs. No such provision appears from the Statutes of 1953 chapter 971, p. 2348 or from the budget to have been made. The only item in the budget for that fiscal year relating to signs is at line 69, page 829 and is the sum of $1,750,693.06 for safety devices and signs allocated to the Division of Highways of the Department of Public Works.

It necessarily follows, then, that appellants cannot allege a cause of action against respondents under Government Code section 1953, subdivision (c), for the reason that there were no funds available for them to use for the erection of stop signs. The entire pleading is founded upon liability for a dangerous condition of public property under section 1953, supra.

There was no error in sustaining the demurrer without leave to amend.

Judgment affirmed.

Sept. 28, 1956.

Action by county to recover welfare assistance payments made to respective spouses who signed reimbursement agreements. The Superior Court, County of Santa Clara, Byrl R. Salsman, J., allowed recovery and plaintiffs appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Kaufman, J., held that where there was no indication in reimbursement agreements, under which statute of limitations was waived in regard to any action to recover welfare payments and liens were created on signers' property, that agreements covered any relief received by any other member of signers' family, welfare assistance payments to spouses were not covered under the agreements and in addition such payments were not recoverable under applicable statute where there was no evidence or finding that there was financial ability on part of parties here sought to be charged with support of relatives to furnish such support at the time such support was rendered.

Judgment reversed.

Maurice L. Martin, San Jose, for appellants.

Peter J. Mancuso, San Jose, for respondent.

KAUFMAN, Justice.

This is an appeal from a judgment of the Superior Court of Santa Clara County in an action which was submitted to that court as an agreed case. The judgment decreed that reimbursement agreements executed by James E. Payne and his daughter, Vera King, created liens in favor of Santa Clara County upon the real property of each party at the time said liens were executed for welfare assistance that had been rendered to their respective spouses some years previously; and further, that said agreements constituted a waiver of the defense of the Statute of Limitations in regard to the debts for welfare assistance theretofore rendered to the spouses of the parties signing the agreements, as well as to the debts for aid to the parties themselves.

Plaintiffs and appellants, Mildred Turnboo, Hallie Payne and Vera King are the children of James E. Payne and Effie Payne, both deceased. Effie Payne died on December 4, 1950, at the County Hospital of Santa Clara County. Services valued at $925 were rendered to her between November 1943 and the date of her death in said hospital. On or about November 5, 1952, James E. Payne entered the County Hospital and on that date executed an "Agreement to Reimburse" which was recorded on November 12, 1952. Services were rendered to him in the sum of $179, and appellants concede that the agreement relates to this sum, and a claim for this latter sum has been paid by the estate of James E. Payne. The claim for $925 for services rendered by the county to Effie Payne was rejected.

The reimbursement agreement signed by James E. Payne reads as follows:

"I, James E. Payne do hereby acknowledge that I have received relief, care and maintenance and/or medical aid from the Board of Supervisors, County of Santa Clara, State of California (hereinafter called Promisee), and that I agree and intend to make reimbursement for this and all other aid and assistance rendered me during the period of my dependency.

"I do hereby waive the limitation of any statute for the presentation of any claim for the repayment of said relief, care and maintenance and/or medical aid.

"I do hereby agree that any and all monies so paid me by the promisee shall be secured by a lien on the following described property, or any and all other property that I may become seized of in the future; and in the event of my coming into possession of any funds or property of any kind, and if at time of my death I leave any estate whatsoever, I agree that said promisee shall be paid for all monies paid me for my relief, care, maintenance and medical aid, and my executor, administrator, or personal representative is directed to pay out of my said property and estate all of said monies paid me for my relief, care, maintenance and medical aid.

"The following is a true and correct description of all property, both real and personal, and all interest in property owned by me.

Personal property

Real property

(Legal Description) 475 Jerome Street,
San Jose, California"

In 1942, James E. Payne and Effie Payne, as joint tenants, had purchased the real property located at 475 Jerome Street, San Jose, which was described in the reimbursement agreement which James Payne signed. Said joint tenancy was terminated on the death of Effie Payne. On January 11, 1954, James E. Payne deeded said property in joint tenancy to his children, the above named appellants, and a son, Elmer, who predeceased him.

Appellant, Vera King, had been married to Herbert Buttons prior to 1935, and was living with him until his death in May, 1946. Between 1935 and his death in 1946, disbursements were made by the Welfare Department of Santa Clara County for indigent aid to the account of Herbert Buttons in the sum of $2,937.93. Prior to his death in May, 1946, services were rendered to Herbert Buttons by the County Hospital in the sum of $90.50.

Ed and June Buttons were children of Herbert Buttons and Vera King. Ed Buttons reached majority on February 9, 1950. Prior thereto the County Hospital had rendered services to him of a value of $17. Subsequent to that date he received services at said hospital valued at $71. County hospital services were rendered to June Buttons during her minority in the sum of $9.50.

On or about April 12, 1954, Vera King entered the County Hospital where she received services of a value of $160.50. At that time she executed an agreement to reimburse identical in language to that signed by James E. Payne and set forth above, except that the real property described therein was located at 3061 Wall Street, San Jose. Vera King admits that there is a lien against her property to the extent of $160.50 for hospital services rendered to her, personally.

Appellants contend that the reimbursement agreements herein can be considered a waiver of the statute of limitations only as to debts incurred for services rendered directly to the person signing the agreements. Each agreement states that "I * * * do hereby acknowledge that I have received relief * * * and/or medical aid * * * and that I agree and intend to make reimbursement for this and all other aid * * * rendered me during the period of my dependency." It continues: "I do hereby waive the limitation of any statute for the presentation of any claim for the repayment of said relief * * * and/or medical aid." Further, "I do hereby agree that * * * monies so paid me * * * shall be secured by a lien * * * I agree that said Promisee shall be paid for all monies paid me for my relief, care, maintenance and medical aid." (Emphasis ours.) Each of these agreements were signed by the respective parties when they were admitted to the County Hospital for medical aid. There is nothing in the agreement that suggests that the party is waiving the statute of limitations in regard to any debts which he may owe the County for aid furnished to another person for whom he may be legally responsible. It has been a principle of welfare administration that aid is granted individually to meet the needs of the recipient, not the needs of the family as a whole or other members thereof. (See, 42 Cal.Law Rev. 473). There is no faint suggestion in the language of these instruments that they covered any debt for relief received by any other member of the signer's family. Having entered the hospital at the time of signing the agreement, the party would have no reason to suspect that his acknowledgment extended to anything except this relief which had been extended and the medical aid and further relief that would be extended during the period of hospitalization and convalescence. No reasonable interpretation can extend this language to cover any debt that he may have owed the county in the past because of legal responsibility for relief furnished to a relative. It will be remembered that the spouses of both parties who had received the aid for which the county now claims reimbursement, were long since dead at the time these agreements were signed.

[1,2] These agreements clearly waive the statute of limitations for the aid incurred by the person signing and establish a lien for the aid then received and to be received and for any in the past they have personally received. But if these instruments are to cover other debts, then there should be embodied therein a clear reference to such debts. "Whether a writing contains a sufficient acknowledgment is a question of law, to be determined from the evidence and upon all the circumstances surrounding the transaction." (15 Cal.Jur. 584, sec. 179.) Parol evidence is admissible if there is any uncertainty in a writing which is alleged to contain such an acknowledgment or new promise to pay. The agreements here appear without ambiguity to cover nothing but aid directly furnished to the persons signing them, and respondent has not offered any evidence of circumstances surrounding the execution of the instruments which might tend to expand the meaning of their terms, nor argued that they are ambiguous.

It is urged by respondent that Section 2576 of the Welfare and Institutions Code creates a primary liability for aid furnished to a spouse or child. That section reads in part as follows:

"All aid rendered by the county under this chapter shall be a charge against the spouse, parent and adult child of the recipient thereof and the county rendering aid shall be entitled to reimbursement therefor.

"The board of supervisors of the county rendering aid shall determine if the spouse, parent or adult child, or any of them have financial ability to support or contribute to the support of the recipient and were pecuniarily able to support or contribute to the support of the recipient during the time aid was rendered. If in the opinion of the board of supervisors pecuniary ability existed when the aid was given and exists when the matter comes before the board of supervisors, the board shall request the district attorney or other civil legal officer of the county granting aid to proceed against such responsible relative or relatives." (Emphasis ours.) While the first paragraph of the statute might appear to create a liability against certain relatives regardless of their financial ability to discharge it, the following paragraph demonstrates that the only named relatives responsible to the county for reimbursement are those who at the time aid was extended then had the ability to furnish some or all of such aid, and those who still have such ability when reimbursement is sought.

[3] Respondent has argued that a liability to the county was created by certain sections of the Civil Code, apart from the provisions of the Welfare and Institutions Code. That the Welfare and Institutions Code is the only code to be looked to in this type of case has been finally determined in County of San Bernardino v. Simmons, 46 Cal.2d 394, 296 P.2d 329, 331, where it is said that the Welfare and Institutions Code "is the measure of the extent of the responsible relative's liability to the county. It is to it we must look to ascertain whether the relative is required, in a particular case, to reimburse the county." The Supreme Court in that case also disapproved inconsistent implications in the cases of Garcia v. Superior Court, 45 Cal.App.2d 31, 113 P.2d 470; Kelley v. State Board of Social Welfare, 82 Cal.App.2d 627, 186 P.2d 429. The opinion also states that the Welfare and Institutions Code "purports to state the circumstances in which the named responsible relatives are liable to the county when it has supported or paid aid to indigents" and also states a procedure by which in proper cases the county can recover from the responsible relatives." (Emphasis ours.) We agree with the footnote of page 398 of 46 Cal.2d, page 331 of 296 P.2d of the cited case, that the system "although not altogether coherent, manifestly purports to cover the entire subject."

[4] The only reasonable interpretation of Section 2576, Welfare and Institutions Code, is that a liability to reimburse the county is created on the part of the named relative or relatives, when and only when, there was at the time aid was extended, an ability on the part of such relative or relatives to support or contribute to the support of the welfare recipient.

[5] There is no allegation or evidence in this record that the Board of Supervisors of Santa Clara County ever made a finding that the parties who signed these agreements were able at the time aid was extended, to reimburse the county, nor is there any evidence in the record of the financial circumstances of these parties at that time. Section 2576 is very similar in content to Section 2224, dealing with proceedings against a spouse or adult child able to support an old age applicant. In a discussion of the liability created by the latter section, one writer has said that "Civil Code section 206 creates a statutory support obligation which comes into existence when the governing conditions occur. A judicial determination is not a prerequisite, and, so far as the language of the section is concerned, judicial support orders can be retroactive. Under the Welfare and Institutions Code on the contrary, liability of responsible relatives may not antedate an administrative finding by the board of supervisors." (42 Cal.Law Rev. 471-472.) There is in the present record no evidence nor finding that there was financial ability on the part of the parties here sought to be charged with the support of relatives at the time such support was rendered. There is therefore no proof that any debt to the county was owed by these persons for aid furnished to their spouses or children.

[6] Respondent calls attention to Section 2603 which provides that "If a person for the support of whom public moneys have been expended acquires property, the county shall have a claim against him to the amount of a reasonable charge for moneys so expended * * *." This section clearly applies to the recipient himself, not to the relatives who may be liable for his support. County of Los Angeles v. Security First Nat. Bank, 84 Cal. App.2d 575, 191 P.2d 78. If the intent was to make the after-acquired property of responsible relatives subject to a lien, it would have been simple for the Legislature to have so provided.

It is our view, that the judgment must be reversed, first, because the language of the agreements clearly do not cover any debts except those for relief or medical aid incurred by the parties executing them; and second, that even had the language of the instruments been ambiguous and possibly subject to the interpretation that debts incurred because of a legal liability for certain relatives were thereby acknowledged, there is nothing in the record to support a finding that such a liability had arisen under Section 2576 of the Welfare and Institutions Code.

Judgment reversed.

C. Doyle WRIGHT and Betty M. and Benny Ardowski, Petitioners and Appellants,

v.

Russell S. MUNRO, Director of the Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control of the State of California, Respondent.

Civ. 16968.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 1, California.

Oct. 8, 1956.

Hearing Denied Dec. 5, 1956.

Mandamus proceeding brought for review of on-sale liquor license revocation. The Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, Frank T. Deasy, J., denied the relief sought, and the petitioner appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Peters, P. J., held that evidence was sufficient to sustain finding that licensee had permitted woman to loiter on premises and that she had solicited patron to buy alcoholic drinks for her.

Affirmed.

1. Intoxicating Liquors ⇨108(5)

Evidence, in proceeding culminating in revocation of on-sale liquor license, was sufficient to sustain finding that licensee had permitted woman to loiter on premises and that she had solicited patron to buy alcoholic drinks for her. West's Ann. Bus. & Prof.Code, §§ 24200(b), 25657(b).

2. Intoxicating Liquors ⇨168

Bartender's knowledge that woman was loitering on premises was chargeable to employer-licensee. West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, §§ 24200(b), 25657(b).

3. Intoxicating Liquors ⇨132

Quoted term, in code section making it unlawful to knowingly permit anyone to "loiter" on premises where alcoholic beverages are sold for purposes of begging or soliciting patrons to buy drinks, has a well-recognized meaning, to wit: "to linger idly by the way, to idle, to loaf". West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, §§ 24200(b), 25657(b).

Cal.Rep. 301-302 P.2d-37

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Loiter".

4. Intoxicating Liquors ⇨108(5)

Evidence should be clear and convincing to justify revocation of liquor license.

5. Intoxicating Liquors ⇨108(4)

Accusation that on-sale licensee had employed, or knowingly permitted, woman to loiter on premises for purpose of begging or soliciting patrons to purchase alcoholic beverages for her consumption was sufficient as against contention that words "employ or permit to loiter" set forth two separate charges in alternative, and that defendants could thus not properly prepare their defense to cause for suspension of revocation of liquor license. West's Ann. Bus. & Prof.Code, §§ 24200(b), 25657(b).

6. Administrative Law and Procedure ⇨312

In administrative proceedings, courts are more interested in fair notice to accused than they are to adherence to technical rules of pleading.

7. Criminal Law ⇨13

Code section, making it unlawful to employ or knowingly permit anyone to loiter on premises where alcoholic beverages are sold for purpose of begging or soliciting any patron to purchase any alcoholic beverages for person begging or soliciting, was not unconstitutionally vague. West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, §§ 24200(b), 25657(b).

Mervyn Schneider, Anthony E. O'Brien, San Francisco, for appellants.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Charles A. Barrett, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

PETERS, Presiding Justice.

The Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control revoked the general on-sale liquor license of petitioner. The Appeal Board affirmed. Thereupon, the petitioner sought a writ of mandate to review the propriety of the ruling. From a judgment denying the petition for a writ of mandate petitioner appeals.

On March 4, 1954, the State Board of Equalization, the predecessor of the Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control, charged the appellants with having violated section 25657(b) of the Business and Professions Code,¹ and thus created a cause for suspension or revocation of their liquor license under section 24200 (b) of that code.²

The accusation, after referring to the two code sections, was couched in the following terms: "On or about March 3, 1954, the above-named licensees, who did then and there hold an on sale general license for the above-described premises and who were then and there engaged in the business of selling alcoholic beverages for consumption on the premises where sold, did employ, or did knowingly permit Janet Hudson to loiter in and about said premises for the purpose of begging or soliciting patrons or customers of said premises to purchase alcoholic beverages for her consumption or use."

At a hearing on June 9, 1954 appellants offered to plead guilty to the charge and to retire from the liquor business if their license was suspended and not revoked.³ Subject to that offer, appellants stipulated to the truth of the matters alleged in the accusation. The Hearing Officer found the charges to be true and recommended an indefinite suspension of the license. The State Board adopted the proposed decision of the Hearing Officer, but, without further evidence, ordered the license revoked instead of suspended. Thereafter, on petition for a writ of mandate, the Superior Court set aside the revocation order and directed the trial court to grant appellants a full hearing. Thereafter, on December 6, 1954, a full hearing was held. This time the Hearing Officer recommended that the license be revoked. The Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control adopted the recommendation of the Hearing Officer, and revoked the license. The Appeal Board affirmed this ruling. Thereupon, this mandamus proceeding was instituted. The trial court found in favor of the Board and denied the petition. The licensees appeal.

At the hearing but two witnesses were called, both agents of the Board. Other than cross-examining one of these agents, appellants submitted no evidence.

The principal witness was agent Templeman. He testified that on March 3, 1954, he entered the licensed premises at about 10:25 p. m. He sat at the bar and ordered a highball, for which he paid 50 cents. A few minutes later a girl, later identified as Janet Hudson, sat down beside him and asked: "Do you want a drinking companion?" Templeman, who did not then know the young lady, replied: "Sit down." Janet then motioned to the bartender and told him: "Give me a drink," without stating what she wanted. The bartender

1. Section 25657(b) provides that it is unlawful "In any place of business where alcoholic beverages are sold to be consumed upon the premises, to employ or knowingly permit anyone to loiter in or about said premises for the purpose of begging or soliciting any patron or customer of, or visitor in, such premises to purchase any alcoholic beverages for the one begging or soliciting."

2. Section 24200 provides: "The following are the grounds which constitute a basis for the suspension or the revocation of licenses: * * *

"(b) Except as limited by Chapters 11 and 12 of this division, the violation or the causing or the permitting of a violation by a licensee of this division, any rules of the board adopted pursuant to Part 14 of Division 2 of the Revenue and Taxation Code or any rules of the department adopted pursuant to the provisions of this division, or any other penal provisions of law of this State prohibiting or regulating the sale, exposing for sale, use, possession, giving away, adulteration, dilution, misbranding, or mislabeling of alcoholic beverages or intoxicating liquors."

3. It was then the policy of the Board to permit a licensee whose license was suspended to sell his business and license. No such privilege was accorded a licensee whose license was revoked.

filled an old-fashion glass with chipped ice and poured over it a drink from a vermouth bottle. Templeman put some money on the bar and the bartender took from it $1 for the girl's drink. When Janet had consumed her drink the bartender asked Templeman if he wanted to buy the lady another drink. Templeman said that he did, and the bartender prepared a drink similar to the first one, and again charged Templeman $1.

Templeman then left the premises at about 10:45 p. m., conferred with two other agents, made arrangements that they would enter the premises later and assist him with the arrest, and then re-entered the licensed premises at about 11:15 p. m., again sitting at the bar. Janet immediately sat down beside him. The bartender asked Templeman if he wanted to buy the lady a drink, and, upon receiving an affirmative reply, poured her a drink from a vermouth bottle, charging Templeman $1 for that drink and 50 cents for his highball. Between 11:15 and 11:45 p. m. this routine was followed at least four times. At 11:45 p. m. the two other agents entered the premises and assisted Templeman in the arrest of the girl and the bartender.

[1-4] Appellants challenge the sufficiency of the evidence, contending that there is no evidence that they permitted Janet Hudson to "loiter" on the premises, or that Janet Hudson "solicited" or "begged" any patron to buy drinks for her, or that Janet Hudson consumed any "alcoholic" beverage on the premises.

The evidence is weak, but it is legally sufficient.

The circumstances recounted by Templeman support the inference that the bartender knew that Janet Hudson was loitering on the premises and soliciting drinks from patrons. The bartender's knowledge is, of course, chargeable to the licensees. Cornell v. Reilly, 127 Cal.App.2d 178, 273 P.2d 572. Janet merely told the bartender "Give me a drink." He apparently recognized her, knew what she wanted, and served it to her. The subsequent actions of the bartender in returning to the agent and asking him if he wanted to buy the girl another drink is also susceptible of the reasonable inference that the bartender knew that the girl was loitering on the premises for the prohibited purpose. This is corroborated by the actions of the bartender and the girl when the agent returned to the premises. The term "loiter" has a well-recognized meaning, and that is "to linger idly by the way, to idle," "to loaf" or to "idle." Phillips v. Municipal Court, 24 Cal.App.2d 453, 455, 75 P.2d 548. The evidence is susceptible of the reasonable interpretation that Janet Hudson was "loitering" on the premises and that this was known to the bartender.

That Janet Hudson "solicited" or "begged" a patron to buy her a drink is obvious. The question "Do you want a drinking companion?" under the circumstances, was equivalent to, "Will you buy me a drink?" Knowledge on the part of the bartender is reasonably inferable.

Under the statute it is also required that the drink served be an "alcoholic" beverage. There is no direct evidence that the drinks served Janet Hudson were alcoholic beverages. Templeman testified that the girl asked the bartender for a "drink" and that he poured her one from a vermouth bottle. Vermouth is a wine, sec. 23007, Bus. & Prof.Code, which, of course, is an alcoholic beverage, sec. 23004, Bus. & Prof.Code. It is a reasonable inference that the liquid poured from a bottle labeled "vermouth" was in fact vermouth. In fact, it would have been an illegal act if the vermouth bottle were mislabeled. Secs. 26490 and 26510 of the Health and Safety Code. The inference is bolstered by the fact that the bartender charged $1 for each drink served from the vermouth bottle, and by the fact that the licensees failed to offer any evidence on the issue, although such evidence was within their power if the liquid was in fact non-alcoholic.

The evidence is, therefore, sufficient to support the finding that Janet Hudson was loitering on the premises for the purpose of soliciting drinks; that she in fact solicited the purchase of such drinks; that these facts were known to the bartender, and that the drinks served her were alcoholic in nature. Thus, all the elements of the offense were proved. In so holding, the court is well aware of the fact that revocation of a liquor license is a severe and serious penalty, and that to impose such a penalty the evidence should be clear and convincing. In the instant case, the evidence as to the nature of the liquid consumed, is weak. It was in the power of the arresting agents, in a non-emergency case, to secure and produce stronger evidence. Sound police practice suggests that they should have done so. The tendency of some law enforcement officers to be satisfied with the bare minimum of evidence where better evidence is available, is not good police practice. But, whatever we may think of the police methods in the present case and the failure to produce stronger evidence, the evidence produced, although weak, supports the findings and judgment, and that is all that is required.

[5,6] The next contention of appellants is that the accusation is ambiguous and unintelligible. It is urged that the words "employ" and "permit to loiter" in the statute set forth two separate charges in the alternative so that appellants could not properly prepare their defense. Section 11503 of the Government Code requires that the charges be set forth in ordinary and concise language so that the acts with which the licensee is charged will be sufficiently clear so that the person charged will be able to prepare his defense. In these administrative proceedings the courts are more interested with fair notice to the accused than they are to adherence to the technical rules of pleading. Marlo v. State Board of Medical Examiners, 112 Cal.App.2d 276, 246 P.2d 69; Mast v. State Board of Optometry, 139 Cal.App.2d 78, 293 P.2d 148; Taylor v. Bureau of Private Investigators, 128 Cal.App.2d 219, 275 P.2d 579. Under the rules laid down in these cases the pleading was sufficient.

[7] Appellants also challenge the statute under which they are charged as being unconstitutional, particularly claiming that a statute which prohibits "permitting anyone" to "loiter" about the licensed premises to "solicit" drinks is too indefinite for enforcement, and too broad in its classification. The contention is that the words "loiter" and "soliciting" are too broad or too vague or uncertain. The word "loiter," as already pointed out, is clear and certain. So is the word "soliciting." See People v. Phillips, 70 Cal.App.2d 449, 160 P.2d 872; People v. Levy, 8 Cal.App.2d Supp. 763, 50 P.2d 509.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

Supreme Court of California.

In Bank.

Oct. 11, 1956.

As Modified on Denial of Rehearing

Nov. 8, 1956.

Proceeding on railroad's application for exclusion of its roadbed and right of way from inclusion in water district. The county water district board denied railroad's petition for exclusion of property and railroad petitioned for mandamus. The Superior Court, Kings County, W. G. Machetanz, J., ordered issuance of writ of mandate to compel such exclusion and water board appealed. The Supreme Court, Spence, J., held that fact that roadbed and right of way were not being devoted primarily to agricultural purposes at present time did not give railroad a right of exclusion of such land from water district having as its function the protection of future as well as present underground water resources, and where such land could at option of railroad be devoted to agriculture, land had a substantial and direct benefit by inclusion within water district.

Reversed.

Opinion, 295 P.2d 8 vacated.

1. Mandamus ⇨172

While mandamus is an appropriate remedy to test the proper exercise of discretion vested in a local board, court's power of review is confined to determining whether there was substantial evidence before the board to support its decision. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 1094.5(c).

2. Waters and Water Courses ⇨183½

In proceeding for exclusion of certain land from county water district, board is not specifically required to make formal findings of fact where exclusion is denied. West's Ann.Water Code, §§ 30000-33901, 31020-31033, 32200.

3. Waters and Water Courses ⇨183½

Where railroad applied to water district board for exclusion of its roadbed and right of way from water district and board denied such exclusion without entry of formal findings of fact, there was an implied finding that the prerequisites for exclusion had not been shown and in fact land would be substantially and directly benefited by its continued inclusion in the district. West's Ann.Water Code, § 32222.

4. Waters and Water Courses ⇨183½

The "substantial and direct benefit" which must be present in order to justify the retention of land in a county water district means substantial and direct benefit to the land in question. West's Ann. Water Code, § 32222.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Substantial and Direct Benefit".

5. Waters and Water Courses ⇐183½

The benefit which might accrue to a railroad through added freight revenues resulting from increased crop production and prosperous agricultural operations in a farming community occasioned by conservation of water would be an indirect benefit rather than a "substantial and direct benefit", which must be present in order to justify retention of railroad land in county water district. West's Ann. Water Code, § 32222.

6. Waters and Water Courses ⇐183½

The protection, conservation and replenishment of underground water supplies is one of the main functions of the county water district and such district has functions and powers other than that of furnishing water to any particular land. West's Ann. Water Code, § 31082.

7. Waters and Water Courses ⇐183½

Fact that railroad's roadbed and right of way through county water district had no water wells on the land in question and there was no intention to drill any thereon, and such land was not devoted to agricultural uses, was immaterial in so far as its obligations as a landowner in a county water district having authorized functions and operations that were substantially and directly benefiting railroad's land in protecting underground water rights of the entire district. West's Ann. Water Code, §§ 30092, 31082.

8. Waters and Water Courses ⇐183½

Fact that landowners within county water district may presently be devoting portions of their land to nonagricultural uses does not create a right on the part of such landowners to demand exclusion of that land from the district. West's Ann. Water Code, §§ 30092, 31082.

9. Waters and Water Courses ⇐183½

In proceeding on railroad's application to county water district for exclusion of its roadbed and right of way from water district, evidence showing that such land could at option of railroad be used for agricultural purposes was sufficient to show that it was substantially and directly benefited by its continued inclusion in water district, notwithstanding fact that at present time railroad proposed no agricultural use of land. West's Ann. Water Code, § 32222.

SPENCE, Justice.

[1] This is an appeal from a judgment ordering the issuance of a peremptory writ of mandate requiring the board of directors of the Kings County Water District to exclude therefrom certain property constituting a right-of-way owned by the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company. The board, following an extended hearing, had denied Santa Fe's petition for exclusion of the property. While mandamus is an appropriate remedy to test the proper exercise of discretion vested in a local board, Walker v. City of San Gabriel, 20 Cal.2d 879, 881, 129 P.2d 349, 142 A.L.R. 1383; Naughton v. Retirement Board of San Francisco, 43 Cal.App.2d 254, 257, 110 P.2d 714, the court's power of review is confined to determining whether there was substantial evidence before the board to support its decision. Code Civ.Proc. § 1094.5, subd. (c); Lindell Co. v. Board of Permit Appeals, 23 Cal.2d 303, 315, 144 P.2d 4; Odden v. County Foresters, etc., Board, 108 Cal.App.2d 48, 49, 238 P.

2d 23; Conroy v. Civil Service Commission, 75 Cal.App.2d 450, 457, 171 P.2d 500. Under this settled rule, we have concluded that the judgment of the trial court must be reversed.

The Kings County Water District was organized February 24, 1954, under the County Water District Law, Water Code, §§ 30000-33901. It comprises approximately 150,000 acres. It was organized primarily to protect the underground water supplies of the area from excessive pumping and to guard against the transportation of the underground water to areas outside the district. Its purposes and functioning generally have been in accordance with the aims and methods approved by law for such an organization. Coachella Valley County Water District v. Stevens, 206 Cal. 400, 274 P. 538; Water Code, §§ 31020-31033.

The right-of-way owned by Santa Fe runs through the water district. It is approximately 16½ miles long and 100 feet wide. A center strip, 30 feet wide, contains the track and roadbed proper; and on each side are strips 35 feet wide, which are more or less adaptable for agricultural purposes. Pursuant to section 32200 of the Water Code, Santa Fe petitioned the board of directors of the district for exclusion of the entire 100-foot strip. Section 32222 of said code provides for exclusion of land when the board determines, after hearing, either: "(a) * * * that the land will not be substantially and directly benefited by its continued inclusion in the district"; or "(b) * * * the exclusion to be for the best interests of the district." The board held an extended hearing and then denied the petition. Santa Fe thereafter successfully sought from the superior court a writ of mandate directing the board to exclude the 100-foot strip right-of-way from the district. The record of the testimony and proceedings at the hearing before the board was introduced in evidence and constituted the record before the trial court.

[2,3] There were no formal findings of fact by the board in connection with its order denying exclusion of Santa Fe's right-of-way. They are not specifically required when exclusion is denied, Water Code, §§ 32220-32227; cf. the requirement for findings in proceedings for the subsequent inclusion of added land to an existing county water district, Water Code, § 32447, but they would be helpful as an explicit record of the determination of facts by that body. However, the board's decision denying the petition to exclude Santa Fe's land carried with it the implied finding that the prerequisites for exclusion had not been shown; that rather, as contemplated by the statute, Santa Fe's land would be "substantially and directly benefited" by its continued inclusion in the district.

The controlling question is whether this implied finding of the board is "supported by substantial evidence in the light of the whole record." Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5, subd. (c); Corcoran v. San Francisco, etc., Retirement System, 114 Cal.App.2d 738, 740-741, 251 P.2d 59. The determinative language is the statute's requirement that the land in controversy be "substantially and directly benefited". Water Code, § 32222. "Substantially" means "in a substantial manner; really; solidly; competently." 40 Words and Phrases, Substantially, p. 504. Webster's New International Dictionary, Second Edition, defines the word "substantial," in part, as follows: "* * * material; * * * not seeming or imaginary; * * * real; true; * * * important; essential; * * * having good substance; strong; stout; solid; firm." "Substantial" is a relative term, its measure to be gauged by all the circumstances surrounding the matter in reference to which the expression has been used. In re Scroggin, 103 Cal.App.2d 281, 283, 229 P.2d 489. "Directly" means "in a direct way without anything intervening, not by secondary, but by direct, means." 12A Words and Phrases, Directly, p. 141. The word "benefit" denotes "any form of advantage." 5 Words and Phrases, Benefit, p. 331.

[4, 5] The substantial and direct benefit which must be present to justify retention of land in a county water district means substantial and direct benefit to the land in question. Benefits which might accrue to a railroad through added freight revenues resulting from increased crop production and prosperous agricultural operations in a farming community occasioned by the conservation of water would be indirect benefits and therefore immaterial.

As the basis for exclusion of its 100-foot right-of-way, Santa Fe argues as follows: The 30-foot center strip constitutes a roadbed, so dedicated in line with the performance of its duties as a common carrier, and the presence of underground waters would not provide any direct or substantial benefit to maintenance of such structure. On either side of the roadbed is a 35-foot strip, available in varying degrees for agricultural development. Certain portions thereof are leased for cultivation and some crops are actually growing thereon. However, such farm leasing by Santa Fe is not done with the object of gaining revenue, as only nominal amounts are received therefrom, but rather for the purpose of avoiding the otherwise costly process of destroying weeds which would grow annually on the 35-foot strips in the absence of cultivation and care by tenant farmers. Thus, the agricultural use of any portion of these strips is primarily for weed control and is purely incidental to Santa Fe's main purpose of maintaining its right-of-way.

Agreeing with Santa Fe's position, the trial court found that the entire right-of-way is "permanently devoted to other uses than agriculture, horticulture, viticulture or grazing," and accordingly "will receive neither a substantial nor direct benefit by its continued inclusion in the district"; that "the evidence adduced at the hearing before the * * * board" showed these facts "as a matter of law"; and therefore Santa Fe's right to have such land excluded from the district could not be denied. Bank of Italy v. Johnson, 200

Cal. 1, 31, 251 P. 784; Ferrill v. Ellis, 50 Cal.App.2d 743, 746, 123 P.2d 857.

But it is not the present, immediate use of the land which is the criterion for exclusion under the statute. The determining factor is whether any substantial and direct benefit accrues to the land itself, as distinguished from the particular use which a landowner may choose to make of the land. The record shows that shortly after its formation, the Kings County Water District obtained a court decree settling various disputes affecting the district's underground water supplies and pumping therefrom; that the district engages in studies and research as to the water needs of lands therein and possible future sources of supply; and that successful agricultural development of land in the district is dependent on the supplementary underground waters for purposes of irrigation. These functions of the district, acting on behalf of all landowners in the district, are of substantial and direct benefit to all land similarly situated within the district.

[6, 7] The protection, conservation and replenishment of the underground water supplies is one of the main functions of the water district in question. Water Code, § 31082. This is not a case involving an irrigation district, where the right to exclusion of the land formerly depended on whether the land was being furnished water for irrigation purposes by the district. Harrelson v. South San Joaquin Irr. Dist., 20 Cal.App. 324, 128 P. 1010; but see Hobe v. Madera Irrigation Dist., 128 Cal.App.2d 9, 274 P.2d 874. A county water district has other functions and powers than the furnishing of water to any particular land. The controlling statute expressly so distinguishes a county water district in providing that no land therein situated shall be released from "any of the burdens, obligations, or liabilities" of such district "because of its inclusion within an irrigation district". Water Code, § 30092. Thus, the fact that Santa Fe has no water wells on the land in question, does not now intend to drill any thereon because of the land's use as a right-of-way, and is not presently devoting the land to agricultural uses is immaterial insofar as concerns its obligations as a landowner in the county water district, whose authorized functions, activities, and operations are "substantially and directly" benefiting Santa Fe's land in protecting the underground water rights of the entire district. See Coachella Valley County Water District v. Stevens, supra, 206 Cal. 400, 409-410, 274 P. 538.

[8] Presumably all land which was included in the district overlays the underground water supplies to be conserved, and can have access to and can use such supplies; and all activities of the district in conserving those supplies will substantially and directly benefit all land so situated. The land itself is obviously benefited by such protective acts, regardless of present use thereof by the particular landowner. In the final analysis, it is therefore the potential rather than the present use of the particular land which must control. To hold otherwise, and permit the present non-agricultural use of the land to determine the right to its exclusion from the district, would result in the creation of excluded "islands" of varying shapes and sizes within an integrated county water district, consisting of land similarly situated, merely because of lack of need for the water in the present use, if any, of particular land rather than because of lack of benefit to, and consequent enhancement of the value of, the land itself. Manifestly the purposes of a county water district include the conservation of the water supply for future as well as present use. Water Code, § 31021. Many landowners within the district may be presently devoting portions of their land to such purposes as roads, structures, and other nonagricultural uses, but such circumstances do not create a right on the part of such landowners to demand exclusion of their land from the district.

[9] It is further significant that the statute does not provide a means whereby once land is excluded from the district, the board, as distinguished from the landowners, Water Code, § 32400 et seq., may reinclude the land on its own initiative.

Thus the board, if present nonagricultural use required exclusion from a county water district, would be powerless to reinclude on its own initiative such land upon a subsequent change of the use thereof to full agricultural use. The statute only requires that the land, rather than the present use thereof, be "substantially and directly benefited" by inclusion in the district. Such appears to be the situation with respect to the land in question. There was no showing that it did not have access to and could not use, at the option of the landowner and in the same manner as the other lands in the district, the water to be conserved through the activities of the district. Upon the evidence before it the board therefore properly denied the petition for exclusion, and the trial court erred in ordering issuance of the writ of mandate to compel such exclusion.

The judgment is reversed.

v.

Stephen STUART, Defendant and Appellant.

Cr. 5892.

Supreme Court of California,
In Bank.

Oct. 11, 1956.

Prosecution for manslaughter and for deviation from terms of a prescription which resulted in death. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Stanley Mosk, J., rendered judgment of conviction, and pharmacist appealed from the judgment and from the order denying his motion for a new trial. The Supreme Court, Traynor, J., held that evidence was insufficient to sustain conviction.

Judgment and order reversed.

TRAYNOR, Justice.

Defendant was charged by information with manslaughter, Pen.Code, § 192, and the violation of section 380 of the Penal Code. He was convicted of both offenses by the court sitting without a jury. His motions for a new trial and for dismissal, Pen.Code, § 1385, were denied, sentence was suspended, and he was placed on probation for two years. He appeals from the judgment of conviction and the order denying his motion for a new trial.

Defendant was licensed as a pharmacist by this state in 1946 and has practiced here since that time. He holds a B.S. degree in chemistry from Long Island University and a B.S. degree in pharmacy from Columbia University. In April, 1954, he was employed as a pharmacist by the Ethical Drug Company in Los Angeles.

On July 16, 1954, he filled a prescription for Irvin Sills. It had been written by Dr. D. M. Goldstein for Sills' eight-day-old child. It called for "Sodium phenobarbital, grains eight. Sodium citrate, drams three. Simple Syrup, ounces two. Aqua pepperment, ounces one. Aqua distilate QS, ounces four." Defendant assembled the necessary drugs to fill the prescription. He believed that the simple syrup called for was unavailable and therefore used syrup of orange. The ingredients were incompatible, and the syrup of orange precipitated out the phenobarbital. Defendant then telephoned Dr. Goldstein to ask if he could use some other flavoring. Dr. Goldstein told him that since it was midnight, if he could not find any simple syrup "it would be just as well to use another substance, elixir mesopine, P.B." Defendant spoke to a clerk and learned that there was simple syrup behind the counter. He mixed the prescription with this syrup, put a label on the bottle according to the prescription, and gave it to Sills. Sills returned home, put a teaspoonful of the prescription in the baby's milk and gave it to the baby. The baby died a few hours later.

Defendant stipulated that there was nitrite in the prescription bottle and that "the cause of death was methemoglobinemia caused by the ingestion of nitrite." When he compounded the prescription, there was a bottle containing sodium nitrite on the shelf near a bottle labeled sodium citrate. He testified that at no time during his employment at the Ethical Drug Company had he filled any prescription calling for sodium nitrite and that he had taken the prescribed three drams of sodium citrate from the bottle so labeled.

On August 11, 1954, another pharmacist employed by the Ethical Drug Company filled a prescription identical with the Sills' prescription. He obtained the sodium citrate from the same bottle used by defendant. The prescription was given to an infant. The infant became ill but recovered. In the opinion of Dr. Goldstein, it was suffering from methemoglobinemia. An analysis of this prescription by a University of Southern California chemist disclosed that it contained 5.4 grams of sodium nitrite per 100 cc's and 4.5 grams of sodium citrate per 100 cc's.

An analysis made by the staff of the head toxicologist for the Los Angeles County Coroner of the contents of the bottle given to Sills disclosed that it contained 1.33 drams of sodium citrate and 1.23 of sodium nitrite. An analysis made by Biochemical Procedures, Incorporated, a laboratory, of a sample of the contents of the bottle labeled sodium citrate disclosed that it contained 38.9 milligrams of nitrite per gram of material. Charles Covet, one of the owners of the Ethical Drug Company, testified that on the 17th or 18th of October, 1954, he emptied the contents of the sodium citrate bottle, washed the bottle but not its cap, and put in new sodium citrate. A subsequent analysis of rinsings from the cap gave strong positive tests for nitrite. Covet also testified that when he purchased an interest in the company in April, 1950, the bottle labeled sodium citrate was part of the inventory, that no one had put additional sodium citrate into the bottle from that time until he refilled it after the death of the Sills child and that he had never seen any other supply of sodium citrate in the store.

There is nothing in the record to indicate that the contents of the bottle labeled sodium citrate could have been identified as containing sodium nitrite without laboratory analysis. There was testimony that at first glance sodium citrate and sodium nitrite are identical in appearance, that in form either may consist of small colorless crystals or white crystalline powder, that the granulation of the crystals may vary with the manufacturer, and that there may be a slight difference in color between the two. The substance from the bottle labeled sodium citrate was exhibited to the court, but no attempt was made to compare it with unadulterated sodium citrate or sodium nitrite. A chemist with Biochemical Procedures, Incorporated, testified that the mixture did not appear to be homogeneous but that from visual observation alone he could not identify the crystals as one substance or the other. Defendant testified that he had no occasion before July 16th to examine or fill any prescription from the sodium citrate bottle.

[1] No evidence whatever was introduced that would justify an inference that defendant knew or should have known that the bottle labeled sodium citrate contained sodium nitrite. On the contrary, the undisputed evidence shows conclusively that defendant was morally entirely innocent and that only because of a reasonable mistake or unavoidable accident was the prescription filled with a substance containing sodium nitrite. Section 20 of the Penal Code¹ makes the union of act and intent or criminal negligence an invariable element of every crime unless it is excluded expressly or by necessary implication. People v. Vogel, 46 Cal.2d 798, 299 P.2d 850. Moreover, section 26 of the Penal Code lists among the persons incapable of committing crimes "[p]ersons who committed the act or made the omission charged under an ignorance or mistake of fact, which disproves any criminal intent", subd. 4, and "[p]ersons who committed the act or made the omission charged through misfortune or by accident, when it appears that there was no evil design, intention, or culpable negligence." Subd. 6; see also Pen.Code, §§ 195, 199. The question is thus presented whether a person can be convicted of manslaughter or a violation of section 380 of the Penal Code in the absence of any evidence of criminal intent or criminal negligence.

The answer to this question as it relates to the conviction of manslaughter² depends on whether or not defendant committed an "unlawful act" within the meaning of section 192 of the Penal Code when he filled the prescription. The Attorney General contends that even if he had no criminal intent and was not criminally negligent, defendant violated section 26280 of the Health and Safety Code and therefore committed an unlawful act within the meaning of section 192 of the Penal Code.

Section 26280 of the Health and Safety Code provides: "The manufacture, production, preparation, compounding, packing, selling, offering for sale, advertising or keeping for sale within the State of California * * * of any drug or device which is adulterated or misbranded is prohibited."³ In view of the analyses of the contents of the prescription bottle and the bottle labeled sodium citrate and defendant's stipulation, there can be no doubt that he prepared, compounded, and sold an adulterated and misbranded drug.

[2] Because of the great danger to the public health and safety that the preparation, compounding, or sale of adulterated or misbranded drugs entails, the public interest in demanding that those who prepare, compound, or sell drugs make certain that they are not adulterated or misbranded, and the belief that although an occasional nonculpable offender may be punished, it is necessary to incur that risk by imposing

1. "In every crime or public offense there must exist a union, or joint operation of act and intent, or criminal negligence."

2. "Manslaughter is the unlawful killing of a human being without malice. It is of three kinds:

"1. Voluntary—upon a sudden quarrel or heat of passion.

"2. Involuntary—in the commission of an unlawful act, not amounting to felony; or in the commission of a lawful act which might produce death, in an unlawful manner, or without due caution and circumspection; provided that this subdivision shall not apply to acts committed in the driving of a vehicle. * * *

3. "A drug shall be deemed to be adulterated * * * (4) if any substance has been (a) mixed or packed therewith so as to reduce its quality or strength; or (b) substituted wholly or in part therefor." Health and Safety Code, § 26235.

"The term 'misbranded' shall apply to all drugs or devices, the package or label of which bears any statement, design, or emblem regarding such article or the ingredients or substances contained therein which shall be false or misleading in any particular * * *." Health and Safety Code, § 26240.

strict liability to prevent the escape of great numbers of culpable offenders, public welfare statutes like section 26280 are not ordinarily governed by section 20 of the Penal Code and therefore call for the sanctions imposed even though the prohibited acts are committed without criminal intent or criminal negligence. See People v. Vogel, supra, 46 Cal.2d 798, 299 P.2d 850, note 2; Sayre, Public Welfare Offenses, 33 Colum.L.Rev. 55, 72-75; Hall, Prolegomena To A Science of Criminal Law, 89 U. of Pa.L.Rev. 549, 563-569.

[3] It does not follow, however, that such acts, committed without criminal intent or criminal negligence, are unlawful acts within the meaning of section 192 of the Penal Code, for it is settled that this section is governed by section 20 of the Penal Code. Thus, in People v. Penny, 44 Cal.2d 861, 877-880, 285 P.2d 926, 936, we held that "there was nothing to show that the Legislature intended to except section 192 of the Penal Code from the operation of section 20 of the same code" and that the phrase "without due caution and circumspection" in section 192 was therefore the equivalent of criminal negligence. Since section 20 also applies to the phrase "unlawful act," the act in question must be committed with criminal intent or criminal negligence to be an unlawful act within the meaning of section 192. By virtue of its application to both phrases, section 20 precludes the incongruity of imposing on the morally innocent the same penalty, Pen. Code, § 193, appropriate only for the culpable. Words such as "unlawful act, not amounting to felony" have been included in most definitions of manslaughter since the time of Blackstone (4 Bl.Comm.Homicide *191; see Riesenfeld, Negligent Homicide: A Study in Statutory Interpretation, 25 Cal.L.Rev. 21-22) and even since the time of Lord Hale, "unlawful act" as it pertains to manslaughter has been interpreted as meaning an act that aside from its unlawfulness was of such a dangerous nature as to justify a conviction of manslaughter if done intentionally or without due caution. (See, Moreland, Law of Homicide 186-187, 244, citing 1 Hale, Pleas of the Crown (ed. of 1778) 471-475; Foster, Crown Law (2d ed. 1791) 259; 1 East, Pleas of the Crown (1803) 257.) To be an unlawful act within the meaning of section 192, therefore, the act in question must be dangerous to human life or safety and meet the conditions of section 20. See People v. Mitchell, 27 Cal.2d 678, 682-684, 166 P.2d 10; People v. Pearne, 118 Cal. 154, 158, 50 p. 376; Thiede v. State, 106 Neb. 48, 182 N.W. 570, 572, 15 A.L.R. 237; People v. Pavlic, 227 Mich. 562, 199 N.W. 373, 374, 35 A.L.R. 741; Potter v. State, 162 Ind. 213, 70 N.E. 129, 131, 64 A.L.R. 942; State v. Cope, 204 N.C. 28, 167 S.E. 456, 458; Dixon v. State, 104 Miss. 410, 61 So. 423, 45 L.R.A., N.S., 219.

[4] It follows, therefore, that only if defendant had intentionally or through criminal negligence prepared, compounded, or sold an adulterated or misbranded drug, would his violation of section 26280 of the Health and Safety Code be an unlawful act within the meaning of section 192 of the Penal Code. Thus, in People v. Penny, supra, in discussing section 7415 of the Business and Professions Code, which prohibits the use by licensed cosmetologists of a solution of more than 10% phenol on a human being, we said that had the defendant been a licensed cosmetologist, she would have been guilty of violating section 7415 and therefore of an unlawful act within the meaning of section 192 of the Penal Code. The defendant in that case knew that she was using such a solution. The intentional or criminally negligent use of such a solution on a human being by a licensed cosmetologist in violation of section 7415 of the Business and Professions Code would clearly meet the conditions of section 20 of the Penal Code and would therefore be an unlawful act within the meaning of section 192. When, as in this case, however, the defendant did not know, and could not reasonably be expected to know, that the sodium citrate bottle contained nitrite, those conditions are not met and there is therefore lacking the culpability necessary to make the act an unlawful act within the meaning of section 192.

The crucial question with respect to defendant's conviction under section 380 of the Penal Code⁴ is whether he "ignorantly" deviated from Dr. Goldstein's prescription. The Attorney General contends that defendant acted "ignorantly" because he did not know and was therefore "ignorant" of the fact that the sodium citrate bottle contained nitrite, and that it is therefore immaterial that he had the professional knowledge that one should have to dispense drugs and could not reasonably be expected to know that the sodium citrate bottle contained nitrite. Defendant, on the other hand, contends that he did not act "ignorantly," since he had the knowledge of drugs and the technical skills required to dispense them, that he could not reasonably be expected to know that the sodium citrate bottle contained nitrite or to make a chemical analysis of its contents before filling the prescription, and that since there was nothing to show that he lacked the knowledge he was required to have or that he failed to use that knowledge, section 380 does not apply.

[5, 6] A definitive answer to these conflicting contentions cannot be gleaned from the dictionary, on which both parties rely, for the definitions therein can be read to support either contention.⁵ "When language which is reasonably susceptible of two constructions is used in a penal law ordinarily that construction which is more favorable to the offender will be adopted." People v. Ralph, 24 Cal.2d 575, 581, 150 P.2d 401, 404. This rule is particularly pertinent here, where one of the proposed constructions would impose absolute criminal liability and make a felony of an act that involves no culpability whatever. We do not base our decision on that ground alone, however, for we are convinced that it is clear from the history and purpose of section 380 that it did not impose criminal liability without fault.

Section 380 was enacted in 1872 when anyone could lawfully sell drugs in this state. It was based on section 445 of the Penal Code of New York 1864, and a footnote to that section, adopted by the California Code Commissioners as a note to section 380, stated, "The frequent occurrence of accidents, involving, often, even the loss of human life, through mistakes in putting up prescriptions, render necessary some legislation to enforce care and caution on the part of dealers in drugs." (Italics added.) There was no intimation of a purpose to impose criminal liability without fault, and the qualifying words of the section "willfully, negligently, or ignorantly" belie any such purpose. As the Commissioners' note indicates, the legislation was designed to enforce "care and caution" on the part of dealers in drugs. Obviously a person does not act with "care and caution" consequence of which human life or health is endangered, is guilty of a misdemeanor, or if death ensues, is guilty of a felony."

4. At the time defendant filled the prescription section 380 provided: "Every apothecary, druggist, or person carrying on business as a dealer in drugs or medicines, or person employed as clerk or salesman by such person, who, in putting up any drugs or medicines, or making up any prescription, or filling any order for drugs or medicines, willfully, negligently, or ignorantly omits to label the same, or puts an untrue label, stamp, or other designation of contents, upon any box, bottle, or other package containing any drugs or medicines, or substitutes a different article for any article prescribed or ordered, or puts up a greater or less quantity of any article than that prescribed or ordered, or otherwise deviates from the terms of the prescription or order which he undertakes to follow, in

5. Webster's New International Dictionary, 2d ed. Unabridged, 1948, defines "ignorance" as "want of knowledge in general, or in relation to a particular subject." It defines "ignorant" as "[d]estitute of knowledge; uninstructed or uninformed * * * [u]ninformed (in); unaware (of); as, I am ignorant in this subject; he was ignorant of that fact" and states that "[o]ne is ignorant who is without knowledge, whether in general or of some particular thing." (Italics added.) The italicized words lend support to one contention, the remaining words lend support to the other.

who dispenses drugs in ignorance of their properties and proper uses, and we believe that it was to protect the public against such ignorance that section 380 was enacted.

Charles W. FOUST, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Ismay M. FOUST, Defendant and Appellant,
L. A. 23552.

Supreme Court of California.
In Bank.

Oct. 9, 1956.

The Legislature's preoccupation with such ignorance is also indicated by its enactment in the same year of the first pharmacy law in this state designed to confine the dispensing of drugs to those of proven knowledge and competency. Stats. 1871-1872, p. 681. This law, known as the San Francisco Pharmacy Act, regulated the practice of pharmacy and the dispensing of medicines and poisons in the City and County of San Francisco. It confined the right to dispense drugs or fill prescriptions to graduate pharmacists, licentiates in pharmacy, practicing pharmacists, and practicing assistant pharmacists, and prescribed the educational qualifications and experience that each must have. This act was repealed in 1883, but a state-wide act based thereon was enacted in 1891. Stats. 1891, p. 86. Other legislation followed, and in 1937 the present state-wide statute for the protection of the public against ignorance in the handling of drugs was enacted. Bus. & Prof. Code, §§ 4000-4256, as amended. In 1955, after the alleged offense herein was committed, the Legislature amended section 380 by deleting the word "ignorantly" and substituting therefor "without consideration of those facts which by use of ordinary care and skill he should have known." This change removed the ambiguity arising from the use of the word "ignorantly" and made it abundantly clear that it was never the purpose of the statute to impose criminal liability without fault for accidents having no relation to a failure to use the knowledge and skill required for the dispensing of drugs. See, Elbert, Ltd. v. Gross, 41 Cal.2d 322, 327, 260 P.2d 35, and cases cited.

Action by a husband for annulment of his marriage and determination of spouses' property rights. Defendant wife cross-complained for divorce and settlement of property rights. From an order of the Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Philbrick McCoy, J., quashing execution and restraining sheriff from selling plaintiff's property to enforce a provision of parties' property settlement agreement, made part of annulment decree, for monthly payments by plaintiff to defendant, defendant appealed. The Supreme Court, Spence, J., held that the agreement was so merged in annulment decree as to make it sufficiently certain to render such provision enforceable by execution on decree.

Order reversed.

Carter, Schauer and Shenk, JJ., dissented.

Opinion, 285 P.2d 108, vacated.

I. Marriage §§ 65, 66

The nature of spouses' property settlement agreement, attachment thereof as exhibit to their stipulation for judgment annulling marriage, filing of both documents with Superior Court, and plain language of stipulation and judgment settling parties' property rights as per terms and conditions of agreement, approved by court and embodied in and made part of judgment by reference; conclusively showed that merger of agreement in judgment was intended, and in absence of contrary evidence, Superior Court's conclusion that merger was not intended is not binding on Supreme Court on appeal from order quashing execution.

2. Marriage ⚭55

Incorporation of spouses' property settlement agreement in marriage annulment decree by reference does not preclude merger of agreement in such decree.

3. Marriage ⚭65

A property settlement agreement, incorporated in decree annulling parties' marriage, is as effectively a part of decree as if recited therein in haec verba.

4. Marriage ⚭65

The fact that spouses' property settlement agreement, incorporated in marriage annulment decree by reference, was complete in itself, was immaterial, as it lost its identity in decree, by which parties' rights and obligations were declared in provision adjusting their property rights as per such agreement approved by court and embodied in judgment by such reference.

5. Execution ⚭7

A marriage annulment decree, incorporating parties' property settlement agreement as part of decree by reference, did not lack potency to support execution process because precise terms of husband's monetary obligations to wife did not appear on face of decree.

6. Execution ⚭1

"Execution" is a process in action to carry into effect the directions in a decree or judgment.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Execution".

7. Execution ⚭4

Execution is allowed in enforcement of provisions of spouses' property settlement agreement, where compliance therewith is ordered by marriage annulment decree.

8. Marriage ⚭65

While marriage annulment decree, settling parties' property rights as per terms and conditions of their property settlement agreement providing for monthly payments to wife by husband, should state amount to be paid with certainty, it is sufficient if amount may be definitely ascertained by inspection of record.

9. Judgment ⚭535

The amount for which judgment was rendered may be aided by reference to pleadings in case or jury's verdict.

10. Marriage ⚭65

When spouses' property settlement agreement is intended to become merged in marriage annulment decree, better practice is to set forth terms of agreement in haec verba in decree or by exhibit attached thereto and employ explicit language in decree showing that parties' rights and obligations are adjudicated thereby in accordance with terms of such agreement.

11. Execution ⚭7

Spouses' property settlement agreement, filed in Superior Court with their stipulation that decree annulling their marriage might be entered, was so merged in such decree adjusting parties' property rights as per terms and conditions of agreement, made part of decree, as to make decree sufficiently certain to render provision of agreement for monthly payments to wife by husband enforceable by execution on decree.

Richard A. Ibanez, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Herman Wildman, Los Angeles, for respondent.

SPENCE, Justice.

Defendant appeals from an order quashing execution and restraining the sheriff from selling plaintiff's property. The only question to be determined is whether a property settlement agreement had been so merged into an annulment decree that its provision for monthly payments became an operative part thereof, enforceable by execution. The trial court held that it had not but the record does not sustain its ruling.

The parties separated fourteen years after their marriage. Plaintiff husband then commenced this action for "annulment of marriage and determination of property rights." Defendant wife cross-complained for divorce and the settlement of property rights. Thereafter and on July 21, 1943, the parties entered into a property settlement agreement and stipulated that an annulment decree might be entered declaring the marriage null and void from its inception. The property settlement agreement provided, among other things, that plaintiff pay defendant $50 a month for life or until her remarriage. The agreement was attached as an exhibit to the stipulation, and both documents were filed with the court. The annulment decree was entered July 22, 1943. Following the wording of the stipulation, the decree ordered and adjudged: "That the properties and property rights of plaintiff and defendant herein are adjusted, settled and distributed as per the terms and conditions of that certain agreement dated July 21st, 1943, executed by plaintiff and defendant herein, a full and true copy of which agreement is on file herein attached to said Stipulation marked 'Exhibit "A"', and which is hereby approved by the Court and by this reference embodied in and made a part of this Judgment."

Plaintiff failed to make the prescribed payments and became indebted to defendant in the sum of $2,405. Upon affidavit setting forth plaintiff's default, defendant procured the issuance of a writ of execution on June 21, 1954. After levy had been made by the sheriff on plaintiff's property, plaintiff made a motion to quash the writ, based upon his affidavit reciting the circumstances of the parties' agreement. Both parties in their affidavits referred to the agreement as "embodied in and made part of the judgment." The court granted the motion, thereby holding that the parties' agreement had not merged in the decree so as to be enforceable by execution. We have concluded that the trial court's order granting the motion must be reversed.

[1] The nature of the agreement, its attachment to the stipulation for judgment, the filing of both documents with the court, and the plain language of the stipulation and the judgment entered thereon make the conclusion inescapable that merger was intended, thereby substituting rights and duties under the decree for those under the agreement. See Rest., Judgments, § 47, com. a.; Flynn v. Flynn, 42 Cal.2d 55, 58, 265 P.2d 865; Hough v. Hough, 26 Cal.2d 605, 609-610, 160 P.2d 15; 1 Armstrong, California Family Law, pp. 810-811. Since there is no evidence to the contrary, the trial court's conclusion that merger was not intended is not binding on this court. Fox v. Fox, 42 Cal.2d 49, 52, 265 P.2d 881; In re Estate of Platt, 21 Cal.2d 343, 352, 131 P.2d 825.

[2-4] It was held in the Flynn case that incorporation of a property settlement agreement into a decree by reference does not preclude a merger. Flynn v. Flynn, supra, 42 Cal.2d at page 59, 265 P.2d at page 866. When an agreement has been incorporated into a decree, it is as effectively a part thereof as if recited therein in haec verba. It is of no consequence here that the agreement was complete in itself, for it lost its identity in the decree. It is now the decree that declares the rights and obligations of the parties, for it "ordered and adjudged * * * that the properties and property rights of [the parties] are adjusted, settled and distributed as per the * * * agreement * * * and which is hereby approved by the court and by this reference embodied in and made a part of this judgment."

[5-9] Nor is the decree lacking in potency to support the execution process because the precise terms of plaintiff's monetary obligations do not appear on its face. Execution has been defined as "a process in an action to carry into effect the directions in a decree or judgment." Painter v. Berglund, 31 Cal.App.2d 63, 69, 87 P.2d 360, 363. It has been allowed in enforcement of the provisions of settlement agreements where compliance was ordered by the decree. Di Corpo v. Di Corpo, 33 Cal.2d 195, 201, 200 P.2d 529; Cochrane v. Cochrane, 57 Cal.App.2d 937, 938, 135 P.2d 714; Shields v. Shields, 55 Cal.App.2d 579, 582, 130 P.2d 982. While the decree should state with certainty the amount to be paid, 28 Cal.Jur. 2d, § 76, p. 710; Kittle v. Lang, 107 Cal. App.2d 604, 612, 237 P.2d 673; Wallace v.

Wallace, 111 Cal.App. 500, 506-507, 295 P. 1061; D'Arcy v. D'Arcy, 89 Cal.App. 86, 92, 264 P. 497, it is sufficient if the amount may be definitely ascertained by an inspection of the record. 49 C.J.S., Judgments, § 76, pp. 198-199. Thus, the amount for which a judgment was rendered may be aided by reference to the pleadings in the case or the verdict. 1 Freeman on Judgments, 5th Ed., § 84, pp. 148-149. Likewise here, the monthly payments owing by plaintiff as adjudged by the decree may be ascertained from the parties' agreement, which was attached to their stipulation for judgment and filed as part of the record.

Plaintiff unavailingly relies on cases involving the enforcement of support decrees by contempt proceedings, requiring therefor an express order to pay the money due. E.g. Plummer v. Superior Court, 20 Cal.2d 158, 163, 124 P.2d 5; Miller v. Superior Court, 9 Cal.2d 733, 737-740, 72 P.2d 868. Contempt proceedings are criminal in nature, and the prescribed procedural safeguards must be accorded the alleged contemner. City of Culver City v. Superior Court, 38 Cal.2d 535, 541, 241 P.2d 258. The prime purpose of such proceedings is punishment for disobedience of a valid order directing performance of a specified act. Liability for such drastic punishment "should not rest upon implication or conjecture" but rather upon an order expressing in "clear, specific and unequivocal" language the act required. Plummer v. Superior Court, supra, 20 Cal.2d at page 164, 124 P.2d at page 8. It was therefore said in the Flynn case that "Greater certainty and clarity may be required to support [contempt] proceedings than are necessary to support other judgment remedies * * *". Flynn v. Flynn, supra, 42 Cal.2d 55, 60, 265 P.2d 865, 867.

[10, 11] Whenever it is intended that a property settlement agreement shall become merged in the decree, it is undoubtedly the better practice to have the terms of the agreement set forth in haec verba in the decree or by way of exhibit attached thereto, and to have the court employ explicit language in the decree showing that the rights and obligations of the parties are adjudicated by the decree in accordance with the terms of the agreement. And while "greater certainty and clarity" may well be required to support contempt proceedings, we are satisfied that the language of the decree here shows that the agreement, filed with the stipulation, was merged in the decree, and that the manner in which the merger was effected makes the decree sufficiently certain to render it enforceable by execution. To hold otherwise would require the parties to engage in needless further litigation to merge the agreement into another decree or judgment in order to obtain the enforcement thereof by any legal process. Such idle act should not be required.

The order appealed from is reversed.

GIBSON, C. J., TRAYNOR, J., and PETERS, J. pro tem., concur.

CARTER, Justice.

I dissent.

The majority opinion holds that the property settlement agreement involved here was so incorporated in the annulment decree that its provisions for monthly payments are enforceable by the issuance of a writ of execution on the decree. The property settlement agreement was attached as an exhibit to a stipulation entered into by the parties that their marriage was null and void from the beginning. The annulment decree provided: "That the properties and property rights of plaintiff and defendant herein are adjusted, settled and distributed as per the terms and conditions of that certain agreement dated July 21st, 1943, executed by plaintiff and defendant herein, a full and true copy of which agreement is on file herein attached to said Stipulation marked 'Exhibit "A"', and which is hereby approved by the Court and by this reference embodied in and made a part of this Judgment."

It is said in the majority opinion, relying upon the case of Flynn v. Flynn, 42 Cal.2d 55, 265 P.2d 865, that "The nature of the agreement, its attachment to the stipulation for judgment, the filing of both documents with the court, and the plain language of the stipulation and the judgment entered thereon make the conclusion inescapable that merger was intended, thereby substituting rights and duties under the decree for those under the agreement." The judgment in the case under consideration contains no order of any kind save the order that the marriage of the plaintiff and defendant is "hereby annulled and decreed null and void from its inception." In the Flynn case, supra, the interlocutory decree specifically provided that "'defendant is hereby ordered to make all of the payments provided therein [agreement] to be paid by him * * * and plaintiff and defendant are hereby ordered to comply in all respects with each and all of the terms and provisions of said agreement and to perform all their obligations thereunder as therein provided.'" In that case a majority of this court said, 42 Cal.2d at page 58, 265 P.2d at page 866:

"The question as to what extent, if any, a merger has occurred, when a separation agreement has been presented to the court in a divorce action, arises in various situations. Thus, it may be necessary to determine whether or not contempt will lie to enforce the agreement, whether or not other judgment remedies, such as execution or a suit on the judgment, are available, whether or not an action may still be maintained on the agreement itself, and whether or not there is an order of the court that may be modified under the provisions of section 139 of the Civil Code.

"In any of these situations it is first necessary to determine whether the parties and the court intended a merger. If the agreement is expressly set out in the decree, and the court orders that it be performed, it is clear that a merger is intended. Plummer v. Superior Court, 20 Cal.2d 158, 165, 124 P.2d 5; Lazar v. Superior Court, 16 Cal.2d 617, 620, 107 P.2d 249. * * *

In the absence of an express order to perform all or part of the agreement, it may be difficult to determine whether or not a merger was intended."

I, of course, am firmly of the opinion that if the decree does not embody the agreement either in substance or in haec verba, or unless a copy of the agreement is physically attached to the decree, it is not an operative part of it and may not be enforced as a part of the decree. "This is true even though the agreement may have been introduced in evidence and approved by the court. If the agreement is merely introduced in evidence as an exhibit, as it undoubtedly was here (42 Cal.2d 55, 63 [265 P.2d 865]), it could be withdrawn or destroyed and interested parties could not, by searching the records of the court 'construct a complete picture of the rights and obligations of the parties' (Price v. Price, 85 Cal.App.2d 732, 735, 194 P.2d 101)."

Exhibits may be, and as a matter of practice usually are, withdrawn, and thus are no longer a matter of record which may be "inspected." When Exhibit "A" in the instant case is withdrawn there is nothing whatsoever in the judgment to show the rights and liabilities of the parties. In a case such as this, where there is no incorporation and no order of the court directing compliance with any of the provisions of the agreement, any action for relief must be on the agreement itself which should be accorded the same dignity as other contracts, but not the same dignity as a judgment of a court of record. There are here no "directions in a decree or judgment", Painter v. Berglund, 31 Cal.App.2d 63, 69, 87 P.2d 360, 363; there was no order to comply with the provisions of a settlement agreement in the decree, Di Corpo v. Di Corpo, 33 Cal.2d 195, 201, 200 P.2d 529; Cochrane v. Cochrane, 57 Cal.App.2d 937, 938, 135 P.2d 714; Shields v. Shields, 55 Cal.App.2d 579, 582, 130 P.2d 982; the decree did not state with certainty the amount to be paid plaintiff, 28 Cal.Jur.2d § 76, p. 710, and since exhibits are ordinarily withdrawn, the amount to be paid would be a matter of speculation and conjecture. Why not just take the complaining party's word for what the defendant owes? The majority holding here will lead to endless difficulty—affidavits and counter-affidavits will have to be filed setting forth the terms of the property settlement agreement since those terms are not matters of record. In every instance, since the majority has held, and continues to hold, that it is a question of fact whether the court and the parties intended an incorporation, that matter will have to be determined and then re-determined by an appellate court and finally by this court which can say, blandly and without even a tinge of conscience, that "Since there is no evidence to the contrary, the trial court's conclusion [or the appellate court's conclusion] that merger was not intended is not binding on this court. Fox v. Fox, 42 Cal.2d 49, 52, 265 P.2d 881; In re Estate of Platt, 21 Cal.2d 343, 352, 131 P.2d 825. It is obvious from the concluding paragraph of the majority opinion that even the majority of this court feel apologetic about what is being done in this case. It is said: "Whenever it is intended that a property settlement agreement shall become merged in the decree, it is undoubtedly the better practice to have the terms of the agreement set forth in haec verba in the decree or by way of exhibit attached thereto, and to have the court employ explicit language in the decree showing that the rights and obligations of the parties are adjudicated by the decree in accordance with the terms of the agreement." (Emphasis added.)

By a sort of roundabout reasoning it is also concluded here that while (speaking of the contempt process) "Liability for such drastic punishment 'should not rest upon implication or conjecture' but rather upon an order expressing in 'clear, specific and unequivocal' language the act required. Plummer v. Superior Court, supra, 20 Cal. 2d [158, 163], at page 164, 124 P.2d [5, 7] at page 8", implication and conjecture may be indulged in where merely the execution process is involved. Apparently, by implication, we are to assume that execution may be utilized by indulging in conjecture and speculation even though there is no clear, specific and unequivocal language in the decree. No other conclusion can be reached when the facts of this case are taken into consideration.

In the instant case, as has been heretofore noted, the property settlement agreement was attached merely to the stipulation—not to the judgment—and the agreement and stipulation were described as Exhibit "A". We said in Bank of America Nat. Trust & Savings Ass'n v. Standard Oil Co., 10 Cal.2d 90, 94, 73 P.2d 903, 905, that "As between the petitioner and the ranch company, the judgment which is now on appeal is only an adjudication that the owners of the bonds originally secured by the deed of trust, or their successors, are entitled to the trust fund as against other claimants. It does not completely fix the liability of the petitioner to the ranch company. 'A final decree in equity must state in plain figures the amount which a party must pay in the way both of debt or damages and costs, as well as every other matter adjudicated.' [Citation.] When the amount is not so stated and does not appear in the judgment roll, it cannot be supplied by an affidavit submitted ex parte. The superior court had no authority to order a writ of execution to issue upon the facts stated in the affidavit made on behalf of the ranch company, and its writ should be recalled." It was also said: "Before an execution may properly issue the judgment must be for money and the amount due and the persons to whom payable must be determined with exactness. Code Civ.Proc. sec. 682; Feldmeier v. Superior Court, 12 Cal.2d 302, 307, 83 P.2d 929, 119 A.L.R. 927; Bank of America [Nat. Trust & Savings Ass'n] v. Standard Oil Co., 10 Cal.2d 90, 73 P.2d 903. The judgment of the superior court went no further than to approve the arbitration award. * * * It is thus clear that the money due could not be determined from the judgment. * * * Thus, the execution was improperly issued for the reason that by the judgment plaintiff McKay was not entitled to any money, nor was the amount due the employees and their identity fixed by the judgment." McKay v. Coca-Cola Bottling Co., 110 Cal. App.2d 672, 677, 243 P.2d 35, 38. This, contrary to certain language in the majority opinion, is not a case where the amount may be determined from the pleadings or the verdict.

The majority opinion in this case goes farther than any of the other ill-considered decisions of this court in this field, Fox v. Fox, 42 Cal.2d 49, 265 P.2d 881; Flynn v. Flynn, 42 Cal.2d 55, 265 P.2d 865; Dexter v. Dexter, 42 Cal.2d 36, 265 P.2d 873; Messenger v. Messenger, 46 Cal.2d 619, 297 P.2d 988, since here there was no incorporation of the agreement whatsoever nor any order by the court directing compliance therewith. Yet it is held that an incorporation was "intended" and that execution may issue.

For the reasons heretofore set forth, I would affirm the order.

SCHAUER, Justice (dissenting).

As stated in the majority opinion, "The only question to be determined is whether a property settlement agreement had been so merged into an annulment decree that its provision for monthly payments became an operative part thereof, enforceable by execution. The trial court held that it had not * * *." The majority reverse.

In my view the record as related in the majority opinion supports, and the better practice requires, the conclusion reached by the trial court. (See Messenger v. Messenger (1956), 46 Cal.2d 619, 297 P.2d 988; Flynn v. Flynn (1954), 42 Cal.2d 55, 61-62, 265 P.2d 865.) Accordingly, I would affirm the judgment.

SHENK, Justice (dissenting).

I concur in the reasoning and conclusions of Mr. Justice CARTER in his dissenting opinion.

I desire to emphasize that this proceeding was commenced by the application by Mrs. Foust for a citation directed to Mr. Foust to show cause why he should not be punished for contempt for failure to pay past due support payments provided for in a property settlement agreement incorporated by reference in the annulment decree. A citation for contempt was signed by a Judge of the Superior Court and the matter was referred to a commissioner. It was doubtless obvious to the trial court that the proceeding was not properly one in contempt for the reason that no order of court had been violated. However a writ of execution was issued for the amount of the delinquent payments as shown by the affidavit of Mrs. Foust. This amount could be ascertained only by an examination of that document and the property settlement agreement in which Mr. Foust had agreed to pay $50 per month during the life of Mrs. Foust or until her lawful remarriage. Nowhere in the decree is there an order that Foust pay a definite or any sum of money as support or for such other purpose, nor is there any provision in the decree to carry into effect or directing compliance with the property settlement agreement. There was therefore no order or judgment of the court upon which execution could issue, and the order quashing the writ should be sustained.

The PEOPLE of the State of California,
Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

William S. POWELL and Harvey Nessel,
Defendants,

Harvey Nessel, Defendant and Appellant.
Cr. 5633.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California.

Oct. 16, 1956.

Prosecution of defendants for conspiracy to commit grand theft and the offense of grand theft. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Charles W. Fricke, J., entered judgments of conviction and order denying motions for new trial and defendants appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Doran, J., held that evidence sustained defendants' convictions of conspiracy to commit grand theft and the crime of grand theft arising out of a scheme whereby defendants purportedly sold greeting card distributorships to victims.

Affirmed.

Conspiracy Ⓒ47

False Pretenses Ⓒ49(1)

Evidence sustained convictions of defendants for conspiracy to commit grand theft and the offense of grand theft arising out of scheme whereby defendants purportedly sold greeting card distributorships to victims.

Jack Altman, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Elizabeth Miller, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

DORAN, Justice.

The appellant and William S. Powell were charged by information in Count I with Conspiracy to Commit Grand Theft, in that they conspired with each other and with A. Diamond, and Phillip Martin and other persons unknown, to commit the crime of Grand Theft; in Count II with Grand Theft of $300 from Murdo Mackay; in Count III with Grand Theft of $483.60 from Murdo Mackay; in Count IV with Grand Theft of $733.60 from Charles A. Giboney, Jr.; and in Count V with Grand Theft of $783 from Ben Louie.

Each pleaded not guilty to each count. The jury which heard the evidence returned verdicts of guilty as charged in each count of the information as to each defendant.

As recited in respondent's brief, "On June 15, 1954, a request for a classified advertisement was brought to the counter girl at the main office of the Los Angeles Times at Second and Spring Streets, by a person giving his name as A. Diamond. It was to run four times, starting on Wednesday, the 16th. It was to be billed to 'Floray Co., % William H. Spencer, 4063 Radford Avenue, Studio City.' The advertisement was as follows:

"Men to Service

"Large Corp. interested in dependable local parties to service accounts to be established in this area. Applicants will act as jobber. Distributors with exceptional opportunity for a sound secure future.

"High earnings possible for select-ed parties. Any applicants must be able to make light deliveries, have exceptional reputation & be in a position to make an immediate cash outlay of $783 (deposit secured by mdse. & returnable) representing 25% of total investments, with company handling balance for proper parties.

"Submit only name, address & phone number to arrange personal interview to Box L-165, Times."

"On June 22, 1954, the appellant and Powell went to the office of the Lawrence Office Service, an answering and office service, at 7960 Beverly Boulevard. They wanted the service offered by that organization. They told Mrs. Joseph, who ran it, that the name of the organization for which they wanted the service was the National Distributing Company. Mrs. Joseph asked the name and a home telephone number so that they could be reached by her. She was told that Mr. William S. Powell was the head of the organization, and that there were four associates, Al Diamond, Harvey Nessel, Paul Riley and Phil Martin, from whom she might hear, and to whom she should give messages. Powell gave her a home address, 1585 Ocean Boulevard, Balboa, and a telephone number, Harbor 0363-M. They paid her for the service for a month in advance. During the period from June 22, 1954 through August 22, 1954, Mrs. Joseph's organization performed services for the appellant and Powell. The organization received telephone calls and mail, and the appellant and Powell received mail from them. Mrs. Joseph received a second month's payment. She sent the bills for the service to 1585 Ocean Boulevard, Balboa. The one sent in September was not paid. About October, she sent another bill, and it was returned."

Mr. Mackay answered the ad by mail. Appellant and a Mr. Diamond visited Mackay's house. "The appellant told Mr. Mackay that he was sales representative for the National Distributing Company, and Diamond was the location man for the same company. He said that Mr. William S. Powell was general manager in the area, and that Mr. Mackay would meet him later.

"The appellant told Mr. Mackay that the National Distributing Company was an authorized branch of the U. S. Greeting Card Houses of East Pike Street, Seattle, Washington, and that they were opening up territory in this area in which greeting cards would be retailed through super-markets. He said the total price of the business was about thirty-one hundred dollars, and it included twenty-four greeting card houses or display racks set in twenty-four locations, about forty-eight advertising signs, and three thousand greeting cards. He said that Mr. Mackay's part would be to keep the racks full; buy cards through the company, and collect the profits. The appellant told Mr. Mackay that 25% of the approximately $3100.00 would be wanted as a down payment, and Mr. Mackay would then become a distributor for the National Distributing Company. Thereafter, the rest of the $3100.00 would be paid to the National Distributing Company at about $65.00 a month if the gross profits from the sale of the cards were over $800.00. If the gross retail sales did not amount to $800.00, then Mr. Mackay did not have to pay anything that month." Mr. Mackay then signed a printed "Application and Order" for the products and made a payment of $300.00, the balance of $2,350.00 to be paid in monthly installments. A few days later Mackay received a letter acknowledging the payment, signed by Wm. S. Powell. The letter closed with the sentence, "Please advise us immediately when we can expect the balance due of $2350.80 so that we may make our arrangements accordingly."

Mr. Mackay attempted several times to get in touch with the appellant and Powell by telephoning the number on the letterhead. The telephone was answered, but he did not speak to either the appellant or Powell. Each time he left a message, but never received a return of his calls.

A day or two after he received the letter of July 15th, Mr. Mackay drafted a letter as follows:

"Murdo Mackay
"1925 S. Mariposa St.,
"Los Angeles Calif.
"July 23, 1954.

"National Distributing Co.,
"7960 Beverly Blvd.,
"Los Angeles, Calif.,
"Dear Mr. Powell,

"I wish to thank you for your letter which arrived this morning.

"There is a little matter, which being a very busy man you must have overlooked—my deposit of $783.60, which should have accompanied your refusal of my application as per contract dated 6-23-54.

"I fail to see what benefit you may accrue by procrastinating in this matter and so as to cause you the least inconvenience possible return my deposit immediately.

"Sincerely Yours
"Murdo Mackay."

He then copied it word for word, put it into an envelope, addressed it to the National Distributing Company at 7860 Beverly Boulevard, Los Angeles, stamped it, and put it into a mail box. It was never returned.

He heard nothing from the National Distributing Company, Powell or the appellant. He called the telephone number on the letterhead again several times, and each time there was an answer but he did not speak to either Powell or the appellant. He received no communication from either Powell or the appellant in response to the calls.

All efforts to get in touch with appellant failed.

The other alleged victims had the same experience according to the record.

It is contended on appeal that:

"I. There was not sufficient evidence to support the verdict of guilty of conspiracy to commit grand theft, in that there was no showing of any agreement to commit an illegal act.

"II. There was not sufficient evidence to support the verdict of guilty of grand theft in that there was no showing of an intent to defraud Murdo Mackay, or of fraud against him, or false pretenses used to perpetrate a fraud upon his, or of his reliance upon any false representations in parting with his money.

"III. The Court erred in failing to direct a verdict of acquittal on Counts IV and V, relating to the transactions with Mr. Louie and Mr. Giboney, as it was not shown that he had any connection with those transactions.

"IV. The Court erred in instructing the jury on Civil Code Sections 1670 and 1671, relating to liquidating damages."

In reply to these contentions respondent points out, and it is supported by the record, that, "Neither Mr. Mackay, Mr. Giboney nor Mr. Louie ever heard from Powell, the appellant, or Martin again; none received any greeting cards, racks, signs or his money back.

"The form of 'Application and Order' which was signed by Messrs. Louie, Mackay and Giboney was never authorized by U. S. Greeting Cards Incorporated.

"The U. S. Greeting Card Company received no applications or orders from Murdo Mackay, Charles A. Giboney, Jr., Ben W. Louie, Harvey Nessel, William S. Powell or the National Distributing Company during June or July, 1954. Neither did they receive any money from any of them during that period.

"We submit that in view of the friendship of the appellant and Powell; the use by them of a company name formerly used by the appellant; their appearance together when the printing order was given and the telephone service was subscribed to; their use of names of prospects secured from an advertisement apparently inserted in the paper by Diamond, and Diamond's accompanying the appellant to Mr. Mackay's house and Powell to Mr. Giboney's house; the similarity of the sales talk given each of the prospects by the appellant, Martin and Powell; and the eagerness of each to get the 'down payment' in certified or cashier's checks, the jury could reasonably draw the inference that they were operating with a common understanding, and pursuant to an agreement between them. It could further infer that, in accordance with their mutual understanding, each made false and fraudulent representations with respect to material matters, as, for example, that the National Distributing Company was an authorized branch or distributor of U. S. Greeting Card Houses Incorporated."

It would serve no useful purpose to go into further details. It may be noted that the evidence was sufficient to support the verdict of guilty of conspiracy to commit grand theft as well as the offense of grand theft. Nor does the record reveal that the court erred in failing to direct an acquittal verdict as to Counts IV and V. It does not appear that the instructions were erroneous in any respect.

The judgment and the order denying defendants motion for a new trial are, and each is affirmed.

Cr. 5776.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California.

Oct. 15, 1956.

Habeas corpus proceedings, whereby petitioner sought release from custody upon ground that judgment of contempt entered against him was void and beyond jurisdiction of court entering same. The District Court of Appeal, Nourse, J. pro tem., held that party charged with contempt has right to have witnesses called against him fix time and place of occurrence with particularity, but held that it is not necessary that charging affidavits so fix that time.

Writ discharged.

1. Divorce ☞87

Husband's forcible taking of child from possession of wife constituted an annoyance and molestation of wife, within proscription of divorce court order restraining husband from annoying or molesting wife in any manner.

2. Contempt ☞54(4), 60(3)

At hearing upon charge of contempt, party charged has right to have witnesses called against him fix time and place of occurrence with particularity, in order that he may introduce evidence that he was not present at scene, since failure to do so may deprive him of that opportunity; but it is not necessary that charging affidavits so fix that time. NOURSE, Justice pro tem.

Petitioner, having been found in contempt of an order of the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the County of Los Angeles, and sentenced to serve a term of five days in the county jail, seeks a release from custody upon the ground that the judgment of contempt was void and beyond the jurisdiction of the superior court. His specific attacks upon the legality of the order will be hereinafter mentioned.

Petitioner is the defendant and cross-complainant in an action for divorce commenced by his wife, Nadia. On March 9, 1956, by stipulation of the parties and in the presence of petitioner, an order was made and entered that "both parties are restrained from annoying or molesting the other in any manner." On July 30, 1956, Nadia filed in the divorce action her affidavit charging, among other things, that on or about July 6 and on July 21, 1956, petitioner willfully and without cause violated the court's order by going to the home of plaintiff and trying to by force take the minor children of the plaintiff, who had been awarded to her, from her.

Upon the basis of this affidavit an order to show cause was issued and served upon the defendant requiring him to show cause why he should not be held in contempt of the order of March 9. The matter was heard before a commissioner of the court who found that petitioner did molest and annoy Nadia on July 3 by, through force, taking one of the children of the parties from the custody of Nadia and by engaging in an argument with her. At the hearing before the commissioner both petitioner and his wife fixed the time of this occurrence as July 3.¹

The commissioner recommended that the defendant be found in contempt of court for having willfully violated the order of March 9 on Tuesday, the 3rd day of July, and again on Saturday, the 21st day of July, and that the matter be continued to September 21, 1956, for hearing before Judge Fox for the purpose of sentence. The findings and recommendations of the commissioner were approved by Judge Evans, and on September 21 petitioner was sentenced by Judge Fox.

Petitioner attacks the judgment of contempt upon two grounds. His first ground is that the affidavit and order to show cause charged him with contempt of the order restraining him from annoying and molesting his wife, but that the commissioner found that he was in contempt for violating an order as to custody of the children.

[1] There is no factual basis for this contention. It is true that the commissioner found that one of the acts committed by petitioner on July 3 consisted of forcibly taking one of the children from the possession of Nadia, but he found that this constituted an annoyance and molestation of Nadia—and that such an act would annoy her and constitute a molestation is too apparent for argument.

[2, 3] The other contention made by petitioner is that the affidavit of Nadia upon which the order to show cause in re contempt was based charged him with the violation of the court's order on or about July 6, 1956, while the commissioner found that the violation took place on July 3, 1956, and that he was thus deprived of proving an alibi as to July 6.

There is no merit in this contention. At the hearing on the order to show cause the time of the occurrence was fixed by both parties as occurring on Tuesday, July 3. Any evidence as to his whereabouts on July 6, therefore, was entirely immaterial. It is not necessary that an affidavit fix with exactness the hour or day upon which a violation of the order occurs. At the hearing upon a charge of contempt, the party charged has the right to have the witnesses called against him fix the time and the place of the occurrence with particularity in order that he may introduce evidence that he was not then present at the scene, for unless the time is fixed with reasonable exactitude he would be deprived of that opportunity; but it is not necessary that the charging affidavit so fix that time. Selowsky v. Superior Court of Napa Co., 180 Cal. 404, 407, 181 P. 652, Pen.Code, sec. 955.

Petitioner cites, in support of his contention, the case of People v. Morris, 3 Cal.App. 1, 10, 84 P. 463. That case, however, is clearly distinguishable from the case at bar. There the defendant was charged with the crime of statutory rape. The information charged the criminal act as having taken place on December 25, 1903. The evidence produced by the prosecution fixed the time that the act took place at 4 p.m. on that day. The defendant produced several witnesses who testified that the defendant was at another place than that where the act was alleged to have occurred from half past 2 until nearly 6 o'clock on that day. The court instructed the jury that it was only necessary that they believe from the evidence to a moral certainty, and beyond a reasonable doubt, that the defendant committed the act on the date charged in the information. The court held that this instruction was erroneous inasmuch as the evidence offered by the People had fixed the time of the offense at a certain hour of the day in question and that therefore the instruction in effect deprived the defendant of the right to introduce evidence to establish an alibi which might create, in the

1. The commissioner also found that the petitioner again violated the order on July 21, but as the petitioner was not minds of the jury, a reasonable doubt as to his guilt.

In the present case, the defendant having admitted that the occurrence which the court found constituted a violation of its order took place upon the 3rd of July, any evidence as to his whereabouts on another day had no materiality whatsoever. See People v. Ralls, 21 Cal.App.2d 674, 678, 70 P.2d 265.

The writ is discharged and petitioner is remanded to the custody of the Sheriff of Los Angeles County.

Cross-Appellant.

Civ. 8750.

District Court of Appeal, Third District,
California.

Oct. 11, 1956.

Action for personal injuries and property damage arising out of collision with plaintiffs' disabled automobile which was stopped on causeway. The Superior Court, Solano County, Harlow V. Greenwood, J., rendered judgment for defendant, and for the plaintiff on defendant's cross-complaint, and plaintiffs and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Schottky, J., held that evidence was sufficient to support the judgment in favor of the plaintiffs on the cross-complaint, and the judgment in favor of defendant.

Judgment in favor of defendant and judgment in favor of plaintiffs on the cross-complaint affirmed.

Opinion, 295 P.2d 551, vacated.

1. Appeal and Error ⇨1001(1)

Before an appellate tribunal is justified in reversing a judgment upon the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence, it must appear from the record that, accepting the full force of evidence adduced, together with every inference favorable to prevailing party which may be drawn therefrom, and excluding all evidence in conflict therewith, it still appears that the law precludes such prevailing party from recovering a judgment.

2. Appeal and Error ⇨930(1)

On appeal, evidence must be construed most strongly against the losing party.

3. Appeal and Error ⇨930(1)

Every favorable inference and presumption which may fairly be deduced from the evidence should be resolved in favor of the prevailing party.

4. Appeal and Error ⇨930(1), 989

Prevailing party's evidence must ordinarily be accepted as true on appeal, and evidence which is contradictory must be disregarded.

5. Automobiles ⇨245(43)

Driving 50 feet behind another automobile at speed of 45 miles an hour in heavy traffic on four lane causeway was not unreasonable as a matter of law. West's Ann.Vehicle Code, § 531.

6. Negligence ⇨136(9, 14)

Generally, negligence is a question of fact for the jury and it is only where the inference of negligence is irresistible that it becomes the duty of the court to decide upon it as a matter of law.

7. Negligence ⇨136(9)

Where the inferences to be drawn are in any degree doubtful, the only proper rule is to submit the matter of negligence to the jury under proper instructions.

8. Negligence Ⓒ1

"Negligence" is not an absolute term but a relative one, and in deciding whether there was negligence in a given case, the conduct in question must be considered in the light of all surrounding circumstances shown by the evidence.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Negligence".

9. Automobiles Ⓒ245(40)

Evidence that defendant's automobile was traveling at a speed of 45 miles per hour about 50 feet behind automobile which began to swerve when it was about 50 feet from plaintiffs' disabled vehicle, and that defendant, being unable to swerve because of condition of traffic, immediately applied the brakes and made 65 feet of skid marks before the collision, raised the question for jury as to defendant's negligence.

10. Automobiles Ⓒ245(83)

In action arising out of collision with plaintiffs' disabled automobile which was stopped on causeway, the failure to anticipate that automobile would become disabled because of an overheated engine, or to give greater warning to oncoming traffic raised question for jury as to plaintiffs' contributory negligence. West's Ann.Vehicle Code, § 582.

11. New Trial Ⓒ159

Trial judge in passing upon a motion for new trial is not bound by the same rules as appellate court.

12. Appeal and Error Ⓒ1001(1)

Where it could not be held as a matter of law that the judgment lacked substantial support, the appellate court would not interfere with the verdict even though the evidence preponderated in favor of the plaintiffs on the issue of defendant's negligence as well as on the issue of the contributory negligence of the plaintiffs.

13. Negligence Ⓒ83.1

Under the doctrine of "last clear chance" the plaintiffs must be negligent and as a result of their negligence they must be in a position where they cannot escape from their perilous position by the exercise of ordinary care, and the defendant must be aware of their danger so that he realizes, or ought to realize, that the plaintiffs are unable to escape, and the defendant must then have a clear chance to avoid injuring the plaintiffs by the exercise of ordinary care.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Last Clear Chance".

14. Automobiles Ⓒ245(91)

In view of defendant's testimony that he had applied his brakes as soon as he observed plaintiffs' vehicle stopped on causeway and could not swerve to avoid the collision because of the condition of the traffic, defendant did not have last clear chance to avoid accident, as a matter of law.

15. New Trial Ⓒ39Trial Ⓒ255(10)

In action arising out of collision with plaintiffs' disabled automobile which was stopped on a causeway, where plaintiffs offered no instruction on the doctrine of last clear chance, the trial court did not err in not giving such an instruction or in not granting a new trial on that ground, even though the court could have considered the doctrine along with the other rules of law.

16. Trial Ⓒ251(2)

In action arising out of collision with plaintiffs' disabled automobile which was stopped on causeway, instruction relating to manner in which the plaintiffs' automobile was parked on the causeway and also on issue of whether or not automobile should have been stopped and parked before it got onto the causeway, was not erroneous as interjecting issues into case which were not present.

17. Automobiles Ⓒ245(83)

In action arising out of collision with plaintiffs' disabled automobile which was stopped on a causeway, the question of whether plaintiffs were justified in stopping and parking on causeway under all circumstances was a question of fact for jury.

18. Automobiles Ⓒ246(27)

In action arising out of collision with plaintiffs' disabled automobile which was stopped on a causeway, instruction that plaintiffs could not recover if they were negligent or careless in the manner in which they attempted to warn defendant that their automobile was stopped, was proper on the issues of negligence and proximate cause.

19. Automobiles ⇨246(60)

In action arising out of collision with plaintiffs' disabled automobile which was stopped on a causeway, instruction which required plaintiffs to explain why their automobile stopped on causeway was not improper on the ground that it shifted the burden of proof as to negligence and contributory negligence. West's Ann.Vehicle Code, § 582.

20. Automobiles ⇨173(2)

Under statute governing stopping on highway with exception relating to highway bounded by curbs, a "curb" is a stone or row of stones, or similar construction of concrete, wood, or other material, along the margin of the roadway, as a limit to the roadway and a restraint upon and protection to the adjoining sidewalk space.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Curb".

Where north side of causeway had a barrier consisting of steel pipes imbedded in concrete with openings in the concrete so that the water could flow off the causeway, and south side had a two foot walkway with wooden boards about eight inches high separating the walkway from the vehicular part of causeway, causeway was bounded by an adjacent "curb" as a matter of law within statute governing stopping on highways but excepting highways bounded by curbs. West's Ann.Vehicle Code, § 582.

22. Appeal and Error ⇨1064(1)

In action arising out of collision with plaintiffs' disabled automobile which was stopped on a causeway bounded by curbs, giving instruction relating to statutory duties of person who parks, or leaves standing a vehicle on the highway in an unincorporated area, and referring to the risk of being found negligent in so doing, unless he affirmatively shows the impracticability of handling vehicle otherwise, was not prejudicial error even though such statute specifically excepted highways bounded by curbs, in view of provisions of statute prohibiting person from leaving any vehicle on a causeway except when necessary to avoid conflict with other traffic or in compliance with the direction of a police officer. West's Ann.Vehicle Code, §§ 582, 586.

23. Automobiles ⇨244(14)

In action arising out of a collision with the plaintiffs' disabled automobile, which was stopped on a causeway, the evidence was sufficient to support the judgment for defendant and the judgment for plaintiffs on defendant's counterclaim. West's Ann. Vehicle Code, §§ 582, 586; West's Ann. Const. art. 6, § 4½.

24. Automobiles ⇨244(45)

In action arising out of a collision with plaintiffs' disabled automobile, which was stopped on a causeway, wherein defendant filed a cross-complaint, the evidence was sufficient to support the implied finding that defendant was guilty of contributory negligence.

Robert M. Cole, Davis, for appellants.

Russell A. Harris, Sacramento, for cross-appellant.

SCHOTTKY, Justice.

Plaintiffs commenced an action for damages for personal injuries and property damage sustained by plaintiff Ida Clinkscale and for property damage sustained by her husband, plaintiff William Clinkscale, when the automobile which he was driving and in which she was a passenger became involved in an accident with an automobile driven by defendant, W. J. Germershausen. Plaintiffs appeal from that portion of the judgment entered in favor of the defendant upon a jury verdict, and defendant appeals from the same judgment in favor of the cross-defendant, William Clinkscale. A nonsuit was granted to cross-defendant Ida Clinkscale, and the cross-complainant, W. J.

Germershausen, has not appealed from that order.

At the time the accident occurred, the plaintiffs were traveling east on U. S. Highway 40 over the Yolo Causeway, which is a form of bridge over a by-pass and runs in a general easterly and westerly direction, being 3 to 4 miles in length. The highway is at least 15 to 20 feet from the ground and consists of four perfectly straight and level traffic lanes, two in each direction, each divided by a white line with a double line in the center. At the south side of the causeway is a two-foot walkway separated from the pavement by a wooden barrier. The plaintiffs had traveled to San Francisco on the morning of the accident and on the way down, near Fairfield, the car sputtered and the temperature of the engine was abnormally high, so they stopped at a filling station to put water in the radiator.

After driving around in San Francisco for a few hours, the plaintiffs left to return to their residence in Broderick, Yolo County, California. They did not notice any trouble with the car until it stopped in the middle of the Yolo Causeway, in the outside eastbound lane against the wooden barrier.

It was a sunny Sunday afternoon in June, around 5 p.m., and the traffic was heavy in all four lanes. Clinkscale set his emergency brake, looked under the hood and discovered that smoke was coming off the engine and the radiator was steaming. He checked the temperature gauge and found it to be at the boiling point. He had not checked the gauge before crossing the causeway, nor at the time he passed a service station located on the highway at Davis, nor at any time since leaving the filling station at Fairfield on the way to San Francisco. After unsuccessfully trying to start the car, he stationed himself at the left rear fender to flag cars around his stopped automobile. Ida Clinkscale remained seated in the right front seat.

Clinkscale directed about 20 to 25 cars by his stopped car before it was struck in the rear by the automobile driven by the defendant who was approaching from the west traveling east in the outside or southerly lane. Defendant had remained in this lane at all times prior to the accident and had been following several cars. He did not observe cars fanning out to pass the plaintiffs' car and the traffic was moving evenly. The defendant was following the car ahead of him by approximately 50 feet when the car swerved sharply to the left into the inside lane just prior to the time the defendant saw the plaintiffs' parked automobile. The defendant determined that it was unsafe for him to swerve into the inside lane because of the traffic passing by, going in the same direction, and being only several car lengths away from the plaintiffs' car, he applied his brakes hard and skidded into the rear of it. The skid marks were 65 feet in length up to the point of impact and continued on approximately 12 feet. The defendant's car stopped so that it was resting on the walkway which is located on the south side of the causeway with the right front next to the iron rail which serves as a barrier at the extreme south edge. As a result of the impact the Clinkscale automobile was propelled 400 feet east on the causeway.

Clinkscale testified that when he first saw defendant's car it was traveling at an estimated rate of speed of 55 to 60 miles per hour. However, the defendant testified that he kept a constant speed of approximately 45 miles per hour in crossing the causeway. Defendant also testified that although he saw Clinkscale standing at the left rear of his automobile prior to the accident, he did not notice him make any movement.

Appellants' first major contention is that the evidence is insufficient to support the judgment in favor of respondent because respondent was negligent as a matter of law and appellants were free from negligence as a matter of law. We are unable to agree with this contention.

[1-4] It is a rule too well established to require the citation of authorities that before an appellate tribunal is justified in reversing a judgment upon the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence, it must appear from the record that, accepting the full force of the evidence adduced, together with every inference favorable to the prevailing party which may be drawn therefrom, and excluding all evidence in conflict therewith, it still appears that the law precludes such prevailing party from recovering a judgment. The evidence must be construed most strongly against the losing party. Every favorable inference and presumption which may fairly be deduced from the evidence should be resolved in favor of the prevailing party. The prevailing party's evidence must ordinarily be accepted as true, and evidence which is contradictory must be disregarded.

In support of their contention that defendant was negligent as a matter of law, plaintiffs argue that the defendant did not exercise ordinary care to observe traffic conditions on the causeway ahead of him; that he was following the vehicle ahead of him more closely than was reasonable and prudent, in violation of section 531 of the Vehicle Code; that according to the testimony of the traffic officer defendant stated that he was looking at the rice checks and was tired and sleepy; that because of these things defendant did not see the Clinkscale car until he was too close to stop in order to avoid an accident.

Plaintiffs rely strongly on the case of Huetter v. Andrews, 91 Cal.App.2d 142, 204 P.2d 655, where it was held that the conduct of defendant in driving into plaintiff's car ahead constituted negligence as a matter of law. However, the facts in the Huetter case were quite different from those in the instant case. In the Huetter case the defendant had a clear view of the highway, with no vehicles intervening, for 850 feet preceding the point of impact with plaintiff's car. Plaintiff had stopped, backed on to the shoulder, and was executing a left turn into a crossover on a divided, four-lane highway. Defendant drove this 850 feet looking straight ahead but did not see plaintiff's automobile until he was within 75 to 100 feet of it. He still continued a straight course and left no skid marks until he struck plaintiff's car broadside at a speed of 35 to 40 miles an hour.

[5] As a further point in support of the plaintiffs' position that the defendant was guilty of negligence as a matter of law, it is contended that the defendant violated section 531 of the California Vehicle Code which provides: "The driver of a motor vehicle shall not follow another vehicle more closely than is reasonable and prudent, having due regard for the speed of such vehicle and the traffic upon, and the condition of, the roadway." Plaintiffs argue that defendant was traveling too close to the automobile ahead of him because he was not able to stop in time. However, Landrum v. Severin, 37 Cal.2d 24, 230 P.2d 337, states the rule in its headnote to be: "It is for the jury to determine whether, within the terms of Veh.Code, § 531(a), a motorist followed another automobile at a distance less than what was reasonable and prudent, except where the space between the vehicles was such as to establish whether there was a violation of such provision as a matter of law." See also Driver v. Norman, 106 Cal.App.2d 725, 236 P.2d 6, and Giles v. Happely, 123 Cal.App.2d 894, 267 P.2d 1051. In view of these decisions, it cannot be said as a matter of law that a space of 50 feet at a speed of 45 miles per hour, under traffic conditions existing here, is unreasonable.

[6-8] The general rule is that negligence is a question of fact for the jury. It is only where the inference of negligence is irresistible that it becomes the duty of the court to decide upon it as a matter of law, and where the inferences to be drawn are in any degree doubtful the only proper rule is to submit the matter to the jury under proper instructions. As is so often stated in instructions to juries in negligence cases, negligence is not an absolute term but a relative one, and in deciding whether there was negligence in a given case the conduct in question must be considered in the light of all the surrounding circumstances as shown by the evidence.

[9] It would serve no useful purpose to review the decisions cited by plaintiffs as the factual situations in those cases were different from those in the instant case.

Each case must be considered on its own facts. Bearing in mind the familiar rules hereinbefore mentioned, we cannot say that the evidence in the instant case compelled a finding that defendant was guilty of negligence as a matter of law. The jury could have concluded that since defendant was about 50 feet behind the car ahead of him and that car was 50 feet from plaintiffs' car when the other car began to turn out, defendant's car was about 100 feet from plaintiffs' car when he first observed it, and since defendant's car made 65 feet of skid marks to the point of impact, that therefore defendant must have been looking down the highway at the time the car ahead of him pulled out to pass. Defendant testified that he did not see plaintiffs' car until he was several car lengths from it, and that as soon as he saw it he applied his brakes; that he could not swerve into the inside lane because of traffic going in the same direction. We believe that the question of whether or not defendant was guilty of negligence was one of fact for the jury.

Furthermore, even if the evidence compelled a finding that defendant was negligent as a matter of law, we do not believe that the evidence compels a finding that plaintiff Clinkscale was free from negligence as a matter of law.

Defendant points out that the record shows that on the day of this accident the plaintiff, Mr. Clinkscale, before starting on this trip to San Francisco, had gas and water put in his automobile, presumably in Broderick, and that on the way down by the time he reached Fairfield, California, his engine acted "funny" and "kind of stubborn," as if it were going to cut out on him, so he pulled into a service station near Fairfield and the attendant put water into the radiator. Clinkscale knew that the car was hot at this time and observed that the heat gauge was high; that although while en route home he was traveling from a cool area into a warm area, appellant Clinkscale testified that at no time after leaving Fairfield on the way to San Francisco did he ever check the temperature gauge on his automobile, that he knew he had to cross the Yolo Causeway, and that he did not make any observations with respect to that temperature gauge before crossing the causeway; that he passed right by the large Standard Oil service station at Davis and apparently gave no thought to the advisability of checking his temperature gauge or checking the water in his radiator before leaving that area to pass on down the highway towards the causeway. Defendant argues that since Clinkscale testified that he did not look at his temperature gauge after leaving Fairfield on the way down to San Francisco, and since he testified that he did not look at that gauge before crossing the causeway, the jury could have believed that he was contributorily negligent because he in fact did not look at that gauge, or they could have concluded that he did look at the gauge and was not telling the truth with respect to what it indicated, but instead decided to try to make it across the causeway, and that the jury could reasonably conclude from the evidence that in view of the difficulty which Clinkscale had on the way down to San Francisco, and from the other facts herein outlined, Clinkscale did not act with ordinary care in attempting to cross the causeway under these circumstances, and that therefore his car was not "disabled" within the language of section 582 of the California Vehicle Code, so as to exempt him from contributory negligence.

[10] The defendant argues further that the jury could have concluded that the plaintiff Clinkscale was contributorily negligent in failing to station himself farther to the rear of his automobile in order to give approaching motorists, including the defendant, more time and distance in which to discover the fact that his car was stopped and to either stop or turn into the inside lane, and might have prevented the accident. Defendant testified that he did not see plaintiffs' automobile until the car ahead of him turned out, and while it is possible that defendant might not have observed plaintiffs' automobile if plaintiff Clinkscale had been stationed 50 or 75 feet further west, it is also probable that he would have observed it in time to have avoided the accident. Plaintiff Mr. Clinkscale stationed himself at the left rear fender while plaintiff Mrs. Clinkscale remained seated in the front seat of the automobile. In view of the fact that it was 5 p.m. on a hot Sunday afternoon when the traffic was heavy, we cannot say that the jury may not have properly concluded that under all the circumstances plaintiffs failed to exercise ordinary care in failing to give greater warning to oncoming traffic.

We believe that whether or not plaintiff Mr. Clinkscale was guilty of contributory negligence was a question of fact for the jury and we are unable to agree with defendant's contention that reasonable men could only draw the conclusion that plaintiffs were not free from contributory negligence.

[11] We are frank to state that in our opinion the record indicates strongly that the evidence preponderates in favor of plaintiffs on the issue of defendant's negligence as well as on the issue of the contributory negligence of plaintiffs, and that in view of the verdict of the jury the case was one in which the trial court might well have granted a new trial. A trial judge in passing upon a motion for a new trial is not bound by the same rules as an appellate court. We quote what was said in Brush v. Pacific Electric Ry., 58 Cal. App. 501, at page 506, 208 P. 997, at page 1000:

"But, while an appellate court will not review a verdict where the evidence shows a substantial conflict, the trial court is guided by very different considerations. If the trial judge, notwithstanding a conflict in the testimony, is satisfied that the verdict is against the weight of the evidence, he may, indeed he should, grant a new trial, although upon the same conflict an appellate court would be bound by the verdict. And even though there be no conflict in the testimony, the probative force and effect of the evidence is ultimately for the determination of the trial judge upon the hearing of a motion for a new trial. Meinberg v. Jordan, 29 Cal.App. [760] 762, 157 P. 1005, 1007. The judgment of the trial judge is not based upon the cold record which comes to an appellate court. He hears the evidence and has ample opportunity to observe the demeanor and manner of the witnesses and to judge their credibility. If, therefore he is dissatisfied with the verdict and is of the opinion that it clearly is against the weight of the evidence, he may set it aside and grant a new trial, even though there be substantial evidence to support the verdict. He—"is in a position to determine between the apparent and the real, to detect the fallacy of specious testimony which may have misled the jury, but which his wider experience enables him to readily comprehend. * * * It is for these and other reasons which might be mentioned that a wide discretion is accorded to trial courts in the disposition of motions for new trials." Bates v. Howard, 105 Cal. [173] 178, 38 P. 715. Though the parties are entitled to the judgment of the jury in the first instance, they are, upon a motion for a new trial, equally entitled to the independent judgment of the judge as to whether such verdict is supported by the evidence. Green v. Soule, 145 Cal. [96] 102, 78 P. 337."

[12] So while we regard the instant case as one in which the trial court might well have granted plaintiffs' motion for a new trial, we are satisfied that it cannot be held as a matter of law that the judgment lacks substantial support in the record.

[13, 14] Plaintiffs contend that the doctrine of last clear chance should have been applied by the trial judge on the motion for new trial, and that he should have set aside the verdict as a matter of law. Under that doctrine the plaintiffs must be negligent and as a result of their negligence they must be in a position where they cannot escape from their perilous position by the exercise of ordinary care, and the defendant must be aware of their danger so that he realizes, or ought to realize, that the plaintiffs are unable to escape, and the defendant must then have a clear chance to avoid injuring the plaintiffs by the exercise of ordinary care. The defendant testified that as soon as he observed the plaintiffs he applied his brakes hard and attempted to stop his automobile, and that he could not swerve into the inside lane because of the condition of the traffic to his left. Whether or not he had the last clear chance to have avoided the accident is quite doubtful, but in any event this court cannot say as a matter of law that he did have such an opportunity.

Counsel for plaintiffs states: "The doctrine of last clear chance should have been applied in this case, and even if the doctrine was too complex for the Jury to apply, the Judge on the motion for a new trial should have applied the doctrine as a matter of law, and should have set aside the verdict of the jury."

[15] It is apparent from the record that the doctrine of last clear chance was not relied upon by plaintiffs at the trial for they offered no instruction on it. No decision has been cited which holds that it is reversible error for a court to fail to give such an instruction when it is not offered or requested. While the trial court upon the hearing of the motion for a new trial could have considered the doctrine of last clear chance along with all other rules of law and might well have granted the motion for a new trial on the ground that the verdict was against the weight of the evidence, we cannot say that upon the record in the instant case the court erred in not giving an instruction on the doctrine of last clear chance or in not granting a new trial upon that ground.

Plaintiffs next contend that certain erroneous and highly prejudicial instructions were given by the court.

Plaintiffs contend that the giving of Instruction No. 10 was prejudicially erroneous because it interjected issues into the case which were not present. This instruction reads:

"If you believe from the evidence that Mr. Clinkscale was careless and negligent in the manner in which he stopped and parked his Studebaker automobile on the Yolo Causeway prior to the accident and that said carelessness and negligence on his part proximately contributed to this accident, then I instruct you that the plaintiffs, Mr. and Mrs. Clinkscale, cannot recover from Mr. Germershausen."

[16, 17] However, this instruction advised the jury that if they found that the car was "stopped and parked" in a careless and negligent manner and if this carelessness and negligence proximately contributed to the accident, then the plaintiffs could not recover. It contained both the element of negligence and the element of proximate cause, and was a correct statement of the law. The question of whether or not the plaintiffs were justified in stopping and parking on the causeway under all of the circumstances in the case was a question of fact for the jury, and the instruction does not relate only to the manner in which the car was parked on the causeway, but it relates to the issue of whether or not the car should have been stopped and parked before it got onto the causeway.

Plaintiffs complain also that there was prejudicial error in giving Instruction No. 11 which reads:

"If you believe from the evidence that William Clinkscale was careless and negligent in the manner in which he attempted to warn Mr. Germershausen of the fact that the Studebaker automobile was stopped on the Yolo Causeway and if you further believe that said careless [sic] and negligence on the part of said William Clinkscale contributed proximately to the accident, then I instruct you that the plaintiffs, Mr. and Mrs. Clinkscale can not recover from Mr. Germershausen."

[18] This instruction related to the warning which was given by Mr. Clinkscale to the defendant, and that was an element in the case. The instruction correctly stated the law and contained both the elements of negligence and proximate cause.

If plaintiffs' contention that Clinkscale was free from negligence as a matter of law was upheld, then Instructions 10 and 11 would have been improper. However, since we have come to the conclusion that Clinkscale's negligence was a question of fact, these instructions correctly presented the issues to the jury.

Far more serious is plaintiffs' contention that the court committed prejudicial error in giving Instruction No. 17. This instruction which is based on section 582 of the Vehicle Code is identical with Instruction No. 143 of B.A.J.I., Civ., '50 Supp., which reads as follows:

"At the time of the accident involved in this case, our Vehicle Code provided as follows:

"Upon any highway in unincorporated areas no person shall stop, park or leave standing any vehicle, whether attended or unattended, upon the main traveled portion of the highway when it is practicable to stop, park or so leave such vehicle off such part or portion of said highway, but in every event an unobstructed width of the highway opposite a standing vehicle shall be left for the free passage of other vehicles, and a clear view of such stopped vehicle shall be available from a distance of 200 feet in each direction upon such highway. This section shall not apply upon a highway where the roadway is bounded by adjacent curbs.

"This section shall not apply to the driver of any vehicle which is disabled in such a manner and to such extent that it is impossible to avoid stopping and temporarily leaving such disabled vehicle on the main traveled portion of a highway."

"In weighing the evidence in this case, you will be guided by a rule now to be stated: If and when it has been established by the evidence that a person stopped, parked or left standing any vehicle, whether attended or unattended, upon the main traveled portion of a highway in an unincorporated area, or that he stopped or parked or left standing a vehicle upon the main traveled portion of such a highway in such a position as not to leave an unobstructed width of the highway opposite said vehicle for the free passage of other vehicles or in such a place that a clear view of said vehicle was not available from a distance of 200 feet in each direction upon the highway, such evidence is a prima facie showing of negligence on the part of the person who so handled the vehicle and will support a finding that he was negligent in such conduct, unless that showing together with any other proved facts that support it, fails to preponderate over evidence that it was impracticable to stop, park, or leave the vehicle off the main traveled portion of the highway or evidence that the vehicle was disabled in such a manner and to such an extent that it was impossible to avoid stopping and temporarily leaving it on that portion of the highway or at a place where the clearance of unobstructed highway opposite it or the clear view of it from the highway was not such as is required by the law that I just read to you.

"To state the point in another way: The law places upon a person who stops, parks or leaves standing a vehicle on a highway in an unincorporated area, the risk of being found to have been negligent in so doing, unless he affirmatively shows the impracticability of the impossibility, as just stated, of handling the vehicle otherwise. If however, he makes such a showing, the inference of negligence to which I previously referred may thereby be disproved and removed from the case.

"The accident involved in this case occurred in unincorporated area."

[19] Plaintiffs argue that since defendant had the burden of proving contributory negligence, the above instruction, which required that the plaintiffs explain why the car was stopped on the causeway, shifted the burden of proof to the plaintiffs on this issue, and therefore violated the fundamental rule of law with respect to the burden of proving contributory negligence. However, we think it is clear that the instruction does not in any way shift the burden of proof either as to the negligence of defendant or the contributory negligence of plaintiffs.

Plaintiffs also argue that the instruction was improper because section 582 of the Vehicle Code specifically states that it "shall not apply upon a highway where the roadway is bounded by adjacent curbs." It therefore becomes necessary to determine whether or not the roadway across the causeway is "bounded by adjacent curbs." On the north side of the causeway is a barrier consisting of steel pipes imbedded in concrete with openings in the concrete so that the water can flow off the highway. On the south side is a two-foot walkway with wooden boards about 8 inches high separating the walkway from the vehicular part of the highway.

[20] The Vehicle Code itself does not give any definition of the term curb, no doubt because it is a term which is so commonly used and so generally understood. Nor have we found any California case that defines the term. However, what seems to us to be a correct definition is given by the Supreme Court of Illinois in Lyman v. Town of Cicero, 222 Ill. 379, 78 N.E. 830, as follows:

"The common meaning of the word 'curb,' as applied to a street, is a stone or row of stones, or a similar construction of concrete, wood, or other material, along the margin of the roadway, as a limit to the roadway and a restraint upon and protection to the adjoining sidewalk space."

And in Domke v. Gunning, 62 Wash. 629, 114 P. 436, at page 438, the Supreme Court of Washington said:

"The respondent pleaded and proved an ordinance of the city of Spokane making it the duty of a person driving an automobile on the streets of the city, 'upon turning the corner of any street,' to 'leave a space of at least six feet between the curb and the * * * automobile * * *.' It appeared that on the lot fronting on the street where the accident happened a building was being erected; that debris therefrom had been piled in the corner of the street around which a fence or barricade had been constructed, and pedestrians traveling along the street on reaching the corner would be obliged to leave the regular walk, step into the street, and walk around the outside of this fence or barricade. The court charged the jury that this fence became the curb within the meaning of the ordinance, and that the appellant was guilty of violating the ordinance when he drove along the street if he did not keep his automobile six feet therefrom. This instruction is assigned as error, but we think it correct. The purpose of the ordinance was to keep vehicles in rounding corners out of the path usually taken by foot passengers, and the word 'curb' was used as the most convenient term to mark one of the boundaries of the path, and not in a technical sense. When a fence was used to mark the boundary of this path, it became the curb within the meaning of the ordinance."

[21] Defendant argues that the question of whether or not the causeway is bounded by curbs was a question of fact for the jury to determine. However, we believe that it must be held as a matter of law that the highway across the causeway is a highway where the roadway is bounded on the south side by adjacent curbs. We can reach no other conclusion when we consider the definition of "curbs" and the undisputed physical facts. If the legislature had intended to make a distinction between curbs on a highway across a causeway or bridge and those on other roadways it could easily have done so. If we are correct in this conclusion, then section 582 does not apply to the roadway here involved and the instruction should not have been given.

We granted a rehearing in this case because we wished to reconsider the question of whether the error in giving the foregoing instruction was sufficiently prejudicial to require a reversal of the judgment. In our former opinion we did not take into consideration the provisions of section 586 of the California Vehicle Code, which, so far as here pertinent, reads:

"No person shall stop, park or leave standing any vehicle whether attended or unattended, except when necessary to avoid conflict with other traffic or in compliance with the directions of a peace officer or traffic control signal device, in any of the following places:
* * * (j) In a tube or tunnel or upon a bridge".

No instruction was offered or given on said section 586, but in considering whether the giving of defendant's proposed instruction No. 17 embodying the provisions of section 582 was reversible error we must take into consideration the above quoted provisions of section 586.

[22] It cannot be doubted that the roadway across the causeway must be regarded as a bridge within the meaning of the provisions of section 586. Therefore, the stopping of an automobile on the causeway would be prima facie evidence of negligence under section 586. And while section 582 was inapplicable because it specifically states that it shall not apply upon a highway where the roadway is "bounded by adjacent curbs", it is difficult to understand how plaintiffs could have been prejudiced by the instruction given by the court on it, in view of the provisions of section 586. For the instruction given told the jury that section 582 should not apply to the driver of any vehicle which is disabled in such a manner and to such extent that it is impossible to avoid stopping and temporarily leaving such disabled vehicle on the main traveled portion of a highway; and further told the jury that "The law places upon a person who stops, parks or leaves standing a vehicle on a highway in an unincorporated area, the risk of being found to have been negligent in so doing, unless he affirmatively shows the impracticability or the impossibility, as just stated, of handling the vehicle otherwise, but that if he makes such a showing the inference of negligence "may thereby be disproved and removed from the case."

We believe that the instant case presents a question which is peculiarly within the purview of section 4½ of Article VI of our state constitution which provides:

"No judgment shall be set aside, or new trial granted, in any case, on the ground of misdirection of the jury, or of the improper admission or rejection of evidence, or for any error as to any matter of pleading, or for any error as to any matter of procedure, unless, after an examination of the entire cause, including the evidence, the court shall be of the opinion that the error complained of has resulted in a miscarriage of justice."

[23] To hold that the giving of said instruction No. 17 was reversible error would in our opinion be to fly in the face of this section of the constitution, for said instruction was really more favorable to plaintiffs than an instruction embodying the provisions of section 586 would have been. The evidence on all phases of the case was fully presented to the jury and would support a verdict for either party, and we are satisfied that no miscarriage of justice resulted from the giving of said instruction.

[24] As to the cross-appeal of defendant from the judgment in favor of plaintiffs on defendant's cross-complaint, it is stated in defendant's brief that such appeal was taken "purely to preserve cross-complainant's right, in the event that this Court should reverse the judgment in favor of the defendant and against the plaintiffs." However, it is clear that there is ample evidence in the record to support the implied finding of the jury that defendant was guilty of contributory negligence and that the judgment against defendant upon his cross-complaint should be affirmed.

The judgment in favor of defendant upon plaintiffs' complaint and the judgment in favor of plaintiffs upon defendant's cross-complaint are affirmed.

No. 17172.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 2, California.

Oct. 19, 1956.

Welder's action for injuries received from gas explosion in tank trailer upon which he was working and which was owned by defendants. The Superior Court, County of Contra Costa, Wakefield Taylor, J., entered judgment for welder and defendants appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Draper, J. pro tem., held that where application of res ipsa loquitur doctrine depended upon question of fact as to what was the nature of the oral agreement between defendants and welder's employer regarding cleaning gas residue from tank in preparation for welding, although instruction on res ipsa loquitur was somewhat confusing, it was not prejudicially erroneous where record showed that jury returned and requested a rereading of testimony as to oral agreement.

Affirmed.

1. Explosives ⇐7

If oral contract between owner of tank trailer and welding company required owner to deliver tank trailer cleaned and prepared for welding, doctrine of res ipsa loquitur would apply in welding company's employee's action against tank trailer owner for injuries received from gas explosion in tank upon which he was working.

2. Explosives ⇐7

In action by welder against tank trailer owner for injuries received from gas explosion in tank trailer upon which he was working, evidence as to terms of oral contract between owner of tank trailer and welder's employer as to owner's responsibility to steam clean tank trailer and prepare same for welding, presented jury question as to whether owner was required to deliver the tank trailer prepared for welding.

3. Appeal and Error ⇐1064(1)

In welder's action for injuries caused by gas explosion in tank trailer upon which he was working, where application of res ipsa loquitur doctrine depended upon question of fact as to what was nature of the oral agreement between tank trailer owner and welder's employer regarding whose duty it was to clean gas residue from tank in preparation for welding, although instruction on res ipsa loquitur was somewhat confusing, it was not prejudicially erroneous when record showed that jury had returned and requested a rereading of testimony as to nature of oral agreement.

4. Negligence ⇐121(2)

Res ipsa loquitur is based in great degree upon probabilities and is a simple, understandable rule of circumstantial evidence, with a sound background of common sense and human experience, rather than a rigid legal formula designed largely for exclusionary purposes.

Frederick M. Van Sicklen, James C. Calkins, Alameda, for appellants.

Hoberg & Finger, Russell F. King, San Francisco, for respondent.

DRAPER, Justice pro tem.

Plaintiff had judgment, following verdict of a jury, in this personal injury action. Defendant appeals, assigning as error the giving of an instruction upon res ipsa loquitur. This is the second appeal in this case, an order granting plaintiff's motion for new trial having been previously affirmed. Sloboden v. Time Oil Co., 131 Cal.App.2d 557, 281 P.2d 85.

Defendant-appellant is a motor carrier of petroleum products. Welding repairs upon its tank trucks and trailers were performed from time to time by Richmond Tank Car Company, which employed respondent as a welder. Welding of the tanks carried by these vehicles could be safely performed only after the containers had been cleaned, so as to remove explosive gases and any residue of fuel.

Until 1949, appellant's tanks were cleaned by Richmond before it did the welding jobs. In that year, appellant acquired a steamer and made an oral agreement with Richmond under which appellant was to clean its own tanks before sending them to Richmond for welding.

The testimony is in conflict as to the terms of this oral agreement. There was testimony that appellant desired to do the cleaning itself to save money, and advised Richmond that appellant would steam clean each tank and prepare it for welding. Appellant, on the contrary, offered evidence that it had undertaken the steaming only to accommodate Richmond, and that the latter still was to insure that the tanks were prepared for welding. There was testimony that a proper test would require removal of the dome of the tank and inspection of the interior by a man entering the tank for that purpose. Only this method would reveal possible patches of rust and scale, behind which pockets of fuel, sufficient to cause explosion, could remain. Richmond contended that since the agreement was designed to reduce the amount of work to be paid for by appellant, this type of testing was not to be performed by Richmond. Appellant contends that Richmond, by the agreement, assumed full responsibility for complete testing, if required by good welding practice.

It is undisputed that Richmond did, before welding, test each tank of appellant with a "snifter." This device is inserted into the tank, extending but a short distance from the opening thereof. Richmond contends that the "snifter" test is superficial, and was conducted only to assure that the tank delivered was not, through error, one which had not been subjected to any cleaning process at all.

In 1952, a tank trailer which had been steamed by appellant was delivered to Richmond for welding. A fellow employee of respondent made the "snifter" test, which was negative. Respondent then commenced welding on the exterior of the tank. The first weld was completed without incident, but in the course of the second weld the tank exploded, causing serious injury to respondent.

The court instructed the jury:

"If, and only in the event, you should find that there was an accidental occurrence as claimed by the plaintiff, namely: that the defendants undertook to furnish to the plaintiff's employer, Richmond Tank Company, a tank steam cleaned and prepared for welding, and if you should find that from the accidental event herein as a proximate result thereof, plaintiff has suffered injury, then you are instructed as follows: an inference arises that the proximate cause of the occurrence in question was some negligent conduct on the part of the defendants."

Then followed the remainder of the instruction set forth in California Jury Instructions—Civil, 4th Ed. (BAJI) 206, together with No. 206C.

[1,2] If the oral contract between appellant and Richmond required the former to deliver the tank trailer "prepared for welding," there can be no question that the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur applies. Hinds v. Wheadon, 19 Cal.2d 458, 121 P.2d 724; and see full discussion of the modern California rule in Zentz v. Coca Cola Bottling Co., 39 Cal.2d 436, 247 P.2d 344 and Ybarra v. Spangard, 25 Cal.2d 486, 154 P.2d 687, 162 A.L.R. 1258. The conflict in the evidence as to the terms of this agreement involved only the language used by the parties, rather than its construction, and thus was a question of fact. The claim that Richmond was negligent must, on the record, be based upon its failure to thoroughly test the tank and, if necessary, clean it further, before welding it. But if appellant, by its agreement, had undertaken to supply the tank prepared for welding, no such obligation rested upon Richmond. Instruction upon res ipsa loquitur, conditioned that it shall be applied by the jury only upon its finding of a fact necessary to invoking of the doctrine, has been approved. Hardin v. San Jose City Lines, Inc., 41 Cal.2d 432, 260 P.2d 63.

If the instruction clearly advised the jury that the doctrine should be applied only if the jury found that the agreement was to furnish tanks "prepared for welding," it was proper.

[3] The instruction is somewhat confusing in referring to defendant's undertaking as an "accidental occurrence," and is therefore not to be recommended. However, the record here makes plain that the jury was not confused. After almost an hour's deliberation, the jury asked the court for a reading of "the testimony of the oral agreement between the Time Oil Company and the Richmond Tank Car Company." The colloquy among judge and jurors made clear that the reference was to the 1949 agreement above referred to. The testimony requested was read. It is plain that the jury recognized the importance of the agreement. Thus the error in the instruction, if any, was not prejudicial.

[4] Appellant also argues that the res ipsa loquitur instruction was erroneous because the tank was not in the "exclusive control" of appellant. But the evidence seems clear that the explosion was caused by explosive gases inside the tank. Richmond's employees did not touch the tank's interior. Further, appellant's employees who delivered the tank to Richmond remained near it. Even if there were a full relinquishment of control to Richmond, it does not follow that the doctrine cannot apply. Res ipsa loquitur is based in great degree upon probabilities. As is clear from the full discussion in Hardin v. San Jose City Lines, Inc., supra; and Zentz v. Coca Cola Bottling Co., supra; it is "a simple, understandable rule of circumstantial evidence, with a sound background of common sense and human experience," rather than "a rigid legal formula" designed largely for exclusionary purposes. Ybarra v. Spangard, supra, 25 Cal.2d at page 489, 154 P.2d at page 689. Applying the reasoning of these decisions, we cannot distinguish this case from Hinds v. Wheadon, supra.

We find no error in the questioned instruction. The judgment is affirmed.

Action for injuries sustained by a bakery wagon driver who fell over a lettuce crate left upon the sidewalk by owner of grocery store to whom the driver was delivering bakery products. Judgment for plaintiff in the Superior Court, County of Contra Costa, Hugh R. Donovan, J., and the defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Draper, J. pro tem., held that the questions of negligence and contributory negligence were for the jury and that there were no reversible trial errors.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Municipal Corporations Ⓒ821(17, 20)

In action for injuries sustained by bakery wagon driver who fell over a lettuce crate left on sidewalk by owner of grocery store to which the driver delivered bread daily, the grocery store owner's negligence and the driver's contributory negligence were for jury.

2. Appeal and Error Ⓒ204(6)

Where defendant failed to object to the introduction of an ordinance, he could not assert on appeal error in its admission into evidence.

3. Municipal Corporations Ⓒ821(19)

In action for injuries sustained by bakery wagon driver who fell over a lettuce crate left on sidewalk by owner of grocery store to which driver delivered bread daily, whether violation of ordinance against blocking sidewalk was proximate cause of the driver's injury was properly submitted to the jury.

4. Appeal and Error Ⓒ999(1)

Where finding of the jury is within its province, it will not be disturbed on appeal.

5. Municipal Corporations Ⓒ692

An ordinance against the blocking of sidewalks was designed for the protection of users of the sidewalks and it allowed a reasonable license or exemption from use of the walks for necessary commercial purposes.

6. Appeal and Error Ⓒ882(12)

In action for injuries based on violation of an ordinance, where defendant permitted the ordinance to go into evidence without any objection, defendant was not entitled to urge on appeal error in instructions upon the ordinance where he failed to produce a record showing that he did not himself invite the alleged error by submitting instructions upon the ordinance.

Edward A. Friend, San Francisco, for appellant.

Nichols, Richard, Williams, Morgan & Digardi, Anthony R. Brookman, Oakland, for respondent.

DRAPER, Justice pro tem.

Defendant appeals from judgment for plaintiff following jury verdict in this personal injury action. Respondent was a bakery wagon driver. Appellant operated a grocery store, to which respondent delivered bread each weekday at about the same time. Crates and sacks of produce delivered to appellant's store habitually were left upon the sidewalk, and later taken into the store by appellant. On the day of the accident here involved, a shipment of produce was left on the sidewalk outside appellant's store some time before 9:30 a. m. When appellant was not busy waiting on customers, he took crates and sacks into the store. By 11:15 a. m., a large lettuce crate was left on the sidewalk. At that time, respondent drove up to make his delivery of bread. Carrying a tray of bread, he stepped backward from his truck, took one step, and fell over the lettuce crate, sustaining severe injuries.

[1] Appellant argues that the evidence is insufficient to establish his negligence. But there is evidence that appellant knew of and consented to deliveries upon the sidewalk, and knew also of respondent's customary arrival time and manner of delivery of his products. The obstruction of a highway, Stockton Automobile Co. v. Confer, 154 Cal. 402, 97 P. 881, or a sidewalk, Mosley v. Arden Farms Co., 26 Cal.2d 213, 216, 157 P.2d 372, 158 A.L.R. 872, even in the absence of a statutory prohibition, will permit a finding of negligence when injuries proximately result from the obstruction. The likelihood of injury to plaintiff was clearly foreseeable.

The evidence fully justifies the jury's finding that appellant was negligent.

Appellant contends, also, that respondent was, as a matter of law, guilty of contributory negligence. There is no merit in this argument. Respondent testified that he looked at the sidewalk when he was parking his truck, and again before he stepped from the vehicle. Whether he exercised due care for his own safety under all the circumstances was a question of fact for the jury, and not a question of law. Anthony v. Hobbie, 25 Cal.2d 814, 155 P.2d 826; M & M Livestock Transport Co. v. Cal. Auto Transport Co., 43 Cal.2d 847, 279 P.2d 13.

An ordinance provided:

"No person shall place or cause to be placed anywhere upon any * * * sidewalk and no person owning, occupying or having the control of any premises shall suffer to remain in front thereof upon the sidewalk * * * any boxes, bales, barrels, wood, lumber, goods, wares and merchandise * * * or any other thing obstructing the free use of or passage of said * * * sidewalk. Provided, however, that goods, wares and merchandise in transit may be allowed on the outer three feet of the sidewalk for a period not exceeding one half hour."

This ordinance was introduced in evidence without objection by appellant. The jury was instructed that if appellant violated the ordinance, a presumption arises that he was negligent; that this presumption could be overcome by evidence showing that appellant's conduct was excusable and justifiable; and that violation of the ordinance was of no consequence unless it was a proximate cause of respondent's injury.

[2] Appellant does not attack the instructions and, having failed to object to introduction of the ordinance, he cannot assert error in its admission into evidence. He does, however, contend that the evidence shows no violation of the ordinance by him. This argument is based upon the view that the ordinance proviso does not require that each and every article be removed from the sidewalk within a half hour, and that since appellant commenced removal of his produce within the limited period, he brings himself within the exception even as to articles left on the walk for nearly two hours. To state this contention is to refute it.

[3,4] Appellant also argues that, even if he violated the ordinance, such violation was not a proximate cause of respondent's injury. But we cannot say, as a matter of law, that the violation was not a proximate cause. The jury was fully instructed as to proximate cause, and found against appellant. That finding is within the province of the jury, and will not be disturbed here. Mosley v. Arden Farms Co., supra.

[5,6] It may be that appellant intends to argue that the ordinance is not one designed to protect a class of which respondent is a member, that it therefore establishes no duty upon appellant as to respondent, and that for this reason all instructions upon the ordinance were in error. This argument would be based upon the view that the ordinance permits obstruction of the sidewalk for a period of 30 minutes, that injury to a particular user of the walk is quite as likely to occur within 30 minutes of the placing of the obstruction as at a later time, and that therefore the ordinance is not intended for the protection of sidewalk users. However, we are disinclined to accept such a contention. Rather, it appears to us that the ordinance is designed wholly for the protection of users of the sidewalk, and that it allows a reasonable license or exemption for use of the walks for necessary commercial purposes, such exemption being strictly limited by its own terms. In any event, appellant is in no position to advance such a contention. In the first place, he permitted the ordinance to go into evidence without any objection on his part. If he now seeks to urge error in the instructions upon the ordinance, he is similarly without basis for complaint, because he has failed to produce a record here which shows that he did not himself invite the alleged error by submitting the instructions upon the ordinance. People v. Letourneau, 34 Cal.2d 478, 493, 211 P.2d 865.

Hearing Granted Nov. 14, 1956.

Defendant was convicted of robbery and kidnapping for purpose of robbery. The Trial Court, Kenneth C. Newell, J., entered judgment and denied motion for new trial, and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Doran, J., 132 Cal.App.2d 20, 281 P.2d 289, affirmed order and judgment. On motion to recall remittitur, the District Court of Appeal, 299 P.2d 307, vacated judgment and put appeal on the calendar for consideration of an amended petition for rehearing. The District Court of Appeal held that where affirmation of sentence had been erroneously predicated upon statute as it existed prior to defendant's alleged criminal act, and at time of such act statute did not make it an offense, separate from robbery, to hold or detain a person for purpose of committing robbery, judgment as to such count would be reversed.

Judgment reversed in part.

* Opinion vacated 310 P.2d 413.

1. Kidnapping ☞

Under 1951 amendment to Penal Code, it is not an offense separate from robbery, to hold or detain a person for the purpose of committing robbery, and person, whose criminal act was committed after enactment of amendment, could not be sentenced to life imprisonment, without possibility of parole, for crime of kidnapping with intent and for purpose of committing robbery. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 209.

2. Criminal Law ☞1186(1)

Where affirmation by District Court of Appeal of sentence of life imprisonment, without possibility of parole, following conviction for kidnapping with intent and for purpose of committing robbery, was erroneously predicated on statute as it existed prior to defendant's alleged criminal act, and at time of such act statute did not make it an offense, separate from robbery, to hold or detain person for purpose of committing robbery, judgment as to such count would be reversed. Appellant Scott admitted a prior conviction of a felony and was sentenced to State's prison. Defendant Solorio's appeal was dismissed on September 5, 1956, after he abandoned it.

Appellant Scott appeared in propria persona and gave notice of appeal and later, at his request, counsel was appointed to represent him on this appeal.

The victim testified that on January 29, 1956, at about 6 p. m., he was crossing Third Street at D Street in San Bernardino, and as he neared an alley "two guys grabbed me and dragged me into the alley"; that he did not recognize their faces but one was a Mexican and the other was colored; that they threatened him, knocked him down, injured him and dragged him up the alley and went through his pockets; that an officer came along about that time and he told him these men had "rolled" him; that he had between $45 and $50 on him at the time and then it was gone.

The police officer testified he saw these defendants drag the complaining witness into the alley and that the complaining witness appeared to be intoxicated at the time; that he saw both defendants kneeling over the complaining witness, and appellant Scott told him that the victim (Courson) was trying to "roll" him (Scott) and the officer told Scott it looked more like he (Scott) was trying to rob Courson. Other officers were summoned to the scene. They found the complaining witness's wallet lying at defendant Solorio's feet. The officer picked up the complaining witness and took him to a near-by police car and just then the officer looked around and saw the appellant Scott throw a wallet on the ground. He picked it up and it was Scott's wallet. Scott was searched and he had only a few cents on his person. Later he was questioned at the police station and said that Solorio noticed the complaining witness and started after him; that he (Scott) told him to leave him alone but Solorio said: "No, he has some money"; that Solorio approached the complaining witness, grabbed him and forced him back into the alley, knocked him down, and took his wallet from him; and that he, Scott, was only in the alley to pull Solorio off of the complaining witness.

When Solorio was interviewed by the same officer he told him that appellant Scott approached the complaining witness and asked for a match; that Scott grabbed him and took him back into the alley; and that he, Solorio, did not enter the alley.

The two defendants were later brought together and both were asked to tell their stories, which they did. On the witness stand Scott said he had previously seen the complaining witness in a liquor store drinking wine; that as he approached defendants, Scott asked him for a cigarette and the complaining witness started to run down the alley and fell a couple of times; and that he did not touch him nor take any money from him. Neither he nor defendant Solorio denied making the statements to the officers above indicated, and Solorio's story was similar in substance to that related to them.

Apparently appellant Scott now contends that since his conviction he has obtained some evidence indicating that Solorio has since made statements to others in the Chino prison to the effect that appellant Scott had nothing to do with the robbery; that he had no knowledge of the above-named crime; that Solorio took the complaining witness's money and submitted to a search by the officers, but they did not find it, because Solorio was "too slick". He offered to furnish the names of the witnesses who would so testify and accompanied his request with the names of two inmates of the institution. He stated they would swear under oath that these statements were true, and enclosed their affidavits to this effect.

Counsel appointed for appellant made full investigation and reported to this court that from his examination of the record on appeal his opinion was that there was no substantial question of law which could be raised on this appeal; and that the rulings of the trial judge were fair and proper. The Attorney General reported accordingly and claimed that any attempt of appellant to inject into this appeal matters not presented to the trial court were of no avail in this proceeding.

We have fully examined the record of the evidence and we are in accord with the reports. No motion for new trial was made and the attempted appeal therefrom is dismissed.

Judgment affirmed.

Action for wrongful death of minor child. The Superior Court, Sutter County, Arthur Coats, J., entered judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Peek, J., held that where there was substantial evidence which, if believed, would have upheld the verdict in favor of plaintiffs under doctrine of last clear chance, it was prejudicial error for trial court to refuse to so instruct and to send case to jury solely upon question of contributory negligence of child six and one-half years of age.

Judgment reversed.

1. Appeal and Error Ⓒ928(1)

On plaintiffs' appeal on ground that trial court erred in refusing to instruct on doctrine of last clear chance, District Court of Appeal would review the evidence in the light most favorable to plaintiffs, who were entitled to such instruction if the evidence so viewed could establish the elements of the doctrine.

2. Trial Ⓒ203(1)

It is the duty of a trial court to instruct on every theory of a case finding support in the evidence.

3. Automobiles Ⓒ246(38)

Where 15 year old driver was following another automobile on a highway, and such driver after preceding automobile swerved left to avoid hitting a six and one-half year old child who was riding a bicycle along the shoulder of the road in the same direction, struck the child with his automobile after the child turned onto the paved portion of the road and started to cross it diagonally, plaintiffs were entitled to have death action against 15 year old driver submitted under doctrine of last clear chance, rather than on issue of child's contributory negligence.

PEEK, Justice.

The sole contention made by plaintiffs in this appeal is that the trial court erred in refusing to instruct the jury on the doctrine of last clear chance.

[1] When we view the evidence, as we must, in the light most favorable to plaintiffs, "since plaintiff[s] [are] entitled to an instruction thereon if the evidence so viewed could establish the elements of the doctrine", Selinsky v. Olsen, 38 Cal.2d 102, 103, 237 P.2d 645, 646, the following is disclosed: Defendant Dale Cull, a minor, 15 years of age, was driving a Nash Rambler convertible westerly along the north side of Butte House Road in Sutter County at a speed variously estimated to have been from 40 to 65 miles an hour. Riding with him in the car at that time were six others of approximately the same age. Four of the group, including Cull, were in the front seat; the other three were in the rear seat. He first saw the victim of the fatal accident, Marty Wilbur, age six and one-half, from a distance of 300 or more feet away. Marty was riding a medium size, 20-inch wheel bicycle in a westerly direction along the right shoulder of the highway. In front of defendant, and traveling in the same direction, was a second car. As that vehicle approached Marty, he turned to the left onto the paved portion of the highway. The driver sounded his horn and swerved left to avoid hitting Marty who then turned back to his former position on the shoulder. The evidence as to the distance between the two cars at that time is both vague and conflicting; that is, there is testimony by the defendant, under section 2055 of the Code of Civil Procedure, that the distance was 300 feet or more, and other testimony by him when he later testified in his own behalf that only a distance of two car lengths separated them. In any event the evidence shows that after the first car was past, Marty again turned his bicycle to the left onto the paved portion of the highway and continued diagonally across the same to a point on the left shoulder where he was struck by defendant's car. Marty gave no signal of his intention to turn, nor did he at any time look to the rear. The evidence is again vague as to what defendant did after first noticing Marty's intention to turn onto the paved traffic lanes. He did testify, however, that he did not sound his horn at any time; that at some point he took his foot off the gas; and that when he first applied the brakes he was traveling at a speed of approximately 35 miles per hour. Tire marks on the highway showed that the car skidded for a distance of 100 feet and then continued on off the left shoulder of the highway and into a tomato field for a total distance of 196 feet. The point of impact was upon the left shoulder of the highway.

It is plaintiffs' contention that the facts summarized establish the necessary elements for application of the last clear chance doctrine. These elements have been stated as follows:

"That plaintiff has been negligent and, as a result thereof, is in a position of danger from which he cannot escape by the exercise of ordinary care; and this includes not only where it is physically impossible for him to escape, but also in cases where he is totally unaware of his danger and for that reason unable to escape; that defendant has knowledge that the plaintiff is in such a situation, and knows, or in the exercise of ordinary care should know, that plaintiff cannot escape from such situation, and has the last clear chance to avoid the accident by exercising ordinary care, and fails to exercise the same, and the accident results thereby, and plaintiff is injured as the proximate result of such failure. It has been said that such failure by defendant to use ordinary care under such circumstances amounts to a degree of reckless conduct that may well be termed willful and wanton, and when an act is thus committed, contributory negligence upon the part of the person injured is not an element which will defeat a recovery." Girdner v. Union Oil Co., 216 Cal. 197, 202, 13 P.2d 915, 917.

[2, 3] The factual situation disclosed by the record as summarized would appear to fall squarely within the rule set forth in the Girdner case. Therefore since it is well established that "[i]t is the duty of the court to instruct on every theory of the case finding support in the evidence", Daniels

v. City & County of San Francisco, 40 Cal. 2d 614, 623, 255 P.2d 785, 791, and since there was substantial evidence which, if believed, would have upheld a verdict in favor of the plaintiffs under the doctrine of last clear chance, it was error for the trial court to refuse to so instruct and to send the case to the jury solely upon a question of the contributory negligence of the small child.

In view of the conclusion which we have reached in this regard, it becomes unnecessary to discuss whether or not the instruction submitted by plaintiffs was erroneous, as contended by defendant, since upon a retrial, the error if any there be in that instruction may be corrected.

The judgment is reversed.

Action by automobile guest for personal injuries sustained when automobile in which she was riding collided with vehicle being driven by defendant in opposite direction. The Superior Court, Solano County, Harlow V. Greenwood, J., rendered judgment for defendant and guest appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Van Dyke, P. Affirmed.

1. Automobiles ⇨245(14)

In automobile guest's action for injuries sustained when automobile in which she was riding collided at intersection with defendant's oncoming vehicle while host was attempting a left turn on rainy night, evidence presented jury issue as to negligence of defendant.

2. Automobiles ⇨246(22)

In guest's action for injuries sustained when host's automobile collided with defendant's oncoming automobile, instruction that if jury found the sole proximate cause of accident was due to fact that host made an improper turn into path of defendant's automobile, defendant was completely exonerated from any liability, was not erroneous on ground that it exonerated defendant from liability even though his negligence was the sole proximate cause of the accident, providing only his negligence was due to host making an improper turn.

VAN DYKE, Presiding Justice.

This is an appeal by the plaintiff from a judgment entered upon a jury verdict for the defendant. Appellant brought the action to recover damages for personal injuries received in an intersection collision between an automobile wherein she was riding as a guest, and which was making a left turn at the intersection, and an automobile driven by respondent.

Herein, appellant contends that respondent was negligent as a matter of law and that the trial court committed prejudicial error in giving a certain instruction. The following is a statement of facts sufficient for the resolution of the issues proposed, culled from the record in accordance with the rule that the evidence is to be considered most strongly for the respondent and without regard to conflicting testimony: The collision occurred at 11:30 P.M. on March 18, 1953 at the intersection of Highway 40 and Georgia Street, a public road in Solano County. The intersection of the two roads is near the City of Vallejo, and Highway 40 runs north and south at that point. Respondent was driving his vehicle south and toward the intersection. Appellant's hostess, a Mrs. Barker, was driving her automobile north toward the intersection. She intended to turn left and proceed on Georgia Street. Highway 40 at the point of the collision and for some distance on either side is a four-lane highway with the north and south lanes separated by a dividing strip. Approaching Georgia Street special lanes were provided for turning onto that street. Traffic at the intersection was controlled by green and red traffic control signals, but unlike other intersections in the vicinity there was no special traffic control signal for left turns. For example, when the signal for southbound traffic on Highway 40 was green at the intersection the signal was also green for northbound traffic on the highway and for traffic desiring to turn left into Georgia Street at the intersection. There was, however, a warning sign bearing the legend "two way signal, watch for opposing traffic". In his southbound course on Highway 40 respondent approached its intersection with Georgia Street at a speed which he estimated to be about 35 miles an hour. (Another eyewitness estimated his speed at 60 miles an hour.) It was dark, rain was falling, the pavement was wet and his windshield wipers were operating. His automobile was in good mechanical condition and equipped with good tires and brakes. He was traveling on the inside traffic lane next to the dividing strip. Visibility ahead had a range of about 300 feet. Respondent was watching the road ahead as he neared the intersection. He had been over the road a number of times and was familiar with the intersection and with the system of traffic control signals. The light ahead of him was green at all times as he neared the intersection. He first saw the Barker car when he was about 40 feet north of the intersection, and that car was then making a left turn directly into the path of his automobile. It continued to move forward, he applied his brakes and reduced his speed to about 30 miles an hour, at which speed he struck the right side of the other car. In her northbound course on Highway 40 Mrs. Barker approached the intersection at a speed of about 30 miles an hour. She moved into the turn-out or left lane, intending to make a left turn at Georgia Street, which turn would carry her across the southbound lanes of the highway. When she reached the intersection the signal was red and she stopped. She had been through the intersection many time and was familiar with the situation confronting her. She so testified; but it is in evidence that she told an arriving traffic officer she "thought the green light was for vehicles turning left". From the stopped position at the intersection Mrs. Barker saw respondent's automobile approaching. She remained in this stopped position for a few seconds, even after the signal had turned to green and then started to make her left turn. She said that before she started she saw respondent's automobile about 350 feet away and that as her car began facing west the approaching car was around 275 feet distant. She continued to drive forward and make the left turn at a speed testified to as being from 8 to 25 miles per hour. She did not again see the respondent's car until it was 10 feet away from her. There was testimony that the collision occurred in the inside southbound traffic lane and other testimony that the collision occurred in the outside southbound lane.

[1] We think the contention of the appellant that respondent was guilty of negligence as a matter of law cannot be sustained; and, on the contrary, that the question of his negligence was one for the jury. The jury could, of course, resolve the question of what the true situation was in one of various ways from the foregoing evidence. For instance, the jury could conclude that respondent had arrived at a point close to the intersection before the Barker car began to turn, so that its turn could not be made without interfering with respondent's progress. In that situation respondent would have the right of way and would be entitled to rely upon opposing traffic to yield until the circumstances were such in the judgment of the jury that he could no longer make that assumption. The jury could further conclude that by the time that situation arose, the approaching car was intercepting his path at such speed that he could not stop and that he did whatever he could to lessen his speed before the impact. We hold that the record will not sustain the contention that respondent was negligent as a matter of law.

[2] Appellant contends that the court prejudicially erred in giving the following instruction to the jury: "If you find that the sole proximate cause of the accident was due to the fact, if it be the fact, that Mrs. Barker suddenly and improperly made a turn into the path of defendant's car, then this completely exonerates defendant from any liability, and under such circumstances your verdict should be in his favor." Appellant says of this instruction that it was a formula instruction which told the jury that under a given condition defendant was completely exonerated from liability, and that the verdict should then be in his favor; that the condition as stated was no more than that the sole proximate cause of the accident was "due to" the fact of Mrs. Barker's suddenly and improperly turning into the path of defendant's car. Says appellant: "If the instruction were followed, defendant was thus exonerated from liability even though his negligence were found to be the sole proximate cause of the accident, providing only that his negligence was due to Mrs. Barker making a sudden and improper turn." We do not think that the jury could have so construed the instruction, particularly in view of the fact that they had been carefully and fully instructed on the subject of proximate cause and told repeatedly that if the negligence of the defendant, should the jury find him to have been negligent, was a proximate cause of the accident, then their verdict should be for the plaintiff. We think the instruction challenged would have been understood by the jury as saying no more than that if the sole proximate cause of the accident was the improper conduct of Mrs. Barker, then the defendant was entitled to their verdict. So understood, the instruction was correct.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

No. 16702.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 1, California.

Oct. 11, 1956.

Action by beneficiary to recover on life policy. The Superior Court, County of Marin, Jordan L. Martinelli, J., entered judgment for beneficiary and denied insurer's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict and insurer appealed. The District Court of Appeal, 301 P.2d 253, entered judgment for insurer and beneficiary petitioned for rehearing. The District Court of Appeal held that instruction on test as to materiality of representations made by insured in its application, which instruction stated that materiality was to be determined solely by probable and reasonable inference of an alleged false statement of fact upon insurer in forming its estimate of the disadvantage of the proposed policy of insurance or in making its inquiries, was not rendered prejudicially erroneous by use of the words "or in making its inquiries".

Petition for rehearing denied.

1. Appeal and Error ⇨1064(1)

In action on life policy, wherein insurer alleged insured made false and material misrepresentations, instruction on test of materiality of representations, which instruction stated that materiality was to be determined solely by probable and reasonable inference of the alleged false statement of fact upon insurer in forming its estimate of the disadvantage of the proposed policy of insurance or in making its inquiries, was not rendered prejudicially erroneous by use of the words "or in making its inquiries". West's Ann. Insurance Code, § 334.

2. Trial ⇨284

A party is entitled to a correct statement in an instruction of an applicable legal principle of law, and he need not interpose a specific objection to an instruction at the time it is given but it will be deemed to have been excepted to. West's Ann. Code Civ. Proc., § 647.

3. Appeal and Error ⇨882(12)

Even if a party requests and the court rejects an erroneous instruction, such rejection does not of itself justify the giving of an erroneous instruction not requested by that party.

Henry C. Clausen, Henry C. Clausen, Jr., Walker Lowry, San Francisco (McCutchen, Thomas, Matthew, Griffiths & Greene, San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant.

Rockwell & Fulkerson, San Rafael, for respondent.

PER CURIAM.

[1] Upon petition for rehearing plaintiff for the first time calls attention to the fact that one of the three incomplete instructions based on section 334 of the Insurance Code was at the end of a paragraph the preceding sentence of which did state that materiality "is to be determined not by the event, such as whether or not an electrocardiogram was given Sydney J. Cohen in the course of his physical examination made by the United States Army, but rather materiality is to be determined solely by the probable and reasonable influence of that fact upon the defendant insurance company in forming its estimate of the disadvantages of the proposed policy of insurance or in making its inquiries."

We are not persuaded to a different conclusion by the discovery of the words "or in making its inquiries," occurring as they did in the middle of a paragraph and in a separate sentence from the instructions which positively, repetitively, and in clearly expressed terms told the jury that the test of materiality is whether or not the true facts, if known, would have rendered the contract "less desirable" to the insurance company. The very fact that plaintiff did not until now direct our attention to the words "or in making its inquiries" (whether that means that plaintiff did not until now discover them or did not until now attach significance to them) emphasizes the unlikelihood that the jury while listening to the reading of the instructions (all of them) sifted those words out, became sensitive to their full meaning, and with due consideration and care applied them to the facts of the case.

[2, 3] Another point not urged before (at least, not with the emphasis plaintiff now gives it) is the claim that defendant did not prepare and request an instruction on materiality based upon section 334 of the Insurance Code and, therefore, is in no position to assert error in the instructions on that subject which the court did give. Specifically, the claim is that, at most, the challenged instruction was merely incomplete (in the sense that it may not have gone far enough; yet, did not amount to an incorrect statement of law); hence, if defendant wanted the gap or details filled in, it was under a duty to prepare and submit an instruction designed to accomplish that purpose. As to the erroneous character of the instruction, we are not persuaded to a view different from that expressed in the opinion on file see — Cal.App. —, 301 P.2d 253. In such a case, a party is entitled to a correct statement of the applicable legal principle, at least when an instruction on the subject in question is given. He need not interpose a specific objection at the time the instruction is given. "[G]iving an instruction" is "deemed to have been excepted to." Code Civ.Proc. § 647;¹ Pipoly v. Benson, 1942, 20 Cal.2d 366, 369, 125 P.2d 482, 147 A.L.R. 515. Indeed, even if a party requests and the court rejects an erroneous instruction, that does not of itself justify the giving of an erroneous instruction not requested by that party. Jermane v. Forfar, 108 Cal.App.2d 849, 855-

1. The 1953 amendment of section 647, Stats.1953, ch. 715, p. 1984 introduced a potential ambiguity.

That amendment interpolated (between the expression "any misstatement * * * in commenting upon or in summarizing the evidence," and the concluding declaration "are deemed excepted to") the following: "and, if the party, at the time when the order, ruling, action or decision is sought or made, or within a reasonable time thereafter, makes known his position thereon, by objection or otherwise, all other orders, rulings, actions or decisions".

Did the Legislature thereby intend to require an aggrieved party to make timely objection to each of the many orders and rulings which for several decades had been "deemed excepted to"?

We think not. It reasonably appears that the intentment of the 1953 insert was to deem "all other" orders, rulings, actions and decisions excepted if the party "at the time" or "within a reasonable time thereafter" makes "known his position thereon"; not to require any objection; then or later, to any order, action or decision not embraced within the "all other" category.

Prosecution for second degree burglary. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, LeRoy Dawson, J., entered judgment of conviction and overruled motion for new trial and defendant appealed from the judgment and from the sentence. The District Court of Appeal, Doran, J., held that no appeal lies from the sentence, and that evidence was sufficient to sustain the conviction.

Attempted appeal from sentence dismissed and judgment affirmed.

1. Criminal Law §1023(10)

No appeal lies from a sentence.

2. Burglary §41(1)

Evidence sustained defendant's conviction of second degree burglary of machinery found in his possession.

Gladys Towles Root, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Norman H. Sokolow, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

DORAN, Justice.

[1] Defendant is charged with burglary with two prior convictions. The priors were admitted. A jury trial resulted in a conviction of second degree burglary. Defendant appeals from the "judgment sentence". Since no appeal lies from the sentence, the purported appeal therefrom must be dismissed. People v. Douglas, 141 Cal.App.2d 33, 296 P.2d 1.

Appellant contends that the "People failed to establish a corpus delicti", that the evidence was insufficient and that a motion for a new trial was improperly denied.

The facts, as recited in respondent's brief, are as follows:

"At approximately 4:10 a. m. on June 7, 1955, two officers of the Los Angeles Police Department encountered appellant and Eddie Lee Sales in an alley in the rear of an apartment house at 4054 South Central. Appellant was in the process of taking a brass roller out of the back of his car. He and Sales had been riding in this car. When appellant saw the police, he walked to the rear of the car, removed a jack from the trunk and started to jack up the car. The police asked appellant if he was going to change a flat tire. He said no, that he was going to rotate his tires. Sales continued taking other pieces out of the car. A large gear and some brass rollers and pieces of brass pipe were observed in the back seat of the car. (The officers at the scene were Conroy and Doss.)

"When the police asked appellant what he was doing in the alleyway, he said he was going home and that he lived there in the apartment building. He did not know the address, however. Subsequently, the police found that he lived some 35 blocks away.

"In reply to questions as to the source of the items in the car, appellant stated that he had bought them from a man at a foundry. * * *

"The gear in the back of the automobile had a tag 'United Piece Dye Works, 5000

Long Beach'. This address was about 14 or 15 blocks from where the officers encountered appellant. * * *

"Walter Wigglesworth, the chief engineer of the United Piece Dye Works, identified the heavy brass gear as part of a stock of spare parts that were kept in a wooden building in the rear of the premises. This building was Mr. Wigglesworth's storehouse. The gear was one of the items found in the rear of the automobile appellant and his companion were unloading the night of the arrest. Various brass rollers and pipes were kept in this building. A few days earlier, when Mr. Wigglesworth had last been in there, the building was intact and the heavy brass gear was present. Upon his examination of the building at 8:00 a. m., June 7, 1955, Mr. Wigglesworth saw a hole in the wall, large enough for a man to crawl through, and found that the heavy brass gear and some brass rollers and pipes were missing. (Beside the gear, several brass rollers and pipes were found in appellant's and Sales' automobile.)

"Mr. Wigglesworth had given no permission to anyone to take the gear nor to break a hole in the building.

"The assistant to the chief engineer, Bert Nold, had a key to the building, as well as Mr. Wigglesworth. He gave no permission to anyone to break into or take anything from the building. He found two holes in the building, each about two feet by three, the morning of June 7, 1955, and missed a gear similar to the one marked People's Exhibit No. 1.

"Officer R. B. Dougherty of the Los Angeles Police Department had a conversation with appellant the morning of June 8, 1955, in connection with the case at bar, in which appellant stated: 'I won't cop out to no burglary because it wasn't a burglary. I will cop out if I can get County Jail time.'"

[2] That the evidence is sufficient, as a matter of law, there is no question. The record establishes, as recited in respondent's brief, that, "The testimony of Officer Conroy reflected that appellant was found in possession of the subject of the crime, the brass gear, rollers and pipe.

"Officer Dougherty testified that appellant offered to 'cop out' if he could be sentenced to the County Jail.

"Appellant gave conflicting accounts to the police of where the property was obtained. He gave still another version at the trial. He made a false statement as to where he lived. When he first saw the police, he stopped unloading the gear from the car and jacked up the car, with the explanation that he was going to rotate the tires. This, despite the fact that it was 4:10 a. m.

"The foregoing circumstances of possession and of acts indicative of a consciousness of guilt sufficiently support appellant's conviction."

In the light of the record, it does not appear that denial of the motion for a new trial was error.

The attempted appeal from the sentence is dismissed. The judgment is affirmed.

Action by divorced wife against estate of former husband for money judgment based upon breach of terms of property settlement contract or divorce decree of the sister state. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Joseph W. Vickers, J., entered judgment adverse to wife and wife appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Ashburn, J., held that where effectiveness of entire agreement between husband and wife for property settlement was conditioned upon property settlement contract being embodied in divorce decree of sister state and such decree approved contract and all of terms thereof and made contract by reference a part of decree, incorporation by reference was sufficient to merge contract into divorce decree and to sustain action upon judgment with respect thereto.

1. Divorce ⚡400(1)

Question of whether provisions of agreement relating to entry of divorce decree in sister state and providing for insurance on life of husband for benefit of wife were incorporated in such decree and merger thereby effectuated was one of law of sister state.

2. Evidence ⚡80(1)

Where counsel had made no claim in action on divorce decree of sister state that pertinent laws of sister state differed from local laws on question of incorporation and merger of property settlement agreement in divorce decree and there was no such discussion in trial court and District Court of Appeal's research disclosed no substantial differences, District Court of Appeal would proceed on appeal upon presumption that laws of sister state were same as local laws in all respects pertinent to discussion.

3. Divorce ⚡255

Intention is primary criterion of merger of property settlement agreement into divorce decree.

4. Appeal and Error ⚡1008(3)

Where there was no oral evidence on question whether there was merger of property settlement agreement into divorce decree, question was one of interpretation of written instruments and trial court's findings were not binding on appeal.

5. Divorce ⚡400(1)

Where effectiveness of entire agreement between husband and wife was conditioned upon property settlement contract being embodied in divorce decree of sister state and such decree approved contract and all terms thereof and made contract by reference a part of decree, incorporation by reference was sufficient to merge contract into divorce decree and to sustain action upon judgment with respect thereto.

6. Husband and Wife ⚡279(1)

Under husband's and wife's property settlement contract making incorporation of contract's provisions in divorce decree a condition precedent to existence or enforcement of any of husband's promises, when court entered divorce decree confirming contract and all terms thereof and making contract by reference a part of decree, promises became effective immediately and right of action accrued to wife upon breach of promises.

7. Limitation of Actions ⚡43

Statute of limitation begins to run in any case upon accrual of cause of action which means a present right to sue thereon.

8. Limitation of Actions ⚡46(5)

Cause of action upon contract which is to be performed upon death of promisor does not accrue until that event occurs.

9. Specific Performance ⚡75

Contracts which by their terms stipulate for a succession of acts whose performance cannot be consummated by one transaction are not enforceable in equity.

10. Divorce ⚡254

Action to amend divorce decree to set forth property settlement contract would not be available where decree made contract by reference a part of decree.

11. Divorce ⇨400(1)

Sister state's divorce decree making property settlement contract by reference a part of decree would not sustain contempt proceeding to enforce such contract.

12. Divorce ⇨397(3)

A foreign judgment for alimony or the like cannot be enforced by a contempt proceeding.

13. Contempt ⇨40

A contempt proceeding is "not a civil action."

14. Contempt ⇨74

A contempt proceeding cannot result in money judgment in favor of aggrieved party.

15. Limitation of Actions ⇨43

Right to institute contempt proceeding does not start statute of limitation to running upon an unmatured cause of action.

16. Declaratory Judgment ⇨114

Declaratory relief would have been available to divorced wife at any time after former husband breached obligations under property settlement contract made a part of divorce decree by reference.

17. Limitation of Actions ⇨5(3)

Proceeding for declaratory relief does not affect and is not affected by statute of limitation except that it is barred when an action for coercive relief with respect to subject matter is barred and not before that time.

18. Divorce ⇨392

Ten year statute of limitation was applicable to action by divorced wife against former husband's estate for money judgment based on sister state's divorce decree. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 337.5, subd. 3.

19. Limitation of Actions ⇨46(5)

Under husband's and wife's property settlement agreement which provided that husband will maintain premiums on insurance policies payable on his death to wife and under divorce decree of sister state which made contract by reference a part of decree, wife had no matured cause of action until husband's death on January 29, 1953 and action commenced February 16, 1954 on judgment was not barred by ten year statute of limitations. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 337.5, subd. 3.

20. Action ⇨63

Defense of laches does not lie in a law action.

21. Pleading ⇨49

Nature of an action is not determined by prayer but by factual allegations of body of complaint.

22. Action ⇨25(2)

Action by divorced wife against former husband's estate for payment of obligation arising from property settlement contract which was made part of divorce decree of sister state was an action at law. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 1913.

23. Executors and Administrators ⇨437(3)

Wife, who learned prior to July 24, 1933 that husband had allowed policies to lapse contrary to property settlement contract providing that husband would maintain premiums on insurance policies payable to wife on death of husband and decree whereby court confirmed contract, was not barred by laches from maintaining action, filed February 16, 1954 after husband's death on January 29, 1953, for husband's failure to pay premiums.

24. Equity ⇨72(1)

"Laches" is not mere delay but delay that works a disadvantage to another and a person is guilty of laches only where he has, by his conduct or negligence and delay, induced or suffered another to do or to abstain from something, whereby the latter might be injured should he be allowed to enforce his rights.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Laches".

25. Equity ⇨84

Laches is not applied strictly between near relatives and is not designed to punish a plaintiff but is invoked where refusal would be to permit an unwarranted injustice.

26. Equity ⇨75

A delay in bringing suit will be excused where there exists an actual and substantial impediment thereto.

27. Equity ⇨75

A party cannot be charged with negligent delay in instituting suit so long as his interest is of such a nature that it cannot be enforced by action; so to charge him, his right to sue must be complete.

28. Evidence ⇨592

Where only oral evidence on issue of laches in action by divorced wife against deceased husband's estate on divorce decree or for breach of property settlement agreement was testimony of wife, rejection of wife's testimony could not create affirmative evidence to contrary.

29. Evidence ⇨75

Fact that one testifies falsely may and usually does afford an inference that he or she is concealing the truth, but it does not reveal the truth itself or warrant any inference that the truth is the direct converse of the rejected testimony.

30. Executors and Administrators ⇨437(3)

Husband's estate was not prejudiced by delay of former wife in bringing action less than one year after husband's death for husband's failure to pay premiums on life policies payable to wife upon death of husband in accordance with property settlement contract and divorce decree making contract a part of decree by reference.

31. Contracts ⇨253, 256

Intent to abandon or rescind a contract must be mutual. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1689, subd. 5.

32. Husband and Wife ⇨281

In action by divorced wife against former husband's estate for husband's failure to pay premiums on insurance policies payable to wife upon death of husband in accordance with property settlement contract and divorce decree, evidence did not sustain finding of mutual consent to abandonment or rescission of contract.

Meyer Berkowitz, Beverly Hills, for appellant.

Gold & Needleman and Harry M. Fain, Beverly Hills, for respondent.

ASHBURN, Justice.

This case presents the problem of method and effect of incorporating a property settlement agreement into a divorce decree, also that of accrual of a cause of action upon an agreement to maintain insurance to provide support for the wife from and after the husband's death, and other related matters, such as abandonment and rescission of the agreement. Plaintiff wife appeals from a judgment denying her any relief.

Herbert Lubin and plaintiff Marie were married on June 29, 1924, lived together until May 6, 1930 when he deserted her and took their two boys, aged five and two years, with him to Europe. There the three remained until after the making of a property settlement agreement on April 11, 1932. The primary question in this case is whether that agreement was effectually incorporated into the divorce decree which the wife obtained in Chicago on May 6, 1932. The trial court held that it was incorporated and merged into the decree but that the obligation to provide insurance, therein expressed, disappeared in the process.

The agreement, negotiated and drawn by the attorneys for the respective parties while Herbert and the boys were still in Europe, was carefully designed to avoid the making of any promises which would become effective unless or until same were embodied in a decree of divorce entered in an action to be filed by Marie in Chicago.¹ Section "Second" of the doc-

1. Marie then had a divorce action pending in Los Angeles. No claim is made that this agreement is contrary to public policy and the circumstances indicate that it was not. Hill v. Hill, 23 Cal.2d 82, 142 P.2d 417; Shankland v. Shankland, 301

ument provides: "In the event that the Court shall determine that said Marie is entitled to a decree in said suit, said Herbert hereby consents to the entry of a decree therein and authorizes his said solicitors to consent to the entry of such a decree, provided such decree embodies the provisions with respect to the custody of the children of said Herbert and Marie and the property settlement hereinafter contained." (Emphasis added.) Each promissory paragraph is preceded by this language or its substantial equivalent: "The parties hereto hereby agree that if the court shall determine that said Marie is entitled to a decree in said action, said decree shall provide" (quoting section "Third"). That portion of the contract covers the matter of custody of the boys in the father, visitation by the mother, place of their residence and like matters. Section "Fourth" contains this: "The parties hereto hereby agree that if the Circuit Court of Cook County shall determine that said Marie is entitled to a decree in said action, said decree shall provide: (a) That Herbert Lubin will immediately provide and (subject to the provisions hereinafter contained) will maintain and pay the premiums on insurance policies upon his life, having an aggregate face value of One Hundred Fifty Thousand Dollars ($150,000.00). Such policies shall provide for the payment, after the death of said Herbert Lubin, to said Marie Lubin during her lifetime of eight hundred thirty-three dollars and thirty-three cents ($833.33) per month (including income and principal) for as long a period of her lifetime as can be arranged thereunder, both of the parties agreeing to co-operate in the execution of any instruments necessary to effectuate such form of settlement. Such policies shall provide that any unexpended portion thereof, upon the death of Marie Lubin, shall be paid to the Chicago Title and Trust Company, as Trustee under Trust No. 18686 (the present trust). In the event of the death of Marie Lubin prior to the death of Herbert Lubin, said policies shall provide that said Herbert Lubin may designate as new beneficiary thereunder, either the said Trustee under Trust No. 18686 and/or the said children; subject, however, to the right of the said Herbert Lubin to reduce the amount of the said life insurance as provided for in sub-paragraph (c) of this Paragraph Fourth." Subparagraphs (b) and (c) thereof provide that Herbert shall pay into a trust a specified percentage of his "unexpended annual income" (computed according to a specified formula), until $200,000 shall have been placed therein, whereupon he shall have the right to withdraw all life insurance mentioned in subparagraph (a) and have full control and ownership of the same. This latter procedure was never pursued and does not enter into the controversy before us.

Prior to the making of this agreement, in June 1927, Marie had created a trust with Chicago Title & Trust Company of Chicago, Illinois, placing therein property worth $1,750,000 which apparently yielded her an income of $10,000 a year, during her lifetime only. For this reason no provision was made in the property settlement agreement for any alimony, and the insurance provision was made in order to afford her support after the husband's death, but not before. Section "Fifth" says: "It is further agreed by and between the parties hereto and said decree shall provide, that in consideration of the provisions for the support of said Marie herein contained and to be embodied in said decree, said Marie shall release and relinquish all other rights in and to the property of said Herbert now owned or hereafter acquired by him, including all right of dower, homestead or other statutory rights, and in consideration of such release by said Marie, said Herbert shall likewise release all rights in and to the property of said

ment "is a fair, equitable and reasonable contract."

Marie now owned or hereafter acquired by her, including all right of dower, homestead or other statutory rights * * *." (Emphasis added.) Herbert also agrees in another section to pay court costs and wife's attorney fees. Marie agrees to dismiss her California divorce proceeding upon Herbert's appearance in the Illinois case, and Herbert agrees to return to the United States with the children upon entry of an Illinois divorce decree.

The divorce case came on for hearing on May 6, 1932, Herbert having appeared and filed an answer. The court found plaintiff Marie entitled to a divorce and granted same. The decree sets forth at length the provisions of the agreement concerning custody, visitation, etc., of the children. There is no specific mention of the insurance phase of the agreement, but the decree does say: "The Court further finds that in and by said contract, the parties hereto have heretofore agreed upon a property settlement which is embodied therein; * * * and the Court further finds that said contract has been fairly entered into and is a fair, equitable and reasonable contract; and the Court hereby approves and confirms said contract and all of the terms, covenants and conditions thereof, and makes said contract, by reference a part of this decree." (Emphasis added.) Also, it adjudges "that all the right, title and interest of the complainant Marie Lubin of every kind, character and description in and to the property or estate of the defendant Herbert Lubin, including the right of alimony, dower and other statutory rights, except as established in said contract, is hereby released, discharged and forever barred." (Emphasis added.)

[1, 2] The question of whether the insurance provisions of the agreement were thus incorporated into the decree and a merger thereby effectuated is one of Illinois law, 50 C.J.S., Judgments, § 890, p. 491, but counsel have made no claim that the pertinent laws of that state differ from ours, there was no such discussion in the trial court, our own research has disclosed no substantial differences, and we therefore proceed upon the presumption that the laws of Illinois are the same as those of California in all respects pertinent to this discussion. Mercantile Acceptance Co. v. Frank, 203 Cal. 483, 490, 265 P. 190, 57 A.L.R. 696.

Most of the confusion surrounding the question of incorporation and merger of property settlement agreements in this state has been dissipated by the opinion in Flynn v. Flynn, 42 Cal.2d 55, 265 P.2d 865. The matter arose upon an application for reduction in monthly payments of alimony provided in a property settlement agreement. The motion was denied by the trial court because the agreement was incorporated by reference only. The principal question on appeal was whether an incorporation by reference could and did effect a merger. Merger is defined at page 58 of 42 Cal.2d, at page 866 of 265 P.2d, as "the substitution of rights and duties under the judgment or the decree for those under the agreement or cause of action sued upon." The court then said: "The question as to what extent, if any, a merger has occurred, when a separation agreement has been presented to the court in a divorce action, arises in various situations. Thus, it may be necessary to determine whether or not contempt will lie to enforce the agreement, whether or not other judgment remedies, such as execution or a suit on the judgment, are available, whether or not an action may still be maintained on the agreement itself, and whether or not there is an order of the court that may be modified under the provisions of section 139 of the Civil Code. In any of these situations it is first necessary to determine whether the parties and the court intended a merger." Also: "Whether or not a merger is intended, the agreement may be incorporated into the decree either expressly or by reference. * * * If a merger is intended, the purpose of incorporation is, of course, to make the agreement an operative part of the decree." At page 59 of 42 Cal.2d, at page 867 of 265 P.2d: "It is settled that a document may be incorporated either expressly or by apt reference into a judgment or decree so as to make it an operative part of the order of the court. [Citing cases.] Plaintiff contends, however, that a document may not effectively be incorporated by reference unless it is part of the permanent records of the court. She points out that since in this case the agreement was merely introduced in evidence as an exhibit, it could be withdrawn or destroyed, and that therefore interested parties could not by searching the records of the court 'construct a complete picture of the rights and obligations of the parties.' See Price v. Price, 85 Cal.App.2d 732, 735, 194 P.2d 101. These considerations may justify modifying the interlocutory decree on appeal to require that the agreement be attached to the decree. We do not believe, however, that they are sufficient to require us to hold that the decree, now final, is insufficient to effect its clearly stated intent." At page 60 of 42 Cal.2d, at page 867 of 265 P.2d: "Thus in this case, the decree may be given its intended effect by referring to an adequately identified document, and the fact that the document is not a part of the permanent records of the court does not vitiate the decree. [Citing cases.] Price v. Price, 85 Cal.App.2d 732, 194 P.2d 101, is contrary to the foregoing authorities and is disapproved." (Emphasis added.)

[3-5] Bearing in mind that intention is the primary criterion² of merger it plainly appears in this instance that the contracting parties had no other intent, for the effectiveness of the entire agreement was conditioned upon its being embodied in the divorce decree. (Section "Second" quoted, supra.) No question is raised as to the efficacy of the decree to merge the obligations concerning the children because they are set forth at length in substantially the same language as the agreement. But it is argued that the result was different in respect to the insurance obligation because that portion of the agreement was incorporated by reference only. With respect thereto section "Fourth" of the agreement opens as follows; "The parties hereto hereby agree that if the Circuit Court of Cook County shall determine that said Marie is entitled to a decree in said action, said decree shall provide * * *." The decree specifically declares that the property settlement "is embodied therein" (i.e. the parties' contract), and "the court hereby approves and confirms said contract and all of the terms, covenants and conditions thereof, and makes said contract, by reference a part of this decree." (Emphasis added.) The Flynn case leaves no room for doubt that the entire agreement was embodied or incorporated into the decree, part by reference and part by repetition. But counsel for respondent make the argument that although the entire agreement was incorporated by reference and merged into the judgment, the obligation of the insurance provision somehow disappeared because not set forth in haec verba and not specifically made the subject of an order to perform. With this line of reasoning we cannot agree. It well may be that that type of incorporation is a necessary basis for enforcement by contempt proceeding, Lazar v. Superior Court, 16 Cal.2d 617, 620, 107 P.2d 249; Plummer v. Superior Court, 20 Cal.2d 158, 163, 124 P.2d 5, but for other purposes incorporation by reference is enough to make the agreement a part of the judgment with the same effect as if written at large therein.

The unmistakable effect of the ruling in the Flynn case is that incorporation by reference is sufficient to merge the settlement agreement into the divorce judgment and to sustain an action upon the judgment with respect thereto.

2. There being no oral evidence on the subject the question is one of interpretation of written instruments,—a question of law upon which the trial court's finding is not binding here. In re Es- tate of Platt, 21 Cal.2d 343, 352, 131 P.2d 825; Clark v. Tide Water Associated Oil Co., 98 Cal.App.2d 488, 490, 220 P.2d 628.

[6] In the instant case plaintiff sues for a money judgment based upon breach of the terms of the agreement or the decree; counsel for plaintiff declined to make an election between the two. To hold that the entire agreement has been incorporated in the decree but that failure to expressly order performance of the insurance provision prevents any recovery for breach of same (which, in effect, is the holding below), would work a regrettably unfair result so far as plaintiff is concerned. The agreement makes incorporation of its provisions a condition precedent to the existence or enforcement of any of the husband's promises; says that the decree shall provide that he will immediately provide and maintain and pay the premiums on insurance policies for the benefit of Marie; that she will release all dower and other rights in the husband's property "in consideration of the provisions for the support of said Marie herein contained and to be embodied in said decree." The court's decree declares that all the terms, covenants and conditions of the contract, and the contract as a whole, are made "by reference a part of this decree;" also that the rights of Marie to any property or estate of Herbert, "including the right of alimony, dower and other statutory rights," are "hereby released, discharged and forever barred," "except as established in said contract." If there is expressed in the decree no enforceable agreement to provide insurance for Marie the consideration for the release of her right to alimony, dower, etc., fails because she has no remedy on the contract or on the decree; that being the case, she goes out of the divorce court empty handed and the major purpose of both parties has been frustrated, namely, that the decree should embody the provisions concerning the custody of the children "and the property settlement hereinafter contained."

We hold that the provisions of section "Fourth" of the agreement were incorporated in the decree by reference, that that was an effective method of its embodiment, that the promises therein contained became effective immediately upon such incorporation and that a right of action thereon accrued to plaintiff upon breach of same. This brings us to the second major question, the statute of limitations.

[7,8] It is hornbook law that the statute of limitation begins to run in any case upon the accrual of a cause of action, which means a present right to sue thereon. Maguire v. Hibernia Savings & Loan Soc., 23 Cal.2d 719, 733, 146 P.2d 673, 151 A.L.R. 1062. The cause of action upon a contract which is to be performed upon the death of the promisor does not accrue until that event occurs. Rogers v. Schlotterback, 167 Cal. 35, 138 P. 728, 732, is in point. That was an action upon an agreement to receive plaintiff into the family of William H. Rogers and wife, raise him as their own child, and further providing that "he should heir and share equally" with their own daughter. The husband was the surviving spouse and he died after having disposed of his property contrary to the said agreement. In response to plaintiff's suit the statute of limitation was interposed. The promise had been made in 1851 and Rogers died in 1906, the action being commenced seasonably thereafter. The court said, in part: "While the matter is not entirely free from doubt, we are of the opinion that the District Court of Appeal was correct in its conclusion that the action was not barred as to the land by any provision of our statute of limitations." 167 Cal. at page 47, 138 P. at page 733. "What James Taylor Rogers was entitled to, in the event that he survived William H. Rogers, was one-half of all the property that William H. Rogers might leave. In view of the construction given by the trial court to the agreement, which we consider warranted, we are of the opinion that, in determining what property was so left, the court properly included the land given to Mrs. Carter and Mrs. Schlotterback by the deed of gift. But James Taylor Rogers had no enforceable right under his contract in regard to such land or any other property prior to the death of William H. Rogers. Whatever rights he had under the contract, in so far as 'heiring and sharing' in the property are concerned, accrued only on the death of William H. Rogers, and only in regard to such property as may properly be held to come within the scope of the contract, i. e., property left by William H. Rogers." 167 Cal. at page 48, 138 P. at page 734. "His right to maintain any action to enforce the contract accrued only upon the death of William H. Rogers." 167 Cal. at page 49, 138 P. at page 734. To the same effect are Furman v. Craine, 18 Cal.App. 41, 47, 121 P. 1007; Mayborne v. Citizens' Trust & Savings Bank, 46 Cal.App. 178, 189, 188 P. 1034; Chilwell v. Chilwell, 40 Cal.App.2d 550, 105 P.2d 122. See, also, as to accrual of cause of action upon a continuing contract, Ross v. Tabor, 53 Cal.App. 605, 613, 200 P. 971; Miller v. Bean, 87 Cal.App.2d 186, 189-190, 196 P.2d 596; Gaskins v. Security-First Nat. Bank, 30 Cal.App.2d 409, 416, 86 P.2d 681; Leoni v. Delany, 83 Cal.App.2d 303, 307, 188 P.2d 765, 189 P.2d 517; Fancher v. Brunger, 94 Cal.App.2d 727, 731, 211 P.2d 633.

In those cases where a continuing contract involves the rendering of benefits to the plaintiff before the date for final performance the rule is as stated in 16 Cal. Jur. § 110, p. 511: "In the case of a continuing executory contract, if the parties do not mutually abandon and rescind it, it is optional with the plaintiff to sue immediately upon the breach or to wait until the expiration of the time designated in the contract before commencing his action." The text is supported by such cases as these: Union Sugar Co. v. Hollister Estate Co., 3 Cal.2d 740, 746, 47 P.2d 273; Richter v. Union Land, etc., Co., 129 Cal. 367, 375, 62 P. 39; Tahoe Pines Co. v. Newman, 59 Cal.App. 186, 190, 210 P. 445. In the Union Sugar case, supra, it is said at page 746 of 3 Cal.2d, at page 276 of 47 P.2d: "Respondent was not bound to treat the contract as abandoned on the first breach of it, or on any particular breach, but had his election to still rely on it, and the statute of limitations could not begin to run until he had made its election." In the instant case there was no occasion or opportunity for an election because plaintiff was entitled to nothing during Herbert's lifetime. She acted promptly after his death, filed a claim against his estate, it was rejected and she sued within less than a year after his death.

Counsel for respondent urges that plaintiff learned in 1933 that Herbert had defaulted in payment of premiums and that the insurance policies had lapsed, that she thereupon could and should have pursued one of several remedies, hence that the statute then started to run. This, of course, ignores the right of election which she would have had if there had been anything owing to her during Herbert's lifetime. It also proves unavailing for additional reasons. The suggested remedies are specific performance, amendment of divorce decree and proceeding in contempt.

[9] As to specific performance, it appears that shortly after the decree was entered Herbert did turn over to plaintiff policies aggregating $150,000, as agreed. Thenceforth his obligation was to pay premiums and otherwise maintain in force the said policies for Marie's benefit. This involved a series of acts extending over the balance of his life; he continued to live for twenty years more. "The rule is settled that contracts which by their terms stipulate for a succession of acts, whose performance cannot be consummated by one transaction are not enforceable in equity." Moklofsky v. Moklofsky, 79 Cal.App.2d 259, 262, 179 P.2d 628, 631. To the same effect see Long Beach Drug Co. v. United Drug Co., 13 Cal.2d 158, 171, 88 P.2d 698, 89 P.2d 386; Whipple Road Quarry Co. v. L. C. Smith Co., 114 Cal.App.2d 214, 216, 249 P.2d 854; Bessemer Coal, Iron & Land Co. v. Bullard, 215 Ala. 433, 111 So. 5, 6; 23 Cal.Jur. § 43, pp. 479, 480.

appear that any basis for amendment, such as mistake, existed. As drawn, the decree would not sustain a contempt proceeding. Lazar v. Superior Court, supra, 16 Cal.2d 617, 620, 107 P.2d 249; Plummer v. Superior Court, supra, 20 Cal.2d 158, 163, 124 P.2d 5. But if, perchance, the decree were amended by setting forth at length the insurance obligation and thus rendering contempt available, that would not advance respondent's contention to any extent, for a judgment of contempt is not a remedy which plaintiff would possess as a matter of right. She would have to catch Herbert in Illinois and make a personal service of process there, for a foreign judgment for alimony or the like cannot be enforced by a contempt proceeding. Smith v. Smith, 115 Cal.App.2d 92, 102, 251 P.2d 720; Creager v. Superior Court, 126 Cal.App. 280, 282, 14 P.2d 552. More importantly, it is true that a contempt proceeding is not a civil action, Groves v. Superior Court, 62 Cal.App.2d 559, 564, 145 P.2d 355; Gale v. Tuolumne County Water Co., 169 Cal. 46, 51, 145 P. 532 and it cannot result in a money judgment in favor of the aggrieved party. The right to institute such a proceeding does not start the statute of limitation to running upon an unmaturing cause of action.

[16, 17] Declaratory relief doubtless would have been available to plaintiff at any time after the first breach of Herbert's obligation, but that type of proceeding does not affect and is not affected by the statute of limitation, except that it is barred when an action for coercive relief with respect to the subject matter is barred, and not before that time. Taylor v. Marine Cooks & Stewards Ass'n, 117 Cal.App.2d 556, 561, 256 P.2d 595; Maguire v. Hibernia Savings & Loan Soc., supra, 23 Cal.2d 719, 733-734, 146 P.2d 673, 151 A.L.R. 1062; Leahey v. Department of Water & Power, 76 Cal.App.2d 281, 286, 173 P.2d 69; 15 Cal.Jur.2d § 39, p. 168.

[18, 19] This is an action upon the Illinois judgment and Code of Civil Procedure, § 337.5, subdivision (3) is the applicable limitation statute, prescribing a ten-year period. As above shown, plaintiff had no matured cause of action until Herbert's death. That event occurred on January 29, 1953; she presented a timely claim against the estate which was ultimately rejected and this action was filed on February 16, 1954, less than one year after accrual of her cause of action. The claim of bar by limitation is misplaced.

Conclusion VII of the findings reads: "That plaintiff, Marie Lubin, was guilty of laches in failing to take legal action against said Herbert Lubin prior to January 29, 1953, by reason of which any cause of action which she might have had under or by reason of said Illinois divorce decree of May 6, 1932, is barred."

[20-22] The defense of laches does not lie in a law action, Hopkins v. Hopkins, 116 Cal.App.2d 174, 177, 253 P.2d 723; Brownrigg v. De Frees, 196 Cal. 534, 539, 238 P. 714, and that is the nature of the case at bar. Respondent says it sounds in equity because of subdivision 3 of the prayer of the complaint, which in its entirety reads as follows: "Wherefore plaintiff prays judgment and decree against defendant as follows: 1. In the sum of one hundred fifty thousand dollars ($150,000.-00) together with interest thereon. 2. In the sum necessary to provide plaintiff with eight hundred thirty-three dollars and thirty-three cents ($833.33) per month for life. 3. That this court make its judgment and decree in conformity with the decree of the Illinois court, and order the defendant to comply with such terms as this court may see fit and proper to enforce. 4. For reasonable attorneys fees. 5. For costs of suit and for such other relief as to the court seems proper in the premises."

Of course, the nature of an action is not determined by the prayer, but by the factual allegations of the body of the complaint. This one alleges the Illinois divorce decree, the making of the property settlement agreement, the fact that it was approved and confirmed and made a part of the decree by reference, the obligation of the husband to provide and maintain the $150,- 000 of insurance, his failure to pay the premiums or to maintain the policies in force, and resultant damage to plaintiff of $150,000, or "the sum necessary to provide plaintiff with eight hundred thirty-three dollars and thirty-three cents ($833.-33) per month for life." Paragraphs 1 and 2 of the prayer square with these allegations and with section 1913 Code of Civil Procedure.³ In this instance plaintiff had no rights before Herbert's death; her cause of action fully accrued upon rejection of her claim against the estate; she is entitled to a money judgment and there is no function for an equity court to perform. This action is strictly at law. That an action upon a judgment of a sister state may be at law, rather than in equity, is recognized in Bruton v. Tearle, 7 Cal.2d 48, 55, 59 P.2d 953, 106 A.L.R. 580; Creager v. Superior Court, supra, 126 Cal.App. 280, 14 P.2d 552; Handschy v. Handschy, 32 Cal.App. 2d 504, 90 P.2d 123. See, also, 50 C.J.S., Judgments, § 870, p. 445. With respect to an action at law upon a domestic judgment, see Thomas v. Thomas, 14 Cal.2d 355, 360, 94 P.2d 810.

[23-25] Moreover, the plea of laches is not sustained by the evidence in the instant case. "Laches is not mere delay, but delay that works a disadvantage to another. A person is guilty of laches only where he has, by his conduct or negligence and delay, induced or suffered another to do or abstain from something, whereby the latter might be injured should he be allowed to enforce his rights. Taber v. Bailey, 22 Cal.App. 617, 623, 135 P. 975." Carlson v. Lindauer, 119 Cal.App.2d 292, 309, 259 P.2d 925, 934. "It is not applied strictly between near relatives [citations] * * * and '(it) is not designed to punish a plaintiff' but is 'invoked where a refusal would be to permit an unwarranted injustice.' [Citations.]" Berniker v. Berniker, 30 Cal.2d 439, 448, 449, 182 P.2d 557, 563.

learned prior to July 24, 1933, that Herbert had permitted the policies to lapse. She took no affirmative action until after his death. That she had no right to do so at an earlier date appears from the preceding discussion of the accrual of a cause of action. "A delay in bringing suit will be excused where there exists an actual and substantial impediment thereto. A party cannot be charged with negligent delay in instituting suit so long as his interest is of such a nature that it cannot be enforced by action; so to charge him, his right to sue must be complete; * * *." 30 C.J.S. Equity, § 121, p. 544.

[28, 29] It is also clear that plaintiff's inaction did not induce any change of position on Herbert's part. She and he discussed the matter many times; he always said he would make it up, take care of it; that she had nothing to worry about; she continued to have confidence in him; believed he would do the proper thing at the proper time. In 1934 or 1935, before he moved to Texas, they were in New York and he offered her certain brewery stock in exchange for a surrender of her rights to the insurance, but she refused the deal. In 1940 her Chicago attorney advised her to sue Herbert because of his breach of the insurance obligation; what sort of suit he contemplated does not appear. She declined to follow this advice for two reasons, (1) she talked to Herbert and he said he would take care of things, and (2) "it was a sensational thing for the boys. I just thought it wouldn't be good for them. I thought Mr. Lubin would live up to his part of the bargain. He was paying the boys' educations, and stuff, you know, and I thought, well, he would live up to his end of the bargain and I would make no trouble." In 1948, after he considered and declared himself uninsurable, Herbert gave evidence that he recognized the insurance obligation as still binding, and Marie definitely showed that she was in the same frame of mind. He proposed to her that she join him in an action to break the Chicago trust and said if they were successful he would see that she got $150,000 cash out of the proceeds in substitution for the insurance. This offer she rejected immediately. The only prejudice to him which is suggested as a result of plaintiff's inaction is his becoming uninsurable prior to 1948. But it cannot be said that any conduct of plaintiff's induced his continued breach of agreement until that time, or that the parties themselves evinced any belief that that fact had relieved him of his continuing obligation. The only oral evidence at the trial was that of plaintiff. The rejection of her testimony could not improve defendant's situation, for disbelief does not create affirmative evidence to the contrary of that which is discarded. "The fact that one testifies falsely may, and usually does, afford an inference that he or she is concealing the truth but it does not reveal the truth itself or warrant an inference that the truth is the direct converse of the rejected testimony." In re Estate of Bould, 135 Cal.App.2d 260, 265, 287 P.2d 8, 10, 289 P.2d 15.

3. C.C.P. § 1913. "The effect of a judicial record of a sister State is the same in this State as in the State where it was

[30] If it be said that Herbert's estate is prejudiced by plaintiff's long delay, the argument is refuted by Brownrigg v. De Frees, supra, 196 Cal. 534, 539, 238 P. 714. It there appeared that John M. De Frees, at the time of divorce from his wife, made in lieu of a court order for alimony or child support a written contract whereby he agreed to pay for the support of plaintiff, his child, the sum of $10 a month, beginning September 1, 1888. The agreement also waived any right to rely on the statute of limitations. He made one payment and no more, dying on September 1, 1918. In due course plaintiff sued on the agreement. Upon the subject of laches the court said, in part, 196 Cal. at page 539, 238 P. at page 716: "No showing was made that the delay had been productive of any hardship or injustice to the defendant or to the other heirs at law of decedent. If the decedent had complied with his contract and had paid the monthly allowances in accordance with his agreement his estate would have been proportionately reduced. The question of laches is always relative to the circumstances of each particular case. Dufour v. Weissberger, 172 Cal. 223, 155 P. 984. No circumstance, even considered as an equitable question, appears in aid of respondent in this case." That language has obvious pertinence to the situation at bar.

This action is not barred by laches, for this is an action at law wherein the plea does not lie. Secondly, the evidence does not support the finding.

[31, 32] Finally, we must deal with finding XI to the effect that plaintiff "expressly and impliedly consented to and by her conduct acquiesced in the action of said Herbert Lubin in allowing said life insurance policies to lapse;" and conclusion VI that any obligations Herbert may have undertaken to provide and maintain the life insurance policies "were rescinded by the mutual consent of the plaintiff, Marie Lubin, and said Herbert Lubin." Counsel for respondent would support the finding of rescission by the language of cases such as McCreary v. Mercury Lumber Distributors, 124 Cal.App.2d 477, 486, 268 P.2d 762, 767: "An abandonment of a contract may be implied from the acts of the parties and this may be accomplished by the repudiation of the contract by one of the parties and by the acquiescence of the other party in such repudiation. Dessert Seed Co. v. Garbus, 66 Cal.App.2d 838, 847, 153 P.2d 184. It is not necessary that the parties say, in so many words, that they do mutually rescind the contract; rescission may be proved by other words and acts. Cincotta v. Catania, 95 Cal.App. 99, 100-101, 272 P. 330." It is to be noted that the intent to abandon or rescind must be mutual, Civ.Code, § 1689, subd. (5); 12 Cal.Jur.2d § 191, p. 409. Ross v. Frank W. Dunne Co., 119 Cal.App.2d 690, 699, 260 P.2d 104, 109, holds that the parties terminated their dealings "but respondents did so only because appellant failed and refused to live up to the agreement. This does not appear to amount to a mutual cancellation, rescission or abandonment." The evidence at bar does not sustain any finding of mutual consent to an abandonment or rescission. As above shown, the parties discussed the insurance matter many times over the years; Herbert always said he would take care of it, that she had nothing to worry about; she continued to have confidence in him and believed he would make good on the insurance; she refused to accept certain brewery stock in liquidation of the obligation; also rejected his proposal to wipe it out through a suit against the Chicago Title and Trust Company. The finding of rescission cannot stand.

No other points require discussion.

The court tried the issue of liability first and for that reason excluded evidence as to the measure of plaintiff's recovery. This leaves the reviewing court without a basis for a directed judgment.

The judgment is reversed.

Division 2, California.

Oct. 18, 1956.

Original habeas corpus proceeding was brought in the District Court of Appeal by prisoner to have judgment of conviction and commitment to prison declared void, on ground that prisoner's plea of guilty had been induced by alleged representation of his counsel that he would receive probation and no more than a county jail sentence, and that such representation was corroborated by acts of district attorney. The District Court of Appeal, Devine, J. pro tem., held that where referee, who had been appointed to hold a hearing at prison and take evidence, found that prisoner's counsel at time of prisoner's plea of guilty believed and represented to prisoner that the prisoner was eligible for probation, but that counsel made no representation that any officer of the State had made any statement on the subject, prisoner could not be relieved from alleged mistake of his counsel.

Petition denied and writ discharged.

1. Habeas Corpus ⇨90

In original habeas corpus proceeding in District Court of Appeal by prisoner to have judgment of conviction and commitment to prison declared void, finding of referee, who had been appointed by District Court of Appeal to hold a hearing at prison and take evidence, was entitled to great weight.

2. Habeas Corpus ⇨25(1)

Where referee, who was appointed by District Court of Appeal in habeas corpus proceeding by prisoner, to hold a hearing at prison and take evidence, found that prisoner's counsel at time of prisoner's plea of guilty believed and represented to prisoner that prisoner was eligible for probation, but that counsel made no representation that any officer of the State had made any statement on the subject, prisoner could not be relieved from alleged mistake of his own counsel.

DEVINE, Justice pro tem.

Petitioner seeks by writ of habeas corpus to have a judgment and commitment to state prison declared void on the ground that his plea of guilty was induced by a representation by his own counsel that he would receive probation and no more than a county jail sentence, and that this representation was corroborated by acts of the district attorney. It may be noted that petitioner was before this court in an attempt to accomplish the same results he seeks herein on an appeal from an order denying him a writ of coram nobis. People v. Croft, 134 Cal.App.2d 800, 286 P.2d 479. In that proceeding he appeared in propria persona and he failed to present in the trial court any affidavits to establish a factual basis for relief, but in this proceeding, his counsel has filed appropriate affidavits.

In affidavits of members of his family, as well as in his own verified petition, it is alleged that, while petitioner was ready to proceed to trial, his attorney (not the counsel who represents him in this proceeding) told him that the judge and the district attorney had promised that he would receive probation and a county jail sentence. Petitioner alleges that he believed this representation and entered his plea of guilty; that the representation of counsel was apparently corroborated by the action of the district attorney, who, just before the plea, replied to the court's interrogation that he was in accord with petitioner's counsel and moved to strike the words "with assault to commit murder" from an assault charge, and moved to dismiss charges against petitioner's brother. Petitioner contends that by tests set forth in the case of People v. Gilbert, 25 Cal.2d 422, 433, 154 P.2d 657, he is entitled to relief if he can establish (1) an unqualified assertion by his attorney to petitioner that a responsible officer of the state had agreed to a certain maximum punishment in return for a plea of guilty; (2) an apparent corroboration of that assertion by an officer of the state, and (3) reliance by petitioner on the assertion and the apparent corroboration.

[1] When the matter was presented to us, there was nothing to give us an account of the matter on the part of petitioner's attorney at the time of the plea. The court appointed Honorable Murray Draper as a referee to make findings of fact. The referee held a hearing at San Quentin prison, and after taking evidence presented by petitioner and also the testimony of his former attorney, made his finding that the attorney did not make a representation that any responsible officer of the state had entered into a bargain purporting to give petitioner a lesser punishment than he would receive otherwise, in exchange for a plea of guilty. The referee's finding is entitled to great weight. In re Allen, 47 Cal.2d 55, 301 P.2d 577. We conclude that petitioner has not established the first and basic requisite for the relief he seeks.

[2] The referee found that petitioner's counsel at the time of the plea believed, and represented to petitioner, that the latter was eligible for probation, but he made no representation that any officer of the state had made any statement upon this subject. Petitioner cannot be relieved from such a mistake made by his own counsel. People v. Miller, 114 Cal. 10, 16, 45 P. 986; In re Hough, 24 Cal.2d 522, 531, 150 P.2d 448; People v. Gottlieb, 25 Cal.App.2d 411, 415, 77 P.2d 489; People v. Morton, 100 Cal.App.2d 269, 223 P.2d 259. He cites several cases in which it has been held that there is denial of due process of law when the representation by counsel is a sham, as in Powell v. State of Alabama, 287 U.S. 45, 53 S.Ct. 55, 77 L.Ed. 158, but this is a very different matter from a mistake of law by counsel who was selected by defendant and who was not acting in collusion with any officer of the state.

The petition to have the plea of guilty, the judgment, and the commitment set aside is denied, and the writ is discharged.

Frank SMITH, Defendant and Appellant.
Cr. 2625.

District Court of Appeal, Third District,
California.

Oct. 17, 1956.

Prosecution on three counts of burglary of the second degree and for a prior conviction of a felony in respect to each count. The Superior Court, Sacramento County, Raymond T. Coughlin, J., entered judgment of conviction and denied defendant's motion for new trial, and he appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Van Dyke, P. J., held that evidence that victim of alleged robbery had given no one permission to take his photographs and address book which were found in defendant's possession, and lack of evidence that such articles were removed by defendant's brother or any other member of victim's family was sufficient to establish corpus delicti and to establish that defendant entered victim's room with felonious intent and stole the property found in his possession.

Judgment and order affirmed.

1. Burglary ☞41(2, 3)

In second degree burglary prosecution, evidence that victim of alleged robbery had given no one permission to take his photographs and address book which were found in defendant's possession and lack of evidence that such articles were removed by defendant's brother or any other member of victim's family was sufficient to establish corpus delicti and to establish that defendant entered victim's room with felonious intent and stole the property found in his possession.

2. Criminal Law ☞824(4)

In second degree burglary prosecution, mere fact that evidence was circumstantial and that defendant's only defense was alibi did not require trial court to instruct jury on such special defense where no request therefor was made.

Ralph D. Drayton, Sacramento, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Doris H. Maier and J. M. Sanderson, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

VAN DYKE, Presiding Justice.

Appellant was tried and convicted upon an information charging him with three counts of burglary of the second degree and with a prior conviction of a felony in respect to each count. This is an appeal from the judgment entered upon the jury's verdicts and from the order denying a motion for a new trial.

Appellant contends that, as to count three of the information, the McCurdy incident, the judgment and order must be reversed as the evidence is insufficient to establish the corpus delicti. He contends further that all three convictions should be set aside because the trial court erred in failing, upon its own motion, to instruct upon the defense of alibi. These contentions cannot be sustained.

The record shows that when appellant was arrested on the evening of January 6, 1955, he had upon his person certain photographs and an address book which proved to be the property of one Jack McCurdy, whose premises appellant, by count three of the information, was charged with having unlawfully entered with intent to commit theft therein. Mr. McCurdy identified the photographs and address book as his and testified that after he retired on January 1, 1955, they had been taken from his bedroom without his knowledge or consent. Mr. McCurdy's testimony was that when he went to bed that evening he placed his trousers on a nightstand in the room in which he slept. At that time his wallet, containing the photographs and address book, was in the back pocket of his trousers. The next morning when he arose he found his trousers outside the house and the wallet and its contents missing. Appellant was shown to have made conflicting statements as to how he came by the articles found in his possession.

[1] Appellant argues that the missing articles could have been removed by some one who made a lawful, rather than an unlawful, entry into the bedroom which Mr. McCurdy and his brother shared and that there is no proof that there was an entry made with a felonious intent. It is true that during the night in question other occupants of the house could have legally entered the room through the unlocked door which opened on the back porch. In fact, Mr. McCurdy's brother did so when he returned home and went to bed in the room which the two shared in their parents' home. However, it was for the jury to determine the nature of the entry made when the articles were taken and the intent with which it was made. Mr. McCurdy testified that he had given no one permission to take his photographs and address book which were found in appellant's possession. There was no evidence that they were removed by Mr. McCurdy's brother or any other member of his family. Therefore, the jury could, and impliedly did, find that the corpus delicti was sufficiently proved, People v. Kross, 112 Cal.App.2d 602, 609, 247 P.2d 44; People v. Dodson, 77 Cal.App.2d 389, 175 P.2d 59; and that the appellant entered Mr. McCurdy's room with felonious intent. People v. Dillon, 1 Cal.App.2d 224, 227-228, 36 P.2d 416. Likewise, it could be found that appellant stole the property found in his possession and concerning the acquisition of which he made conflicting statements. People v. Buratti, 96 Cal.App. 2d 417, 419, 215 P.2d 500; People v. Morris, 124 Cal.App. 402, 403-405, 12 P.2d 679; People v. Russell, 120 Cal.App. 622, 625-626, 8 P.2d 209.

[2] The fact that the evidence was circumstantial and that appellant's only defense was alibi did not require the trial court to instruct the jury on such special defense, as no request therefor was made. People v. Whitson, 25 Cal.2d 593, 604, 154 P.2d 867; People v. Freeman, 135 Cal.

Hearing Denied Dec. 12, 1956.

Divorce action wherein plaintiff sought to recover sum allegedly disbursed by her for household expenses at defendant's instance and pursuant to his promise to repay her. Defendant cross-complained, seeking a declaration that the marriage was invalid, and filed a counterclaim to recover sum allegedly loaned to plaintiff. The Superior Court of Santa Barbara County, Walter J. Fourt, J., decreed that the purported marriage of the parties was void ab initio, denied defendant relief on his counterclaim, and entered judgment for plaintiff in the amount prayed for, and defendant appealed from the last mentioned portions of the judgment. The District Court of Appeal, Shinn, P. J., held that evidence sustained implied finding that defendant had agreed to meet all household expenses in excess of specified monthly contribution which plaintiff was to make, but would not sustain finding that he had not done so.

SHINN, Presiding Justice.

This is an action for divorce in which plaintiff sought, inter alia, to recover the sum of $12,000 (later reduced to $10,000) allegedly disbursed by her for household expenses at defendant's instance and request and pursuant to his promise to repay her. Defendant cross-complained, seeking a declaration that the marriage was invalid, and filed a counterclaim by which he sought to recover the sum of $5,748 (later reduced to $5,641) allegedly loaned to plaintiff. The court decreed that the purported marriage of the parties was void ab initio, denied defendant relief on his counterclaim, and entered judgment for plaintiff in the amount prayed for. Defendant appeals from the last mentioned portions of the judgment.

Plaintiff and defendant, both residents of Santa Barbara, went to Tijuana, Mexico, on January 24, 1950, where they entered into what purported to be a proxy marriage before a person who was not authorized by Mexican law to perform a marriage ceremony or to execute valid proxies therefor. They returned to Santa Barbara where they cohabited for the next three years, believing in good faith that they were husband and wife. During this time defendant and his two minor daughters resided with plaintiff, her mother and her daughter in an elegant home which was her separate property. Defendant's minor son also lived there intermittently for about a year.

Defendant was employed as manager of Bekins Van & Storage in Santa Barbara at a salary of $7,200 per year. He owned 50 per cent of the stock of the local Bekins corporation on which he received dividends averaging $8,300 per year. Plaintiff's assets included $80,000 in a bank account which came from her deceased husband, building and loan deposits totaling $10,000, a vacant lot in Brentwood which she sold for $12,000 in 1950, her home which she valued at $54,000, and 12 acres of surrounding land which she valued at $12,000. Plaintiff also received an allowance of $1,000 per month from the guardianship account of her daughter's estate.

During the purported marriage the parties maintained four bank accounts. Plaintiff had a personal account in which she deposited the monthly allowance from her daughter's guardianship account. Defendant also had a personal account in which he deposited his dividend checks. The parties maintained a joint household account in which defendant deposited his salary and to which plaintiff transferred money from her personal account. They also kept a joint capital or building and investment account. The funds deposited in this account came from plaintiff's personal account, from the estate of plaintiff's deceased husband, from her monthly allowance, and from loans. Money in the capital account was used to improve plaintiff's home, to build three houses on the surrounding acreage for eventual sale, and to plant another part of the acreage with avocado trees.

The basis of plaintiff's claim is an alleged oral agreement made by her and defendant prior to or at the time of the purported marriage, whereby plaintiff agreed to contribute $500 per month (later voluntarily increased to $550 per month) toward the payment of household expenses in return for defendant's promise to shoulder the remainder of the expense of maintaining the household. It is plaintiff's theory, and the court below found, that "* * * plaintiff, upon the representation * * * of said defendant that he would at plaintiff's request reimburse her for the moneys and expenses incurred by her in providing defendant and his family with a dwelling * * * and in providing other necessities of life for the maintenance and support of plaintiff and defendant and his family * * *, did provide said defendant and his family with said dwelling * * * and said other necessities. * * * That * * * between January 24, 1950, and March 15, 1953, at the special instance and request of defendant * * * and upon defendant's promise to repay the same to plaintiff after request, the plaintiff * * * advanced, paid out and disbursed the sum of $10,000 for and on account of the household expenditures incurred by defendant * * * in connection with the maintenance and support of defendant and his said family at the dwelling and home place of plaintiff." (Emphasis ours.) The $10,000, we must assume, was over and beyond the sums of $500 or $550 per month which plaintiff agreed to contribute. Our interpretation of the finding is that plaintiff's contributions in these amounts were deemed sufficient to defray the expenses of plaintiff's part of the household and that the remaining expense was chargeable to defendant.

Defendant contends, on the other hand, that there was no evidence of any agreement to reimburse plaintiff and that plaintiff's expenditures in excess of her monthly contributions went toward the improvement and maintenance of her separate property and not toward the support of defendant and his children.

[1, 2] Viewing the testimony in the light most favorable to plaintiff, Overton v. Vita-Food Corp., 94 Cal.App.2d 367, 210 P.2d 757, we are of the opinion that there was sufficient evidence of an oral agreement to share the household expenses of the combined families. Plaintiff testified as follows:

"Q. Now did you have any agreement with Mr. Duffey prior to your marriage or about the time of your marriage as to how they,—the living expenses were to be shared? A. We didn't discuss it particularly. I took it for granted that he would carry the burden of a family. However, I have a minor child who has independent means, and I had an allowance by the court, and felt that if I contributed $500.00 to the household per month, it would be more than a fair share for her maintenance and support in my home.

"Q. You told that to Mr. Duffey? A. I told that to Mr. Duffey, and he even then said, It was far too much, and much too generous and handsome, and splendid, and he could carry the whole load otherwise."

Plaintiff further testified that shortly after the purported marriage, her invalid mother came to reside with plaintiff and defendant and that plaintiff voluntarily increased her monthly contribution to $550 to cover the added expense of maintaining her mother there. Defendant testified that it was his understanding that plaintiff would contribute $500 per month and that he would contribute his salary as manager of Bekins Van & Storage and that "* * * we had discussed my salary thoroughly, as well as what contributions she would make to it, and that we felt we could live within that, along with my traveling expenses and entertainment expenses and what work I could do on the place." Defendant denied that he had agreed to pay household expenses in excess of the combined amount of his salary and plaintiff's contribution. His denial created only a conflict in the evidence as to what he had agreed to do. The conduct of the parties and their countless discussions of finances lent support to plaintiff's testimony as to the understanding. As the trial court is the sole judge of the credibility of witnesses and the weight to be accorded to testimony, we are bound by its implied determination that defendant had agreed to meet all the household expenses which exceeded plaintiff's monthly contribution. The finding is strengthened by the fact that the law imposes a duty on a husband to support his wife and his own children. Moreover, as we say, it was not disputed that defendant without objection did contribute more than his salary.

The trial court having decided that defendant obligated himself to pay the household expenses in excess of plaintiff's agreed contributions, the next problem was to determine the total amount of the household expenses and the total amount contributed by each of the parties thereto. The burden of proving these facts was upon plaintiff. Defendant contends that she did not sustain this burden of proof and we are obliged to agree.

We may say first that plaintiff's testimony was vague, rambling, manifestly incomplete and in material respects unsupported by any reliable corroborative evidence. The trial court did the best it could to unravel the numerous complicated money transactions of the parties, but the task was one which we think would have been successful, if at all, only by means of a reference or a trial in which each shred of evidence would be examined in great detail in order to discover additional facts which might have a bearing upon the validity of the claims of each party against the other. Our problem is to determine whether there was substantial evidence to support a finding that defendant was indebted to plaintiff for expenses which she claimed to have paid on his account in the sum of $10,000 or any other definite sum and whether there was substantial evidence to support a finding that plaintiff was not indebted to defendant for money borrowed from him. This has necessitated a careful examination of the record for evidence shedding some light upon these questions. Plaintiff kept no book of account of the household expenses for the years 1950 and 1951. She presented no data and gave only unsupported figures as to what the expenses were during those years. For the year 1952 and for about 3 months of 1953 prior to the separation she kept a detailed account, which was in evidence. Beyond that we must look to her own testimony and must give to it the interpretation and effect which tends most strongly toward support of the court's findings. Plaintiff's testimony and her book account were definite as to the 1952 and 1953 expenses. For the year 1952 the total household account as entered in the book amounted to $19,333.86 and for 3 months of 1953 it totaled $4,490.21. Beyond that we must look to her testimony as to the total household expenses over the period from the marriage to the separation. She was questioned by her counsel as to the average monthly expenses of the household and she testified: "Oh, it ran a thousand and more a month. There may have been some lighter months, but by and large it was a large household, a lot of entertaining of Mr. Duffey's business acquaintances and friends, mostly, and of the children entertaining and so on, and there was a big, big running expense every month." Next we look to plaintiff's testimony that from January 24, 1950, to April 15, 1953, defendant deposited in the household account $25,873 and she deposited therein $23,202. Her deposits would amount to about $1,500 more than the amount she agreed to contribute of $500 per month for a time before her mother came to live with them some time in 1950 and $550 per month thereafter. Plaintiff testified that during the same period defendant contributed $25,873 to the household account. This, incidentally, was some $3,000 more than the amount of defendant's salary over that period. We have examined plaintiff's account book for the 1952-1953 period. It shows that during that period plaintiff contributed $8,909.17 and defendant contributed $13,747.69. However, during this year of excessive expenditures there were numerous extraordinary expenses such as sanitarium and medical expenses for plaintiff's mother and other items for schooling which presumably should have been charged to the guardianship account of plaintiff's daughter. Obviously, the account book for that period sheds no light upon the total amount of the household expenses for three years and two months. It furnishes no basis for a computation of the expenses during 1950 and 1951. If 1952 was a typical year, the total household expenses would not only have exceeded by some $15,000 the amount to which plaintiff testified but would have exceeded by approximately the same amount the sums which, according to plaintiff's testimony, were contributed by the parties. If we are to take plaintiff's estimate of the expenses at $1,000 per month, they would total only $38,000. But plaintiff testified that there was actually contributed by herself and the defendant some $49,000. When we give effect to plaintiff's testimony as to the total household expenses for the period and the amounts which she and defendant separately contributed thereto, we find that there was no evidence whatever that the household expenses exceeded the total amount of the contributions of the parties.

We have a final word as to our problem of unearthing evidence which would support the finding that defendant is indebted to plaintiff in the sum of $10,000, namely, that plaintiff's brief has been of no assistance to us whatever. The most we find in it is what purports to be a statement of plaintiff's assets at the time of the commencement of the cohabitation amounting to $168,000, or with contributions from the guardianship account, to $206,000 and a like statement of assets at the end of the period amounting to $157,851.39. Plaintiff improved her several properties, built houses, planted avocados, and in other ways spent money lavishly. The fact, if it be a fact, that plaintiff's assets were diminished is wholly irrelevant to the issues in the case. Plaintiff's counsel are not subject to criticism for the state of the record. They did the best they could to elicit from their client testimony as to definite facts pertinent to the issues. What they got was a torrent of words and no useful facts other than those we have stated. In reaching the foregoing conclusion we have naturally disregarded the denials of the defendant and have given to plaintiff's evidence the greatest effect that could reasonably be claimed for it. It does not by any means measure up to substantial evidence that defendant is indebted to plaintiff in any ascertainable amount. And we do not doubt that if the able trial judge had anticipated the difficulty that would be encountered in an effort to ascertain the pertinent facts of the case he would have ordered a reference for an audit and a detailed investigation of the transactions of the parties.

Plaintiff testified volubly as to an infinite number of conversations with defendant concerning finances; upon an occasion immediately before the separation she told defendant that he owed her money and he offered to give her a check or a note for some amount "I don't know, twelve thousand or something like that" etc. She asked for a check, defendant offered her a note which she refused, whereupon she ordered him to leave. It is evident that there was no agreement on the part of defendant to pay plaintiff any definite sum and no evidence of the statement of an account. If there was an attempt of the parties to reconcile their differences in money matters it came to naught. Obviously, any effort of defendant toward an agreement was made with a view to a continuance of the marital relationship and the advantages which he and his children had been enjoying for several years. But there was to be no peace, only a final parting of the ways. The court made no finding as to any promise by defendant of a settlement or of an admission of liability. We attach no importance to this alleged conversation. The evidence was not such as to require the court to find that the parties ever reached an agreement as to any amount owing by defendant.

[3] With respect to defendant's counterclaim he testified there was a balance of $5,641 due him on loans which he had made to plaintiff from his personal account for the improvement of her separate property. He introduced into evidence a recapitulation sheet showing loans made to plaintiff and the sums she repaid. The bulk of the remaining balance claimed by defendant is represented by two advances totaling $5,000 made in 1952. Plaintiff testified that the $5,000 was deposited in the household account and used to pay for painting and roofing plaintiff's home. She further testified that the $5,000 was not a loan and was never considered by either of the parties as a loan. The court found that all sums plaintiff had borrowed from defendant had been repaid and that it was not true that plaintiff had borrowed the $5,641 from defendant. The conflict in the evidence on this issue was resolved against defendant by the trial court, the findings are supported by substantial evidence and we are bound by them.

The part of the judgment which denies defendant recovery on his counterclaim is affirmed; the part of the judgment which awards plaintiff $10,000 is reversed.

ment in any place of occupancy except with the knowledge and consent of the person concerned. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Philbrick McCoy, J., entered judgment for defendant and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Fox, J., held that in view of fact that all searches and seizures are not unconstitutional but only unreasonable searches, and whether a search is unreasonable or not depends on the facts and circumstances of each particular case, trial court properly refused to grant a declaratory judgment undertaking to determine reasonableness or legality of future acts of chief of police in connection with installation and use of sound transmission equipment for purposes of surveillance.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Searches and Seizures ☞7(1)

While surveillance invades one's privacy, it is not, as such, a violation of constitutional guarantees against unreasonable search. U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 4; West's Ann.Const. art. 1, § 19.

2. Searches and Seizures ☞7(1)

Although the use of a listening device and the surreptitious recording of what is heard does not constitute an unconstitutional invasion of a defendant's right of privacy per se, if, however, dictographic surveillance of the person is effected through trespass or unlawful entry upon his premises, then his constitutionally protected right of privacy has been violated. U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 4; West's Ann. Const. art. 1, § 19; West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 640; Communications Act of 1934, § 605, 47 U.S.C.A. § 605.

3. Declaratory Judgment ☞209

In view of fact that all searches and seizures are not unconstitutional but only unreasonable searches, and whether a search is unreasonable or not depends on the facts and circumstances of each particular case, trial court properly refused to grant a declaratory judgment undertaking to determine reasonableness or legality of future acts of chief of police in

Trial Ⓒ393(1)

The fact that a finding is argumentative may be a proper basis for criticizing its form, but it cannot justify a reversal of a judgment.

7. Municipal Corporations Ⓒ1000(5)

In action by municipal taxpayer to enjoin chief of police from expending public funds for installation for use of dictograph or dictographic equipment in any place of occupancy except with the knowledge and consent of the person concerned, evidence sustained findings that expenditures in connection with dictographic surveillance were neither large nor substantial and were less expensive than other means of surveillance, and that there was no threatened or actual irreparable injury to plaintiff or any other taxpayer or to the general public by substantial waste of public funds in connection with dictographic surveillance.

8. Appeal and Error Ⓒ731(5)

An assignment of error merely stating that trial court's findings were against the evidence failed to indicate what particular facts established that such findings were improper or in what particular such findings were against the evidence and was not sufficient to warrant an inquiry into the merits of the assignment of error.

FOX, Justice.

By his amended complaint plaintiff, as a citizen and taxpayer of the city of Los Angeles, sought to permanently enjoin the Chief of Police from making any expenditure of public funds of the city for the purpose of or in connection with the installation, maintenance or use in the city of Los Angeles of any dictograph or dictographic equipment upon the property or in the home or office of any person, or in any other place of occupancy of any person, in the city except with the knowledge, consent, permission or authority of each person thus concerned. The court rendered judgment denying plaintiff any relief. Plaintiff thereupon appealed.

The case was submitted to the trial court upon a stipulated record which included various documents, the pleadings, numerous affidavits, and the depositions of the parties. No oral testimony was taken.

In seeking a reversal plaintiff contends that certain findings are improper, conflicting, conclusory and unsupported by the evidence; and that the conclusions of law and judgment are against the evidence and the law.

Plaintiff's thesis is that the police practice of surveillance by dictograph is illegal in that it violates both the federal and the state constitutional guarantees against unreasonable search and seizure. United States Constitution, Amendment IV; California Constitution, Article 1, sec. 19. As a predicate for his position plaintiff argues that finding VIII, to the effect that in one or more instances "but not in all of them," dictographs have been installed and used by police officers of the city under the defendant's direction in various places without the consent of the owner or occupant, is against the evidence. The record, however, does not sustain plaintiff's attack upon this finding. In defendant's answer, which was received in evidence pursuant to the stipulation re submission, he stated "In some instances installations such as are described in this answer are made with the knowledge and consent of the owner, occupant, or lessee of the premises upon which they are made." Captain Hamilton stated in his affidavit that "It can be said in general that the consent of some person with access to the suspected premises is frequently obtained where the officers in charge are reasonably satisfied that the security and secrecy of the installation can be maintained." This evidence is sufficient to support the challenged finding.

In discussing finding VIII plaintiff, in effect, contends that installation and use of dictographic equipment in places of private occupancy without the knowledge, consent or authority of the occupant or person subject to surveillance is a violation of such person's constitutional rights against unreasonable search. This states the principle against unreasonable search too broadly. There are a number of situations in which our courts have held an individual's constitutional rights were not infringed where his premises were searched by the police without his personal knowledge or consent and where the officers had no search warrant. In People v. Gorg, 45 Cal.2d 776, 291 P.2d 469, defendant occupied a room with bath in the home of Don Stevens in exchange for doing the gardening. Mr. Stevens gave the officers permission to enter and search the entire house. They searched defendant's room where they found marijuana. The court held defendant's consent was not necessary under the facts. The court pointed out, 45 Cal.2d at page 783, 291 P.2d at page 473, that "Defendant was living in the Stevens home, and it is clear that whether he was in fact a tenant, servant, or guest, Stevens believed that he had at least joint control over his quarters and the right to enter them * * * and authorize a search thereof. Under these circumstances the officers were justified in concluding that Stevens had the authority over his home that he purported to have, and there was nothing unreasonable in their acting accordingly." To the same effect is People v. Caritativo, 46 Cal.2d 68, 292 P.2d 513, where permission to search defendant's room was given by the owner of the estate and her caretaker. In People v. Silva, 140 Cal.App.2d 791, 295 P.2d 942, this court held that consent given to the police to search the home by one of the joint occupants was "adequate authority for its pursuit without the necessity of any affirmative consent of defendant * * * [140 Cal.App.2d at page 795, 295 P.2d at page 944.]" In People v. Dominguez, 144 Cal. App.2d 63, 300 P.2d 194, the wife of defendant gave the officers permission to enter and look around. The search, therefore, was not illegal. It was held in the Gorg case, 45 Cal.2d at page 781, 291 P.2d 469, that the question of consent to search was one of fact.

S.Ct. 564, 72 L.Ed. 944—wire tapping¹; People v. Malotte, 46 Cal.2d 59, 292 P.2d 517—use of an induction coil which did not require physical connection with the telephone; Goldman v. United States, 316 U.S. 129, 62 S.Ct. 993, 86 L.Ed. 1322,—use of a dictaphone placed against the partition wall which enabled federal agents to hear the conversation between the defendants in their office and what one of them said over the telephone; People v. Graff, 144 Cal.App.2d 199, 300 P.2d 837, (hear. den.) where the same technique as in the Goldman case was used; On Lee v. United States, 343 U.S. 747, 72 S.Ct. 967, 96 L.Ed. 1270, where the federal agent who talked with defendant in his shop had a small microphone in his pocket with an antenna running along his arm and an agent outside the shop with a receiving set picked up incriminating statements made by defendant; People v. Avas, 144 Cal.App.2d 91, 300 P.2d 695 (hear. den.), and People v. MacKenzie, 144 Cal.App.2d 100, 300 P.2d 700 (hear. den.) where the modus operandi of recording a conversation participated in by all defendants in MacKenzie's home was substantially the same as that employed in the On Lee case.

If, however, dictographic surveillance of a person is effected through trespass or unlawful entry upon his premises, then his constitutionally protected right of privacy has been violated. People v. Cahan, 44 Cal.2d 434, 282 P.2d 905, and People v. Tarantino, 45 Cal.2d 590, 290 P.2d 505.

[3] The foregoing demonstrates that there are a variety of situations in which dictographic surveillance by the police is not a violation of constitutional rights. It is apparent that whether future acts of the police amount to an invasion of such rights cannot be determined by rule of thumb or by a fixed formula. This is necessarily so because, as this court pointed out in People v. Coleman, 134 Cal.App.2d 594, 286 P.2d 582, it is only unreasonable search and seizure that is prohibited by our federal and state constitutional provisions. In Go Bart Importing Co. v. United States, 282 U.S. 344, at page 357, 51 S.Ct. 153, at page 158, 75 L.Ed. 374,—a search and seizure case—the court remarked: "There is no formula for the determination of reasonableness." In United States v. Rabinowitz, 339 U.S. 56, 70 S.Ct. 430, 94 L.Ed. 653, the court stated: "What is a reasonable search is not to be determined by any fixed formula. The Constitution does not define what are 'unreasonable' searches and, regrettably, in our discipline we have no ready litmus-paper test. The recurring questions of the reasonableness of searches must find resolution in the facts and circumstances of each case." 339 U.S. at page 63, 70 S.Ct. at page 434. The Cahan decision, and what has transpired since it was rendered, is in harmony with these principles. The author of the opinion concluded with the observation that "it opens the door to the development of workable rules governing searches and seizures and the issuance of warrants that will protect both the rights guaranteed by the constitutional provisions and the interests of society in the suppression of crime." 44 Cal.2d at page 451, 282 P.2d at page 915. Since that time our courts have been busily engaged in developing these "workable rules" by an examination of "the facts and circumstances of each case" that has come before them. These principles and practices justified the trial court's refusal to grant plaintiff "a declaratory judgment of a mandatory and directory character regardless of the particular circumstances under which the defendant may be called upon to act in the future, and regardless of what some court might hold in some future case with respect to the legality of such acts when considered in the light of the evidence which may be adduced in any such case."² We note in passing that many aspects of the

1. Section 605 of the Federal Communications Act 47 U.S.C.A. § 605 makes wiretapping illegal. It is also made illegal in California by section 640, Penal Code.

2. This quotation is from the trial judge's memorandum.

subject matter here under discussion are appropriate for legislative consideration.

[4] If it be conceded that some dictographic installation in the future will involve an infringement of the constitutional rights of some as yet unknown person the court was, nevertheless, not required to grant the relief sought for it would be detrimental to the public interest in that it would have a suffocating effect upon law enforcement, the prevention of crime, the apprehension of criminals, and the protection of property from their depredations. Such an injunction would readily lend itself to misuse and abuse by the criminal element. A bookmaking syndicate or a narcotics ring might well frustrate an effective investigation of their operations by specious contempt citations on the theory that the police had violated their constitutional guarantees against unreasonable search and seizure. While police misbehavior such as that disclosed in the Cahan and Tarantino cases cannot be condoned, it is nevertheless sound public policy that the police not be unduly hampered in tracking down crime. Effective law enforcement to the end that an ordered society may be maintained is one of the purposes of local government. That purpose should not be frustrated on the contingency that the rights of some unknown person may at some future time be violated by the police and some public funds erroneously spent in connection therewith.

[5,6] Plaintiff challenges finding XI on the grounds that it is "an argument more than * * * a finding," that "it conflicts with other findings," and that it is "replete with conclusions." The fact that a finding is argumentative may be a proper basis for criticizing its form, but it cannot justify a reversal of the judgment. The only suggestion of a conflict between this and other findings is a parenthetical reference to finding VIII. We have examined the two findings. Without detailing their provisions, suffice it to say, we fail to find any necessary conflict between them. The conclusions about which plaintiff complains appear to be conclusions of fact. Such conclusions are not improperly included in findings of fact. Hayward Lbr. Co. v. Construction, etc., Corp., 110 Cal.App.2d 1, 3, 241 P.2d 1054.

[7] Plaintiff contends that findings XII and XV are "against the evidence" and "conclusory." In finding XII the court declares that expenditures in connection with dictographic surveillance is "neither large nor substantial" and that it is less expensive than other means. Examination of the record reveals ample evidence in defendant's verified answer, in an affidavit filed by him, and in his deposition (all of which were received in evidence under the stipulation re submission) to support the finding.

In finding XV the court declared that there is no threatened or actual irreparable injury to plaintiff or to any other taxpayer or to the general public by any substantial waste of public funds in connection with dictographic surveillance. The evidence amply supports this finding.

In his attack upon these findings plaintiff makes the point that the pertinent question is not the degree of expense but the legality of the practice. This argument begs the question. Whether any expenditure of public funds by defendant is illegal turns upon the basic question of whether under the particular facts and circumstances the act giving rise to the expenditure is illegal. This, of course, cannot be determined until the facts and circumstances are known. Since plaintiff is dealing with anticipated situations these, of course, cannot now be known. Hence the legality of the expenditure cannot be determined at this time. In this connection the final sentence of finding XV is particularly significant. The court found there is no impending or threatened injury to plaintiff or to any taxpayer or to the general public by reason of any future or threatened installation or use of such equipment pursuant to any authorization therefor by defendant. This finding provides additional justification for the judgment.

Plaintiff's contention that these two findings are "conclusory" is adequately met by our observations supra relative to the same criticism of finding XI.

[8] Plaintiff's final challenge to the findings is that findings "XVI and XVII are against the evidence." Finding XVI is that except as they are found to be true, each of the allegations of plaintiff's amended complaint is untrue. Finding XVII is that except as they are found to be untrue, each of the allegations of defendant's answer is true. Plaintiff has failed to indicate what particular facts he has in mind or wherein either of these findings is against the evidence. It has been held repeatedly that the mere assignment of error is not sufficient to warrant an inquiry into its merits. People v. Buena-flore, 40 Cal.App.2d 713, 719, 105 P.2d 621; Martter v. Byers, 75 Cal.App.2d 375, 379, 171 P.2d 101.

Plaintiff relies on Wirin v. Horrall, 85 Cal.App.2d 497, 193 P.2d 470. That case is not here applicable. It was an appeal from a judgment of dismissal after a demurrer sustained without leave to amend. Plaintiff sought to restrain defendants from spending funds of the city in conducting "police blockades," that is, blocking off designated areas of the city of Los Angeles and stopping all persons and automobiles entering or leaving such areas and searching them without first obtaining search warrants." This court held he alleged a cause of action. The allegations were such as to make the roadblock and the indiscriminate searches illegal in their entirety. No question of the legality of the search in any specific instance arose. The practice sought to be enjoined in the Horrall case was similar to the roadblock at the Mexican border, considered in People v. Gale, 46 Cal.2d 253, 294 P.2d 13. Having held it to be illegal, the court then considered the facts and circumstances of the search of the particular defendant. While the Horrall case arose on demurrer the instant matter was decided on the merits. Contrary to the allegations in Horrall, the court here, in effect, found as a fact, and the cases cited demonstrate, that dictographic surveillance is not always a violation of an individual's rights against unreasonable search; whether such rights are invaded depends on the facts and circumstances of the particular case, United States v. Rabinowitz, supra. Hence the inapplicability of Horrall.

The conclusions of law that "the plaintiff is not entitled to a declaration or judgment undertaking to determine the reasonableness or legality of future acts" of the defendant Chief of Police in connection with the installation and use of sound transmission equipment for purposes of surveillance, and that plaintiff is not entitled to any relief, and the judgment are in harmony with the evidence, the findings of fact and the applicable law.

It is unnecessary to pass upon other points argued by counsel.

Judgment affirmed.

District Court of Appeal, Third District,

Oct. 18, 1956.

Suit, for injunctive relief and damages, brought by plaintiff claiming to have exclusive right of way over roadway used by defendants' logging trucks. The Superior Court, Humboldt County, Delos A.

Mace, J., denied the relief sought, and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, McMurray, J. pro tem., held that evidence sustained defendants' claim that road had been in general use for over 40 years as a public highway.

Affirmed.

1. Dedication ⇨20(3)

A long acquiescence by landowner in public use will operate as a dedication of a road to such use.

2. Easements ⇨36(1)

There is a general presumption that use by other than owner is adverse and not permissive, and while such presumption is not as strong when land is open and uncultivated and remote as it is when it is enclosed, cultivated and developed, presumption exists in either case.

3. Highways ⇨17

In suit for injunctive relief and damages, brought by plaintiff claiming to have exclusive right of way over roadway used by defendants' logging trucks, evidence sustained defendants' claim that road had been in general use for over 40 years as a public highway.

4. Appeal and Error ⇨172(1)

Plaintiff whose entire cause of action in trial court had been based upon proposition that it held an exclusive right of way over road could not successfully contend on appeal that defendants' use of road exceeded that of public generally.

This is an appeal from a decision denying plaintiff injunctive relief or damages.

Plaintiff claimed to have acquired by grant exclusive rights of way for lumbering purposes over a route through two separately owned, but contiguous, parcels of real property. Plaintiff learned that the existing roadway traversing these separate pieces of property was being used by defendants' logging trucks and equipment as a means of access to a logging operation defendants were conducting. Defendants had constructed a branch road from their operation to the road over which plaintiff claimed he had the exclusive right of way. Defendants, as an affirmative defense, alleged that the road which plaintiff claimed exclusively had been in general use for over forty years as a public highway. The trial court found in accordance with this affirmative defense and denied plaintiff any relief.

On this appeal appellant urges that the evidence is insufficient as a matter of law to sustain the finding that the roadway was dedicated to a public use; that the judgment is contrary to law in that the trial court did not limit the nature and use of the road to those acquired by public use.

[1,2] A long acquiescence by a landowner in public use will operate as a dedication of a road to such use. Taft v. Tarpey, 125 Cal. 376, 381, 58 P. 24; Schwerdtle v. County of Placer, 108 Cal. 589, 41 P. 448. Furthermore, there is a general presumption that a use by other than the owner is adverse and not permissive, and that, while this presumption is not as strong when the land is open and uncultivated and remote as it is when it is enclosed, cultivated and developed, the presumption exists in either case. People v. Sayig, 101 Cal.App.2d 890, at page 897, 226 P.2d 702, at page 707. In the case of City of Venice v. Short Line Beach Land Co., 180 Cal. 447, 181 P. 658, a summary of the various principles applicable to the law of implied dedication is presented. At page 450 of 180 Cal., at page 660 of 181 P., it is stated:

"In order to constitute such dedication, or such abandonment, by the owner, his intention to that effect must appear. Such intent need not be manifested by any contract, writing, or express declaration of the owner. It may be implied from his conduct. If the donor's acts are such as to indicate an intention to appropriate the land to the public use, then, upon acceptance by the public, the dedication becomes complete.' People v. Marin County, 103 Cal. [223 at page] 228, 37 P. 203, 26 L.R.A. 659. In that case it is said that, in the case of an express dedication by words or acts, 'the intention to appropriate the land to public use is manifested by some outward act of the owner manifesting his purpose,' but that an implied dedication may be proved 'by acts or conduct not directly manifesting the intention, but from which the law will imply the intent.' As stated in Helm v. McClure, 107 Cal. [199] 204, 40 P. 437, the question 'whether a dedication of land for highway purposes has occurred in any instance is a conclusion of fact to be drawn from the circumstances of the particular case; that such circumstances must clearly show an unequivocal intention, manifested by appropriate words or conduct, or both, on the part of the owner, to devote his land to the wayfaring uses of that somewhat vague entity called "the public."'

The case of Union Transportation Company v. Sacramento County, 42 Cal.2d 235, 267 P.2d 10, contains a full and able discussion of the law applicable to implied dedication and adverse user. What is there said is determinative of the question here presented.

[3] The record before us in this case is adequate to show a continued use of the road for over forty years along substantially the identical route which it now follows; that this use was not denied to anyone; and that improvements on the road were made by others than the owners of the abutting property; furthermore, that one portion of the road had been used by county road equipment in reaching a gravel pit. We feel that this is certainly sufficient basis for the trial court to find, as it did, in favor of the road here being a public road.

[4] Admittedly, there is evidence to controvert the idea of dedication by public use. There was evidence that gates had been maintained along the road for many years, that "No Trespassing" signs were posted and that the road was a cul-de-sac. All of these evidentiary matters merely raised conflicts in the evidence which were resolved by the trial court against appellant. In many of the cases cited by appellant for the proposition that these showings should upset the judgment in the court below, the language quoted is from cases wherein the reviewing courts upheld findings of trial courts that by reason of the existence of gates, signs, and cul-de-sacs no dedication had resulted from user. It is also contended that even if a dedication can be found, the evidence shows that the use that the defendants had made of this road had exceeded the public use, since defendants used logging trucks on the road and widened the road to make it possible for the larger vehicles to operate. Inasmuch as this point was not in issue in the trial below, and inasmuch as the court has found that there was a dedication to be implied from the evidence here set forth, it would seem that the appellant is not in a position to object to the widening of the road by defendants since appellant's entire cause of action below was based upon the proposition that it held an exclusive right of way to that road. Furthermore, the evidence as to widening shows a somewhat insubstantial change of route and cannot be said to be a substantial change of the easement owned by the public. See Ward v. City of Monrovia, 16 Cal.2d 815, at page 821, 108 P.2d 425, at page 429. And as to the right to make repairs where there is an easement, see the same case, 16 Cal.2d at pages 821 and 822, 108 P.2d at page 429.

Appellant's contention that an injunction should have been granted even though the court found that no damages were proven, is not well taken, since if appellant did not have an exclusive easement it would not be entitled to an injunction, and the court's finding that this road was a public road precluded any such relief.

The judgment is affirmed.

v.

The MASSEY-HARRIS COMPANY, a Corporation, Louis E. Amborn, Mrs. Louis E. Amborn, Herbert E. Cunningham and Mrs. Herbert E. Cunningham, Individually and doing business under the fictitious firm name and style of Superior Equipment Company, Defendants and Respondents.

Liberty Mutual Insurance Company, a Corporation, Plaintiff in Intervention.
Civ. 8884.

District Court of Appeal, Third District,
California.

Oct. 19, 1956.

Rehearing Denied Nov. 13, 1956.

Hearing Denied Dec. 12, 1956.

Action by surviving widow for death of husband who was killed when self-propelled combine rolled backwards off of ramp, allegedly as result of negligent operation and crushed the husband. The Superior Court, San Joaquin County, Thomas B. Quinn, J., entered judgment of nonsuit and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Van Dyke, P. J., held that under the facts of the case doctrine of res ipsa loquitur applied to the situation and raised inference of negligent conduct on part of operator of combine as proximate cause of death of husband, and that evidence as to whether husband was contributorily negligent was sufficient to present question of fact for jury.

Judgment reversed.

1. Appeal and Error ⇨927(3), 989

Where all testimony given by defendants in action was elicited from them under Civil Procedure section allowing defendants to be examined as if under cross-examination subject to the rules applicable to examination of other witnesses, plaintiff on appeal from judgment of nonsuit entered for defendants could rely upon portion of such testimony favorable to her and disregard unfavorable testimony in her attack on the nonsuit. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 2055.

2. Negligence ⇨121(3)

In action by surviving widow for death of husband who was killed when self-propelled combine rolled backwards off of ramp and crushed husband allegedly as result of negligent operation of the combine, doctrine of res ipsa loquitur applied to situation and raised inference of negligent conduct on part of operator of combine as proximate cause of death of the husband.

3. Negligence ⇨121(2)

Under the res ipsa loquitur doctrine, where plaintiff introduces only some circumstantial evidence suggesting a definite cause for accident, it cannot be said that normal inferences are defeated.

4. Negligence ⇨136(26)

In action by surviving widow for death of husband, who was killed when self-propelled combine rolled backwards off of loading ramp allegedly as result of negligent operation of the machine by its operator, thereby crushing plaintiff's husband, evidence as to whether husband was contributorily negligent in standing in back of machine was sufficient to present question of fact for jury.

VAN DYKE, Presiding Justice.

Plaintiff-appellant is the surviving widow and sole heir of Guy A. Towers, who was killed while taking part in the loading of a combine harvesting machine upon a flatbed truck. The combine was self-propelled. Defendant-respondent Louis E. Amborn drove it up a loading ramp consisting of planks, with one end resting on the ground and the other on the rear of the flatbed. As Amborn drove up the ramp, Towers descended from the bed of the truck, from which point he had been directing Amborn and passed around to the back of the combine with the apparent purpose of seeing that all the wheels were properly on the planks. At this point he was out of sight of Amborn, but Amborn knew where he was. When Amborn had driven the combine onto the planks, it suddenly ran back down, crushing and killing Towers. Appellant brought action against the partnership of which Amborn was a member and against its partners individually, alleging that they, through Amborn, so negligently operated the machine as to cause it to back down the ramp. She pleaded this negligence generally in the sense that she made no attempt to describe exactly the negligent conduct of Amborn. At the trial appellant proved the foregoing facts. She went further and introduced evidence tending to prove a theory of negligent conduct, consisting in Amborn's having failed to detect mechanical defects in the harvester which permitted it, during the operation, to run back down the ramp. The evidence suggested that the immediate cause of the harvester's failure to proceed up the planks and onto the flatbed truck was that the low forward gear which Amborn was using was defective and jumped out, thus releasing the machine. At the close of appellant's evidence, the trial court granted a nonsuit, and from the judgment following this appeal is taken.

Respondents' counsel assert that the trial court was justified in nonsuiting appellant upon each of two grounds: (1) That there was no proof of negligence on the part of Amborn, and, (2) That, as a matter of law, Towers was guilty of contributory negligence. In our view, neither ground is tenable, and the judgment appealed from must be reversed.

[1,2] All of the testimony was elicited from defendants under Section 2055 of the Code of Civil Procedure. On appeal, therefore, appellant may rely upon the portion of such testimony that is favorable to her and disregard the unfavorable in her attack on the nonsuit. Anthony v. Hobbie, 25 Cal.2d 814, 818, 155 P.2d 826. Respondents Louis E. Amborn and his wife were eyewitnesses, and the description of the accident is found in their testimony. It may be summarized as follows: In addition to what has been stated, it appeared that Amborn had arranged with the trucking company, which employed Towers, to send a flatbed truck and trailer with driver to a ranch where the harvester was standing, at which point Amborn engaged to meet the driver. At the appointed time Mr. and Mrs. Amborn arrived at the ranch where the harvester was and found Towers there with his truck and trailer. Towers had placed the loading planks in position, and Amborn thereupon got onto the operating platform of the harvester, started the motor, placed the machine in low forward gear and started to drive it toward the ramp, being guided by Towers. When the front tracks of the harvester engaged the two outer planks Towers got off the rear end of the trailer and passed around behind the harvester where he checked the two inside planks to see if they were in proper position to receive the rear wheels. He stooped over, attempting to adjust one of the planks, at which moment the harvester moved rapidly backwards and crushed him. Res ipsa loquitur applies to the situation presented by the foregoing facts and raises the inference of negligent conduct on the part of Amborn as the proximate cause of the death of Towers. Zentz v. Coca-Cola Bottling Company, 39 Cal.2d 436, 247 P.2d 344.

[3] Appellant did not lose the benefit of the rule res ipsa by introducing testimony purporting to show that Amborn was negligent in not having carefully inspected the mechanism of the harvester and thus discovering the claimed defect in the gears. "Where the plaintiff introduces only some circumstantial evidence suggesting a definite cause for the accident, it cannot be said that the normal inferences are defeated." "Res Ipsa Loquitur in California", by William L. Prosser, 37 Cal.Law Rev., p. 214; Leet v. Union Pacific R. Co., 25 Cal.2d 605, 620, 155 P.2d 42, 158 A.L.R. 1008.

[4] The facts do not convict Towers of contributory negligence as a matter of law, and it was for the jury to decide whether such negligence existed. Presumably, he was using due care for his own safety, and that presumption is not dispelled by anything appearing in the record here. The jury could consider that automotive equipment with which we are all generally familiar has reached such a point of excellence in design and manufacture that a machine such as this, intended to propel itself on various gradients, would not ordinarily, if properly operated, suddenly back down a ramp up which it was propelling itself. Towers was not bound to anticipate any negligence of Amborn who was shown to have had considerable experience with these machines and with the driving of them, including driving them up loading ramps, and the jury could conclude that there was no necessary inconsistency with ordinary care involved in Towers' conduct.

Respondents contend that facts before the court, independently of any testimony, conclusively demonstrate the contributory negligence of Towers as a matter of law. Our attention is directed to the opening statement of appellant's counsel in connection with the various exhibits consisting of photographs of the harvester, of the truck and trailer and of the loading ramp. We have examined these and have concluded that, singly or all together, they do not have the effect for which respondents contend. In the opening statement it is true that counsel advanced a theory of negligence heretofore noted and having to do with a mechanical defect as being the cause of the accident, which defect Amborn ought to have detected. But there was nothing in the opening statement which can be taken as waiving the benefit of the rule res ipsa, or as disposing of appellant's right to rely on the rule. Neither the opening statement nor the evidence introduced in support of that theory destroyed the inference that Amborn was negligent; much less did the opening statement and the facts introduced in evidence which we have already heretofore discussed, taken all together, prove Mr. Towers to have been guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law.

For the reasons given, the judgment appealed from is reversed.

TITLE INSURANCE AND TRUST COMPANY, Plaintiff and Appellant,

v.

FRANCHISE TAX BOARD, State of California, Defendant and Respondent.

Civ. 21726.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 2, California.

Oct. 11, 1956.

Action by taxpayer to recover a franchise tax paid on its trust business for 1953 and to recover interest on a refunded franchise tax paid for 1942. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, John J. Ford, J., entered judgment for defendant and taxpayer appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Moore, P. J., held, inter alia, that under statute providing interest shall be allowed upon any overpayment of tax if the overpayment was not made because of an error or mistake on part of taxpayer, taxpayer who made an overpayment of taxes after the taxing authority announced that it was planning to require payment of such sum, and then applied for a refund rather than originally protesting payment of the tax, did not make such a voluntary erroneous payment as to deprive him of interest on fund subsequently refunded.

Judgment affirmed in part, and reversed in part with directions.

1. Taxation ☞387

After December 31, 1942, all insurance sold by a title insurance company was subject to an annual tax based upon the company's income, but income from a trust department of such a title company was required to be excluded from the basis of such tax. West's Ann.Const. art. 13, § 14½; West's Ann.Rev. & Tax.Code, §§ 23101 et seq., 26080-26080.3.

2. Taxation ☞117

A franchise tax for the privilege of doing business within the state is no less a tax upon a current year's privilege because measured by a prior year's income.

3. Taxation ☞386(1)

Where a statute provided for the levy of a franchise tax on trust business for 1943, measured by income of the business in 1942, the tax levied was for the privilege of doing business in 1943 regardless of the fact that a prior year's earnings constituted the measuring rod of the amount of the tax, and therefore the tax was not imposed in 1942 on trust businesses in violation of effective date of statute imposing franchise tax on trust businesses commencing in 1943. West's Ann.Const. art. 13, § 14½; West's Ann.Rev. & Tax. Code, §§ 23101 et seq., 26080-26080.3.

4. Taxation ☞387

Under article of Constitution providing for a revision in the taxation of insurance companies, an insurance company was obligated to pay a tax for business done prior to January 1, 1943 based upon the amount of gross premiums received by it during the preceding 12 months, and was not exempted from payment of a tax for the privilege of doing business for the year of 1943. West's Ann.Const. art. 13, § 14½; West's Ann.Rev. & Tax.Code, §§ 23101 et seq., 26080-26080.3.

5. Taxation ☞117

Where a constitutional amendment substituted one form of taxation upon corporate franchises for another, the court would not hold that the amendment intended to postpone all collections of such taxes for an entire year in the absence of a clear and unmistakable expression of an intention to provide such a tax hiatus. West's Ann.Rev. & Tax.Code, §§ 12003, 12253, 12255; St.1943, p. 2838, § 21; West's Ann.Const. art. 13, § 14½.

6. Constitutional Law ☞34

Where a constitutional provision imposing a tax on insurance companies was self-executing without legislative implementation, in determining the effective date of such tax it was unnecessary to inquire into the intent of the Legislature in enacting various provisions of the revenue and taxation code codifying such constitutional provisions. West's Ann.Rev. & Tax.Code, §§ 12003, 12253, 12255; St.1943, p. 2838, § 21; West's Ann.Const. art. 13, § 14½.

7. Taxation ☞126

Mere fact that Legislature set in motion a new method of taxing the trust business of title insurance companies as of December 31, 1943, did not serve as an indication of legislative intent to exempt the trust business of such companies from taxation during the year 1943 in disregard of effective date of constitutional section providing for such tax, namely, December 31, 1942. West's Ann.Rev. & Tax.Code, §§ 12003, 12253, 12255; St.1943, p. 2838, § 21; West's Ann.Const. art. 13, § 14½.

8. Taxation ☞126

Where an amendment to an act providing for a franchise tax on insurance companies was made applicable only to income years ending after the effective date of the act which was 1943, the first income year to which the amendment would be applied was 1943, rather than 1942, and even though such act changed the accrual date from the first day of the tax year to the last day of the income year, nevertheless, taxpayer's duty to pay tax upon its 1943 trust business became fixed upon December 31, 1942. West's Ann.Rev. & Tax.Code, § 23101 et seq.

9. Taxation ⇐535

Statutory provision denying interest on overpayments by a taxpayer due to error or mistake on the part of the taxpayer was designed to prevent abuse of interest allowance provided in certain cases on refunds of overpayments by taxpayers. West's Ann.Rev. & Tax.Code, §§ 25901-25901c, 26080-26080.3.

10. Taxation ⇐535

Under statute providing that interest shall be allowed upon any overpayment of tax if the overpayment was not made because of an error or mistake on part of taxpayer, taxpayer who made an overpayment of taxes after the taxing authority announced that it was planning to require payment of such sum, and then applied for a refund rather than originally protesting payment of the tax, did not make such a voluntary erroneous payment as to deprive him of interest on fund subsequently refunded. West's Ann.Rev. & Tax.Code, §§ 25901-25901c, 26080-26080.3.

Thompson, Royston, Wiener & Moss, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., James E. Sabine, Asst. Atty. Gen., Dan Kaufmann, Deputy Atty. Gen., James C. Maupin, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

MOORE, Presiding Justice.

Appellant filed its action in two counts: One was to recover the franchise tax as to its trust business paid for the year 1943; Two was to recover interest on the franchise tax paid for 1942 but refunded by order of the Franchise Tax Board May 31, 1950. Both demands were rejected. Appellant brought the matter here, contending (1) that it was not, in 1943, subject to the tax imposed by the former Bank and Corporation Franchise Tax Act for the calendar year 1943 by reason of the contents of section 14½ of Article XIII of the California Constitution; (2) that it is entitled to interest on the franchise tax paid for the taxable calendar year 1942 under section 27(c) of the former Bank and Corporation Franchise Tax Act¹ as that section read in 1942 because the overpayment of the tax did not result from an error or mistake on the part of appellant. The Franchise Tax Act will hereafter be referred to as the Act.

The answer to the question as to whether appellant was obliged to pay a tax under the Act for the privilege of operating its trust business in the calendar year 1943 depends upon the interpretation of section 14½² which was adopted November 3,

1. Such Act has been supplanted by the Bank and Corporation Tax Law, Division 2, Part II of the Revenue and Taxation Code.

2. California Constitution, Article XIII

"Sec. 14½. (a) Those provisions of Section 14¾ of this article relating to taxation of insurance companies and associations shall remain effective as to business done in this State prior to January 1, 1943, and as to the assessment, levy, collection and adjustment of taxes with respect to such business done prior to that date; but as to such business done subsequent to December 31, 1942, those provisions of Section 14¾ relating to taxation of insurance companies and associations shall not apply, and this section shall apply thereto.

"(b) 'Insurer,' as used in this section, includes insurance companies or associations and reciprocal or interinsurance exchanges. As used in this paragraph, 'companies' includes persons, partnerships, joint stock associations, companies and corporations.

"(c) An annual tax is hereby imposed on each insurer doing business in this State after December 31, 1942, on the bases, at the rates, and subject to the deductions from the tax hereinafter specified.

1942 and is in part copied on the margin hereof.

Section 14 $\frac{1}{2}$ is by its own contents self-executing. Without legislative aid, it emphatically subjects the trust business of appellant to taxation for 1943. Its title insurance business had long been subjected to an annual tax under subdivision (b) of section 14 $\frac{3}{4}$ of Article XIII "upon the * * * gross premiums, less return premiums, received upon its business done in this State, other than premiums received for reinsurance". But that method of computing the tax imposed upon the insurance business of title companies in 1942 underwent a change by the adoption of section 14 $\frac{1}{2}$, and trust business was separately taxed. By subdivision (a) of that section, those provisions of section 14 $\frac{3}{4}$ relating to the taxation of insurance companies "shall remain effective as to business done in this State prior to January 1, 1943, and as to the assessment, levy, collection and adjustment of taxes with respect to such business done prior to that date; *but as to such business done subsequent to December 31, 1942, those provisions of Section 14 $\frac{3}{4}$ relating to taxation of insurance companies * * * shall not apply, and this section shall apply thereto.*"

"(d) In the case of an insurer not transacting title insurance in this State, the 'basis of the annual tax' is, in respect to each year, the amount of gross premiums, less return premiums, received in such year by such insurer upon its business done in this State, other than premiums received for reinsurance and for ocean marine insurance.

"In the case of an insurer transacting title insurance in this State, the 'basis of the annual tax' is, in respect to each year, all income upon business done in this State, except:

"(1) Interest and dividends.

"(2) Rents from real property.

"(3) Profits from the sale or other disposition of investments.

"(4) Income from investments.

"In the case of an insurer transacting title insurance in this State which has a trust department and does a trust business under the banking laws of this

From the language just quoted, so far as appellant's insurance business is concerned, it was obliged to pay a tax for business done prior to January 1, 1943, based upon the amount of gross premiums received by it during the preceding twelve months. However, the adoption of section 14 $\frac{1}{2}$ brought on a definite change in the method of computing the annual tax on its title insurance business. While subdivision (d) retained the same basis of the annual tax as to all insurance companies except title companies, that is to say an annual tax based upon the amount of gross premiums, yet that subdivision changed the annual tax with respect to the insurance business of title companies to a tax based upon their income derived from business done in California. But if an insurance company in this state transacts title insurance and also "does a trust business under the banking laws of this State, there shall be excluded from the basis of the annual tax imposed by this section, the income of, and from the assets of, such trust department and such trust business, if such income is taxed by this State or included in the measure of any tax imposed by this State."

It was clearly the purpose of the new section that the trust portion of the business

State, there shall be excluded from the basis of the annual tax imposed by this section, the income of, and from the assets of, such trust department and such trust business, if such income is taxed by this State or included in the measure of any tax imposed by this State.

"(i) The tax imposed on insurers by this section is in lieu of all other taxes and licenses, State, county, and municipal, upon such insurers and their property, except:

"(2) That an insurer transacting title insurance in this State which has a trust department or does a trust business under the banking laws of this State is subject to taxation with respect to such trust department or trust business to the same extent and in the same manner as trust companies and the trust departments of banks doing business in this State."

done by such companies as appellant was not to be considered as insurance business and therefore should not be taxed as insurance business. Therefore, while section 14½ exempted the insurance companies and title companies from the great majority of taxes, it emphasized by subdivision (i) that the trust business done by title companies shall be taxed to the same extent and in the same manner as is that of any trust company or trust department of any bank operating in this state. From such reading of the new section, it is apparent that title companies are not engaged in the same type of insurance as that of other insurers and should be taxed on a different basis, to wit, on their incomes rather than on their gross premiums. Inasmuch as the trust business of title companies was not exactly a part of their insurance activities, the new section was so phrased that the trust business of title companies shall be required to pay the same type tax as trust companies and banks doing a trust business are required to pay.

[1] From the foregoing, the conclusion is unavoidable that after December 31, 1942, all insurance sold by a title company must pay an annual tax based upon the company's income, but its income from its trust department must be excluded from the basis of such tax. As to the trust business done by a title company after December 31, 1942, it was subject to a franchise tax under the Bank and Corporation Franchise Tax Act, the same as that paid by other trust companies and trust departments of banks.

Appellant contends (1) that under section 14¾ by reason of the fact that its insurance tax is levied in lieu of all other state taxes, it was exempt from the payment of California bank and franchise tax; but (2) that under section 14½ it is subject to such tax measured by its trust department's net income; (3) that the levy of a franchise tax for 1943 measured by its income for 1942 was the assessment and levy of a tax with respect to business done prior to January 1, 1943; (4) thus the judgment of the superior court approving the levy of a tax measured by appellant's trust department income for 1942 applies section 14½ prematurely and contrary to the terms of the express, effective date provided by the section; namely, December 31, 1942.

[2, 3] Appellant's contention that the levy of a franchise tax on trust business for 1943 measured by the income of its trust business in 1942 is, in effect, a tax upon its 1942 trust business in violation of the effective date of section 14½ is not justified by an analysis of that section. Section 14½ expressly provided for taxation of 1943 trust business. The franchise tax here levied was for the privilege of doing business in 1943 regardless of the fact that a prior year's earnings constituted the measuring rod of the amount of the tax. A tax for the privilege of doing business within the state is no less a tax upon this year's privilege because measured by last year's income. Is not success in the recent past the best criterion for measuring the value of doing business now? Since the formula prescribed by the legislature for deriving the taxes due by a trust company furnishes an approximation of the amount accrued and since there appears no abuse of power by the legislation, it will not be disturbed. See Fullerton Oil Co. v. Johnson, 2 Cal.2d 162, 175, 39 P.2d 796.

[4, 5] We cannot agree that section 14½ should be so construed as regards its effective date as to leave appellant not subject to tax for the privilege of conducting trust business in 1943. Should such construction prevail, the trust portion of appellant's business would be exempt for 1943 while its insurance business would be taxed for that year. Thus, would result a hiatus in the law as to the taxation of the trust business of title companies which could not reasonably have been intended by the authors of section 14½ which contemplates that trust business would be taxed. Under appellant's construction of the amending section, the insurance business would be taxed for the year 1943 while its trust business would escape the drag of the tax gatherer. "In substituting one form of taxation upon corporate franchises for another, we should not hold that the people intended to postpone all collections of such taxes for an entire year unless, the intention to provide such a tax hiatus was clearly and unmistakably expressed." Spring Valley Co. v. Johnson, 7 Cal.App.2d 258, 261, 46 P.2d 294, 296; Carpenter v. Peoples Mutual Life Ins. Co., 10 Cal.2d 299, 303, 74 P.2d 508.

[6, 7] However, appellant argues that the task of this court of attempting to construe the effective date of section 14½ has been pre-empted by the Legislature. The gist of the contention is that when the Legislature added sections 12253 and 12255 to the Revenue and Taxation Code by the Statutes of 1943, chapter 956, page 2832, and thereby codified the provisions of the constitutional section 14½, section 21 of chapter 956 provided that the effective date of these statutory sections was to be December 31, 1943. Thereby the inference is sought to be drawn that the Legislature construed section 14½ as not providing for franchise taxation of trust business carried on during 1943 as measured by 1942 receipts. This contention cannot prevail. In view of the fact that the provisions of section 14½ are clearly self-executing without legislative implementation, it is unnecessary to inquire into the intent of the Legislature in enacting the various provisions of the Revenue and Taxation Code. In the second place, the effective date contained in section 21 of chapter 956 applied to numerous amendments to the code besides sections 12253 and 12255. It is therefore impossible to infer any legislative intent that these specific sections were to have the December 31, 1943, effective date because of a construction by that body of the constitutional provision. Furthermore, neither of these code sections provided for taxation of the trust business of title insurers. Rather they merely excluded receipts from such business from the income used to measure insurance taxation under the new method for computing such tax. The fact that the Legislature set in motion the new method of taxing the insurance business of title companies as of December 31, 1943, does not serve as an indication of legislative intent to exempt trust business of such companies from taxation during the year 1943 in disregard of the clear effective date of the constitutional section; namely, December 31, 1942.

[8] A final point put forward by appellant is that in June of 1943, the Legislature amended the Bank and Corporation Franchise Tax Act to provide that from thenceforth the franchise tax would be collected at the close of the business year rather than the beginning, thereby measuring the amount of the tax by the business of the current rather than the prior year. Stats. 1943, ch. 984, § 4(7), p. 2899. Thus, the argument runs that the first year whose income should be measured for taxation would be that of 1943 rather than 1942. In other words, that the first franchise tax applicable to appellant would be by the terms of the amendment to the Act be due on the 31st of December, 1943, and be measured by the income earned from the trust business during that year. However, the fact that the Legislature changed the accrual date from the first day of the tax year to the last day of the income year does not affect appellant's liability. Nevertheless, appellant's duty to pay tax upon its 1943 trust business became fixed upon December 31, 1942. At that time, a franchise tax was imposed due the first day of the year 1943 for the privilege of doing business in 1943. The amendment to the Act could not have been effective as to the income year 1942 upon which the 1943 franchise tax was based because under the provisions of section 2 of chapter 984 of the statutes of 1943 the amendment was only to be applicable to "income years ending after the effective date of this act." Therefore, the first income year to which the amendment would apply would be 1943 and not 1942. This provision was undoubtedly inserted so that taxation of income years would proceed in an unbroken chain regardless of the change in accrual dates.

On March 15, 1942, appellant filed its franchise tax return for that year based upon 1941 income. The return disclosed a net income of $79,625.61 and assessed appellant's franchise tax at $3,197.02 which was paid with the return. Appellant and Franchise Tax Commissioner having waived the statute of limitations for the assessment of the franchise tax, the time for assessment was extended to December 1947. Thereupon, appellant filed its claim for a refund of the reported tax upon the ground that "The Bank and Corporation Franchise Tax is not applicable in any way to claimant for the period here involved for the reason that claimant was at all times mentioned herein an insurance company, subject to the California tax on insurance companies in lieu of all other taxes." The taxpayer then pursued its remedies through the appropriate tribunals and secured an order for the refund of the tax but without interest. The Title Company now demands interest at the rate of six per cent on the refunded amount as accrued from the date of its payment, March 15, 1942, to the date of refund, June 5, 1950.

The statute under which the claim is made is section 27(c) of the Bank and Corporation Franchise Act as constituted in 1942, which read, "Interest shall be allowed and paid upon any overpayment of any tax, if the overpayment was not made because of an error or mistake on the part of the taxpayer". The admitted facts surrounding the payment of the tax are that in 1940 the Attorney General of the State of California issued his opinion which advised the taxing authorities to collect a franchise tax from title insurers in the trust business regardless of the provisions of the section of the California Constitution which provided for a single tax upon insurance companies; the opinion was published in tax journals; and the taxing authorities indicated their intent to adopt the advice offered. Appellant relied upon these representations of intent and voluntarily self-assessed the tax. However, appellant must have had the intent at that time of seeking a refund of the tax because, regardless of the Attorney General's opinion, the Board of Equalization had recently rendered a decision favorable to appellant's position. Considering these circumstances, the question is whether the payment was due to the "error or mistake" of the taxpayer.

A reading of the Bank and Corporation Franchise Tax Act as it was constituted in 1942 convinces us that appellant is entitled to interest on the overpayment. That act provided a choice of two avenues to a taxpayer in the position of the appellant who felt it did not owe a tax which the taxing authorities were avowedly intending to collect. Section 25, Stats.1939, ch. 1050, p. 2962, authorized the taxpayer to protest the payment of the tax, obtain a hearing before the Franchise Tax Commissioner, and subsequently to appeal to the Board of Equalization. However, if the taxpayer there lost, section 24(c) would impose upon it interest on the deficiency at the rate of six per cent from the date when the tax was originally payable to the date when the deficiency was finally paid. Stats.1939, ch. 1050, p. 2962. On the other hand, the taxpayer could proceed in the manner followed here; i. e., pay the tax and then claim a refund. In such event, the taxpayer would be entitled to the interest on the overpayment at the identical rate of six per cent. Stats.1939, ch. 1050, § 27(c), p. 2966. Quite obviously the taxpayer is not under a compulsion to choose either of the avenues provided. If it chooses to protest a tax the government attempts to collect, naturally the taxpayer should re-imburse the government for its loss of use of the funds during the period of protest. On the other hand, if the government demands payment of funds which the taxpayer does not feel are due, the government should recompense the taxpayer for use of his funds for a period of time.

[9,10] The provision in section 27(c) denying interest on overpayments due to error or mistake on the part of the taxpayer was designed to prevent abuse of the interest allowance. If six per cent happens to be a very good rate of return on an investment, naturally taxpayers may not be allowed to overpay at will and then collect profitable refunds. Thus, if appellant's attorneys had read court or board decisions, construed the statutes, and mistakenly determined themselves liable for franchise tax, they could expect no compensation for their error. But where, as here, the taxing authority announces it is planning to require payment of certain sums, a taxpayer choosing to pay and seek refund has not made such a voluntary, erroneous payment as to deprive him of interest on the funds subsequently refunded.

The judgment is affirmed (Count I) insofar as it denied recovery of the franchise tax appellant paid on its trust business for 1943; it is reversed insofar as appellant is denied interest upon the refund of the 1942 franchise tax, and the trial court is directed to enter judgment in favor of plaintiff on Count II in accordance with the views herein. Each party is to bear its own costs of appeal.

Dr. Sydney M. KOLODNY et al., Defendants and Respondents.

Civ. 21680.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California.

Rehearing Denied Nov. 8, 1956.

Hearing Denied Dec. 12, 1956.

Action by husband and his wife for damages caused by alleged negligence of obstetrician and hospital in causing a mesh of cotton gauze, used and applied in the body of wife during a child delivery, to become lodged and embedded in wife's abdomen. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Wilbur C. Curtis, J., entered judgment for defendants and plaintiffs appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Doran, J., held that evidence, including testimony as to a severe hemorrhage causing the loss of three or four pints of blood endangering wife's life, presented a question for the jury as to whether defendants used due care in treating wife.

Judgment affirmed.

Bauder, Gilbert, Thompson & Kelly, Los Angeles, for respondent, Dr. Sydney M. Kolodny.

Reed, Kirtland & Packard, Henry E. Kappler, Los Angeles, for respondent, Queen of Angels Hospital.

DORAN, Justice.

The gist of the action is that the defendants negligently caused a mesh of cotton gauze, used and applied in the body of the plaintiff Bernice Landsberg during a child delivery, to become lodged and embedded in said plaintiff's abdomen. The gauze remained in the plaintiff's abdomen until removed by surgery some two years later. The term plaintiff, as hereinafter used, refers to the plaintiff Bernice Landsberg. Dr. Kolodny was the obstetrician employed by the plaintiff; the delivery took place at Queen of Angels Hospital where Dr. Kolodny was assisted by a resident physician, intern and nurses who were employees of the defendant hospital.

trial before a jury, a 9 to 3 verdict was returned for the defendants. It is appellants' contention that the evidence is insufficient to support the verdict; that defendants' failure to explain the cause of the accident, "or to produce evidence of any measures to prevent such * * * occurrence", and particularly "defendants' gross negligence in not counting the sponges used during the delivery" leads to the conclusion that "plaintiffs prima facie case * * * has in no way been met or overcome by the defendants". Appellants make the further claim that "The verdict for the defendants is explainable only by the fact that the erroneous instructions by the trial court misled the jury".

On the morning of June 9, 1950, plaintiff entered Queen of Angels Hospital, and about 11:50 a. m. the baby's heart beats suddenly dropped from 120-160 to a low of 80 beats per minute, a condition requiring immediate delivery. Plaintiff was given a spinal anesthesia; the baby's head was found to be in an abnormal position requiring the use of forceps to rotate the head, resulting in certain lacerations. In order to facilitate delivery, Dr. Kolodny performed an episiotomy or incision to widen the vaginal canal, and to stop bleeding inserted a number of cotton gauze sponges, about four by four inches square. There was testimony that a custom or usage existed in Class A hospitals not to count sponges used in child delivery, and that if not removed, such sponges would ordinarily be expelled through the natural opening. Such usage differs from that existing in surgery of other parts of the body where sponges would not be naturally expelled.

When the baby was born two loops of cord wrapped around its neck impeded breathing which was restored by artificial respiration. Shortly after delivery, plaintiff suddenly had a severe hemorrhage losing three or four pints of blood, indicating a failure of the uterus to contract normally; plaintiff's pulse rose, blood pressure dropped, and it was feared that the plaintiff would die on the table. After medicinal and other procedures failed to stop the bleeding, Dr. Kolodny packed the uterus with a five-yard roll of gauze and then packed the vagina with a three-yard length of gauze tied to the first roll, and the hemorrhage was then arrested.

More than two years later, an exploratory operation by another surgeon disclosed a large abscess in the abdominal cavity. Within the abscess was lodged "an irregular mass of disintegrating gauze mesh", measuring approximately 7 by 6 by about 3½ inches. A pathologist testified that it could not be determined whether the gauze found came from sponges or from a piece of packing. Plaintiff remained in the hospital from September 3, 1952 when the gauze was removed, until November 26, 1952.

On October 22, 1952 a second operation was performed during which plaintiff's spleen and three-quarters of the stomach were removed. Many blood transfusions were required, and a third remedial operation was performed on November 10, 1952. As stated in appellants' brief, "There was considerable difference of opinion * * * as to whether the second operation * * * and the third remedial operation were necessitated by the abscess and infection, resulting from the lodging of the gauze mesh in plaintiff's abdomen."

[1] In the appellants' brief it is said: "we are mindful of the appellate principle that (1) an appellant who relies upon insufficiency of the evidence must point out the relevant evidence and the manner in which it is insufficient to support the judgment and (2) that all the evidence and its inferences must be viewed most favorably for the respondents". Viewing the record in the light of this principle it cannot be said that the verdict and judgment are without the support of substantial evidence.

[2] Appellants' argument that under the res ipsa loquitur rule the jury was obliged to find for the plaintiffs in this case, is untenable. As stated in respondents' brief, "while the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur may have applied against the defendant in the first place, there was sufficient evidence of due care, both explaining the occurrence and rebutting the inference of negligence". In the final analysis, the matter was one for the jury to determine, and since the verdict is supported by substantial evidence, there should be no appellate interference therewith.

In this connection it is to be noted that there were several theories as to how the gauze reached plaintiff's abdominal cavity. The plaintiff's experts suggested that in the packing process the fundus of the uterus was accidentally punctured and a portion of gauze was shoved through the opening. Another possible explanation was that one or more gauze sponges, used to wipe away bleeding caused by lacerations or incisions, passed through cervical or vaginal lacerations into the cul-de-sac close by and wandered into the abdomen. And, under either theory, or disregarding both explanations, the jury may have reached the conclusion that the occurrence was in the category of an unavoidable accident.

The emergency presented by plaintiff's condition, the excessive hemorrhage following delivery, engendering the fear that plaintiff was entering irreversible shock and would die on the table, has been previously noted, and was doubtless considered by the jury. As Dr. Holcombe, plaintiff's expert, testified, when a patient's life is in danger, "your No. 1 problem is to save that life * * * regardless of any other question". In such an emergency situation, the occurrence in question could be found entirely accidental. Another witness, Dr. Tolefson, who testified that it was not good practice to leave packing in the uterine cavity, distinguished between "something that may be intentionally done and something that may be unintentionally done under the stress of circumstances".

The record discloses evidence from which the jury could find that the defendants had satisfactorily explained the situation and had been sufficiently exculpated in respect to the charge of negligence.

As said in the Kolodny brief, "A short reflection will show * * * that at times the only way in which a defendant can refute the inference of negligence is to show precisely what steps he used and then leave it to the jury to decide whether ordinary care was exercised". This was the procedure followed in the instant case.

The appellants complaint that certain instructions were erroneous and prejudicial is without substantial merit. The jury was told that in respect to the defendants' conduct, "you are not permitted to set up arbitrarily a standard of your own", and that "the only way you may properly learn that standard is through * * * expert witnesses". It appears that the plaintiffs, as well as the defendant Kolodny, had requested instructions that the doctor was obliged to use "the care ordinarily exercised in like cases by reputable members of his profession practicing in the same locality", etc. As stated by the respondent, "How could this standard of care and skill * * * be known to the jury unless it was testified to by other doctors who were the only ones in a position to know?"

[3] The jury was likewise instructed that if "a condition arose calling for the exercise of defendant's best judgment in weighing the probable consequences of different methods which might be pursued", and if Dr. Kolodny "exercised his best judgment and used the skill and care ordinarily possessed and used by doctors in the same specialty practicing in the same locality, then you are instructed that defendant Kolodny would not be liable although you should believe from the evidence that the procedure followed by him was not the best procedure". In view of the evidence that an emergency arose requiring a quick "exercise of defendant's best judgment", the instruction was pertinent, and no prejudice resulted from the giving thereof.

[4, 5] The same may be said in reference to the court's instruction on the theory of unavoidable or inevitable accident, concluding with the statement that "Even if such accident could have been avoided by the exercise of exceptional foresight, skill or caution, still no one may be held liable for injuries resulting from it". Each party was entitled to have the jury instructed on each and every theory of the case which in this case included that of unavoidable accident.

The judgment is affirmed.

The PEOPLE of the State of California,
Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

William Charles BALLARD, Defendant and Appellant.

Cr. 3227.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 1, California.

Oct. 15, 1956.

Defendant was convicted for sale of narcotics in violation of Health and Safety Code. The Superior Court, Santa Clara County, William F. James, J., entered judgment and order denying defendant's motion for new trial and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Peters, P. J., held that information which charged sale of a "narcotic, to wit, Amidone, also known as Methadone Hydrochloride," clearly charged defendant with selling a narcotic in violation of the statute, and that there was no error in admission of evidence during trial or in giving or refusing to give instructions.

Judgment and order appealed from affirmed.

1. Indictment and Information ☞71

An information must be sufficiently definite to enable accused to know with what he is charged.

2. Poisons ☞9

Information which charged defendant with sale of a "narcotic, to wit, Amidone, also known as Methadone Hydrochloride," charged defendant with selling a narcotic in violation of Health and Safety Code. West's Ann.Health and Safety Code, §§ 11001, 11500.

3. Poisons ☞9

In prosecution for sale of narcotics in violation of Health and Safety Code, evidence was sufficient to show that tablets sold by defendant were "amidone" as defined in statute prohibiting sale thereof. West's Ann.Health and Safety Code, §§ 11001, 11500.

4. Criminal Law ☞369(1)

Generally, evidence of other crimes or of a general propensity towards crime is not admissible in a criminal prosecution.

5. Criminal Law ☞370, 372(1)

In prosecution for sale of narcotics in violation of Health and Safety Code, evidence of two prior sale transactions by defendant was admissible to show defendant's knowledge of the narcotic nature of the substance sold and to show a common plan, scheme or design. West's Ann.Health & Safety Code, §§ 11001, 11500.

6. Criminal Law ☞783(1), 1172(2)

In prosecution for sale of narcotics in violation of Health and Safety Code, instruction to jury that evidence of prior narcotics sale transactions by defendant was introduced solely for purpose of showing general customary habit was poorly worded but was not prejudicial error, where prosecutrix told jury that evidence of prior crimes was offered to show knowledge on part of defendant and to show a general plan or scheme and trial court ruled that evidence was admissible for those purposes. West's Ann.Health and Safety Code, §§ 11001, 11500.

7. Criminal Law ☞37

Entrapment is an affirmative defense.

8. Criminal Law ☞814(8)

In prosecution for sale of narcotics in violation of Health and Safety Code, failure of trial court to give instructions on entrapment was not error, where defendant failed to offer testimony on the issue, and prosecution's evidence merely showed that police furnished a willing customer for defendant. West's Ann.Health & Safety Code, §§ 11001, 11500.

9. Criminal Law ☞37

Merely furnishing an opportunity to commit the crime is not evidence of entrapment.

10. Criminal Law ☞863(2), 1174(1)

In prosecution for sale of narcotics in violation of Health and Safety Code, comments by trial judge to jury, which sought further instruction, that $400 of marked money given by police officer to defendant in purchase of narcotics had nothing to do with case and that it did not make any difference what became of the money, were not accurate and in some respects were misleading but were not prejudicial error, where defendant made no objection to comments and failed to ask for further clarification and court fully instructed jury on basic issues involved. West's Ann.Health & Safety Code, §§ 11001, 11500.

Benjamin M. Davis, San Francisco, Lionel Browne, San Francisco, of counsel, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Clarence A. Linn, Asst. Atty. Gen., John S. McInerney, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

PETERS, Presiding Justice.

Defendant was charged by information with two violations of section 11500 of the Health and Safety Code in that on two separate dates he unlawfully sold a named narcotic. He was found guilty by a jury of both counts of the information. He appeals from the judgment of conviction and from the order denying his motion for a new trial.

The information, in separate counts, charges that on August 3, 1955, and again on August 9, 1955, the defendant did "willfully, unlawfully and feloniously sell a narcotic, to wit, Amidone, also known as Methadone Hydrochloride." Amidone is defined in section 11001 of the Health and Safety Code as follows:

"'Narcotics,' as used in this division, means any of the following: * * *

"(j) Amidone. Amidone shall mean any substance identified chemically as 4,4-diphenyl-6-dimethylamino-heptanone-3, or and salt thereof by whatever trade name designated."

In the opening statement of the prosecuting attorney reference was made to the fact that the main prosecution witness, Mantler by name, a narcotic enforcement officer, first met defendant through a police informant; that this informer on two occasions in July of 1955, took Mantler to a certain parking lot, went over to defendant's car, returned to Mantler's car and got some money, and returned to Mantler's car with some white tablets, later analyzed as amidone. The prosecuting attorney referred to these two prior occurrences at some length, and then concluded the statement by declaring that the narcotic involved in all four transactions was amidone. Counsel for defendant moved for a mistrial, which was denied.

At the trial the prosecution produced three witnesses, while the defense produced none. A chemist in the Bureau of Narcotics stated that he had analyzed the tablets secured in all four transactions, and that all of them were amidone, a narcotic. The tablets from all four sales were introduced into evidence, the tablets which had been secured by the informant being admitted over defendant's objections.

Narcotics Officer Mantler testified that on July 26 and 30, 1955, he and the informant drove to the parking lot, that the informant left his car with marked money, went to defendant's car, and returned in a few moments with amidone tablets. Defendant objected to this testimony. Mantler also testified that on August 3rd the informant introduced Mantler and the defendant and Mantler purchased directly from defendant 25 white tablets, afterwards determined to be amidone, for $50. Thereafter, Mantler had several telephone conversations with defendant in an attempt to arrange another sale. On August 9th this second sale was consummated. Mantler, by prearrangement, met defendant in the parking lot, gave defendant $400 in marked money, and received from defendant 200 white tablets, afterwards ascertained to be amidone.

Defendant was arrested later that night, and thereafter Mantler had three conversations with him. In the first two the defendant either denied ever having met Mantler before, refused to talk, or requested that he be permitted to see an attorney. In the third conversation defendant told Mantler that after the $400 transaction he thought he was being followed and when he was unable to elude his followers, he burned the $400. He also told Mantler that he sold him the tablets because he thought Mantler was sick and an addict and needed help.

The third witness produced by the prosecution was another narcotic official. He testified to observing Mantler talking with defendant on August 9th. He and another officer tried to follow defendant after that meeting, but they lost him. They found defendant later that night and arrested him. They searched defendant, his car and his residence, but found no narcotics and no trace of the $400.

[1,2] The first contention of appellant is that the information does not allege a public offense. This contention requires but scant consideration. Appellant misconstrues the information by contending that he was charged with having sold, on two occasions, "Amidone, a narcotic, to wit: Methadone Hydrochloride." The information charges the sale of "a narcotic, to wit, amidone, also known as Methadone Hydrochloride." Thus, the information did not define amidone as methadone hydrochloride, but simply averred that amidone was also known as methadone hydrochloride. While an information must be sufficiently definite to enable the accused to know with what he is charged, People v. Horiuchi, 114 Cal.App. 415, 300 P. 457, the information here meets all of the requirements. Uncertainty is created only by misquoting the actual charge. Appellant was clearly charged with selling a narcotic, amidone. The later part of the charge "also known as Methadone Hydrochloride" can, if necessary, be disregarded as surplusage. People v. Beesly, 119 Cal.App. 82, 6 P.2d 114, 970; People v. Nordeste, 125 Cal.App.2d 462, 270 P.2d 530.

[3] Appellant next attacks the sufficiency of the evidence. He admits that Mantler's testimony is sufficient to show that appellant sold the officer certain white tablets, and that the chemist testified that these tablets were amidone, but contends that no one testified that the tablets were amidone as defined in the statute above quoted. The point is without merit. The chemist was called as an expert. He testified that the tablets were amidone, a narcotic, and that dolophine and methadone hydrochloride were other names for the same substance. Thus, the evidence was sufficient on this point.

[4, 5] It is next urged that it was error to admit into evidence, over appellant's objections, evidence of the two prior sale transactions. The point is without merit. We are well aware of the rule that, generally, evidence of other crimes, or of general propensity towards crime, is not admissible. But it is equally true that evidence of other crimes may be admissible to show appellant's knowledge of the narcotic nature of the substance sold, or to show a common plan, scheme or design. People v. Peete, 28 Cal.2d 306, 169 P.2d 924; People v. Sykes, 44 Cal.2d 166, 280 P.2d 769; People v. MacArthur, 126 Cal.App.2d 232, 271 P.2d 914. This was the theory advanced by the prosecutrix at the time of the trial, and the theory upon which the evidence was admitted. The evidence was properly admissible on either of these theories.

of Aug. and prior to the ninth of Aug. You are concerned in this case only with these two charges, that is, the charge of selling amidone on the third of Aug. and the charge of selling amidone on the ninth of Aug. and you need not go any further than that. The evidence of the other two transactions were [sic] introduced solely for the purpose of showing general customary habit of the defendant if it showed that, and just what weight it is to be given is up to you, but it is not a charge against the defendant and does not constitute one of the counts in this complaint."

This instruction contains some unfortunate language. The statement that the evidence was introduced "solely for the purpose of showing general customary habit" is ill-chosen because it could mean that such evidence was offered to show that defendant had a "general customary habit" to be a criminal—i. e., had a criminal disposition. If the instruction meant that, it clearly was erroneous. See cases collected 18 Cal.Jur.2d p. 583, sec. 136. But the language used in the instruction, while unfortunate, reasonably could not have misled the jury. That is so, because, when the evidence of the other crimes was offered and appellant had objected, the prosecutrix told the jury that the evidence was offered to show knowledge on the part of appellant and to show a general plan or scheme. The trial court correctly ruled that it was admissible for those purposes. Thus, the jury must have connected these limitations with the general language of the instruction. It must be remembered that in a case involving section 11500 of the Health and Safety Code the prosecution must show that the defendant knew the narcotic character of the substance sold by him. People v. Gory, 28 Cal.2d 450, 170 P.2d 433; People v. Winston, 46 Cal.2d 151, 293 P.2d 40. The evidence of other sales tended to show that the two offenses charged were not isolated transactions, and that appellant had made prior sales of the same narcotic. Thus, this was some evidence that appellant had the "general customary habit" of selling amidone, and this was some evidence that appellant had knowledge of the character of the substance he was selling. So interpreted, the instruction was not erroneous.

Moreover, even if the instruction were erroneous it could not have been prejudicial, under the facts. The evidence as to the two sales charged was direct, positive and corroborated. Defendant did not see fit to take the stand to contradict this evidence.

[7-9] Appellant makes objections to several other instructions that need not be separately considered, because the objections are clearly without merit. He also objects to the failure of the trial court to give instructions on entrapment. Entrapment is, of course, an affirmative defense. Defendant offered no testimony on the issue at all, but claims that the prosecution's evidence shows entrapment. All that the prosecution showed was that the informer was working under the direction of the police. The evidence relied on simply showed that the police furnished a willing customer. Merely furnishing an opportunity to commit the crime in this fashion is not evidence of entrapment. People v. Lindsey, 91 Cal.App.2d 914, 205 P.2d 1114; People v. Alamillo, 113 Cal.App.2d 617, 248 P.2d 421.

[10] Error is also claimed by reason of certain comments made by the trial judge. The record shows that after the jury had commenced deliberating, it returned to the courtroom to ask some questions. The jury wanted to know what the court's instruction relating to the failure to introduce the $400, or any part of it, into evidence had been. Actually, no instruction on this matter had been given, and none was offered by either side. The foreman of the jury told the court that the jurors wanted to know "if the money is part of the evidence. We want to know your instructions on the money part of it." And he also stated: "The money part, whether you instructed us that it would have a bearing on the case or not, and also we want to hear Mr. Davis' last arguments." Another juror asked: "Didn't you instruct us to disregard the absence of the money as evidence?" Then the following occurred:

"The Court: It hasn't anything to do with the case at all.

"The Foreman: That is what we wanted to know.

"The Court: It has nothing to do with the case. All you have to do is decide these two questions: Was this narcotic sold by the defendant on the third of Aug. or not? Was it sold on the ninth of Aug. or not? That is all you have to decide. What became of the money is not important. It does not make any difference what became of it. You are not suing for the money.

"Any other questions?"

After consultation with the other jurors the foreman stated that no one now wanted to hear defense counsel's last argument as previously requested.

These comments by the court are not accurate and in some respects are misleading. While it is certainly true that it was not necessary for the prosecution to show that the appellant had the money or any part of it in his possession when arrested, and it was not necessary for the prosecution to account for the money, nevertheless it is not strictly true that the fact appellant did not have the money when arrested "hasn't anything to do with the case at all." The presence or the absence of the money several hours after the charged sales was, of course, relevant evidence, but it was not essential evidence. The failure to produce the money was certainly relevant on the issue of the credibility of the officer, that is, as to whether any sales at all had taken place. The court's comments, above quoted, made no reference to this phase of the case, and were therefore not accurate.

But although the comments are subject to criticism, we do not think that they were prejudicial. Appellant made no objection to the comments, nor did he ask for clarification. The court had fully instructed the jury on the basic issues involved. The court gave full and complete instructions on the burden of proof and the presumption of innocence. The basic issue was whether the two charged sales had been made. This issue was definitely left to the jury. Thus, when the challenged comments are read in the light of the instructions and evidence as a whole, we do not think that the remarks were prejudicial.

The other points raised do not require discussion.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

145 Cal.App.2d 180

The PEOPLE of the State of California,
Plaintiff and Respondent,
v.

Kenneth E. HOPPER, Defendant and Appellant.
Cr. 2671.

District Court of Appeal, Third District,
California.
Oct. 18, 1956.

Prosecution for first degree murder. The Superior Court, Stanislaus County, H. L. Chamberlain, J., entered judgment of conviction and defendant appealed therefrom and from order denying new trial. The District Court of Appeal, Van Dyke, P. J., held that, because of a failure to show that there was premeditation or that killing of victim who lived with defendant as his wife was perpetrated by means of torture, the evidence was insufficient to sustain conviction for first degree murder, but was sufficient to sustain conviction for second degree murder.

Order affirmed; judgment affirmed as modified and cause remanded with directions.

1. Homicide \S 253(1), 254

Evidence, because of a failure to show either premeditation or that killing of victim, who lived with defendant as his wife, was perpetrated by means of torture, was insufficient to sustain conviction for first degree murder, but was sufficient to sustain conviction for second degree murder.

2. Homicide \S 22(1)

In determining whether homicide was perpetrated by means of torture, thereby making it first degree murder, solution rests upon whether assailant's attempt was to cause cruel suffering on part of the object of the attack, either for the purpose of revenge, extortion, persuasion, or to satisfy some other untoward propensity.

3. Homicide \S 152

Where a killing is proved to have been committed by defendant but nothing further is shown, the presumption of law is that it was a malicious act and an act of murder, but in such a case the verdict should be murder in the second degree, and not murder in the first degree.

4. Criminal Law \S 476

In prosecution for murder of victim whom the defendant claimed met death by reason of a fall from a moving automobile, it was not erroneous to permit the coroner, a licensed mortician, and the autopsy surgeon, to testify that the abrasions found on victim's body did not appear to be caused by a fall from a moving vehicle.

5. Criminal Law \S 683(1)

In prosecution for homicide, wherein question of defendant's violent temper was raised, and wherein defendant testified that he had gone to home of witness some four years before killing, and slapped such witness in face, it was not error to permit witness to testify on rebuttal that on that date she was severely beaten by an assailant whom she admitted she could not identify. West's Ann.Pen.Code, \S 1323.

6. Witnesses \S 277(4)

If a defendant takes the stand and makes a general denial of the crime with which he is charged, the permissible scope of cross-examination is very wide, and he cannot by testifying to a state of things contrary to and inconsistent with the evidence of the prosecution, thus indirectly denying testimony against him, but, without testifying expressly with relation to the same facts, limit cross-examination to the precise facts to which he testified. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 1323.

7. Witnesses ⚡277(4)

A defendant may be cross-examined with respect to the facts or denials which are necessarily implied from the testimony in chief as well as with respect to facts which he expressly states. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 1323.

8. Criminal Law ⚡783(1)

In prosecution for first degree murder of victim who apparently died as a result of a severe beating, court's instruction respecting function of evidence introduced for purpose of showing that on prior occasions defendant beat and struck such victim and on one occasion beat another, was not unfair or erroneous.

9. Homicide ⚡159

In prosecution for murder of victim who apparently died as a result of a severe beating, trial court did not commit error in admitting testimony as to bruises that had been seen on person of victim at various times throughout five year period preceding her death, where testimony of defendant's proximity or of his admissions was sufficient to justify inference that marks and bruises had been inflicted by him.

Robert C. Bienvenu, Leo J. Biegenzahn, Modesto, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., by G. A. Strader, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

VAN DYKE, Presiding Justice.

This is an appeal from a judgment entered upon a jury's verdict which found the appellant guilty of first degree murder with a recommendation of life imprisonment. Defendant also appeals from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

Appellant and the victim of the homicide had been living together as husband and wife for approximately ten years. She was the mother of his four children.

Appellant contends that the evidence is insufficient to support a verdict of first degree murder. With this contention we agree, and this conclusion requires a somewhat detailed statement of the evidence. On July 5, 1955, at about 11:45 A.M., the Sheriff's Office of Stanislaus County received a call to investigate a death at the home of the appellant. A deputy sheriff proceeded to the home where he observed the body of the decedent, Milladean Hopper, lying on a bed. The cause of death was ascertained to be hemorrhage due to laceration of the kidney. The autopsy physician described the injuries to the body of decedent as follows: There were multiple injuries, bruises and abrasions by fingernails. Although there were no external wounds on the head, there was considerable hemorrhage beneath the scalp. This injury could have been caused by a blow from a fist but was not particularly characteristic of such a blow. It was more suggestive of a wound occasioned by falling on the floor or hitting a large, flat surface. It could have been caused by a kick. It was possible that the force which caused the fracture of the three ribs in the back was a crushing force applied to the front part of the body rather than a blow to the back part, and this would be as reasonable an inference as the inference that the fractures were caused by a blow. Without the injury to the kidney, death would not have resulted, with the possible exception of the head injury. The kidney is more vulnerable to a posterior than to an anterior blow. The fractures of the three ribs and the injury to the kidney were just as consistent with the application of a crushing force as the application of a blow of any sort with any type of a blunt instrument. There was no break in the skull. Of the multiple small bruises around the knee, more than a dozen in total, a number of blows from a blunt object would have been necessary to cause them. The bruises on the back about the waistline would not necessarily have been caused by the same blunt instrument that caused the bruises on the knee, and in the opinion of the autopsy surgeon the same instrument was not responsible. It was possible that all of the bruises had been caused by a fall from a car. With regard to the bruises on the lower limbs, they could have been caused by blows from a blunt object, they could have been caused by several kicks, they could have been caused by several falls to a floor, and they could have been caused by a fall from a car onto a road surface on which there was loose rock. The autopsy surgeon gave her opinion that the most likely possibility was that the bruises were caused by kicks. Taking the entire body, the overall pattern of the injuries was, in the opinion of the autopsy surgeon, not consistent with a fall on a roadway, which opinion was influenced somewhat by the absence of what the autopsy surgeon called road burns. On redirect examination the autopsy surgeon gave as her opinion that the probable cause of the breaking of the ribs was a direct blow which could have been from a boot, and that the rupture of the kidney was caused by a blow on the back of the body rather than by a crushing force applied to the front. The condition of the deceased's body, considering all the injuries thereto, was such that, in the opinion of the autopsy surgeon, the injuries were the result of a beating. The coroner testified that he had examined the body of decedent and that there were bruises all over the body which were not consistent with the type of bruises which would, in his opinion, have been received by a person falling from an automobile. Appellant and deceased had attended a Fourth of July dance, which they left about 2:30 A.M., in company with John McDonald. They entered appellant's car and drove to a restaurant, where the two men had something to eat, but decedent, stating she wanted to sleep, remained in the car. About 4:30 A.M. they drove to the Hopper residence, whereupon McDonald stated he wanted to go home; and the three then drove to Oakdale, the two men in the front seat, Mrs. Hopper in the back. McDonald testified that during this ride the two seemed to getting along well together and that, in fact, at one point in the conversation appellant had stated that decedent was the "best woman he ever had", and decedent had responded that appellant was "not so bad" himself. It was after McDonald got home and appellant had driven away that decedent received the injuries from which she died. While appellant and decedent were at the dance appellant danced with another woman and asked her if she was still going with a certain individual. When she replied she was, he told her that if she would get rid of that man he would get rid of decedent. There was nothing to explain what might have been meant by the term "get rid of". During the same evening decedent shouted at appellant while he was on the dance floor, stating that she was tired and wanted to go home. Appellant replied, "Damn it, you're drunk". She stamped her feet and said, "I still want to go home", whereupon he took her by the arm and with a jerking motion took her to the center of the floor where the two engaged in conversation with another man. On July 2, 1955, appellant and decedent went into a cafe and they were quarreling as they entered. Decedent was overheard to say, "If you ever do that again I am going to call the cops". The appellant replied, "God-damn you, if you do it will be the last God-damned thing you ever do. I'll kick the out of you". Thereupon decedent began to cry. Several witnesses testified that on several other occasions appellant struck decedent and made threats to kill her; however, all this occurred long prior to the homicide. For instance, one witness testified to such an incident in February of 1954. On this occasion appellant referred to decedent as "a two-bit whore", grabbed her by the hair, threw her to the ground, stepped back and kicked her a severe blow, causing her to scream, whereupon two men came out of a dance hall and stopped the fight. Later on, the same night, when the Hoppers had returned home, this same witness observed appellant slap decedent and push her across the bed. The witness thereupon left the room and went to another part of the house. She later saw decedent with red marks on her face. On this occasion the appellant tried to persuade this witness to have intercourse with him but was refused. Another incident occurred in the early part of 1952. A witness had observed appellant chasing decedent around the house. She was yelling and screaming and he had a garden tool of some kind in his hand. (He explained this by saying that it was in jest.) Three days later the same witness observed that the decedent had a black eye. Another incident occurred in October of 1953 when a witness heard a commotion and observed appellant striking somebody whom she could not identify. However, she heard appellant say, "God damn you, I'll kill you, you bitch, you God damned bitch, I'll kill you". Three or four days later this witness saw decedent and observed that her nose was swollen and her eyes were black. A week before the death of Mrs. Hopper and while the two were walking toward the Eatmor Cafe in Modesto, one witness observed Mr. Hopper as he walked beside decedent kick her "in the seat" and a few steps later strike her on her left shoulder. In January of 1954 the pair, accompanied by another, went to Stockton. During the trip the two argued continuously, and the companion heard appellant tell decedent to "Shut up or I'll get you". The party returned to Modesto, arriving about 3 P.M. where Mrs. Hopper was scheduled to play the piano. Later that evening the witness testified he saw her bleeding at the mouth, with blood over her face and with disheveled hair. He asked a few minutes later of the appellant where decedent was, and appellant replied, "If I ever catch her I will kill her". On this same occasion another witness saw her walking down the highway in a condition which the witness described as "all bloody" with blood over her face and the front of her dress. He tried to talk to her, but she would not talk. He stated her face was "pretty well beat up". About that time appellant drove up in his car, and decedent got into the car with him, and the two of them drove away. Another witness, who had an orchestra which played for dances in the neighborhood, within a few days of the homicide went to the home of appellant for the purpose of engaging decedent in his band. She had two black eyes and during the conversation appellant stated, "she run off down the railroad tracks without her shoes on and when I found her I beat the hell out of her". While these incidents were testified to, covering, as is seen, a range of several years, it is also without dispute that the two lived together steadily and maintained a family residence. It is also without dispute that appellant, for several years at least and because he claimed to have such an injury to his back that he was unable to work, was without employment and without income, and that he, decedent and the four children were supported by the earnings of the decedent, who was a pianist and who was fairly steadily engaged in playing for various dance bands around the region. There was an utter absence of any showing of motive which would impel the appellant to kill his wife. He took an active part in assisting his wife in getting and in keeping her engagements as a pianist, generally going with her wherever she played and leaving the children in the charge of others. One witness testified that he tried to help her in her work and teach her "showmanship".

[1,2] It is apparent that if the verdict of first degree murder is to be supported, it must be because the killing was one perpetrated by means of torture, or that it was a wilful, deliberate and premeditated killing. In People v. Tubby, 34 Cal.2d 72, 76-77, 207 P.2d 51, 54, it was said:

"Torture has been defined as the 'Act or process of inflicting severe pain, esp. as a punishment in order to extort confession, or in revenge.' Webster's New Int. Dict. 2d Ed. The dictionary definition was appropriately enlarged upon by this court in its original opinion in People v. Heslen, 163 P.2d 21, 27, in the following words: 'Implicit in that definition is the requirement of an intent to cause pain and suffering in addition to death. That is, the killer is not satisfied with killing alone. He wishes to punish, execute vengeance on, or extort something from his victim, and in the course, or as the result of inflicting pain and suffering, the victim dies. That intent may be manifested by the nature of the acts and circumstances surrounding the homicide.' * * * The Colorado Supreme Court has declared in similar terms that as an essential of torture physical pain must be inflicted as a means of persuasion, punishment or in revenge. Townsend v. People, 107 Colo. 258, 265, 111 P.2d 236. In holding that a murder by strangulation was not necessarily murder by torture this court has stated: 'The killer who, heedless of the suffering of his victim, in hot anger and with the specific intent of killing, inflicts the severe pain which may be presumed to attend strangulation, has not in contemplation of the law the same intent as one who strangles with the intention that the victim shall suffer.' People v. Bender, 27 Cal.2d 164, 177, 163 P.2d 8, 16.

"In determining whether the murder was perpetrated by means of torture the solution must rest upon whether the assailant's intent was to cause cruel suffering on the part of the object of the attack, either for the purpose of revenge, extortion, persuasion, or to satisfy some other untoward propensity. The test cannot be whether the victim merely suffered severe pain since presumably in most murders severe pain precedes death."

In People v. Tubby, the defendant was seen to strike an aged man who was in the front yard of his residence. This act was observed by neighbors who shouted at him to cease. The defendant thereupon seized his victim by the hair of the head and dragged him into his residence and there proceeded to pummel, strike, and drag the victim about until, when the officers arrived, they found the victim seated in a chair in which he had at last been placed by the defendant, suffering from injuries from which he later died. As stated in the dissenting opinion in amplification of the statement of facts in the opinion by the majority, 34 Cal.2d at page 81, 207 P.2d at page 57:

"The evidence clearly indicates that defendant chased his victim about the house inflicting terrific punishment upon him. There was blood on the porch, and on the walls and floor of practically every room in the house. The stove and stovepipe had been knocked out of place and some of the furniture had been broken during the affray. When the officers arrived, they found deceased had been beaten 'practically beyond recognition.' Physical examination showed that deceased's nose 'was crushed almost flat'; that his eyes were swollen shut; that there was a fracture of the lower jaw and a complete fracture of the upper jaw; that there were several fractures of the skull; that the brain had been 'split completely open' and 'was literally pulverized over the back portion of the two frontal sinuses.' Other injuries were described by the doctors, including abdominal injuries, but the foregoing recital sufficiently shows the nature and severity of the resulting damage."

The majority declared that the record was devoid of any explanation of why the defendant might have desired his stepfather to suffer. It was noted that the only testimony concerning the relationship between the two men was that the deceased and the defendant were on amicable terms prior to the attack, and concluded:

"* * * The record dispels any hypothesis that the primary purpose of the attack was to cause the deceased to suffer. When death results under the circumstances here shown the homicide cannot be said to constitute murder by torture in the popular, dictionary, or legal sense. The evidence is therefore insufficient as a matter of law to support the verdict on the theory that the homicide was murder by torture."

In the case on appeal the evidence was without conflict that the relations between the appellant and the decedent, during the time when McDonald was in their company, were amicable even to the point of being affectionate. It is true there was testimony of physical assault several days prior thereto. There were also incidents testified to at widely separated intervals, going back as we have noted for several years, wherein physical assaults of varying severity were committed against decedent by appellant. But these things furnish no light as to what occurred when, after leaving McDonald at his home, the pair drove toward their own residence. We do not know whether there was provocation, whether there was a prolonged assault, whether or not the attack made was sudden, violent and furious, with, as we must assume, the intent to kill. We do not know, and we cannot infer, that over and above the intent to kill was the intent to torture. The record on this issue leaves us wholly to speculation and is insufficient to sustain the first degree verdict upon the theory that the killing was perpetrated by means of torture, "in the popular, dictionary, or legal sense".

[3] What we have heretofore said has a direct bearing, also, on the issue of premeditation. The following appears in People v. Bender, 27 Cal.2d 164, 179, 163 P.2d 8, 17, quoting from and citing People v. Howard, 211 Cal. 322, 329, 295 P. 333, 71 A.L.R. 1385:

"* * * 'When the killing is proved to have been committed by the defendant, and nothing further is shown, the presumption of law is that it was malicious and an act of murder; but in such a case the verdict should be murder of the second degree, and not murder of the first degree.'"

In the Bender case, as in this case, there was substantially no evidence casting light on either motive or intent at the time of the killing; and there, as in this case, there was evidence of marital discord, although the picture in the Bender case of the marital association was darker and portrayed a much more consistent lack of harmony than is shown by the evidence in this case. There, also, the jury was required to reject the testimony of the defendant that denied the killing. Said the Supreme Court in 27 Cal.2d on page 179, 163 P.2d on page 17:

"On the other hand, if the testimony, letters, and declarations of defendant are considered as a whole they show that the marriage of defendant and deceased began inauspiciously when defendant failed to tell deceased that his previous marriage had not been dissolved, and that some eight months later the violent disagreements which characterized the marriage culminated, after several hours of drunken quarreling, in murder. The picture of the events which led up to the murder and the events which followed it is a consistent one, interrupted only by the defendant's denial that he killed his wife. This picture suggests reasons for and the facts of quarreling between decedent and defendant but leaves only to conjecture and surmise the conclusion that defendant either arrived at or carried out the intention to kill as the result of a concurrence of deliberation and premeditation. Overwhelmingly opposed to such conjecture or surmise, and consistently evidenced by every circumstance is the rationale of a tempestuous quarrel, hot anger, and a violent killing."

In People v. Thomas, 25 Cal.2d 880, 898, 156 P.2d 7, 17, it was declared that an instruction that "'If * * * specific intent exists at the time of such unlawful killing, the offense committed would of course be murder of the first degree'" was erroneous, and that to hold otherwise would be to emasculate the statutory difference between first and second degree murder; that "The word 'specific' (adjective) means 'Precisely formulated or restricted; * * * definite, * * * explicit; of an exact or particular nature' (Webster's New Int. Dict. 2d Ed.)

while 'deliberate' (as an adjective) means 'formed, arrived at, or determined upon as a result of careful thought and weighing of considerations; as, a deliberate judgment or plan; carried on coolly and steadily, esp. according to a preconceived design; * * * Given to weighing facts and arguments with a view to a choice or decision; careful in considering the consequences of a step; * * * Slow in action; unhurried; * * * Characterized by reflection; dispassionate; not rash.'" Finally it has been held that the evidence must show that the intent to kill was thus arrived at if the killing is to measure up to first degree murder. People v. Tubby, supra. The testimony of occasional threats and acts of violence committed by appellant against decedent which were widely separated and interspersed by amicable relations throws no light whatever upon whether or not appellant is guilty of a wilful, deliberate and premeditated murder. Some time after McDonald left appellant and his wife, this amicable relation changed and he beat her as he had done before. But the record is barren of proof that this beating differed from others in that it was done in carrying out a preconceived design to kill, deliberately arrived at.

[4] The Coroner of Stanislaus County was called as a witness and was permitted to give an opinion that the character of the abrasions found upon the body of decedent were not such as would have appeared had her body fallen from a moving car. Appellant's counsel objected that he was not qualified as an expert on such a matter and here contends that the court erred in overruling that objection. The witness testified that he had been a licensed mortician for 21 years, had been a deputy coroner for 8 years; had seen at least 15 or 20 dead bodies which had been thrown from or had fallen from a moving vehicle and was familiar with the abrasion markings resulting from such a fall. On cross examination to test his qualifications he said that he was not an expert at medicine nor an expert in the nature of bruises generally; that he could not describe pathologically the various types of bruises found for lack of expert training. Over objection to his qualifications he then testified that he had observed on the bodies he had seen and which had fallen or been thrown from moving vehicles areas of abrasion where the body struck the road. That by abrasions he meant a scraping off of the skin. He said, "The skin is more or less scraped off, especially on the high spots, the shoulders, ribs, knees, hips and things of that nature. There may be some contusions, but they nearly always are accompanied by this abraded or scraping wound that goes along with it." If the subject matter was one for expert testimony, then we think the coroner was qualified. The importance of the testimony arose because the appellant contended the decedent's death came about by her falling from his automobile as he drove along the road. If, from the coroner's experience, he could say as he did that, when a person falls from a moving vehicle and strikes a road surface, he will suffer characteristic abrasions of the skin on and about body prominences, he is qualified to express an opinion as to whether or not the abrasions he found on the body of the decedent had the appearance of such characteristic abrasions. This witness was not attempting to describe or to testify concerning bruises; his testimony was limited to surface abrasions.

Appellant contends that the court erred in receiving the opinion evidence of the coroner and of the autopsy surgeon as to the probability that the abrasions they found on decedent's body had been received by a fall from appellant's car. His argument is that the subject was not one for expert testimony, because it falls within knowledge commonly possessed to the point that the jury should not have been subjected to opinion evidence as to the cause of the abrasions. We do not agree. It is certainly not incredible that human bodies falling from a car and striking a road surface would receive abrasions peculiar to such an accident. Both witnesses had had considerable experience in determining that abrasions so received did possess an appearance which differentiated them from abrasions received otherwise. It was proper, therefore, to give the jury the aid which could be derived from an expression of an opinion by them as to the cause of the abrasions found on the body of decedent. Both witnesses testified that, in their opinion, those abrasions were not received by reason of a fall from a moving vehicle upon a road surface. Professor Wigmore has said the criterion for receiving opinion evidence from a qualified witness is: " * * * Can a jury from this person receive appreciable help?" (7 Wigmore on Evidence, Section 1923.) In Taylor v. Monroe, 43 Conn. 36, 44, it is stated:

"The true test of the admissibility of such testimony is not whether the subject matter is common or uncommon, or whether many persons or few have some knowledge of the matter, but it is whether the witnesses offered as experts have any peculiar knowledge or experience, not common to the world, which renders their opinions founded on such knowledge or experience any aid to the Court or jury in determining the questions at issue."

We think both these witnesses were qualified to express an opinion, and that no error was committed in receiving their testimony as such. Both had had the experience of examining and noting the characteristics of road abrasions or road burns as exhibited on bodies known by them to have suffered abrasions from falling from moving vehicles and striking upon a road surface. Both said that they had observed such characteristics and that there was a similarity in the road burns or abrasions so received. Both had examined the abrasions on the body of deceased. Both stated that, in their opinion, the characteristics of road burns were not present on the body of deceased. It would have been difficult, if not impossible, for these witnesses to describe the appearances upon which they based their opinion in such a way as to place the jury in the same situation which they were in when they arrived at their opinion. Under such circumstances it was proper for the court to take the testimony of these witnesses in order to aid the jury in the determination of whether or not the claims of appellant that his wife had fallen from his car and struck the road and thus received the injuries which caused her death were true or false.

[5] Appellant contends that the court erred in admitting the testimony of the witness Minnie Wilson. She was the sole rebuttal witness called by the prosecution. In cross examination the appellant had been subjected to numerous questions concerning his affection for decedent and his relations with her. He had testified, generally, that the marital association between the two had been amicable and affectionate. He had substantially denied all of the testimony that he had abused and beaten her on the occasions testified to by witnesses for the prosecution. At the close of his cross examination, the following occurred: He was asked if he knew a Minnie Wilson and he said that he did; that he and his wife had taken her home after a dance; that his wife and he had met Minnie Wilson at a beer joint when she was crying and said her husband and she were having a lot of trouble; that she asked the Hoppers to take her home; that they agreed to do so; that appellant had been trying to get some beer before the "beer joints closed" and that Minnie Wilson had said she had plenty of whiskey at her place and if they would take her home she would give them some; that when they got there she walked inside her door, said "just a minute" and that he waited; she did not bring any whiskey; that he shouted at her, and when she came to the door, said "where's that whiskey?"; that she replied she didn't have any; and that he then said that she had told them she had some whiskey and would give it to him if the Hoppers would bring her home; that she replied, "You're just a dirty, no-good, lying son-of-a-bitch, I never said no such of a thing", whereupon he slapped her; that he did not "put her in the hospital", but that he had paid a fine as a result of his striking her. At this point objection was made that the subject of the cross examination was improper as having no relevancy to the crime charged. The objection was overruled. He said he did not go into her house but had opened the screen door behind which she stood and slapped her in the face. He was asked if he made any advances toward her and said he had not. In rebuttal Minnie Wilson was called to the stand. She testified that the Hoppers had taken her home and that she had got out of the car, gone into her house, hooked the screen door and laid down across her bed; that in three or four minutes there was a knock on the door to which she did not respond; that the knock was repeated several times and still she did not respond; that then the person knocking broke in by breaking the hook off the screen door; that she then said "Who's that?", and the person replied, "What do you want to know for?"; that she said, "Well, you'd better get out of here; I'm looking for my husband any minute"; the person replied, "Husband or no husband, I'm not leaving until I get what I want"; that thereupon she was attacked and did not remember anything more until the next morning when she was found wandering around her yard in a dazed condition, badly beaten up and was taken to the hospital. She described her injuries as follows: "The blood was dripping out of my hair and my clothes; you could have wrung the blood out of them. My ear was torn or cut, whatever it was happened, to here all the way back here at the side of my head (indicating). My eye was cut here. I was bashed in here. This knuckle was knocked out over here. I had had this here tooth capped, it tore the cap, knocked the cap off of the tooth, and tore the ligaments in this eyeball loose, and my eyeball had fallen down, * * * had torn the ligaments loose to my eyeball; * * * this thigh all up and down here, looked like it had been kicked; big bruises on me." She did not testify that she had been sexually assaulted. Notwithstanding the objections made and overruled as to the questions concerning Minnie Wilson which had been addressed to the appellant, the foregoing testimony of Minnie Wilson herself came in without objection. On cross examination, however, the witness testified that during the altercation she did not know who her assailant was. She said that because it was dark she did not see or recognize and was unable to identify the man who assaulted her, and it finally appeared that of her own knowledge she still could not testify that defendant was that man. Motion was thereupon made to strike her testimony, and the motion was denied, the court stating that he did so because appellant had testified on cross examination that he had gone to Minnie Wilson's front door, opened the screen door and had slapped her because of her refusal to give him the whiskey she had promised.

Section 1323 of the Penal Code provides:

"A defendant in a criminal action or proceeding can not be compelled to be a witness against himself; but if he offers himself as a witness, he may be cross-examined by the counsel for the people as to all matters about which he was examined in chief. * * *"

[6,7] This does not mean that the cross examination must be confined to a mere categorical review of the matters, dates, or times mentioned in the direct examination. It may be directed to the eliciting of any matter which may tend to overcome or qualify the effect of the testimony given by him on his direct examination. If a defendant takes the stand and makes a general denial of the crime with which he is charged, the permissible scope of cross examination is very wide, and he cannot by testifying to a state of things contrary to and inconsistent with the evidence of the prosecution, thus indirectly denying the testimony against him, but, without testifying expressly with relation to the same facts, limit the cross examination to the precise facts to which he testified. He can be cross examined with respect to facts or denials which are necessarily implied from the testimony in chief as well as with respect to facts which he expressly states. People v. Zerillo, 36 Cal. 2d 222, 227 et seq., 223 P.2d 223. We have heretofore sufficiently reviewed the testimony of the prosecution and that of the appellant when he took the stand in his own behalf to justify the generalization that not only had he denied his guilt generally, not only had he denied specifically most of the instances of violent assault upon his wife, but he had also given a general picture of amicable relations between them and had offered an explanation of her death which directly conflicted with the theory presented by the prosecution. Under such circumstances his cross examination could properly range wide. The incident concerning which he was asked with respect to Minnie Wilson occurred almost four years before the death of appellant's wife. No objection, however, was made on the ground of remoteness, and had it been made, it could have been properly overruled as affecting the weight and not the admissibility of the evidence in view of the fact that the state was charging that his wife came to her death by a beating administered by him, his denial thereof, and of the testimony of the prosecution as to his frequent physical assaults upon her, including of course a showing by implication that his character was that of a man given to sudden storms of anger during which he readily resorted to his fists in assaults against a woman to whom he bore the relation of husband and who was his chief mainstay and support in life. His denial of these matters, his attempts to explain them away as either never having happened or as being things done in jest brought his character and his addiction to violent outbursts and of physical assault with little or no provocation sharply to the fore. It was, therefore, permissible to examine him concerning like matters even though in the incident inquired about, the beating, if it occurred, was administered by him to a woman not his wife. When he denied the assault, it was permissible also for the prosecution to call Minnie Wilson to establish that the assault had occurred, and certainly if he was the assailant, then the ferocity of the attack with no provocation save his disappointment in not obtaining the whiskey which he thought the woman would give him for taking her home, was material to the issues presented by his own testimony. We cannot sustain the appellant's contentions that the testimony was improperly admitted. Neither can we sustain appellant's contention that the testimony of Minnie Wilson should have been stricken on motion. To be sure, she said she did not and could not identify her assailant as being appellant, because it was dark and she could not see him. Nevertheless, the other circumstances made it a fair inference that he was the assailant. He himself had testified that he was there, that he had taken her home, that he had done so on a promise that she would deliver whiskey to him, that when she failed to do so he tore open the screen door and slapped her. These circumstances warranted an inference that the vicious assault which she testified to was in fact inflicted by him, even though according to his version he stopped with a single slap.

[8] The court instructed the jury that, although evidence had been offered in the case for the purpose of showing that on occasions prior to the 5th of July, 1955 (the day Mrs. Hopper met her death), defendant had beaten and struck his wife and on one occasion had beaten another woman, that such evidence had been received for a limited purpose, not to prove distinct offenses or continuing criminality, but for such bearing, if any, as it might have on the question whether the defendant was innocent or guilty of the crime charged; that the jury were not permitted to consider the evidence for any other purpose; that the value of the evidence of beating of decedent depended on whether or not it tended to show a course of conduct of the defendant toward her on prior occasions which ultimately culminated in her death and on whether or not such prior acts indicated a motive for the crime charged in the action; that the value of the evidence of the beating of decedent and of the beating of another woman depended on whether or not the prior acts viewed with the act of which the defendant was accused showed a common pattern, scheme or design. Appellant contends that the giving of this instruction constituted error. We cannot sustain appellant's contentions with respect to this instruction. It was not unfair to him and did not misstate the law. In general, appellant's argument in support of this point is addressed to the admissibility of the evidence, and we have already passed upon that matter. There was a pattern of behavior evidenced by the testimony of witnesses referred to in the instruction which aided the inference that appellant had killed decedent while beating her.

[9] Appellant contends that the trial court erred in admitting testimony as to bruises that had been seen on the person of decedent at various times throughout a five-year period preceding her death. Appellant says that these highly prejudicial remarks were admitted into evidence over objection but upon a general assurance from the district attorney that he would tie such testimony in with the appellant, and that such tying in was not effected. It would serve no good purpose to relate the testimony on these matters more in detail than has been done. The testimony of witnesses concerning the various times when they had seen evidences on her face and body that she had received a beating was accompanied in each instance with testimony of his proximity and of admissions sufficient to justify the inference that the marks and bruises observed had been inflicted by him.

Finally, appellant contends that he was denied a fair and impartial trial because of the attitude and comment of the trial judge, which reflected his feelings toward the appellant and which were conveyed to the jury and everyone else in the courtroom. Appellant requests us to "ponder the entire record and the cumulative effect of the rulings of the trial court in determining whether or not there was an adverse effect upon the rights of defendant by the trial court's attitude throughout the case". This court has complied with the appellant's request that we consider the whole record. We find nothing in that record to substantiate the charge of misconduct or of bias on the part of the trial judge.

For the reasons given, the order denying the motion for a new trial is affirmed. However, acting under the authority given us by Sections 1181 and 1260 of the Penal Code, the judgment is modified by reducing the degree of the crime to murder of the second degree, and as so modified the judgment is affirmed. The cause is remanded to the trial court with directions to sentence the defendant to imprisonment for the term prescribed by law for murder of the second degree.

CZECHOSLOVAK-PATRONAT, a corporation, Defendant, Cross-Complainant, Cross-Defendant and Appellant.

Civ. 21532.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 2, California.

Oct. 17, 1956.

Rehearing Denied Nov. 13, 1956.

Hearing Denied Dec. 12, 1956.

Action for declaratory relief and to quiet title wherein defendants cross-complained. From an adverse judgment in the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Caryl M. Sheldon, J., the cross-defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Fox, J., held that where deed granted to non-profit corporation a fee simple subject to condition subsequent that property be used perpetually as a park or meeting ground and where as result of misuse of the property, an ordinance granting exception to the use thereof, was repealed, evidence supported findings that property was granted upon a condition subsequent; that finding that ordinance authorizing the use of the property was repealed because of misuse thereof was supported by the evidence, and that the grantee was not entitled to relief on the ground as it would be oppressive and inequitable to enforce restrictions by a reason of change of the character of the vicinity.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Deeds ⇨99

Writings contemporaneously executed to express the terms of a particular grant of realty are held to constitute but a single instrument and must be read as though each referred to the other and expressly incorporated its terms.

2. Deeds ⇨99

Where deed granted to non-profit corporation a fee simple subject to conditions subsequent expressed in a contemporaneously executed agreement imposing a duty upon the grantee to use the property perpetually as a park or meeting ground, the deed and contract constituted one instrument and were to be read together.

3. Deeds ⇨145

Clauses in a conveyance imposing obligations on the grantee are to be construed as personal covenants rather than conditions whenever that can be reasonably done in order to avert a forfeiture, but such an interpretation will not be given contrary to the intention of the parties and where it clearly appears that an estate was conveyed subject to conditions, it will be upheld as such.

4. Deeds ⇨93

Intention of parties to a deed is to be derived by consideration of the instrument as a whole rather than detached clauses, giving due regard to every provision, clause and word, whether of grant, description, qualification or explanation and viewing it in light of the circumstances surrounding its execution. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1641.

5. Deeds ⇨168

Where deed granted to non-profit corporation a fee simple subject to conditions expressed in contemporaneously executed agreement imposing a duty to use the property perpetually as a park or meeting ground, and vesting in grantors the right of re-entry for termination for breach of condition, in action to quiet title for breach of the condition, evidence authorized finding that the estate was granted upon condition that it be used perpetually as a park or meeting ground.

6. Municipal Corporations ⇨122(4)

In action to quiet title to property, on ground of breach of condition by which property was granted to a non-profit corporation to be used perpetually as a park or meeting ground, finding that the ordinance which authorized the use of the property in the manner contemplated by the agreement was repealed because of the corporation's misuse of the property, was supported by the evidence.

7. Trial ⇨90, 105(2)

Where testimony, while hearsay in character, was admitted without objection or motion to strike, it was competent to support a finding.

8. Deeds ⇨167

In action to quiet title to property conveyed to a non-profit corporation because of breach of condition subsequent that property be used perpetually as a park or meeting ground on ground that corporation's misuse of property resulted in repeal of an ordinance granting an exception as to the use of the property, corporation was not entitled to relief against conditions of conveyance on the ground that it would be oppressive and inequitable to enforce restrictions by reason of a change in character of the vicinity.

9. Deeds ⇨167

A grantee in a deed could not claim that the court should have relieved it from forfeiture resulting from breach of a condition subsequent in the deed when its own conduct engendered the action which ultimately rendered impossible the further use of the property on the conditions imposed.

10. Equity ⇨54

Equity does not aid one who is a sole cause of his own misfortune.

11. Trial ⇨404(2)

A finding that the grantee in a deed had no estate right, title or interest in the property, was not a conclusion of law but one of ultimate fact.

12. Appeal and Error ⇨1071(5)

Even if some of the findings attacked as conclusions were regarded as misplaced conclusions of law, it could avail appellant nothing where the specific findings supported the conclusions reached, were amply sustained by the evidence, and disposed of all material issues and fully supported the judgment.

FOX, Justice.

This is an appeal by the Czechoslovak Patronat (hereinafter designated Patronat) from a judgment quieting title to real property in favor of plaintiffs and certain cross-complainants.

The plaintiffs who originally filed the within action for declaratory relief and to quiet title are heirs of Henry and Josephine Biescar, the grantors of the property here in dispute. Named as defendants were the Patronat and other heirs of the grantors. The defendant heirs, in turn, cross-complained against the Patronat, raising the same issues made in the complaint. The Patronat has also filed its own cross-complaint against all the heirs praying that title be quieted in its favor. Despite the multiplicity of pleadings, the parties are in accord that the issues are essentially those framed by the complaint, the answer and cross-complaint filed by the Patronat, and the answer of the cross-complainants.

The paramount issues presented by this appeal are (1) whether the original grant created a fee simple subject to a condition subsequent or merely a covenant as to use by the grantees; (2) whether the interpretation of the instrument by the court was contrary to the rule of construction against conditions leading to forfeitures if that is reasonably possible; and (3) whether the court erred in failing to relieve against a forfeiture by virtue of the changed character of the neighborhood.

The background facts are these: The Patronat is a nonprofit corporation and functions as a coordinating organization of congress for various fraternal clubs and lodges comprising persons of Czech or Slovak origin in Los Angeles and its environs. The Patronat's membership is made up of delegates from these affiliated groups and its primary objective is apparently to promote and foster a program of social, cultural and recreational activity for local residents of Czechoslovakian descent. As a part of its program in the early thirties, the Patronat was desirous of establishing a communal meeting place where the functions it sponsored for its compatriots might be held.

Henry and Josephine Biescar, a married couple, were members of several Slovak organizations. They owned a parcel of land in the area now known as La Crescenta. They were willing to donate a part of this land to the Patronat as a meeting ground for fellow Czechoslovakians. On November 6, 1931, the Biescars conveyed to the Patronat a triangular-shaped segment of this property, located at one corner of their tract. The deed, which was recorded within a week, was a grant of a fee simple estate in absolute form. The Patronat gave no monetary consideration for the conveyance. However, contemporaneously with this deed, the Biescars and the Patronat executed a document entitled "Agreement" appertaining to the property so granted. This instrument was not recorded until 1949. It was drafted by L. J. Styskal, the attorney for the Patronat. So far as it is here germane, this document (in which the Biescars are designated "First Parties" and the Patronat "Second Party") reads as follows:

"Whereas, The Czechoslovak-Patronat is an organization calculated and planned for the purpose of uniting the Czecho-Slovak people of Los Angeles and vicinity into a civic, patriotic and mutually beneficial unit, and pursuant to such plan or scheme, said organization is in existence; and

"Whereas, Henry Biescar and Josephine Biescar, as members of the said Czecho-Slovak colony, are desirous to grant unto The Czechoslovak-Patronat, for its use and for the benefit of its constituting members, and to that extent to the Czecho-Slovak community of Los Angeles and vicinity, certain property hereinafter more specifically described, for purposes hereinafter more accurately denominated; and

"Whereas, The Czechoslovak-Patronat is willing to accept the said property on the conditions hereinafter more specifically enumerated, and for the purposes designated;

"Now, Therefore, It Is Agreed, Understood and Contracted as follows, to-wit:

"First: First parties hereby agree to grant by deed to be executed contemporaneously herewith, unto second party herein, that certain property situated in the County of Los Angeles, State of California, and particularly described as follows, to-wit: [Property described.] * * *

"Second: The said grant and devise shall be subject to the following provisions, to-wit:

"(a)¹ The said property shall be used and dedicated by second party herein as a park or meeting ground for the Czecho-Slovak people in Los Angeles and vicinity, and their various organizations, clubs and lodges; the said property shall remain under the control and direction of the said Czechoslovak-Patronat, but its use shall, nevertheless, be administered equally and fairly to all persons and organizations mentioned and with a view of enabling as many of said persons to have the benefits and uses of said property as possible.

"(b) It is agreed and understood that the said property shall be designated and known as 'Biescar Park' and shall be so designated in all public references thereto, to the end that the Czecho-Slovak public shall become acquainted with said property and its location under said name.

"(c)² It is agreed and understood and made a condition of this grant that the said property shall not be encumbered by the second party herein or any of its successors or assigns for a period of twenty-five (25) years from the date of the transfer thereof unto second party herein, it being the intent to perpetuate said property in a free and clear condition as a meeting place and recreational center, as hereinabove more particularly set forth.

the following purposes only: That said property may be hypothecated to Great Western Building and Loan Association as security for a building loan in the sum of $....., the full amount of which shall be used to erect a building on said premises, designated as a meeting place of Czechoslovak people.

1. [Typed in margin.]

It is understood that paragraph (a) means that whenever the Czechoslovak Patronat shall rent or lease the premises to any individual, organization or club for private entertainment, they shall restrict attendance to exclude the general public; that this shall be a private park, and not a public park.

2. [Typed in margin.]

Provisions of subparagraph (c) of paragraph Second are partially waived for

"(d)³ First parties agree to sell unto second party, at such rates and upon such terms as shall be hereafter determined by these parties, five (5) shares of stock in the Water District now supplying the area and vicinity of the property agreed to be conveyed, such shares of stock to be sold at a price of Fifty Dollars ($50) each. It is the intent of this provision that the purchase of said shares of stock shall be a condition of the transfer, for the reason that first parties herein propose and intend that the said 'Biescar Park' shall be amply supplied with necessary water for the uses to which it shall be dedicated.

* * * * *

"Third: It is specifically agreed that all of the conditions above set forth shall be borne out and performed by second party herein, in the spirit of the donation made by first parties and to perpetuate the said property at all times for the general good of the CzechoSlovak public. * * *"
(Italics added.)

At the time the property was conveyed, it was worth between $600 and $800, and consisted of rocky land located in a relatively undeveloped area which was zoned exclusively for residential purposes. On July 31, 1933, about 20 months after the gift deed was made, the Board of Supervisors adopted Ordinance No. 2305, the effect of which was to exempt the property donated by the Biescars from its restriction to residential uses. The ordinance specifically permitted the use of the property "For the construction and maintenance of a clubhouse for the Czechoslovak-Patronat." Members of the Patronat proceeded to clear the land of rocks and bushes by voluntary labor. Thereafter a clubhouse was erected on the land by the Patronat and dedicated by the Consul of Czechoslovakia in a formal ceremony which the Biescars attended.

During the next seventeen years, the Patronat used the property for recreational and cultural activities for the benefit of the ethnic groups affiliated with it. With the passage of time, the surrounding area was gradually built up with residential buildings. The character of use to which the property was put in the course of meetings and activities and the incidental problems created, encountered objection on the part of residents of the neighborhood. This situation led to hearings before the Zoning Board of the Los Angeles Regional Planning Commission. John P. Commons, who sat as a member of the hearing body, testified as to the nature of the complaints by residents of the neighborhood at the hearing.⁴ The complainants testified that persons attending meetings drank alcoholic beverages on the premises and became intoxicated, that beer bottles and cans were strewn on the streets and littered their yards, that invitees used the street and parking areas for urination, that adjoining streets were congested with parked cars, that crowds in excess of the capacity of the building and grounds to contain them attended certain meetings, that the general public was solicited to use the facilities of the park by radio advertisements and that non-Czechoslovakian organizations were using the premises, that certain functions on weekday nights lasted far into the early morning hours with much attendant noise, and that the Patronat piled boxes and containers outside its building in an unsightly manner.

As a result of these hearings, the Zoning Board made certain recommendations which were adopted by the Planning Commission and, in turn, recommended to the Board of Supervisors. The Patronat was notified by the County Regional Planning

See partial waiver of this paragraph set forth on previous page.

4. Mr. Commons' testimony was received with only a single objection directed to the matter of alleged indecencies being committed in automobiles parked on the street in front of residences adjacent to the Patronat.

Commission that it would recommend that the Board of Supervisors revoke the exception granted by Ordinance 2305 unless the Patronat's consent were obtained to an amendment of the ordinance imposing certain conditions on the use of the property by the Patronat. Mr. Commons testified that these terms were suggested in the hope "of alleviating or answering in part the objections of the people living in the vicinity." The conditions enumerated were substantially as follows: (1) that no alcoholic beverages be sold, served, or consumed on the property at any time; (2) that no ginger ale, water, ice, or other liquid be sold, served, or supplied on the premises to any person if it is known that such person is going to mix such ginger ale, water, ice, or other liquid with any alcoholic beverages; (3) that off street automobile parking space of not less than 25,000 square feet be provided, such parking space to be developed and maintained in accordance with the provisions of section 52 of Ordinance 1494, the Zoning Ordinance, Zone "P" Parking; (4) that not less than ten (10) water closets for women be provided and not less than nine (9) water closets for men; except that urinals may be substituted for each water closet, but at least 2 water closets must be installed for men. If a trough urinal is installed, two feet of length may be substituted for each water closet; (5) that attendance of all meetings of any nature be limited to a maximum of 300 people who shall be members of one of the member organizations of the Czechoslovak Patronat or bona fide guests of such members such guests not to exceed one-fourth of the members present; (6) that meetings shall be concluded, the clubhouse closed, and the group dispersed not later than 10:30 p. m. on every night except Friday and Saturday, when the meetings shall be closed at 12:00 midnight, and on December 24th and 31st, when the meetings shall be concluded and clubhouse closed and groups dispersed not later than 2:00 a. m. the following day; (7) that at no time shall there be any use of the building for any meeting open to the general public; (8) that any announcements or advertisements of any function or event to be held at the clubhouse shall be so worded as to limit the invitation to members of the member organizations of the Czechoslovak Patronat; (9) that all cartons, boxes, crates, and other containers shall be stored within the buildings. The Patronat refused to accept the conditions outlined by the Planning Commission, and its negotiations to obtain a relaxation thereof or a compromise failed. In September, 1950, the Board of Supervisors adopted Ordinance 5590 repealing the 1933 ordinance which authorized the use of the property by the Patronat as an exception to the residential zoning provisions of the law. Thereafter, the Patronat undertook to sell the property demised to it by the Biescars.

In December, 1953, plaintiffs, as heirs of the grantors, brought this action and prayed that title be quieted in them on the ground that Ordinance 5590 prevented the use of the property on the conditions set forth under the conveyance by the grantors and that as a result the Patronat's interest in the property was terminated.

At the trial, the court thoroughly explored the circumstances under which the grant was made and received parol evidence as to what the parties intended by the use of the particular language employed in the instruments of conveyance. Mr. Styskal, the Patronat's attorney, who had prepared the agreement and the deed drawn to effectuate it, stated that he did not attempt to explain to the Biescars the technical difference between covenants and conditions but asserted Mr. Biescar knew that the Patronat accepted the property only as an unqualified gift and that absolutely no reversionary rights remained in him or his successors in interest. The attorney testified that Mr. Biescar wished to make it certain that the property he donated was used as a meeting ground, that it be known as Biescar Park, and that it not be encumbered to avoid possible loss of the property. Mr. Styskal stated these qualifications were embodied in a separate instrument in order not to cloud the Patronat's free and clear title to the property conveyed by the deed. Other testimony was introduced on behalf of the Patronat supportive of the theory that the Biescars intended to make an unconditional gift to the Patronat.

The essential findings made by the court were: (a) that the Biescar deed granted to the Patronat a fee simple subject to the conditions subsequently expressed in the contemporaneously executed agreement, which together with the deed constituted the instrument of conveyance; (b) that the grant by its conditions imposed a duty to use the property "perpetually" as a park or meeting ground and that the grantors were vested with a right of entry or power of termination for breach of the condition; (c) that by reason of the Patronat's misuse of the property, its continued use as a park and meeting place impinged on the convenience of the residents of the neighborhood; (d) that as a result of such misuse of the property by the Patronat, the Board of Supervisors repealed the ordinance, No. 2305, granting the exception as to the use of the property; that the Patronat breached the conditions of the grant by its misuse of the property; and (f) that by reason of said breach, the Patronat has no interest in the property, and the heirs of the grantors are the owners of the fee.

[1,2] At the outset, the Patronat deplores the fact that the trial court apparently treated the deed and agreement, which were executed at the same time, as an integrated instrument. It urges that "nothing supports a finding that they are but one document." However, the rule is well settled that writings contemporaneously executed to express the terms of a particular grant of real property, are held to constitute but a single instrument. Downing v. Rademacher, 133 Cal. 220, 224, 65 P. 385; Patterson v. Donner, 48 Cal. 369, 377; Sledge v. Stolz, 41 Cal.App. 209, 220, 182 P. 340. In Downing v. Rademacher, supra [133 Cal. 220, 65 P. 386], the court observed: "The deed and the agreement constitute one instrument, and must be read as though each referred to the other and expressly incorporated its terms." (Italics added.) In the Sledge case, supra [41 Cal.App. 209, 182 P. 344], the court states: "We must look to the agreement to ascertain the consideration for the execution of the deed, for it was executed and delivered pursuant to the agreement. The two documents are inseparable." (Italics added.) The trial court was entitled to treat the instruments here involved in accordance with this rule.

[3,4] The Patronat assigns as error the determination of the court below that the property was conveyed subject to conditions subsequent rather than upon a simple covenant concerning the use to which the property was to be devoted. In so doing it relies upon cases announcing the familiar rule that clauses in a conveyance imposing obligations on the grantee are to be construed as personal covenants rather than conditions whenever that can be reasonably done in order to avert a forfeiture.⁵ That, of course, is a venerable rule of construction. However, such an interpretation will not be given contrary to the intention of the parties; and where it clearly appears that an estate was conveyed subject to conditions, it will be upheld as such. Rosecrans v. Pacific Elec. Ry. Co., 21 Cal.2d 602, 605, 134 P.2d 245; Knight

Union High School, 76 Cal.App. 629, 245 P. 464; Gramer v. City of Sacramento, 2 Cal.2d 432, 41 P.2d 543.

Nonetheless, the decisions in each of these cases recognize the rule that the ultimate test is the joint intent of the grantor and grantee.

v. Black, 19 Cal.App. 518, 523, 126 P. 512. The intention of the parties to a deed is to be derived by a consideration of the instrument as a whole rather than of detached clauses, giving due regard to every provision, clause and word, whether of grant; description, qualification or explanation and viewing it in the light of the circumstances surrounding its execution. Paddock v. Vasquez, 122 Cal.App.2d 396, 400, 265 P.2d 121; Schroeder v. Wilson, 89 Cal.App.2d 63, 66, 200 P.2d 173; 15 Cal.Jur.2d, sec. 128, pp. 528-529. Every part of the instrument is to be given effect if reasonably practicable and consistent with the evident purpose of the grant, each clause helping to interpret the others. Civ. Code, § 1641; Brannan v. Mesick, 10 Cal. 95, 106-107; Barnett v. Barnett, 104 Cal. 298, 300, 37 P. 1049.

[5] It is manifest from a consideration of the deed as a whole and the situation of the parties at the time of the grant that the conveyance was executed with the intent to create an estate upon condition that the property be permanently maintained as a communal gathering place for local residents of Czechoslovakian derivation. The agreement itself is replete with phraseology indicative of an intention to create a conditional estate. While not of controlling significance, it is recited in the preamble that the Patronat is willing to accept the conveyance "on the conditions hereinafter more specifically enumerated." The conditions are then incorporated into the granting part of the instrument, paragraph Second, which commences: "The said grant shall be subject to the following provisions, to wit * * *" Subdivision (a), the alleged condition claimed to have been broken, declares that the property shall be used and dedicated as a park or meeting ground for local Czechoslovakians and to be so administered by the Patronat to enable as many of such persons as possible to enjoy its benefits. Subdivision (b) declares the property shall be designated as "Biescar Park." Subdivision (c) makes it a condition of the grant that no encumbrance shall be placed on the property for 25 years, it being the intent to perpetuate such property, unencumbered, as a meeting place, "as hereinabove more particularly set forth." Subdivision (d) provides for the purchase of shares of water stock as an express condition of the transfer to insure that Biescar Park "shall be amply supplied with necessary water for the uses to which it shall be dedicated." To contend, as does the Patronat, that only Subdivisions (c) and (d) are conditions because they are so designated but that Subdivision (a), to which (c) and (d) are ancillary in purpose, is a mere covenant would not only be anomalous but would emasculate and render nugatory the paramount intent and object of the conveyance. Subdivisions (c) and (d), which are expressly termed conditions, indicate by reference to the previous subdivisions that their purpose is to subserve and implement the predominant objective of the grant as expressed in Subdivision (a). The express conditions (1) against hypothecation and (2) requiring purchase of water stock were obviously included to insure preservation of the property for the principal purpose intended. It would be a fatuous construction indeed to assert that the Patronat was bound by the requirements of Subdivisions (c) and (d) as conditions, but was not bound by a condition that it use the property as a meeting place for the benefit of the Czech public when it is manifest that this latter was the fundamental consideration of the grant. Paragraph Third negates any such unrealistic construction. It states that "all of the conditions above set forth shall be borne out and performed by second party * * * to perpetuate said property at all times for the general good of the Czechoslovak public."

[6] Clearly, "the conditions above set forth" must necessarily include Subdivision (a), for this is the crucial element of the grant, and unless this condition were performed the cardinal purpose of the donation—to perpetuate the property for the ends intended—would be destroyed and the performance of the other conditions specified would be stripped of any significance. The circumstance that the Patronat paid nothing for the property, coupled with the frequent use of language connoting condition, together with the donors manifest intent that the property constitute a permanent memorial of his benefaction to the Czechoslovak public, fully justified the court's finding, as a proper statement of ultimate fact, that the estate was devised upon condition that it be used perpetually as a park or meeting ground. The word "perpetuate" is used twice in the instrument and it may properly be assumed in the overall context present to have had some import in terms of a possible divestment of the grant. As stated in Rosecrans v. Pacific Elec. Ry. Co., 21 Cal.2d 602, 607, 134 P.2d 245, 247, "Some significance may be given to the use of the word 'forever' * * *. If the conditions are to be binding, 'forever' it indicates that compliance must be had with the condition in question 'forever' or perpetually." Webster's International Dictionary gives the following phrases in its definition of "perpetuate": "to make perpetual, to come to endure, or to be continued, indefinitely." The internal evidence adduced from the language used and the spirit and purpose disclosed by the terms of the instrument as well as the external evidence of the circumstances surrounding the agreement abundantly support the construction arrived at by the court, a re-entry clause being unnecessary. Taylor v. Continental Southern Corp., 131 Cal.App.2d 267, 273, 280 P.2d 514; Papst v. Hamilton, 133 Cal. 631, 66 P. 10; Martin v. City of Stockton, 39 Cal.App. 552, 556, 179 P. 894.

It would be a work of supererogation to analyze and differentiate the various cases cited by the Patronat, previously alluded to in the footnote, in support of its contention that the use to which the property shall be put is merely a covenant rather than a condition of the grant. Obviously, the language used in the instruments is different and does not have the same com-elling force as is made patent by the terms employed, the intent manifested therein, and the surrounding circumstances. Furthermore, Subdivision (a) here appears in the granting part of the integrated instrument, elaborately qualified and restricted by words of condition, rather than in a habendum clause containing a mere statement as to use without more, which distinguishes this conveyance from those referred to in virtually all cases cited by the Patronat. As stated in Marshall v. Standard Oil Co., 17 Cal.App.2d 19, 23-24, 61 P.2d 520, 522: "Where the purpose for which the deed is executed appears in the habendum clause, the authorities universally hold that such declaration does not debase the fee, or whatever interest is conveyed in the granting clause. This principle, however, does not apply where the qualifying words appear in the granting clause of the deed. This distinction is made clearly to appear from the following excerpts which we quote from 9 California Jurisprudence, page 274: 'An expression of the purposes of the conveyance as to the use of the property conveyed, "as for the purpose of a public road", or "for a county high-school ground and premises", or for certain religious and educational purposes, are generally held to be directory only, and not to qualify or limit a grant which is in absolute form. But this principle is not applicable where the qualifying words are in the granting part of the deed, and so clearly connected with the word "grant" as naturally to suggest that the intention was merely to convey the right to use the property for a certain purpose.'"

[7,8] The Patronat attacks also the court's finding the ordinance which authorized the use of the property in the manner contemplated by the agreement was repealed because of the Patronat's misuse of the property. There is no merit to this contention. The testimony of Mr. Commons which has previously been quoted fully sustains such a finding. While hearsay in character, it was admitted without objection or motion to strike and is competent to support a finding. In re Estate of Doran, 138 Cal.App.2d 541, 553, 292 P.2d 655; Lail v. Lail, 133 Cal.App.2d 610, 621, 284 P.2d 907; Smith v. Smith, 135 Cal. App.2d 100, 105, 286 P.2d 1009. This testimony indicates, in part, that the Patronat permitted various non-Czechoslovakian organizations to use the property and permitted conditions to exist which constituted a nuisance. In an attempt to alleviate these conditions and correlate the use of the property by the Patronat with the convenience of neighboring residents, the Planning Commission suggested certain conditions of use to which the Patronat refused to accede. The Patronat contends it could not do so because certain of these conditions were contrary to the purpose for which the property was granted. It argues that the Commission prescribed "that attendance of all meetings of any nature be limited to a maximum of 300 people who shall be members of Czechoslovak Patronat," a restriction which could not be lived up to in the spirit of the grant. This is not borne out by the language of the agreement. Subdivision (a) only requires that the Patronat so administer the property as would enable as many persons "to have the benefits and uses of said property as possible." This clearly suggests that the Patronat was only required to make available the facilities granted only to the extent possible, whether limited by physical capacity or any reasonable restrictions by a governmental body which would have to grant an exception before the donation could be effective at all for the intended purpose. It was patently never contemplated that all eligible persons would have to be invited or received at any one time. It would have been no violation of the agreement to accept the Commission's proposal, which would have enabled the Patronat to perpetuate the use of the property. The Patronat urges that it could not accept the Commission's requirement that advertisements of any event shall be so worded as "to limit invitations to members of the member organizations of the Patronat." It contends that to accept this condition would have done violence to the requirement that the meeting ground be used "for the Czechoslovak people in the City of Los Angeles and vicinity." However, it is clear that the grantors were primarily interested in the use of the property by the Patronat and its affiliates. The preamble expressly recites the desire of the Biescars to grant the property to the Patronat, "for its use and for the benefit of its constituting members, and to that extent to the Czechoslovak community of Los Angeles and vicinity." (Italics added.) The Commission's recommendation was thus in harmony with the terms of the grant. Such recommendation, if followed, would also have prevented further violation by the Patronat of the terms of the grant under its practice of renting the property to non-Czechoslovakian organizations, which was expressly prohibited by said grant.

[9, 10] From what has been said, it is clear that the Patronat was not entitled to relief against the conditions of the conveyance under the doctrine of the cases holding that such relief may be granted when it would be oppressive and inequitable to enforce such restrictions by reason of a change in the character of the vicinity. The changes in the character of the neighborhood, which at all times was residentially zoned, did not precipitate the repeal of the excepting ordinance nor did it militate against the Patronat's continued use of the property within the spirit of the grant. An effective use of the property on the conditions granted with reasonable regard for the rights of adjacent residents was possible. Indeed, the Planning Commission offered to work out a modus vivendi on terms that would have eliminated certain abuses which had developed as a consequence of a rather undisciplined administration of the property and would have permitted continuity of the uses envisaged by the grant. The Patronat declined to accept these terms. It cannot now be heard to say that the court should have relieved it from the forfeiture resulting from breach of a condition subsequent when its own conduct engendered the action which ultimately rendered impossible the further use of the property on the conditions imposed. The situation presented was not of a nature calculated to invite the court's invocation of the general rule that equity will not ordinarily enforce a forfeiture. As stated in Thein v. Silver Investment Co., 87 Cal.App.2d 308, 318-319, 196 P.2d 956, 962: "Equity does not aid one who is the sole cause of his own misfortune. Any forfeiture that here resulted was caused by appellant's own acts. * * * Under such circumstances, no principle of equity suggests, far less compels, the granting of relief to appellant. He has brought his misfortunes upon his own head."

[11, 12] Appellant has made a comprehensive attack on the findings, assigning some 16 specifications in which it asserts the findings are either unsupported by the evidence or conclusions of law. This, in part, is mere quibbling. For example, the finding that Ordinance No. 2305 permitted the use of the property here in dispute as a "park or meeting ground" is not contrary to the evidence, such use being implicit in the language of the ordinance granting an exception for the maintenance of a clubhouse by the Patronat. The Patronat's contention that the finding that it has no estate, right, title or interest in the property is a conclusion of law is refuted by Dam v. Zink, 112 Cal. 91, 93, 44 P. 331, upholding a similar finding as one of ultimate fact, as well as by McArthur v. Goodwin, 173 Cal. 499, 160 P. 679, and Hitchcock v. Rooney, 171 Cal. 285, 152 P. 913, which characterize such statements as findings of ultimate fact. In any event, even if some findings attacked as conclusions are regarded as misplaced conclusions of law, it can avail Patronat nothing since the specific findings support the conclusions reached, are amply sustained by the evidence, dispose of all the material issues and fully support the judgment.

The judgment is affirmed.

L. A. 24188.

Supreme Court of California.

In Bank.

Oct. 23, 1956.

Action by landlords against tenants to recover attorneys' fees incurred by landlords in successful defense of a previous action against them by tenants. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Bayard Rhone, J., sustained tenants' demurrer to complaint without leave to amend and entered judgment of dismissal and landlords appealed. The Supreme Court, Schauer, J., held that where lease provided that if tenants shall bring any action for relief against landlords, arising out of the lease, and landlords shall prevail, tenants shall pay landlords a reasonable attorneys' fee which shall be taxed as a part of the costs of such action, if landlords were entitled to recover attorneys' fees under such provision as the result of their prevailing in an action commenced against them by tenants, such fees had to be recovered as costs in the action in which they were incurred, and could not be recovered in a separate action brought for that purpose.

Judgment affirmed.

Opinion, 295 P.2d 37, vacated.

I. Damages ⇐71

Attorneys' fees recoverable only by virtue of contract are characterized as "damages" and such fees cannot be allowed a successful litigant without pleading and proof or an admission that there is a contract provision for them, and this is so whether the successful party is plaintiff or defendant.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Damages".

2. Damages ⇐163(1), 222

Attorneys' fees are not like the usual item of damages, in that a court may allow a reasonable attorneys' fee in a judgment without hearing evidence or making any finding as to the amount of such fee.

3. Costs ⇐172

Where attorneys' fees are allowable solely by virtue of contract, they cannot be recovered by merely including them in a memorandum of costs.

4. Costs ⇐264

When costs are awarded on appeal, the memorandum of costs on appeal is filed and taxed in the trial court, and if a party is entitled to attorneys' fees on appeal, they can be determined by the trial court when it determines the costs on appeal. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 1034.

5. Landlord and Tenant ⇐44(1)

Where lease provided that if tenants shall bring any action for relief against landlords, arising out of the lease, and landlords shall prevail, tenants shall pay landlords a reasonable attorneys' fee which shall be taxed as a part of the cost of such action, if landlords were entitled to recover attorneys' fees under such provision as the result of their prevailing in an action commenced against them by tenants, such fees had to be recovered as costs in the action in which they were incurred, and could not be recovered in a separate action brought for that purpose.

6. Landlord and Tenant ⇐37

Where a lease is prepared by landlords, its provisions should be construed against them.

7. Pleading ⇐34(4)

In determining whether a complaint to which a demurrer has been interposed states a cause of action, it will be presumed that plaintiffs stated their case as favorably to themselves as the facts permit.

8. Appeal and Error ⇐103

Order denying motion for leave to file an amended complaint after demurrer to original complaint had been sustained without leave to amend, and order denying motion for reconsideration of order denying leave to amend were not appealable orders, and attempted appeals therefrom would be dismissed.

Dryden, Harrington, Horgan & Swartz, Jacob Swartz and Vernon G. Foster, Los Angeles, for appellants.

Fred Horowitz, Alvin F. Howard and Amos Friedman, Los Angeles, for respondents.

SCHAUER, Justice.

Plaintiffs appeal from a judgment of dismissal entered after a demurrer to their complaint was sustained without leave to amend and after plaintiffs' motions for permission to file an amendment to the complaint and for reconsideration of the sustaining of the demurrer without leave to amend were denied.

Plaintiffs, assignees of lessors, seek to recover from the assignees of lessee the amount of attorneys' fees expended by plaintiffs in successful defense of a prior action brought by the assignees of lessee. For convenience, we will refer to plaintiffs-appellants as if they were the original lessors and to defendants-respondents as if they were the original lessee.

The provision of the lease under which lessors seek recovery reads as follows: "if Lessee shall bring any action for any relief against Lessors, declaratory or otherwise, arising out of this lease, and Lessors shall prevail in such action, Lessee agrees to pay Lessors a reasonable attorney's fee which shall be taxed as part of the costs of such action."

Lessors prevailed in the earlier action but they did not in that action secure an award of attorneys' fees. In such prior action lessors (defendants there) set up a claim for attorneys' fees as a so-called affirmative defense; at the close of the first trial of the prior action lessors were allowed attorneys' fees as if they were costs, but on lessee's motion to tax costs the item for attorneys' fees was stricken; on the second trial of the prior action lessors, so far as their complaint discloses, over the objection of opposing counsel and without the consent of the court, announced their intention of "requesting this court to proceed in a separate proceeding to, if necessary, hear evidence as to the amount of any attorneys' fees which should be allowed, or to seek the recovery of that by way of an independent action."

We have concluded that the contract (lease) upon any reasonable construction requires that attorneys' fees be recovered, if at all, as if they were costs in the prior action. In this connection it is to be observed that plaintiffs' complaint in this action does not allege, and plaintiffs do not claim, that there is available to them extrinsic evidence which would permit construction of the contract other than according to the normal meaning of its language.

The complaint, with the proposed amendment, alleges:

The Lease: A photostatic copy of the lease is attached to and made a part of the complaint.¹ The following provisions of the lease relate to this controversy:

Lessors agree to furnish janitor service. "No additional locks shall be placed upon any doors of the premises * * *."

"Lessors shall be in no wise responsible for any loss of or damage to property from the leased premises, however occurring."

"In case Lessors shall bring suit to recover any rent due hereunder or for breach of any covenant of this lease, or to recover possession of the premises, and shall recover in the suit, or if Lessee shall bring any action for any relief against Lessors, declaratory or otherwise, arising out of this lease, and Lessors shall prevail in such action, Lessee agrees to pay Lessors a reasonable attorney's fee which shall be taxed as part of the costs of such action."

The Facts Concerning the Prior Action by Lessee: The complaint in the prior action alleged: The premises were leased with the provision that lessee place no additional locks upon the doors. Lessee "entrusted" the leased premises and their contents to lessors except when the premises were open for business. Lessors permitted their agents to have keys to the premises. Using these keys the agents wrongfully entered the premises and converted goods of lessee.

Issues were joined by answer of lessors. As a "ninth affirmative defense" the answer alleged that the lease contained the above quoted paragraph as to attorneys' fees and that $7,500 was a reasonable fee for the defense of the action. The answer prayed for recovery of that amount.

In the prior action lessee claimed that lessors' liability arose out of the landlord-tenant relationship and "relied upon the following facts:

"1. The fact that the lease prohibited the tenants from providing additional locks to their doors.

"2. That under the terms of the lease, the landlord retained keys to the tenant's premises and such keys were used in the theft of the tenant's property.

"3. The duty of a landlord, upon a lease being made, to secure the tenant in the quiet enjoyment of the premises.

"4. An implied term of the lease that the landlord did not permit the use of keys retained by her to be used in the theft of the tenant's property."

The first trial of the prior action resulted in a judgment of nonsuit. Lessors included in their memorandum of costs and disbursements an item of $7,500 for attorneys' fees. On lessee's motion to tax costs that item was stricken. Lessee appealed from the judgment of nonsuit and lessors appealed from the order striking the item for attorneys' fees. The District Court of Appeal (Maron v. Swig (1952), 115 Cal. App.2d 87, 92, 251 P.2d 770) reversed the judgment of nonsuit; it determined that, because of such reversal, the order granting the motion to tax costs was moot; therefore, it dismissed lessors' appeal from such order.

A second trial of the prior action was had before a jury. Before the matter was submitted to the jury the following occurred in chambers: Lessors' counsel said, "we are mindful of this affirmative defense. We are not to be considered as waiving it but have chosen to await the action of the jury in this case either for the purpose of then requesting this court to proceed in a separate proceeding to, if necessary, hear evidence as to the amount of any attorneys' fees which should be allowed, or to seek the recovery of that by way of an independent action." Lessee's counsel replied, "We don't consent to this procedure. I just want to make it clear that we are not consenting to such a procedure."

No evidence on the issue of attorneys' fees was offered at the second trial in the prior action, and the question of recovery of attorneys' fees by lessors was not referred to before the jury. It is alleged that the "affirmative defense" was "in fact withdrawn by * * * [lessors] at the trial of said case." But there is no allegation whether the trial court made any ruling as to the above quoted (and pleaded) colloquy of counsel, and no allegation as to whether attorneys' fees were included in lessors' memorandum of costs at the conclusion of the second trial of the prior action.

The second judgment in the prior action makes no mention of the subject of attorneys' fees. It is in the usual form of a judgment on a verdict for defendant. Such verdict and judgment in the prior action were for lessors (defendants there). Judgment became final without appeal.

The complaint in the present action further alleges: Lessors paid $24,250 attorneys' fees for defense of the prior action. That is a reasonable sum for the professional services rendered. Under date of "January —, 1955," lessors made written demand upon lessee for such sum. The complaint shows that January, 1955, was after the judgment in the prior action became final. Lessee has not paid or offered to pay the sum or any part thereof.

[1,2] The Nature of Attorneys' Fees Recoverable Only by Virtue of Contract: The texts accept the view of those cases which characterize attorneys' fees recoverable only by virtue of contract (and not as costs either by statute or by case law) as "damages." (13 Cal.Jur.2d, Costs, § 36; 14 Cal.Jur.2d, Damages, § 104; 3 Witkin, California Procedure (1954), pp. 1914-1915.) Such fees cannot be allowed a successful litigant without pleading and proof (or admission) that there is a contract provision for them. This is so whether the successful party is plaintiff (Brooks v. Forington (1897), 117 Cal. 219, 221, 48 P. 1073; Prescott v. Grady (1891), 91 Cal. 518, 522, 27 P. 755; Stubblefield v. Fickle (1954), 123 Cal.App.2d 325, 327, 266 P.2d 808) or defendant (Techow v. Pollack (1952), 111 Cal.App.2d 556, 558, 244 P.2d 915; City Investment Co. v. Pringle (1920), 49 Cal.App. 353, 355, 193 P. 504). But attorneys' fees are not like the usual item of damages, for the court may allow a reasonable attorneys' fee in the judgment without hearing evidence or making a finding as to the amount of such fee. (See Huber v. Shedoudy (1919), 180 Cal. 311, 313-314, 181 P. 63; Wagner v. Shapona (1954), 123 Cal.App.2d 451, 463-464, 267 P.2d 378; Pehau v. Stewart (1952), 112 Cal.App.2d 90, 97, 245 P.2d 692.)

2. In Wagner v. Shapona (1954), supra, 123 Cal.App.2d 451, 454, 463, 267 P.2d 378, the contract provided for "a reasonable attorney's fee which shall be fixed by the court as a part of the costs." Apparently the contractual provision was pleaded and proved. The trial court first allowed the fee in the main part of the judgment, then amended the judgment to direct that the

[3] It is particularly to be observed that where attorneys' fees are allowable solely by virtue of contract they cannot be recovered by merely including them in the memorandum of costs (City Investment Co. v. Pringle (1920), supra, 49 Cal.App. 353, 355, 193 P. 504.)² Therefore, lessors, in the prior action, properly set up their claim for attorneys' fees before it could be known whether there would occur an essential fact (lessors' prevailing in the prior action) which would give rise to a duty of lessee to pay attorneys' fees.

The Meaning of the Lease Provision as to Attorneys' Fees: Lessors argue that despite the provision of the lease that the fees "shall be taxed as costs in such [prior] action," they can recover such fees in this independent action. In support of this argument lessors cite Stockton Theatres, Inc., v. Palermo (1954), 124 Cal.App.2d 353, 268 P.2d 799 (hearing denied). That case allows recovery of attorneys' fees, in a separate action, under the following provision of a lease: "If either party shall commence any legal proceedings against the other for relief because of any default by the other because of failure to perform any term, covenant or condition of this lease and shall prevail in said action, the party who has commenced and prevailed in said legal proceeding shall recover, in addition to all court costs a reasonable attorney's fee to be fixed by the Court" (at pages 354-355 of 124 Cal.App.2d, at page 800 of 268 P.2d). Lessor recovered judgment in unlawful detainer and under a writ of restitution took possession of the leased premises. Lessee appealed and the judgment was reversed. In a subsequent action brought by lessee, lessee recovered attorneys' fees incurred in prosecution of the appeal. The District Court of Appeal fee be a part of the costs. The appellate court held that this procedure was proper, but reversed on other grounds. The Wagner case need not be taken as authority as to what is proper procedure where attorneys' fees are allowable by contract, since the cases on which it relies are cases where such fees were allowable by statute.

upheld the trial court's determination that the lessor's taking possession under the writ of restitution was a default within the meaning of the above quoted provision concerning attorneys' fees, and the lessee's taking of an appeal was the commencement of legal proceedings for relief because of such default. Adopting the opinion of the trial court, the District Court of Appeal said (at pages 364-365 of 124 Cal.App.2d, at pages 806-807 of 268 P.2d), "It has * * * been argued on behalf of Defendant Palermo [lessor] that the attorney's fee clause in the lease by its very terms requires that the attorney's fees must be recovered in the same proceeding in which relief is sought for a default. * * * [This argument] seem[s] to be a severe application of the theory of strict construction. In fairness the most that can be drawn from the language of this clause is that the parties contemplated such a procedure would be followed. It should be apparent that the attorney's fee clause creates a right to recover attorney's fees under certain circumstances and also describes a remedial procedure. The words of the clause do not designate this to be the solitary and exclusive remedy for the enforcement of this contractual right. If the attorney's fee clause were to be so construed then the result would be that under some circumstances a party would have a right without a remedy. The practical result of such a construction would be a partial invalidity of the attorney's fee clause. For these reasons this does not seem to be a proper case for the application of the rule 'expressio unius est exclusio alterius.'"

[4] Lessors urge that here, as in Stockton Theatres, Inc., v. Palermo (1954), supra, 124 Cal.App.2d 353, 268 P.2d 799, there would be no way for them to recover their attorneys' fees in the prior action. It is lessors' position that when the litigation concluded in their favor in the trial court they could only present evidence of services which had been rendered up to that time; they could not anticipate whether there would be an appeal and what attorneys' services would be required if there were.

There is no such practical difficulty, for when costs are awarded on appeal, the memorandum of costs on appeal is filed and taxed in the trial court (Code Civ.Proc., § 1034); and if a party is entitled to attorneys' fees on appeal, they can be determined by the trial court when it determines the costs on appeal. (See Cirimele v. Shinazy (1954), 124 Cal.App.2d 46, 53, 268 P.2d 210; Oakland California Towel Co. v. Roland (1949), 93 Cal.App.2d 713, 718-719, 209 P.2d 854.)

[5-7] The only "reasonable attorney's fee" which lessee agreed to pay was one "which shall be taxed as part of the costs of such [prior] action"; the extent of lessors' right and lessee's duty is measured by the terms of their agreement; the agreement manifestly contemplates that the fees should have been recovered in the litigation as to which they were incurred. This conclusion is strengthened by the consideration that the photostatic copy of the lease attached to the complaint shows that it was prepared by lessors and, therefore, should be construed against them. (See Basin Oil Co. v. Baash-Ross Tool Co. (1954), 125 Cal.App.2d 578, 595, 271 P.2d 122.) It is, of course, to be presumed that plaintiffs have stated their case as favorably to themselves as the facts permit. (Faulkner v. California Toll Bridge Authority (1953), 40 Cal.2d 317, 328 [6], 253 P.2d 659.)

Other Contentions: Lessee argues that it appears on the face of the complaint that the question of attorneys' fees was res judicata in the prior action and that this action is therefore barred. Lessee further argues that lessors have no right to attorneys' fees under the lease because the prior action was in tort for conversion and therefore, on lessee's view, was not an "action for any relief against Lessors * * * arising out of this lease." In view of our conclusion that the lease requires that attorneys' fees be recovered, if at all, by proceeding as if they were costs in the action in which they were incurred, it is unnecessary to discuss lessee's other arguments above stated.

[8] Plaintiffs purport to appeal from orders denying them leave to file the amendment to the complaint and denying their motion for reconsideration of the sustaining of the demurrer without leave to amend. These orders were made before judgment and are not appealable. The attempted appeals therefrom are dismissed.

For the reasons above stated, the judgment is affirmed.

Proceedings brought by union to compel arbitration under collective bargaining agreement. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Arnold Praeger, J., dismissed the petition, and the union appealed. The Supreme Court, Carter, J., held that there can be a mutual rescission or a waiver of arbitration provisions of collective bargaining agreement, and held that, on record presented, the trial court could properly find that union had in fact repudiated its right to arbitration.

Affirmed.

CARTER, Justice.

Pursuant to the statutory provisions concerning arbitration, Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1280-1293, Aller, petitioner, the business representative of a union, Local 659, International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees & Moving Picture Machine Operators (by stipulation the union was substituted as petitioner in place of Aller), filed against defendant, Color Corporation of America, a corporation (hereinafter referred to as Color), asking that Color be required to arbitrate a dispute under a collective bargaining agreement. Defendant answered, its main claim being that petitioner had lost its right to have the arbitration provision in the collective bargaining agreement enforced because it had repudiated and waived it. After hearing on the petition, the court gave judgment dismissing the proceeding and awarding costs to defendant. Petitioner appeals.

It is not disputed, and the court found, that Color, engaged in the film processing business, had collective bargaining agreements with five other unions in addition to petitioner and all contracts contained the same arbitration clause. The clause provided three steps in grievance procedure for settling disputes with regard to wages, hours or other conditions of employment, and the interpretation of the agreement, the first two being an attempt by representatives of Color, the employer, and the unions to settle the dispute. Failing settlement, the third provides for the appointment of an arbitrator by the parties within 10 days thereafter to settle it. Either party may proceed under the arbitration clause. Any grievance for the payment of dismissal pay not presented under the first step shall be deemed waived unless presented 365 days after the employee becomes entitled to such pay. Under the collective bargaining agreements employees are entitled to "dismissal pay" but the employer is not liable therefor if the employee was dismissed "for any other cause or causes beyond the control of the" employer, Color. In 1954, Color closed its plant and dismissed all of its employees, including Krog, Ragin and Moore who were members of petitioner, Local 659. In August, 1954, a dispute arose between Color and the unions as to whether the dismissed union employees should receive dismissal pay inasmuch as Color claimed that under the bargaining agreement the dismissals were for causes beyond their control and the union contended otherwise. All of the unions except petitioner, Local 659, and defendant proceeded with the grievance and arbitration procedure and those proceedings are still pending. Defendant has expended over $300 as expenses of the proceedings.

The trial court also found in addition to the foregoing that defendant is not in "default" in proceeding with arbitration but petitioner is and hence the instant proceedings should be dismissed; that petitioner has been guilty of unreasonable delay in bringing the proceeding and is estopped to seek enforcement of the arbitration provision; that defendant's demands on petitioner to arbitrate during the grievance procedure by the other unions were refused by petitioner and it wilfully failed and refused to comply with the arbitration provision and instead elected to and did bring proceedings against petitioner before the state labor commissioner to collect dismissal pay.

[1] Petitioner argues that under the law it could not lose its right to have the arbitration provision enforced and under the facts, as a matter of law, it did not. Defendant urges that petitioner lost his right to arbitration and the evidence supports the trial court's finding in this respect. No question is raised as to whether the dispute here involved was subject to arbitration under the arbitration statute and the collective bargaining contract.

The evidence on the subject is by affidavit and letters. In an affidavit by Bernstein, counsel for Color, offered by Color, it is stated: That on August 5 and 12, 1954, he explained defendant's position on the dispute to petitioner's representatives, that is, that it was not liable for dismissal pay. On the 18th, it agreed with counsel for the unions other than petitioner, that grievance and arbitration procedure was necessary; on August 25th, he was advised that the labor commissioner had issued an order (dated August 19th) to appear before him on a charge by petitioner that defendant was invoking section 222 of the Labor Code;¹ that he explained the arbitration

provision to the commissioner; that on September 2nd he met with the commissioner and petitioner's representative Nave and asked Nave to dismiss the complaint before the commissioner and arbitrate under the bargaining agreement but Nave refused; that after some correspondence with the commissioner, Stone, defendant's vice president, on September 22nd, wrote a letter (sending a copy to petitioner) reviewing the matter of arbitration and stating: "By this action and by the action of IATSE Local 659 [petitioner], you are requiring us to defend our position in court in the face of the fact that our bargaining agreement provides otherwise. We intend to hold both you and Local 659 fully responsible for all consequences resulting from this ill-advised action"; that on September 29th petitioner wrote to Stone stating: "Our dispute with you is not a matter of interpretation but one of non-payment and we are prepared to show that you have wilfully refused to make such payment and that you were not compelled to go out of business, as you claimed you were in the defense raised in the arbitration proceeding. Even that is not a good defense in the current hearing with the other unions, but since they have elected to take the other course, that is their problem. The best way to settle this matter is to let everyone testify under oath and I would certainly expect you to be very willing to accept this judicial process of settling disputes. After all, when one is under oath, the truth and only the truth will prevail"; that on September 27th the commission advised defendant that petitioner insisted on criminal proceedings and the matter will be referred to the "city attorney." Stone's affidavit, offered by defendant, stated that he had a "great many telephone conversations" with Aller before and after January 11, 1955, and prior to Aller's letter of September 29, 1954, he made "repeated demands" upon Aller that Local 659 abide by the terms of the bargaining and arbitrate the dispute; that after the receipt of that letter "and in every subsequent conversation, I informed Mr. Aller that the Company considered his tactics in this whole matter to be reprehensible, that the Company [defendant] chose to consider those tactics and his unequivocal refusal to arbitrate as a repudiation and breach of the contract, and that the Company would no longer consent to an arbitration"; he acknowledged receiving the letters Aller mentions in his affidavit but denies the agreement mentioned by Aller.

Aller in his affidavit on behalf of petitioner stated he denied Local 659 had ever refused to arbitrate the dispute but defendant refused to cooperate and he and Stone agreed to "hold in abeyance" all disputes until one of the other union's (Local 683) arbitration had been completed; he refers to letters he says he sent to Stone during January, March and April, 1955, demanding arbitration inasmuch as the arbitration with Local 683 had been favorable to that union.

The question thus presented is whether or not there has been a waiver, mutual rescission, repudiation, laches, or estoppel by or on behalf of petitioner in the enforcement of the arbitration clause. We are not concerned here with any question involving the repudiation or violation of the terms of the bargaining agreement other than the arbitration provision. See conflict of authorities on that subject: 3 A.L.R.2d 383. Section 1280 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that a provision in a written contract to settle by arbitration a controversy arising out of the contract or the refusal to perform the whole or any part thereof "shall be valid, enforceable and irrevocable, save upon such grounds as exist at law or in equity for the revocation of any contract". (Emphasis added.) It is thus indicated that there may be instances in which the right to enforce an arbitration provision is lost. This is further shown by other provisions. A party aggrieved by the failure or refusal of another to perform under a contract providing for arbitration may have the provision enforced by the court; the court shall hear the matter and on being satisfied the failure to comply with the arbitration "is not in issue" shall order the arbitration to proceed; if "default" be in issue, that shall be tried. Id., § 1282. If any action be brought on the issue arising out of the contract for arbitration the court shall stay the action upon being satisfied that the issue is referable to arbitration provided the "applicant for the stay is not in default in proceeding with" the arbitration. Id., § 1284. It is also evident that defendant could have proceeded to enforce the provision for arbitration under the code when petitioner refused to arbitrate.

In harmony with the arbitration statute, supra, it has been held that the arbitration provision of a contract may be waived by either or both of the parties by litigating the dispute which would be arbitrable under the provision and not raising the question of the arbitration provision, Case v. Kadota Fig Ass'n, 35 Cal.2d 596, 220 P.2d 912; Trubowitch v. Riverbank Canning Co., 30 Cal.2d 335, 182 P.2d 182; Jones v. Pollock, 34 Cal.2d 863, 215 P.2d 733; Landreth v. South Coast Rock Co., 136 Cal.App. 457, 29 P.2d 225; Pierce v. Wright, 117 Cal. App.2d 718, 256 P.2d 1049; Fejer v. Paonessa, 104 Cal.App.2d 190, 231 P.2d 507; Wilson v. Mattei, 84 Cal.App. 567, 258 P. 453; Almacenes Fernandez, S. A., v. Golodetz, 2 Cir., 148 F.2d 625, 161 A.L.R. 1426, 117 A.L.R. 302; see, Squire's Dept. Store, Inc., v. Dudum, 115 Cal.App.2d 320, 252 P.2d 418, and that a failure by a party to proceed to arbitrate in the manner and at the time provided in the arbitration provision is a waiver of the right to insist on arbitration as a defense to an action on the contract. See Pneucrete Corp. v. United States Fid. & G. Co., 7 Cal.App.2d 733, 46 P.2d 1000; Jordan v. Friedman, 73 Cal.App. 2d 726; see 117 A.L.R. 302; 161 A.L.R. 1426. There may be a mutual rescission. See Drake v. Stein, 116 Cal.App.2d 779, 254 P.2d 613. It has been said: "In the light of present-day arbitration statutes, most agreements to arbitrate future disputes are likely to be held to be lawful and valid; and under such statutes the courts may stay proceedings at law and order the arbitration to go forward. When one of the parties is resisting such an order, the court must make two principal determinations before issuing it. First was a valid agreement to arbitrate ever made by the parties and is it still operative? Secondly, does the dispute that now exists fall within the terms of that agreement, reasonably interpreted? In the present action we are dealing only with the former of these questions.

"* * * the arbitration agreement * * * if lawful, may have been rescinded, repudiated, or avoided. The parties to such an agreement have power to rescind it by mutual agreement to that effect. The ordinary arbitration statutes do not deprive them of this power. The parties may, however, rescind other agreements that they have made, without intending to affect their agreement to arbitrate disputes. The agreement to arbitrate may be wholly separate from other transactions; or, although contained in a single written instrument with other provisions, it may be wholly independent of them—a separate and collateral agreement.

"Although one party can not by himself 'rescind' a contract, he can wrongfully 'repudiate' it. What is the effect of his repudiation? To answer this, we must first interpret his expressions and determine the coverage of the repudiation. Suppose first that he repudiates the agreement to arbitrate itself. By such a repudiation he does not deprive the other party of his right to arbitration; and if the repudiator brings an action in breach of his valid arbitration agreement the defendant can defend on the ground that arbitration is a condition precedent, or under a statute can obtain a stay or an order to arbitrate, or can counterclaim for damages. But such a repudiator has himself no right to arbitration. The other party can now bring his action in reliance on the repudiation, or otherwise change his position in reliance. Thereafter, the repudiator has no power of retraction and can not insist on the remedy by arbitration. * * *

"In determining whether a repudiation or other vital breach of a contract should deprive a party of his right to an arbitration of the existing dispute, the court should consider the form and extent of the repudiation or breach and the reasons for which it occurred. A repudiation that clearly includes the arbitration provision itself should prevent the repudiator from using it in defense when sued in the courts. If the provision is not itself repudiated and the issue that is raised by the alleged breach is one that is within the coverage of the provision, the defendant should be supported in insisting on arbitration of the issue unless his bad faith and wilful misconduct are sufficiently obvious to justify a discretionary refusal of such support." Corbin on Contracts, § 1443. In Tas-T-Nut Co. v. Continental Nut Co., 125 Cal.App.2d 351, 354, 270 P.2d 43, 46, the court, while holding the evidence insufficient to show a waiver or repudiation of an arbitration provision, proceeded to discuss applicable principles. It said: "* * * it has often been held the right to arbitrate can be waived [citations], and that whether or not waiver has taken place is ordinarily a question of fact, yet we are compelled to hold upon the record here that there is no support for the trial court's finding that the appellant had ever waived the provision of the contract binding the parties to proceed in arbitration if controversies arose between them. The right to arbitrate is of course possessed by each party to the agreement and notwithstanding one party may impede the normal course of arbitration such conduct cannot dispense with the right of the other party to compel it. Our statute affords complete remedies to implement and to specifically enforce this right. If, therefore, one party to an arbitration agreement has by dilatory tactics or an express refusal to proceed with arbitration placed himself in such a position that the other party could accede to the abandonment of the arbitration clause, yet such party need not do so. * * * But this is an election which it must make for it cannot keep alive in itself the right to arbitrate and at the same time deny it to its adversary. Krauss Bros. Lbr. Co. v. Louis Bossert & Sons, 2

Cir., 62 F.2d 1004, 1006. Said the court as to one party to an arbitration agreement who had ignored that agreement and brought action in a state court:

"* * * The state action was indeed a repudiation of the plaintiff's own promise to arbitrate; it gave the defendant an election, taking the plaintiff at its word, to put an end to the arbitration clause, or to insist upon performance. By its plea in the answer it chose the second course. * * * It is true that it did not follow this up by selecting an arbitrator as it had promised to do. Until it did, it was therefore not in position to enjoin prosecution of the action under section 5 of the New York Arbitration Act * * * and delay to do so might indeed forfeit its recourse to that remedy. * * * But, so far as concerned the plaintiff's repudiation, it had chosen not to call off the clause, not to "rescind" it; and it could not prevent the plaintiff's resumption of the remedy, while its own position remained unchanged."

"The above holding by the federal court is no more than an application of the familiar rule that if an agreement be breached the party against whom the breach is committed may refuse to accept the breach or terminate the contract, thus keeping the contract alive, but that if he does so he keeps it alive both for the benefit of himself and for that of the other contracting party." Williston on Contracts, Rev. Ed., § 684; Alder v. Drudis, 30 Cal.2d 372, 381, 182 P.2d 195."

In the instant case it appears that the dispute under the collective bargaining agreement arose in August, 1954 between petitioner and all the other unions and the other unions commenced the grievance and arbitration procedure. Petitioner however, refused to participate. The dispute with all the unions was exactly the same, whether dismissal pay was to be paid under the contract. In the same month petitioner complained to the state labor commissioner that pay (dismissal pay) was being withheld contrary to section 222 of the Labor Code, supra, and the commissioner issued his order for a hearing on that subject. On September 29th petitioner, by Aller, wrote the letter to defendant heretofore quoted and it was in response to a demand that petitioner arbitrate. While not too clear, that letter is readily susceptible of the construction that petitioner did not wish to arbitrate but preferred to proceed before the labor commissioner. In any case, Stone's affidavit shows that defendant's repeated demands on petitioner, both before and after the letter, that it arbitrate, had been refused and after the letter he informed Aller that petitioner's repudiation of the arbitration provision and refusal to arbitrate was a breach of the contract and defendant would "no longer consent" to arbitration. There is some conflict on the matter by reason of Aller's affidavit but the resolution of that conflict was for the trial court. Even if the letter did not constitute an unequivocal refusal to arbitrate, Stone's affidavit shows other unequivocal refusals and defendant's acceptance thereof. For the same reason it is not necessary to consider the proceeding before the labor commissioner; there is sufficient without it. Aller in his letters to Stone of January 11, 1955, and thereafter indicated a desire to arbitrate, but we take it from Bernstein's and Stone's affidavits that there had before then been a repudiation of the arbitration provision and acceptance thereof by defendant. Indeed, it may well be concluded from those affidavits that there was a mutual rescission of the provision for arbitration.

[2] A repudiation of a contract accepted by the promisor excuses performance by the promisee. Bomberger v. McKelvey, 35 Cal.2d 607, 220 P.2d 729; Walker v. Harbor Business Blocks Co., 181 Cal. 773, 186 P. 356; Civ.Code, § 1511. And it is said in Dessert Seed Co. v. Garbus, 66 Cal.App.2d 838, 847, 153 P.2d 184, 189: "It is well settled that an abandonment of a contract may be implied from the acts of the parties and this may be accomplished by the repudiation of the contract by one of the parties and by the acquiescence of the other party in such repudiation. This doctrine is supported by many cases. [Citations.]

"In support of the court's findings and judgment, the evidence would warrant a conclusion that there had been a mutual abandonment or rescission of the oral contract."

[3] *Amicus curiae*² contends on behalf of petitioner on petition for hearing in this court that the proceeding by petitioner before the labor commissioner and the steps for enforcement by the commissioner of section 222 of the Labor Code, supra, cannot be considered as an election of remedies by petitioner as it would mean that the arbitration provisions would control over that section and the policy thereby established by the Legislature relying upon Pneucrete Corp. v. U. S. Fid. & G. Co., 7 Cal.App.2d 733, 46 P.2d 1000, and Wallace v. Carpenters Local Union, etc., 137 Cal. App.2d 468, 290 P.2d 583. In the Pneucrete case the court declared that an action would lie on a materialman's bond given by the contractor as required by statute when there was a construction contract between the contractor and a flood control district, even though there was an arbitration provision in the construction contract because the bond was required by statute and to allow arbitration to prevent an action thereon would frustrate the public policy requiring the bond. In the Wallace case it was held that the employer could obtain an injunction authorized by the law against jurisdictional strikes, Lab. Code, §§ 1115-1120, even though there was an arbitration clause in the collective bargaining agreement. It is unnecessary to pass upon that point, however, because the judgment is otherwise supportable as seen from the foregoing discussion. Moreover, we see no frustration in the policy declared in section 222 in treating a proceeding thereunder as some indication that petitioner was abandoning or repudiating the arbitration provision.

Assuming the right to enforce the provisions of section 222 cannot be and is not waived by an arbitration provision, a person's conduct in pursuing the remedy provided for under this section is some evidence that he does not intend to arbitrate. What the labor commissioner or a prosecuting attorney may or may not do in enforcing the section has no bearing on the arbitration provision, but what the party to the contract containing the arbitration clause does, may throw some light on his intention.

The judgment is affirmed.

Defendant appeals from a judgment of guilty after a trial before a jury of violating section 11500 of the Health and Safety Code (the unlawful sale of narcotics, to wit, marijuana). He also appeals from the order denying his motion for a new trial.

Questions

[1] First: Was defendant denied a speedy trial as guaranteed him under article I, section 13, of the California Constitution?

No. The record discloses that an information was filed against defendant on June 17, 1955, and that the trial was completed July 7, 1955. It is thus apparent that defendant was tried well within the 60-day period specified in section 1382 of the Penal Code.*

* Section 1382 of the Penal Code reads in part: "The court, unless good cause to the contrary is shown, must order the action to be dismissed in the following cases: * * *

"2. If a defendant, whose trial has

[2] Second: Was there substantial evidence to sustain the verdict of guilty?

Yes. A federal narcotics agent testified in detail to the purchase from defendant of a quantity of marijuana, the transaction taking place in the agent's presence. This testimony, which was believed by the jury, constituted substantial evidence to sustain the verdict.

[3] Third: Did the deputy district attorney commit prejudicial error in his argument to the jury?

No. During the course of the prosecutor's argument to the jury he said: "May it please the Court; Ladies and Gentlemen of the Jury. It now becomes my privilege to make you the final argument. Right off I want to say I am not throwing in the sponge, as Mr. Casalina led you to believe. I think this man is guilty; I don't think that he is just a little pusher; I think he is a supplier; and I think he is guilty of this offense.

"Now Mr. Casalina said the guilty man has pleaded guilty, so it is all washed up and we ought to know it. That is not true, Ladies and Gentlemen of the Jury. I wouldn't be standing here telling you that if I didn't believe it. It is my duty as a Deputy District Attorney to only prosecute the people that I believe are guilty. In this case I sincerely believe Mr. Hampton is guilty."

The rule is established that unless the harmful results of misconduct of the district attorney cannot be obviated by appropriate instructions of the trial court, error cannot be predicated in this court on such alleged misconduct in the absence of (a) assignment of such misconduct as error; and (b) a request to the trial court to instruct the jury to disregard it. (People v. Sampsell, 34 Cal.2d 757, at page 764, 214 P.2d 813; People v. Byrd, 42 Cal.2d 200, at page 208 [3], 266 P.2d 505; *People v. not been postponed upon his application, is not brought to trial in a superior court within 60 days after the finding of

In the present case the foregoing rule is applicable. An examination of the entire record shows that the acts complained of are of such a character that an objection thereto and an instruction from the trial court to the jury to disregard the alleged misconduct would have obviated any prejudicial effect that the alleged improper remarks might have had.

Therefore, since the record fails to show that defendant either objected to the alleged misconduct or requested the trial court to instruct the jury to disregard it, defendant may not urge the alleged error as prejudicial in this court.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

These are two appeals, consolidated by stipulation, from orders of the superior court instructing (1) the executor of the last will and testament of Mabel C. Carter, deceased, and (2) the trustee under the last will and testament of Fred M. Carter, deceased, to the effect that Mabel C. Carter did not by her will exercise the power of appointment given to her by the will of her predeceased husband, Fred M. Carter.

Appellants are five charities which are residuary legatees under the will of Mabel C. Carter but which are not mentioned in the will of Fred M. Carter.

Fred M. Carter and his wife, Mabel C. Carter, each executed wills on September 30, 1949, in the office of their attorney, W. W. Jacka, who had been practicing law since 1933 and prior to that time had been a trust officer for a bank. Mr. Carter later executed one codicil to his will. He died September 7, 1951. Mrs. Carter executed nine codicils to her will, and died April 21, 1954.

Mr. Carter's will was limited to his separate property and his share of the community property. It left his personal effects to his wife and the residue in two trusts, Trust A and Trust B. The entire income from each trust was to be paid to his wife during her lifetime. Trust A authorized his wife to add to it from her separate or community estate if she so wished, to make withdrawals from the corpus of Trust A, and

"(e) With respect to the said Trust A, my said wife is hereby granted a power to appoint the entire corpus thereof free of the Trust, in favor of her own estate or of any other beneficiary or beneficiaries whom my said wife may designate, which power shall be exercisable by my said wife alone, and in all events but shall be effective only if exercised by a valid will of my said wife."

In the event of non-exercise of the power of appointment by Mrs. Carter, Mr. Carter's will provided that the residue of Trust A went into Trust B, which was bequeathed to 28 specific legatees with the residue to respondent, Church Divinity School of the Pacific.

Mrs. Carter did not transfer her estate into Trust A as was authorized in Mr. Carter's will. The will of Mrs. Carter does not refer in express terms to the power of appointment given her by her husband's will. In her original will paragraph fifth (n) read as follows: "All the rest, residue and remainder of my estate, whether the same be real, personal or mixed and where-soever the same may be situated, including any and all lapsed bequests under this Will, I give, devise and bequeath unto said Church Divinity School of the Pacific, Berkeley, California, without any restrictions as to the use thereof."

By a codicil dated March 1, 1953, the foregoing paragraph was changed to read: "All the rest, residue and remainder of my estate, whether the same be real, personal or mixed, and wheresoever the same may be situated, including any and all lapsed bequests under this will, I give, devise and bequeath equally to the following organizations and institutions:

"Shriners Hospitals for Crippled Children, San Francisco, California.

"Church Divinity School of the Pacific, Berkeley, California.

"Santa Clara County Heart Association.

"American Cancer Society, Santa Clara County Chapter.

"Crippled Children's Society of Santa Clara County, Inc.

"National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis, Inc., Santa Clara County Chapter."

Over objection of appellants, the attorney who prepared the wills and several codicils was permitted to testify to conversations with the testator and testatrix relative to the terms of their wills and the codicil of March 1, 1953, and in particular to statements of Mrs. Carter to the effect that she did not intend by her will or the codicil of March 1, 1953, to exercise her power of appointment under Trust A; also that he had advised Mr. and Mrs. Carter that the power of appointment could only be exercised by a will or codicil, (a) executed after the death of Mr. Carter, which (b) contained language expressly exercising the power of appointment.

Such testimony was admitted subject to a motion to strike. The trial judge did not expressly rule on the objection but in rendering his decision filed a memorandum opinion in which he stated: "It is my opinion also that the clause in the will under consideration is not ambiguous and therefore Judge Jacka's testimony was not necessary."

These questions are presented for our determination:

First: Did Mrs. Carter by her will exercise the power of appointment given to her by the will of her predeceased husband?

This question must be answered in the affirmative and is governed by these pertinent rules:

[1] (1) Where the language of a will is clear and unambiguous it must be interpreted according to its ordinary meaning and legal import and the intention of the testator ascertained therefrom. (In re Estate of Willson, 171 Cal. 449, at page

[2] (2) A devise or bequest of all the testator's real or personal property, in express terms, or in any other terms denoting his intent to dispose of all his real or personal property, passes all the real or personal property which he was entitled to dispose of by will at the time of his death, including property embraced in a power to devise. (Prob.Code, § 125; California Trust Co. v. Ott, 59 Cal.App.2d 715, at page 717 [1], 140 P.2d 79; Childs v. Gross, 41 Cal.App.2d 680, at page 687, 107 P.2d 424; Harvard Trust Co. v. Frost [Mass.], 154 N.E. 863, at page 864 [5]; cf. Morffew v. San Francisco & S. R. R. Co., 107 Cal. 587, at page 590 et seq., 40 P. 810.)

In California Trust Co. v. Ott, supra, 59 Cal.App.2d at page 716, 140 P.2d at page 80, the following provision in a will was held to be the exercise by the donee of a power of appointment: "I give, devise and bequesth to my beloved wife, Phebe Ott, of Los Angeles, California, all the rest and residue of my estate, both real, personal and mixed, of every kind and nature, wherever the same may be situate, absolute, forever."

The court said 59 Cal.App.2d at page 717, 140 P.2d at page 80: "The trial court found 'that said Francis S. Ott, Deceased, intended to and did exercise in his Last Will above set forth, his power of appointment.' We have reached the conclusion that the finding is supported. The will of Francis S. Ott purports, certainly, to devise all his real and personal property; the fifth subdivision clearly gives it that effect, following as it does the two specific bequests. Section 1330 of the Civil Code, as it read from the adoption of that code in 1872 until the section was repealed to emerge as a part of section 125, Probate Code, in 1931, provides: 'Real or personal property embraced in a power to devise, passes by a will purporting to devise all the real or personal property of the testator.' We entertain no doubt that the effect of section 1330 has not been affected by its reenactment in a new context and in new words (Prob.Code, sec. 2; Childs v. Gross, (1940) 41 Cal.App.2d 680, 687, 688 [107 P.2d 424]), but we do not need to so hold, for the section, being one of interpretation, continues to control in this case, where the will and trust agreement were both drawn before the section was rewritten into the Probate Code. (See Medical Finance Ass'n v. Wood, (1936) 20 Cal.App. 2d Supp. 749, 750 [63 P.2d 1219], and cases cited.) By virtue of section 1330, therefore, the will was properly interpreted as an exercise of the power, to devise the trust property, which the trustor-husband had retained."

The provisions of the will of Mr. Ott in the cited case, which were held to constitute an exercise of his power of appointment, are almost identical with the provisions of Mrs. Carter's will in the instant case.

[3] (3) Where a will is drawn by an experienced and competent lawyer it is presumed that legal terms embodied in the will are used in their legal sense. (In re Estate of Rutan, 119 Cal.App.2d 592, at page 598 [2], 260 P.2d 111; In re Estate of Hollingsworth, 37 Cal.App.2d 432, at page 436 [3], 99 P.2d 599; In re Estate of Bourn, supra, 25 Cal.App.2d at page 595 [1], 78 P.2d 193; In re Estate of Northcutt, 16 Cal.2d 683, at page 689, 107 P.2d 607.)

Respondent claims that two paragraphs of Mrs. Carter's will indicate her intention not to exercise her power of appointment by the general bequest in paragraph fifth (n). First, respondent urges that in the fourth paragraph of her will relating to her bequest to her husband of all her estate if she predeceased him, after using other descriptive words, she said: "and of which I have the right of testamentary disposition." Respondent claims the quoted words do not appear in the general bequest in paragraph fifth (n) and therefore she did not intend to exercise her power of appointment by paragraph fifth (n).

This argument fails for the reason that paragraph fourth covers the situation of her death prior to that of her husband, at which time there would be no power of appointment. There would be a community estate and property held in her husband's name in which she, as a result of community property laws, had a right of testamentary disposition. This community property right would not exist after the death of her husband as their community property rights would have terminated, and thus there was no reason for her to use the expression in providing for disposition of her property after his death.

Secondly, referring to the language in the sixth paragraph of Mrs. Carter's will, reading:

"If at the time of my death I have transferred my estate into the trusts provided under the terms of the will of my husband, Fred M. Carter, for my benefit, then and in that event the bequests set forth in Subdivisions a, b, c, d, e, f, g, h, i, j, k, l, and m of Paragraph Fifth shall lapse and be of no effect for the reason that the said bequests will have been provided for under the terms of my said husband's will," respondent argues that Mrs. Carter says that if she transfers her estate into the trust provided under her husband's will the 13 enumerated bequests lapse because they are "provided for under the terms of my said husband's will"; that an examination of her husband's will shows that he provided for the same bequests but only if his wife transferred her property into the trusts and failed to exercise her power of appointment; and that therefore Mrs. Carter did not intend to exercise her power of appointment when she used the language in paragraph fifth (n) showing intent to dispose of "all her property."

This argument also fails for the reason that it does not take into consideration the fact that in addition to the 13 specific bequests mentioned, Mrs. Carter provided 34 specific bequests and directed that the residue be given to six charities, and that in the event she transferred her estate into the trusts, these bequests could not have been satisfied unless she did exercise her power of appointment. By the terms of Mr. Carter's will, in the absence of an exercise by Mrs. Carter of her power of appointment, an intestacy would have resulted not only as to the 13 bequests but as to the entire estate.

After providing for the care of his wife for her life, the only dispositive language in his will is in paragraph eighth, and on two conditions, (a) that his wife transfer her estate into the trusts, and (b) that she did not exercise her power of appointment. Mrs. Carter made no such transfer and there was thus a complete intestacy under her husband's will which was cured when the draftsman of the decree of distribution of his will inserted appropriate language in the decree. It thus is evident that there is nothing in Mrs. Carter's will contrary to the express language of paragraph fifth (n) whereby she disposed of "all" her property, which included the power of appointment.

[4] Applying the foregoing rules to the facts in the instant case, it is apparent that the language of Mrs. Carter's will was clear and unambiguous. Therefore, under rule (1), supra, it was the duty of the court to ascertain her intention from this document. Under rule (2), which is the established law of this state, the testatrix by disposing of "all the rest, residue and remainder" of her estate exercised her power of appointment, it being presumed under rule (3), supra, since her will and the codicils thereto were prepared by a lawyer of experience and competence that she understood the terms and meaning of the provisions of her will.

She was as much the owner of the corpus of Trust A as she was of the stocks, bonds and other personal property standing in her own name. She received the entire income of the trust without deduction even for expenses of the trustee, and she had the absolute right to add to or make withdrawals from the corpus. In addition, she had an unlimited power of disposition over the corpus by her will. The power of appointment was thus not any different as a practical matter or in legal effect from a commercial bank account. It is obvious that respondent could not logically argue that notwithstanding her bequest of "all her property" she intended to omit funds on deposit with a bank. Her will shows her express intent to leave "all" her property to specified legatees and the remainder to six charities named in the codicil of March 1, 1953.

Second: Did the trial court err in permitting testatrix' attorney to testify regarding her oral declarations to show her intent to exercise or not exercise a power of appointment by her will?

Yes. Section 105 of the Probate Code provides: "When there is an imperfect description, or no person or property exactly answers the description, mistakes and omissions must be corrected, if the error appears from the context of the will or from extrinsic evidence, excluding the oral declarations of the testator as to his intentions; and when an uncertainty arises upon the face of a will, as to the application of any of its provisions, the testator's intention is to be ascertained from the words of the will, taking into view the circumstances under which it was made, excluding such oral declarations."

In interpreting this section it has been held in California that oral declarations of a testator to the attorney who drew his will are admissible in two types of cases:

(1) Where there is a latent ambiguity in identification of the intended beneficiaries, that is, which of several persons fitting the description of the beneficiary in the will, was intended by the testator to be the recipient (In re Estate of Nunes, 123 Cal. App.2d 150, at page 156 [3], 266 P.2d 574; In re Estate of Donnellan, 164 Cal. 14, at page 19 et seq., 127 P. 166.); and

The rule is thus accurately stated in Hogle v. Hogle, 49 Hun. 313, 2 N.Y.S. 172, at page 173: "In the case of Charter v. Charter, L.R. 7 H.L. 364, affirming L.R. 2 Prob. & Div. 315, the question of extrinsic evidence in regard to wills was fully discussed. 1 Moak.Eng.R. 249; 12 Moak.Eng. R. 1. It was held that evidence of the state, circumstances, and habits of the family was admissible to aid in the construction of a will; that the only case in which evidence of the declarations of the testator could be received is where the description of the legatee, or of the thing bequeathed, is equally applicable, in all its parts, to two persons or to two things. We have cited this English case because it was very carefully considered; and, while the opinions given in the house of lords did not agree in everything, they did agree as to the point above stated about declarations of the testator. If a testator gave a legacy to, 'my nephew John Smith,' and had two nephews of that name, or if a testator gave to a legatee 'my black horse Tom,' and had two black horses by that name, in each of those instances, according to that decision, declarations of the testator would be admissible. But only in such and similar cases. But in the present case declarations of the testatrix were admitted to show that she intended to execute a power of appointment. Such declarations were inadmissible. They do not come within the exception stated in that case, even assuming that such exception is the rule in this state. The same doctrine is distinctly stated in White v. Hicks, 33 N.Y. [383] 387."

The decision of White v. Hicks, 33 N.Y. 383, cited in the foregoing quotation, has been followed by this court. (See Morffew

v. San Francisco & S. R. R. Co., 107 Cal. 587, at page 600, 40 P. 810.)

Respondent concedes that there is not any latent ambiguity in Mrs. Carter's will justifying the admission of testimony of her oral instructions to her attorney, but concedes, as the trial court found, "on the face of the will its meaning would appear clear and free of doubt."

[5] In view of the foregoing authorities the trial court erred in admitting testimony relative to the oral declarations of the testatrix to her attorney.

For the above reasons, the orders are reversed, with directions to the trial court to enter orders instructing the executor and trustee respectively that decedent, Mabel C. Carter, did by her last will and testament exercise the power of appointment over Trust A which she held under the terms of the will and decree of distribution in the estate of her husband, Fred M. Carter.

47 Cal.2d 209

The PEOPLE of the State of California,
Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Earl Compton GREEN, Jr., Defendant and Appellant.

Cr. 5782.

Supreme Court of California.

In Bank.

Oct. 19, 1956.

Rehearing Denied Nov. 14, 1956.

Defendant was convicted of first degree murder and penalty fixed at death by a jury's verdict. The Superior Court, Ventura County, Walter J. Fourt, J., rendered judgment sentencing defendant to death, and he appealed. The Supreme Court, Schauer, J., held that instruction to fix penalty at death, if jury found defendant guilty of first degree murder and did not find extenuating facts or circumstances to lighten punishment, was error prejudicial to defendant as to penalty, so as to require reversal of judgment to such extent and remand of cause for retrial of such question of penalty only.

Judgment affirmed as to adjudication of defendant's guilt of first degree murder, but reversed on question of penalty and cause remanded for retrial and redetermination of such question only and pronouncement of new sentence and judgment in accord with such determination and applicable law.

Spence, J., Gibson, C. J., and Shenk, J., dissented in part.

1. Homicide \S 253(1)

Evidence was sufficient to support conviction of first degree murder.

2. Homicide \S 253(6)

In murder prosecution, jury could and having found defendant guilty of first degree murder, presumptively did, believe prosecution's theory of evidence that murder was of first degree because committed in perpetration of robbery, and could and did reject defendant's theory that if defendant formed no intention to take victim's money or other property until after he struck victim for last time, killing was not first degree murder committed in perpetration of robbery, as jurors were fairly instructed in event they accepted defendant's theory. West's Ann.Pen.Code, \S 189.

3. Criminal Law \S 721½(2), 1186(4)

In murder prosecution, district attorney's comment in argument to jury that defendant called no one to corroborate his testimony that he wore victim's watch, which he testified that victim loaned him, when he visited his wife for a few days before killing, was improper insofar as it could be understood by jury as referring to defendant's failure to produce his wife's testimony, but not sufficiently important to prejudice defendant in jury's eyes and result in miscarriage of justice. West's Ann. Const. art. 6, § 4½.

4. Criminal Law ⚖️703

A map or sketch, though not independently admissible in evidence, may be used as aid to prosecuting attorney's opening statement to jury, within trial court's discretion, if it fairly serves a proper purpose.

5. Criminal Law ⚖️703

The purpose of prosecuting attorney's opening statement to jury is to prepare jurors' minds to follow evidence and more readily discern its materiality, force and effect, and matters admissible and subsequently received in evidence may be used to aid such purpose.

6. Criminal Law ⚖️703

In murder prosecution, permission of prosecuting attorney to use, in connection with his opening statement to jury, a motion picture, subsequently received in evidence, of locations where events in question occurred, articles subsequently introduced in evidence as exhibits, and photographs of decedent's wounds and of defendant in prison garb, was within trial court's discretion.

7. Jury ⚖️97(1)

A sworn juror's bias, as disclosed by her statements during selection of alternative jurors, that she had concluded that she would be unable to act impartially and did not think she would be fair to prosecution, supported trial judge's finding of good cause for such juror's discharge, as requested by her. West's Ann.Pen.Code, §§ 1089, 1123.

8. Criminal Law ⚖️796

To aid jury in fixing punishment of one convicted of crime, court may instruct jury as to consequences of different penalties which may be imposed, so that intelligent decision may be made.

9. Criminal Law ⚖️1171(1)

In murder prosecution, district attorney's argument to jury that proper punishment of defendant, if convicted of first degree murder, was not life imprisonment, but death penalty, because one sentenced to life imprisonment may be paroled after seven years, was not ground for reversal of such conviction on appeal, in absence of showing that defendant asked permission to produce evidence or to comment as to minimum, average and maximum terms of imprisonment being served for first degree murder. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 190.

10. Homicide ⚖️354

Under statute providing that person guilty of first degree murder shall suffer death or life imprisonment at discretion of jury trying him, such discretion is not conditional on, or required to be guided by, any particular circumstances, nor is jury required to find extenuating facts or circumstances to lighten punishment in order to impose penalty of life imprisonment, as jury's function is not to lighten or increase punishment, but to select and designate in verdict which of two punishments prescribed by statute shall be imposed in given case. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 190.

11. Homicide ⚖️354

The statute providing that person guilty of first degree murder shall suffer death or life imprisonment at discretion of jury trying him places no restriction on jury's exercise of such discretion and does not confine its exercise to cases presenting palliating or mitigating circumstances, but confines power to affix punishment within such two alternatives to jury's absolute discretion. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 190.

12. Homicide ⚖️314

In murder prosecution, trial judge properly required jury to state specifically, in their verdict convicting defendant of first degree murder, whether penalty of death or life imprisonment was imposed. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 190.

13. Criminal Law ⚖️872½

The statute providing that person guilty of first degree murder shall suffer death or life imprisonment at jury's discretion does not authorize holding that jurors are not required to agree unanimously on penalty as well as questions of defendant's guilt and class and degree of offense. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 190.

14. Homicide ⇨354

The statute providing that person guilty of first degree murder shall suffer death or life imprisonment at jury's discretion does not make death penalty mandatory or presumed penalty, either in absence of evidence of mitigating circumstances or on jury's failure to specify which of such two authorized punishments shall be imposed. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 190.

15. Homicide ⇨282½

The jury, not law, determines whether penalty on conviction of first degree murder shall be death or life imprisonment. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 190.

16. Homicide ⇨312

In murder trial, jury must first determine accused's guilt or innocence and then, if it finds him guilty of first degree murder, fix penalty of death or life imprisonment by unanimous agreement, and verdict not embracing both finding of accused's guilt of first degree murder and legal evidence that jury fixed penalty in exercise of its discretion is incomplete. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 190.

17. Homicide ⇨311

An instruction that jury's discretion to determine whether defendant, if convicted of first degree murder, should suffer death or life imprisonment, was not arbitrary, but to be employed only if jury were satisfied that lighter punishment should be imposed, and that if they found no extenuating facts or circumstances to lighten punishment, they must fix penalty at death, was erroneous as perpetuating false concept that law fixes death as primary punishment for first degree murder and vests jury with only conditional discretion to relieve defendant of extreme penalty, if they find extenuating facts and circumstances. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 190.

18. Homicide ⇨311, 340(1), 348

In murder prosecution, instruction to fix penalty on conviction of first degree murder at death, unless jury found extenuating circumstances justifying sentence to life imprisonment only, was prejudicial to defendant as to jury's choice of death penalty, so as to require reversal of judgment on verdict as to such penalty and remand of cause for retrial and redetermination of question of penalty only. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 190.

19. Criminal Law ⇨1189

A judgment on jury's verdict of conviction will not be reversed and cause remanded for new trial on all issues, when impelling error relates only to sentence pronounced.

20. Homicide ⇨348

The Supreme Court, on reversing judgment on conviction of first degree murder as to death penalty fixed by jury because of erroneous instruction to fix such penalty, if jury did not find extenuating facts or circumstances to lighten punishment to life imprisonment, is not precluded from ordering new trial on issue of penalty only on ground that such new trial before different jury would be prejudicial to defendant, as such instruction, in absence of extenuating facts or circumstances, must have been deterrent rather than impellent; to finding of defendant's guilt of first degree murder, and instruction could have been prejudicial to defendant only as to penalty and will not be given on new trial. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 190.

21. Constitutional Law ⇨270

Criminal Law ⇨192

Where death sentence, imposed by jury on conviction of first degree murder, is set aside by Supreme Court at defendant's behest, it cannot be successfully pleaded as constituting former jeopardy and there is no denial of due process. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 190.

22. Homicide ⇨347

Error relating solely to question of punishment in instruction to jury cannot be corrected by Supreme Court's reduction of punishment from death penalty, fixed by jury on conviction of first degree murder, to life imprisonment, as jury is vested by statute with exclusive discretion to determine punishment on such conviction. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 190.

23. Homicide — 349

A limited new trial, ordered by Supreme Court for determination of punishment on reversal of jury's verdict imposing death penalty on conviction of first degree murder, should be a trial in full technical sense and governed by same rules of procedure as trial of issue of defendant's guilt. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 190.

Edwin F. Beach, Santa Paula, and Ben E. Nordman, Oxnard, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., William E. James, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Roy A. Gustafson, Dist. Atty., Ventura, for respondent.

SCHAUER, Justice.

Defendant was charged with the murder of Joseph LaChance. He pleaded not guilty and not guilty by reason of insanity. He was tried before a jury which found that he was guilty of first degree murder and expressly fixed the penalty at death, and further found that he was sane at the time he committed the offense. Defendant's motion for new trial was denied and he was sentenced to death. This appeal, wherein defendant asserts insufficiency of the evidence and various errors at law which are hereinafter discussed, is taken pursuant to the provisions of subdivision (b) of section 1239 of the Penal Code. We have concluded that the judgment and order denying a new trial should be affirmed insofar as relates to the conviction of murder of the first degree but must be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial on the issue of penalty only, because of the instruction that "The discretion which the law invests in you * * * is to be employed only when you are satisfied that the lighter punishment should be imposed. If you find the defendant guilty of first degree murder and do not find extenuating facts or circumstances to lighten the punishment it is your duty to find a verdict of murder in the first degree and fix the penalty at death."

[1] The following summary of the evidence refutes defendant's contention that it is insufficient to support the finding that defendant was guilty of first degree murder: On August 20, 1954, defendant went to work as a kitchen helper at a country club in Pasadena. There he met LaChance, who was employed as a guard. LaChance learned that defendant was looking for a place to live and at the suggestion of LaChance defendant on August 28, 1954, moved into an apartment-room next to a cabin rented by LaChance. Defendant had been living in an apartment with his wife and her small daughter by a former marriage; he testified that he left there because he was in California in violation of a Florida parole and he feared that his mother-in-law would report him to the Florida parole officer.

On September 1, 1954, LaChance and defendant drove to Ojai in LaChance's car to look for work at an inn where LaChance had previously been employed. They stopped several times for beer. LaChance bore the expense of the trip; defendant had no money. At the inn they learned that the manager in charge of employment would not be in for two hours. They drank more beer, then drove into the country and shot at cans with LaChance's shot gun and played with a baseball and baseball bat. They walked to a creek to obtain drinking water, defendant carrying the bat. LaChance saw a water tank. It is the prosecution's theory (supported by circumstantial evidence and by a voluntary statement of defendant, which statement was made March 29, 1955, and which, insofar as it relates to motive, is contrary to defendant's testimony and other statements), that as LaChance was bending over a faucet on the tank, with his back to defendant, defendant hit him twice over the head with the bat; defendant's purpose was "to take that money" and "get my wife and kid and leave California." According to defendant's testimony and other statements of defendant, he struck LaChance because LaChance proposed that they engage in a homosexual act. Either of the two blows was of sufficient force to have been fatal.

As related by defendant in his statement of March 29, he went through LaChance's pockets and took his money and his wrist watch. According to defendant's testimony, he had no recollection of taking money from LaChance, and LaChance had given defendant the watch three days before his death.

Defendant returned to Pasadena in LaChance's car. The next day, September 2, 1954, he left California in the car with his wife and her daughter. As he traveled across the country he sold tools which were in the car, pawned the watch, and finally sold the car, using various assumed names. He was apprehended in Texas in March, 1955.

[2] The jury could, and presumptively did, believe the prosecution theory of the evidence that the murder was of the first degree because committed in the perpetration of robbery (Pen.Code, § 189). They were fairly instructed as to the law applicable in the event they accepted the theory of defendant as expressed in his testimony, that "If you find that the defendant * * * had not formed an intention to take the money or other property of Joseph O. LaChance until after he struck Joseph O. LaChance for the last time, and even if you find that [defendant] * * * did in fact kill Joseph O. LaChance, then you are instructed that the killing of Joseph O. LaChance was not murder in the first degree committed in the perpetration of a robbery." (See People v. Kerr (1951), 37 Cal.2d 11, 13-14, 229 P.2d 777; People v. Carnine (1953), 41 Cal.2d 384, 388, 260 P.2d 16; People v. Hudson (1955), 45 Cal.2d 121, 124, 287 P.2d 497. Manifestly, the jury could and did reject defendant's theory.

[3] According to the confession of defendant which was in evidence, he murdered in the commission of a robbery in which he took the wrist watch of LaChance (which defendant later admittedly pawned). At the trial defendant repudiated this confession and said that a few days before the killing LaChance had loaned him the watch and that defendant had thereafter worn it when he visited his wife and mother-in-law. In argument the district attorney called attention to the fact that defendant called no one to corroborate his story that he had worn the watch for a few days before the killing. Although the argument was not particularly and expressly directed to the failure of defendant's wife to testify, defendant, citing People v. Wilkes (1955), 44 Cal.2d 679, 687, 284 P.2d 481, urges that it constituted improper comment on her failure to take the stand. Insofar as this comment could be understood by the jury as referring to defendant's failure to produce his wife's testimony, it was undoubtedly erroneous. However, in the light of the entire record, we are satisfied that such brief and indirect reference to the matter was not sufficiently important to prejudice defendant in the eyes of the jury and result in a miscarriage of justice (Cal.Const., art. VI, § 4½). In the Wilkes case there was not, as there was here, a mere single, un-specific, passing reference; rather, there was particularized comment which "erroneously and deliberately struck at the heart of defendants' only defense" and which was aggravated by erroneous comment of the trial court (at page 688 of 44 Cal.2d, at page 486 of 284 P.2d).

[4-6] Over objection the prosecuting attorney, in connection with the opening statement, was allowed to show the jury a motion picture depicting locations where the events in question took place and articles which were subsequently introduced in evidence as exhibits. Later the film was properly identified and admitted in evidence. Also in connection with the opening statement the prosecuting attorney showed photographs of the wounds of deceased and of defendant in prison garb.

Even where a map or sketch is not independently admissible in evidence it may, within the discretion of the trial court, if it fairly serves a proper purpose, be used as an aid to the opening statement. (State v. Sibert (1933), 133 W.Va. 717, 169 S.E. 410, 412.) The purpose of the opening statement "is to prepare the minds of the jury to follow the evidence and to more readily discern its materiality, force and effect" (People v. Arnold (1926), 199 Cal. 471, 486, 250 P. 168), and the use of matters which are admissible in evidence, and which are subsequently in fact received in evidence, may aid this purpose. In the circumstances, we conclude that it was within the discretion of the trial court to permit the use in connection with the opening statement of the pictures which were subsequently received in evidence.

[7] Defendant claims that the trial court erred in excusing Juror No. 4. After 12 persons had been sworn to serve as jurors and the selection of alternate jurors was proceeding, this juror asked if she could be excused. "If I had reconsidered one of my answers." The following shows the essential portions of the colloquy between the court and the juror which ensued:

"The Court: Did you make, in answer to some question, did you make a false reply?"

"Juror Number Four: I believe I have now, yes. I believe that you asked me if there was any reason that I couldn't be a juror and at that time I felt there was none but now, being up here, it has made a difference to me. I don't feel that I could qualify. * * *

"The Court: * * * [Y]our statement now in substance is this, * * * that you now would be unable to serve as a juror and act fairly and impartially to all sides of this case, is that correct?"

"Juror Number Four: That is right, sir. * * * [A]s long as there is a doubt in my mind, I don't think that I would be fair to the prosecution."

The court did not then act upon the request of Juror No. 4. Two alternate jurors were selected and sworn. Juror No. 4 was again questioned and restated her position. Thereupon the trial court ruled, over defendant's objection, that "The Court finds that there is good and sufficient cause and reason, pursuant to the provisions of Section 1089 of the Penal Code and for other good and sufficient reasons, to discharge the Juror No. 4." Juror No. 4 was replaced with one of the two alternate jurors, selected by placing the names of the alternate jurors in a box and drawing one.

Section 1089 of the Penal Code provides in material part, "If at any time, whether before or after the final submission of the case to the jury, a juror dies or becomes ill, or upon other good cause shown to the court is found to be unable to perform his duty, or if a juror requests a discharge and good cause appears therefor, the court may order him to be discharged and draw the name of an alternate, who shall then take his place in the jury box, and be subject to the same rules and regulations as though he had been selected as one of the original jurors." Section 1123 provides in material part, "If before the jury has returned its verdict into court, a juror becomes sick or upon other good cause shown to the court is found to be unable to perform his duty, the court may order him to be discharged. If any alternate jurors have been selected as provided by law, one of them shall then be designated by the court to take the place of the juror so discharged." Bias of Juror No. 4, as disclosed by her statements that she had come to the conclusion that she would be unable to act impartially and that "I don't think that I would be fair to the prosecution," supports the trial judge's finding that there was good cause for her discharge.

[8,9] Defendant urges that the district attorney was guilty of prejudicial misconduct in arguing as follows: "[A]s the Judge will no doubt tell you, the law in California is that a prisoner given a life imprisonment sentence may be paroled after seven years. And why do I say that that is no punishment for this defendant? Because you have before you evidence of what regard he has for the law, what punishment it is for him to be incarcerated for a few years such as he was in the Florida prison.¹ Nothing. Nothing whatever. It just means that much time gone by on the calendar and he gets out again so that he can again pursue a criminal course. * * * The proper punishment for him is not the relatively slight imposition of a slap on the wrist that a life imprisonment sentence would be. The proper punishment for him is the death penalty." Defendant's objections to the foregoing argument and other argument of the district attorney to the same effect were overruled. It appears that the district attorney in his argument as to punishment had in mind the rule that "To aid the jury in fixing the punishment * * *, the court may instruct the jury [as it did in the present case] as to the consequences of the different penalties that may be imposed so that an intelligent decision may be made." (People v. Barclay (1953), 40 Cal.2d 146, 158, 252 P.2d 321.) There is no showing that defendant asked to be allowed to produce evidence, or to comment, as to the minimum, average and maximum terms of imprisonment actually being served for first degree murder in California. Inasmuch as the prosecution, over objection of the defendant, opened the subject of the minimum possible term of imprisonment under the law for such offense, it is to be presumed that the defendant would have been accorded opportunity to show and comment on the actual facts of the matter even if it had been necessary to reopen the trial to enable him so to do. In the circumstances, it does not appear that the prosecution's argument gives ground for reversal.

The most serious complaint of defendant concerns the italicized portions of the following given instruction:

"The law of this state provides that every person guilty of murder in the first degree shall suffer death or confinement in the state prison for life, at the discretion of the jury that finds him guilty. If you should find the defendant guilty of murder in the first degree, it will be your duty to determine which of the two penalties shall be inflicted, the death penalty or confinement in the state prison for life.

"The discretion which the law invests in you is not an arbitrary one and is to be employed only when you are satisfied that the lighter punishment should be imposed. If you find the defendant guilty of first degree murder and do not find extenuating facts or circumstances to lighten the punishment it is your duty to find a verdict of murder in the first degree and fix the penalty at death." (Italics added.)

The idea stated in the last two sentences of the instruction was repeatedly emphasized by the prosecuting attorney in his voir dire examination of prospective jurors and in his argument to the jury at the close of testimony. It is an idea as to which the cases in this state have been in conflict since prior to 1900 but as to which the statute has been clear since 1874.

[10] As enacted in 1872 section 190 of the Penal Code read in material part, "Every person guilty of murder in the first degree shall suffer death * * *" It was amended in 1874 (Amendments to the Codes, 1873-1874, p. 457) to provide that "Every person guilty of murder in the first degree shall suffer death or confinement in the state prison for life, at the discretion of the jury trying the same; or, upon a plea of guilty, the court shall determine the same * * *" There has never been any suggestion or intimation within the language of the statute since its 1874 amendment that the discretion of the jury was conditional on, or had to be guided by, any particular circumstances, or that the jury had to find, in the words of the instruction here, "extenuating facts or circumstances to lighten the punishment." It is not a function of the jury either to lighten the punishment or to increase the punishment; they have no such power. The statute clearly and equally states two alternatives as punishment; it gives preference to neither. It is the function and responsibility of the jury to select, and to designate in their verdict, which of the two punishments prescribed by the statute shall be imposed in any given case.

1. There is evidence that defendant served three years in a Florida penitentiary for a previous conviction of felony.

[11] Construing section 190 this court said in People v. Bollinger (1925), 196 Cal. 191, 207, 237 P. 25, "Before the amendment of that section in 1873-74 (Stats. 1873-74, p. 457) it read as follows: 'Every person guilty of murder in the first degree shall suffer death * * *'. It is clear beyond question that by the language of the amended section—'Every person guilty of murder in the first degree shall suffer death, or confinement in the state prison for life, at the discretion of the jury trying the same; * * *'—two changes were made in the law as to the punishment for murder in the first degree—first, that the punishment may be either death or life imprisonment; and second, that the discretion of determining which punishment shall be imposed was vested in the jury alone. For, as declared in * * * [Winston v. United States (1899), 172 U.S. 303, 19 S.Ct. 212, 43 L.Ed. 456], the law places no restriction upon the jury's exercise of such discretion, nor does it attempt to confine its exercise to cases presenting palliating or mitigating circumstances * * *. The legislature has 'conferred the power to affix the punishment within these two alternatives to the absolute discretion of the jury. * * *' (People v. Leary, 105 Cal. 486, 496, 39 P. 24.)"

In Winston v. United States (1899), supra, 172 U.S. 303, 19 S.Ct. 212, 43 L.Ed. 456, relied upon in the Bollinger case, the United States Supreme Court declared its views upon the effect of a liberalizing amendment to the federal law concerning the punishment for murder; it said, "These were three cases of indictments * * * for murders committed since the passage of the act of * * * January 15, 1897, chap. 29, by the first section of which, 'in all cases where the accused is found guilty of the crime of murder * * * the jury may qualify their verdict by adding thereto "without capital punishment;" and whenever the jury shall return a verdict qualified as aforesaid the person convicted shall be sentenced to imprisonment * * * for life.' 29 Stat. at L. 487 * * *

"[172 U.S. at page 305, 19 S.Ct. 212, 43 L.Ed. at page 457] The judge instructed the jury * * * 'That qualification cannot be added unless it be the unanimous conclusion of the twelve men constituting the jury. I think that it should not be added unless it be in cases that commend themselves to the good judgment of the jury, cases that have palliating circumstances which would seem to justify and require it.' * * *

"[172 U.S. at page 312, 19 S.Ct. at page 215, 43 L.Ed. at page 459, reversing the trial court] The right to qualify a verdict of guilty, by [172 U.S. at page 313, 19 S.Ct. at page 215, 43 L.Ed. at page 460] adding the words 'without capital punishment,' is thus conferred upon the jury in all cases of murder. The act does not itself prescribe, nor authorize the court to prescribe, any rule defining or circumscribing the exercise of this right; but commits the whole matter of its exercise to the judgment and the consciences of the jury. The authority of the jury to decide that the accused shall not be punished capitally is not limited to cases in which the court, or the jury, is of opinion that there are palliating or mitigating circumstances. But it extends to every case in which, upon a view of the whole evidence, the jury is of opinion that it would not be just or wise to impose capital punishment. How far considerations of age, sex, ignorance, illness, or intoxication, of human passion or weakness, of sympathy or clemency, or the irrevocableness of an executed sentence of death, or an apprehension that explanatory facts may exist which have not been brought to light, or any other consideration whatever, should be allowed weight in deciding the question whether the accused should or should not be capitally punished, is committed by the act of Congress to the sound discretion of the jury, and of the jury alone."

In Andres v. United States (1948), 333 U.S. 740, 68 S.Ct. 880, 92 L.Ed. 1055, the United States Supreme Court again considered the statute involved in the Winston case. A conviction bearing the death penalty was reversed because the trial court had not clearly instructed that the jury must be unanimous upon the issue of penalty as well as upon that of guilt. The court said: "[at page 883 of 68 S.Ct.] If a qualified verdict is not returned, the death penalty is mandatory. The Government argues that § 567 properly construed requires that the jury first unanimously decide the guilt of the accused and, then, with the same unanimity decide whether a qualified verdict shall be returned. As the statute requires the death penalty on a verdict of guilty, the contention is that the jury acts unanimously in finding guilt and the law exacts the penalty. It follows, that if all twelve of the jurors cannot agree to add the words 'without capital punishment,' the original verdict of guilt stands and the punishment of death must be imposed. The petitioner contends that § 567 must be construed to require unanimity in respect to both guilt and punishment before a verdict can be returned. It follows that one juror can prevent a verdict which requires the death penalty, although there is unanimity in finding the accused guilty of murder in the first degree. * * * [at page 884 of 68 S.Ct.] Unanimity in jury verdicts is required where the Sixth and Seventh Amendments apply. In criminal cases this requirement of unanimity extends to all issues—character or degree of the crime, guilt and punishment—which are left to the jury. A verdict [under the federal statute] embodies in a single finding the conclusions by the jury upon all the questions submitted to it. We do not think that the grant of authority to the jury by § 567 to qualify their verdict permits a procedure whereby a unanimous jury must first find guilt and then a unanimous jury alleviate its rigor. * * * This construction is more consonant with the general humanitarian purpose of the statute and the history of the Anglo-American jury system than that presented by the Government. * * * [at page 885 of 68 S.Ct.] It seems to us, * * * that where a jury is told first that their verdict must be unanimous, and later, in response to a question directed to the particular problem of qualified verdicts, that if their verdict is first-degree murder and they desire to qualify it, they must be unanimous in so doing, the jury might reasonably conclude that, if they cannot all agree to grant mercy, the verdict of guilt must stand unqualified. That reasonable men might derive a meaning from the instructions given other than the proper meaning of § 567 is probable. In death cases doubts such as those presented here should be resolved in favor of the accused."

It is therefore apparent that the United States Supreme Court in the Andres case (1948) not only continued zealously to follow but gave further emphasis to the policy which it announced in the Winston case (1899) and which this court declared in the Bollinger case (1925). And this court has never disapproved the above quoted view of the Bollinger case; on the contrary, it has reiterated that view.

Yet, despite the clear language of the liberalizing amendment of section 190 of the Penal Code (Stats.1873-1874, p. 457) and the equally clear judicial recognition of the intent of the Legislature in using that language, all as discussed in the Bollinger case (1925), supra, 196 Cal. 191, 208, 237 P. 25, this court has affirmed judgments (hereinafter cited) imposing the death sentence although the instructions contained the error which is found in the instruction here and also erroneously informed the jury that in the absence of extenuating circumstances it was their duty to find a simple verdict of murder in the first degree and to "leave with the law the responsibility of affixing the punishment."

The erroneous interpretation of section 190 originated in People v. Welch (1874), 49 Cal. 174. The case was tried shortly after the subject amendment to section 190 took effect.² The principal contention of the defendant on appeal related to the function and duty of the jury, and the validity of the verdict, under the new law. It was stated by his counsel as a quotation from Bishop (Crim.Pro., Vol. 1, § 838) "In those states and those particular cases, in which the law submits the amount of punishment to be inflicted upon the defendant, to the determination of the jury, the verdict, when it is one of guilty, must specify the punishment, else it will be defective and insufficient" (at page 176 of 49 Cal.). The verdict which was the subject of defendant's attack read: "We, the jurors, do find the defendant Welch guilty of murder in the first degree, as charged in the indictment." The verdict was absolutely silent as to the penalty to be imposed. The court concluded that the silent verdict was valid because the jurors did not have to agree on the punishment; that if the jury failed to agree on the penalty or simply failed to declare that the punishment should be life imprisonment, the court must sentence the defendant to death.

The language of the court is (at page 178 of 49 Cal.): "Section 190 of the Penal Code, as amended by the Act of March 28, 1874, reads: 'Every person guilty of murder in the first degree shall suffer death, or confinement in the State Prison for life, at the discretion of the jury trying the same * *'" [at page 179 of 49 Cal.]. The nature of that discretion is to be ascertained by reference to the language of the statute. In Virginia it was held, that in an action quidam the verdict should fix the amount of damages. (Scott's case [Commonwealth v. Scott], 5 Grat. [Va.] 697.) Also, that where the duty was imposed on the jury of fixing the term of imprisonment, and the verdict did not ascertain such term, it should be set aside. (Mills' case [Mills v. Com.], 7 Leigh [Va.], 751.)

"But the Act amending Section 190 of the Penal Code does not give the general discretion which juries exercised under the Virginia statute. Here their discretion is limited, at most, to determining which of two punishments shall be inflicted; and we think that it is still more restricted, and is to be employed only where the jury is satisfied that the lighter penalty should be imposed. It would seem that, in view of the apparently growing disinclination to find verdicts of murder in the first degree, when the necessary result is capital punishment, and the existence of a feeling that there were nicer distinctions in the degree of malignancy exhibited in murders than were made by the letter of the statute definitions, the Legislature intended to give to the jury, when the verdict was murder of the first degree, the power of relieving the defendant of the extreme penalty, and of substituting another punishment in its stead. A verdict fixing the punishment at imprisonment for life is somewhat analogous to the French verdict, 'Guilty with extenuating circumstances,' and is the equivalent of the Louisiana verdict, 'Guilty without capital punishment,' held good in State v. Rohfrisch (12 La. Ann. 382); and authorized by the statute which provides, 'In all cases where the punishment denounced by law is death, it shall be lawful for the jury to qualify their verdict by adding thereto, "without capital punishment." And whenever the jury shall return a verdict qualified as aforesaid, the person convicted shall be sentenced to hard labor for life in the State Penitentiary.' (Rev. Stat. of La. p. 163.)

[12] "This view of the question is not unsustained by authority in California. By the Act of April 22, 1851, it was enacted: 'Every person who shall feloniously steal, etc., shall be deemed guilty of grand larceny, and upon conviction thereof, shall be punished by imprisonment in the State prison

2. The 1874 amendment was approved March 28, 1874, and took effect from the date of passage; the trial took place in May, 1874 [at pages 175, 176 of 49 Cal.].

for any term, not less than one year nor more than ten years, or by death, in the discretion of the jury.' And in The People v. Littlefield (5 Cal. 355), this Court said: 'It would seem, from the language of the Act, that it was the intention of the Legislature that the jury should only assess the punishment when, in the exercise of their discretion, they thought that the defendant deserved the punishment of death. If they did not agree to such punishment, upon finding the defendant guilty, then they should find a general verdict.' In that case, it was evidently considered that the object of the Legislature (actuated by the circumstance that certain kinds of property—as live stock—were peculiarly exposed, in portions of this State, or by some other motive equally just) was to confer upon the juries the power of affixing, at their discretion, a more severe penalty than had previously been imposed on those guilty of grand larceny. By parity of reasoning we may say, in view of the former punishment for the crime of murder of the first degree, and the history of legislation on the subject in this State and elsewhere, that it was the purpose of the Legislature (by the amendment of section 190) to permit the jury, in a case where the facts proved brought the crime of the defendant within the statutory definition of the higher offense, but they believed the punishment of death too severe, to declare that he should be imprisoned for life. We think, therefore, the statute should be construed as if it read: 'Shall suffer death, or (in the discretion of the jury) imprisonment in the State prison for life.' * * * [at page 185, of 49 Cal., on denial of petition for rehearing.] It results from the construction we have given to Section 190 of the Penal Code (as amended) that a jury may—in the exercise of its discretion—declare that a defendant guilty of murder of the first degree shall be punished by confinement in the State prison for life. If a jury shall agree that a defendant is guilty of murder of the first degree, but cannot agree that the punishment shall be imprisonment for life, or shall not declare that the punishment shall be such imprisonment, it will be the duty of the Court to pronounce judgment of death. The jury need not declare that death shall be inflicted—in cases where they cannot agree on imprisonment—since, if the verdict is silent in respect to the penalty, the Court must sentence the defendant to death."³

[13,14] Unqualifiedly contrary to the view announced in the Welch opinion is the language of section 190 itself. There is nothing in the statute which authorizes holding that the jurors are not required to agree unanimously on the penalty just as they must agree unanimously on the questions of guilt and class and degree of offense (People v. Lee Gow (1918), 38 Cal. App. 248, 250, 175 P. 917; People v. Garcia (1929), 98 Cal.App. 702, 704, 277 P. 747; People v. Richardson (1934), 138 Cal.App. 404, 409, 32 P.2d 433), nor is there anything in the statute which makes death mandatory, or the presumed penalty, either in the absence of evidence of mitigating circumstances or upon failure of the jury to specify which one of the two authorized punishments shall be imposed.

[15,16] Pertinent to the proposition that it is for the jury—not the law—to fix the penalty as between the two equally available alternatives is the following discussion by this court (speaking through Mr. Justice Shenk) in People v. Hall (1926), 199 Cal. 451, 456-458, 249 P. 859: "From a consideration of our decisions it appears to be the settled law of this state that in the trial on a charge of murder it is first incumbent

3. This erroneous and unfortunate reasoning also furnishes the basis for the often indulged practice (which up to this time has been tolerated) of instructing juries that verdicts which are "silent" in respect to punishment will be interpreted as meaning that the death penalty is implied. Commendably, the learned trial judge in this case properly required the jury to specifically state in their verdict which penalty was to be imposed. (See also People v. French (1886), 69 Cal. 169, 176-180, 10 P. 378; 36 Cal.L.Rev. 632-634; cf. People v. Green (1932), 217 Cal. 176, 177, 184, 17 P.2d 730.)

upon the jury to determine the guilt or innocence of the accused. If he be found guilty of murder in the first degree it is then incumbent on the jury to fix the penalty. * * * Under the law the verdict in such a case must be the result of the unanimous agreement of the jurors and the verdict is incomplete unless, as returned, it embraces the two necessary constituent elements; first, a finding that the accused is guilty of murder in the first degree, and, secondly, legal evidence that the jury has fixed the penalty in the exercise of its discretion. * * * It was the duty of the jury to exercise its discretion and fix the penalty. Failing to do so no penalty was determined upon. The jury could not exercise its discretion and not exercise it in one and the same verdict. When a verdict, such as the one here under consideration [such verdict was, "We, the jury * * *, find the defendant * * * guilty of the crime of murder as charged in the indictment, of the first degree. But cannot come to an unanimous agreement as to degree of punishment"], discloses on its face that such discretion was not exercised as to either penalty it is not a verdict upon which the court is authorized to pronounce judgment of either death or life imprisonment. In receiving such a verdict and in imposing the sentence of death upon the defendant, the court usurped the function of the jury and its judgment was a nullity. The proceeding therefore resulted in a mistrial and the judgment must be reversed. * * * We cannot agree that the defect in the verdict was merely an error in 'matter of procedure' as contemplated by * * * section 4½ [of art. VI of the state Const.]. On the contrary the defect involved matter of substantial and substantive right. It was in effect the denial of a trial by jury. The amendment by which said section 4½ was added to the constitution was not 'designed to repeal or abrogate the guarantees accorded persons accused of crime by other parts of the same constitution, or to overthrow all statutory rules of procedure and evidence in criminal cases' [citations]. Trial by jury is guaranteed to every person charged with a felony and the denial of that right is in itself a miscarriage of justice. * * * [H]owever degraded and hardened a criminal the evidence may disclose an accused to be, he is entitled under the constitution to trial by jury. In legal effect this right was denied to the defendant in the case at bar. The proceedings before the trial court [which imposed the death sentence] amounted to the same as if the court had denied the defendant a trial by jury in the first instance and, having heard the evidence and found the defendant guilty, proceeded to impose the judgment of death. Such a judgment may not stand even though there be the clearest proof of guilt." The above quotation from the Hall case (199 Cal. 451, 456-458, 249 P. 859), together with that portion of the Bollinger case (196 Cal. 191, 207, 237 P. 25) which quotes section 190 of the Penal Code (as amended in 1873-1874) with the declaration that its meaning is "clear beyond question," correctly states the law; the decision we make today at last requires compliance with that law.

After the erroneous interpretation of section 190 of the Penal Code in the Welch case, the practice—not consistent but recurrent—of carrying the error into instructions to the jury began. In People v. Jones (1883), 63 Cal. 168, 169-170, it was held, concerning an instruction the precise language of which does not appear in the opinion, that "It was not error to instruct the jury that if they found the defendant guilty of murder in the first degree, with some extenuating fact or circumstance in the case, it was within their discretion to pronounce such a sentence as would relieve the defendant from the extreme penalty of the law."

In People v. Murback (1883), 64 Cal. 369, 370, 371, 30 P. 608, this court affirmed a judgment imposing the death sentence where the jury had been instructed that "if you do find the defendant guilty of murder in the first degree, you have the discretion to determine the nature of his punishment; and if in your sound judgment and discretion there is any fact or circumstance in the case which ought to mitigate the extreme penalty of death, you will by your verdict indicate the same; but if you find no such mitigation in the facts of the case, and think the death penalty should be inflicted you will simply find him guilty of murder in the first degree." Yet this court also said, "whether he should suffer death or confinement in the State prison for life * * * was to be determined at their discretion. With this power of discretion a court cannot interfere. The jury should be left entirely free to act according to their judgment. If they see fit to exercise the power at all, they have the exclusive right to determine, within the limits prescribed by the law which gives them the power, the punishment for which the defendant ought to be sentenced. And we find nothing in the challenged instruction which limited or restrained them in the exercise of that power."

In People v. Brick (1885), 68 Cal. 190, 191, 8 P. 858, on the authority of People v. Welch (1874), supra, 49 Cal. 174, the court approved the following instruction: "If the jury find the defendant guilty of murder in the first degree, and they also find the further fact that there is some extenuating fact or circumstance in the case, it is within their discretion to pronounce such a sentence as will relieve the defendant from the extreme penalty of the law. The Penal Code invests a jury in a criminal case for murder with that discretion, but the discretion is not an arbitrary one, and is limited to determining which of two punishments shall be inflicted, and is to be employed only when the jury is satisfied that the lighter penalty should be imposed." If the evidence shows the defendant to be guilty of murder in the first degree, but does not show some extenuating fact or circumstance, it is the duty of the jury to find a simple verdict of murder in the first degree, and leave with the law the responsibility of affixing the punishment." (Italics added.)

Again in People v. French (1886), 69 Cal. 169, 10 P. 378, this court, still following the Welch decision, and making unmistakably clear (if there were ever any doubt) the meaning which the court attributed to the Welch decision and to the instruction from the Brick case above quoted, approved an instruction which specifically told the jury (at page 176 of 69 Cal., at page 382 of 10 P.): "The jury has the right, in case they find a verdict of guilty of murder in the first degree, to do so without fixing the penalty * * *" This court said (at page 179 of 69 Cal., at page 384 of 10 P.): "Of the duty of the court upon receiving such a verdict [a verdict silent as to penalty], there could have been no doubt in the mind of the judge. As declared by this court in People v. Welch, 49 Cal. 185: 'If a jury shall agree that a defendant is guilty of murder in the first degree, but cannot agree that the punishment shall be imprisonment for life, or shall not declare that the punishment shall be such imprisonment, it will be the duty of the court to pronounce judgment of death. The jury need not declare that death shall be inflicted in cases where they cannot agree on imprisonment,—since, if the verdict is silent in respect to the penalty, the court must sentence the defendant to death.'

"In other words, a person convicted of murder in the first degree shall not escape punishment because the jury that convicted him by a valid verdict may have disagreed upon the question of punishment, or, which is equivalent to the same thing, returned a verdict which was silent as to the penalty."

In the following cases this court affirmed judgments imposing the death sentence where instructions based on the Welch decision and incorporating substantially the language used in the Brick case instruction quoted above, or variants of it, were given, yet, as the bracketed quotations show, the court repeatedly disapproved the giving of such instructions: People v. Olsen (1889), 80 Cal. 122, 128, 22 P. 125; People v. Bawden (1891), 90 Cal. 195, 197, 27 P. 204 ["If the question presented were a new one, there would be strong reasons for holding that by section 190 of the Penal Code the legislature intended to give to the jury the entire power of fixing the punishment in such a case, uninfluenced by the court; and that there is no warrant in the code for any dis-tion, in this regard, between one kind of murder in the first degree and another. But these instructions are literal copies of instructions given and approved by this court in People v. Brick, 68 Cal. 190, 8 P. 858 * * *]; People v. Rogers (1912), 163 Cal. 476, 483-484, 126 P. 143; People v. Harris (1914), 169 Cal. 53, 70, 145 P. 520; People v. Wolfgang (1923), 192 Cal. 754, 762, 221 P. 907; People v. Reid (1924), 193 Cal. 491, 496, 225 P. 859; People v. Casade (1924), 194 Cal. 679, 682, 230 P. 9; People v. Perry (1925), 195 Cal. 623, 640, 234 P. 890; People v. Craig (1925), 196 Cal. 19, 28, 235 P. 721; People v. Bollinger (1925), supra, 196 Cal. 191, 208-209, 237 P. 25 ["While we are satisfied that the giving of such instructions is opposed to the provisions of section 190 of the Penal Code, we are not prepared to depart from the decisions on this point. In other words, we consider as settled that the giving of such instructions is not error. We have, however, gone into the subject in the hope, if not the expectation, that the practice of giving such instructions may be abated, thus giving assurance that the penalty reflects the decision of the jury alone and at the same time sparing this court the necessity of repeatedly passing on such assignments of error. And considering the numerous occasions this court has held that section 190 of the Penal Code confers on the jury alone the discretion of determining the punishment in cases of guilt of murder in the first degree, trial courts, especially where a human life is at stake, should not interfere with the discharge of that solemn duty by the jury"]; People v. Arnold (1926), supra, 199 Cal. 471, 500, 250 P. 168 ["This court, while it has refused to reverse cases solely because of the giving of the instruction [similar to the one under consideration], has, nevertheless, advised against any suggestion coming from the court which might be regarded as a limitation upon the jury's right to exercise unhampered its discretion in determining whether the defendants should suffer death or be imprisoned in the state prison for life"]; People v. Gosden (1936), 6 Cal.2d 14, 30, 56 P.2d 211; People v. Goodwin (1937), 9 Cal.2d 711, 715, 72 P.2d 551; People v. Smith (1939), 13 Cal.2d 223, 229, 88 P.2d 682 [after quoting from the Bollinger case, "Just why this and similar warnings by this court have not been observed by prosecuting officers and trial courts, we are at a loss to understand"]; People v. King (1939), 13 Cal.2d 521, 525, 90 P.2d 291; People v. Smith (1940), 15 Cal.2d 640, 650, 104 P.2d 510.

At the same time that it was tolerating, although frequently deploring, the giving of instructions such as the one here under consideration, the court in other cases held that by section 190 of the Penal Code, the Legislature "confided the power to affix the punishment within these two alternatives to the absolute discretion of the jury, with no power reserved to the court to review their action in that respect" (People v. Leary (1895), 105 Cal. 486, 496, 39 P. 24; People v. Kamaunu (1895), 110 Cal. 609, 613, 42 P. 1090; People v. Martin (1938), 12 Cal.2d 466, 470, 85 P.2d 880; People v. French (1939), 12 Cal.2d 720, 775, 87 P.2d 1014; see People v. Waller (1939), 14 Cal. 2d 693, 703, 96 P.2d 344).

In People v. Kolez (1944), 23 Cal.2d 670, 145 P.2d 580; People v. Williams (1948), 32 Cal.2d 78, 85, 195 P.2d 393; and People v. Byrd (1954), 42 Cal.2d 200, 210, 266 P.2d 505 (see also People v. Lindley (1945), 26 Cal.2d 780, 793, 161 P.2d 227),⁴ the court again, over dissents, respectively, of Justice Traynor, Justice Schauer, and Justice Carter, refused to disturb judgments imposing the death penalty where the instructions required the jury to find extenuating

4. Statements to the effect that there must be mitigating circumstances to warrant life imprisonment also appear in the following cases which do not concern the correctness of instructions to the jury: People v. Rollins (1919), 179 Cal. 793, 796, 179 P. 209; People v. Lininger (1941), 17 Cal.2d 851, 852, 112 P.2d 626 [comment of trial judge where defendant pleaded guilty and judge fixed penalty].

facts as a condition to selecting the penalty of life imprisonment; but in none of those cases or in any other case has the court declared that the law was not, as stated in People v. Leary (1895), supra, 105 Cal. 486, 496, 39 P. 24, that the fixing of the punishment was confided "to the absolute discretion of the jury." The instructions in the Kolez, Williams, and Lindley cases contained the further statement that "If the evidence shows the defendant to be guilty of murder in the first degree, but does not show some extenuating facts or circumstances, it is the duty of the Jury to find a simple verdict of murder in the first degree, and leave with the law the responsibility of fixing the punishment."⁵

[17] Such further statements, are merely corollary or slightly variant expressions of the doctrine of the Welch case as further elucidated in Murback, Brick, and French. When given, they serve to accentuate the effect of, but otherwise add little if anything to, the basic error inherent in the instruction given in this case. The basic error in the criticized instruction is the perpetuation of the Welch case concept that the law still fixes death as the primary punishment for murder of the first degree, which penalty automatically attaches upon a finding of guilt of that offense; that the amendment of 1874 invested the jury not with absolute discretion to select either of the two penalties but with only a conditional discretion to "relieve the accused of the extreme penalty"; and that the jury were not entitled to exercise any discretion as to punishment unless they found extenuating facts and circumstances. All of that concept is inherent in the first of the italicized sentences of the instruction quoted supra, 302 P.2d at page 313: "The discretion which the law invests in you * * * is to be employed only when you are satisfied that the lighter punishment should be imposed." This erroneous concept should have been regarded as overruled (if not by People v. Leary (1890), supra, 105 Cal. 486, 496, 39 P. 24) at least as early as People v. Hall (1926), supra, 199 Cal. 451, 456-458, 249 P. 859, wherein the court in a then liberal, if not revolutionary, decision took a definite turn toward the statute and the Leary (105 Cal. 486, 39 P. 24) line of cases and away from the Welch-Murback-Brick-French line. It reversed a conviction of murder in the first degree, with death penalty, on the ground that the jury had not exercised their discretion and fixed the penalty. The court, as has been hereinabove noted, said (at page 456 of 199 Cal., at page 860 of 249 P.): "[I]t appears to be the settled law of this state that in the trial on a charge of murder it is first incumbent upon the jury to determine the guilt or innocence of the accused. If he be found guilty of murder in the first degree it is then incumbent on the jury to fix the penalty. * * * Under the law the verdict in such a case must be the result of the unanimous agreement of the jurors * * * [at page 457 of 199 Cal., at page 860 of 249 P.]. It was the duty of the jury to exercise its discretion and fix the penalty." This holding is irreconcilable with the Welch, etc. doctrine discussed supra, and with the instruction given in the case at bar. Such instruction, as is apparent from its language above quoted, precludes the jury from exercising any discretion unless they find mitigating facts and circumstances and "are satisfied that the lighter punishment should be imposed." The opinion, however, stopped short of a complete departure from Welch (see at page 456 of 199 Cal., at page 860 of 249 P.) and the

5. Statements to the effect that it is "the law" rather than the jury which has the responsibility of fixing the penalty where a verdict of guilty of first degree murder is silent as to penalty also appear in People v. Adams (1926), 199 Cal. 361, 366, 49 P. 186; People v. La Verne (1931), 212 Cal. 29, 32, 97 P.

It is indisputable that if it is true that the jury's discretion as to choice of penalty is absolute, it is manifestly inconsistent to instruct the jury that they must (or that the law does) impose the death penalty unless they find extenuating circumstances. The law, as hereinabove emphasized, indicates no preference whatsoever as between the two equally fixed alternatives of penalty. Although the two irreconcilable lines of authority have been extant for many years, this court has criticized the one line but not the other. Its criticisms of and protest against the giving of the type of instruction given in People v. Brick (1885), supra, 68 Cal. 190, 8 P. 858 and in this case are quoted above; on the other hand this court has never held that it was error to instruct in accordance with the statute and with the views supporting the statute expressed in such cases as Leary (1895), supra, 105 Cal. 486, 39 P. 24; Bollinger (1925), supra, 196 Cal. 191, 237 P. 25; Martin (1938), supra, 12 Cal.2d 466, 85 P.2d 880, and similar cases cited above.

Understandably, under the doctrine of stare decisis, this court has been reluctant to overrule the line of cases stemming from the Welch opinion. We recognize also that trial judges and prosecuting officers have justifiably understood that legally they could continue to follow practices based on that line although, commendably, many of them have voluntarily acceded to the admonitions hereinabove quoted. The recurrence of the problem, however, has not been prevented by the admonitions or by any of the decisions to date. Such problem, it appears, will be a recurrent one so long as the statute, with its admonitory-supporting line of decisions, purports to require one practice while the cases, even those which pronounce the admonitions, tolerate another. This faces us with a question as to what ruling will best serve the administration of justice and at the same time be "consonant with the general humanitarian purpose of the statute." (See Andres v. United States (1948), supra, 333 U.S. 740, 68 S.Ct. 880, 92 L.Ed. 1055.) We are satisfied that it is in accord with the better judicial policy and the more certain and expeditious administration of justice to refuse to continue longer the two inconsistent positions which have been delineated. The one line of instructions as to the capacity and duty of the jury cannot be right if the other is right. In this circumstance we conclude that the statute and the uncriticized decisions supporting it should prevail and that we should hold it error to instruct contrary to the terms of the statute. People v. Welch, 49 Cal. 174; People v. Murback, 64 Cal. 369, 30 P. 608; People v. Brick, 68 Cal. 190, 8 P. 858; and People v. French, 69 Cal. 169, 10 P. 378, and all other cases approving the instruction herein held to be erroneous, including People v. Kolez, 23 Cal.2d 670, 145 P.2d 580; People v. Lindley, 26 Cal.2d 780, 161 P.2d 227; People v. Williams, 32 Cal.2d 78, 195 P.2d 393; and People v. Byrd, 42 Cal.2d 200, 266 P.2d 505, are overruled insofar as they are inconsistent with the conclusion above declared.

[18] Since the fixing of the punishment by the selection of one of the two alternatives is within the absolute discretion of the jury, an instruction such as the one given here, which directs them to fix the penalty at death unless they find extenuating circumstances, is (when the death penalty is fixed) manifestly prejudicial to defendant and evidential of a miscarriage of justice. This prejudicial error, however, goes only to the choice of penalty. As already shown, there is in this case no prejudicial error which affected the jury's determinations as to the issues of guilt, class, and degree of homicide. In these circumstances, and under section 1260 of the Penal Code, it is not necessary that those issues be retried.

[19] The error here is analogous to an error in sentence. It is the established practice of this court not to reverse and remand for a new trial on all issues when the impelling error relates only to the sentence pronounced. (See, e. g., People v.

Carrow (1929), 207 Cal. 366, 369, 278 P. 857; People v. Eppinger (1895), 109 Cal. 294, 298, 41 P. 1037; People v. d'A Filippo (1934), 220 Cal. 620, 629, 32 P.2d 962; People v. Murray (1940), 42 Cal.App.2d 209, 220, 108 P.2d 748; People v. McChesney (1940), 39 Cal.App.2d 36, 42, 102 P.2d 455; People v. Hayes (1934), 3 Cal.App.2d 59, 64, 39 P.2d 213; People v. Foster (1934), 3 Cal.App.2d 35, 42, 39 P.2d 271; People v. Arnest (1933), 133 Cal.App. 114, 123-124, 23 P.2d 812; People v. Darling (1932), 120 Cal.App. 453, 456, 7 P.2d 1094; People v. Willison (1931), 116 Cal.App. 157, 161, 2 P.2d 543.) The crime of which the defendant has been convicted is murder in the first degree. Every element of that offense has been proven and in respect to every element of that offense the defendant has been accorded a fair trial. The verdict which was returned embraces "two necessary constituent elements; first, a finding that the accused is guilty of murder in the first degree, and, secondly legal evidence that the jury has fixed the penalty." (People v. Hall (1926), supra, 199 Cal. 451, 456, 249 P. 859.) The error, as above shown, relates only to the selection of penalty and, hence, affects only the question of sentence, not the determination of guilt of the basic offense.

[20] In People v. Morton (1953), 41 Cal.2d 536, 543, 261 P.2d 523, this court considered the propriety of ordering a limited new trial on the issue of a prior conviction, an issue which, obviously, related only to punishment. Speaking through Mr. Justice Traynor, we held: "There is nothing prejudicial involved in a limited new trial on the issue of the challenged prior conviction by a jury different from that which tried the issue of guilt of the primary offenses. That issue and the proof of prior convictions are clearly severable." Here although the evidence which proved guilt is also relevant to the question of penalty, it is obvious that we may say in the circumstances of this case, paraphrasing the language of the Morton case, that "there is nothing" prejudicial involved in a limited new trial on the issue of the penalty to be imposed by a jury different from that which tried the issue of guilt"; such limited new trial before a different jury cannot possibly be prejudicial to the defendant because the first jury found him guilty of murder in the first degree notwithstanding the instruction that "If you find the defendant guilty of first degree murder and do not find extenuating facts or circumstances to lighten the punishment it is your duty to find a verdict of murder in the first degree and fix the penalty at death." The natural effect of that instruction, in the absence of extenuating facts or circumstances—and, impliedly, the jury found none—must have been deterrent rather than impellent to the finding that the defendant was guilty of murder in the first degree. The erroneous instruction could have been prejudicial only in respect to the penalty. Although the fixing of the penalty is normally one of the "two necessary constituent elements" of the verdict it involves a determination which is clearly separate and distinct from the determination of guilt. Upon the limited new trial the erroneous instruction will not be given. Thus this defendant will have had at the first trial the presumably favorable influence of the erroneous instruction insofar as it conceivably could have had any effect in determining the class and degree of the offense, and upon the limited new trial as to penalty he will have the benefit of an instruction committing the question of penalty to the absolute discretion of the jury in accord with the statute and the views hereinabove expressed.

In People v. Marshall (1930), 209 Cal. 540, 547, 289 P. 629, this court, in disposing of the contention that a reversal in part necessitated a complete trial de novo, said (adopting an opinion of the District Court of Appeal 283 P. 119): "A trial on the issues presented by a plea of 'not guilty' and a plea of 'not guilty by reason of insanity,' under the provisions of section 1026 of the Penal Code, constitutes but one trial. * * * The next point urged is that the appellate court had no power to reverse this case without either ordering a retrial of all the issues or a dismissal of the case, and that there should have been a trial de novo. The order made on the previous appeal is as follows: 'The judgment is reversed and the case remanded for trial upon the issue presented by the special plea.' Appellant argues that since no pleas are denominated special pleas by statute, all being equally general and equally special, the appellate court intended to order a trial de novo on all pleas. We think it is clear that the order of that court was to have the case completed on the one issue only (the question of insanity), and not to have all of the issues retried. It is further argued that if a new trial from the beginning was not ordered, the defendant must be discharged. Section 1260 of the Penal Code provides:

"The court may reverse, affirm, or modify the judgment or order appeal from, and may set aside, affirm or modify any or all of the proceedings subsequent to, or dependent upon, such judgment or order, and may, if proper, order a new trial."

[21] "Under the power here given to modify a judgment or order, the court may reverse in part and affirm in part * * *. The court here did not disturb the verdict in the first of two necessary steps which constitutes but one trial. On the contrary, the court held there were no errors of law in the proceedings up to and including that verdict. It was held that since the verdict was not yet complete the trial court had no power to pronounce judgment and sentence and the case was sent back to be completed. It was then the duty of the trial court to proceed, as should have been done in the first instance, to a hearing on the remaining issue. The appellate court had the power to remand the case to the trial court for proper action." (See also People v. Eggers (1947), 30 Cal.2d 676, 691, 185 P.2d 1; People v. Carrow (1929), supra, 207 Cal. 366, 369, 278 P. 857; People v. Dillon (1924), 68 Cal.App. 457, 478, 229 P. 974; Ballew v. United States (1895), 160 U.S. 187, 203, 16 S.Ct. 263, 40 L.Ed. 388; In re Bonner (1893), 151 U.S. 242, 262, 14 S.Ct. 323, 38 L.Ed. 149.) Inasmuch as the original sentence is set aside at the behest of the defendant it cannot be successfully pleaded as constituting former jeopardy and there is no denial of due process. (People v. d'A Filippo (1934), 140 Cal.App. 236, 238, 35 P.2d 134; certiorari denied, d'A Filippo v. People of State of California (1934), 293 U.S. 614, 55 S.Ct. 149, 79 L.Ed. 704.)

[22] In some situations of error related solely to the question of punishment, that error could be corrected by the appellate court's reducing the punishment, but that cannot be done here⁶ because under the pertinent statutes as construed by this

6. In other jurisdictions it has been held that where there was error affecting only the fixing of the penalty by the jury, the error can be cured by the reviewing court modifying the judgment of the lower court to reduce the punishment to life imprisonment. (Cook v. State (1929), 179 Ark. 244, 15 S.W.2d 323, 324 [the error so "cured" was the failure to instruct the jury that it had the right to impose either the death penalty or the penalty of life imprisonment]; State v. Ramirez (1921), 34 Idaho 623, 203 P. 279, 29 A.L.R. 297 [the statute provided that "the jury may decide which punishment shall be inflicted"; the appellate court said that the Legislature "is without authority to clothe the jury with the exclusive right to fix the extent of the punishment, this being a judicial act" (at page 283 of 203 P.);

"We perceive no logical reason why * *, in a case where there was error in the record, but not of such a character as to warrant a reversal, in order to avoid the imposition of the extreme penalty when not warranted by the evidence, this court should be put to the alternative of reversing the judgment nevertheless or of permitting injustice to be done" (at page 282 of 203 P.); O'Hearn v. State (1907), 79 Neb. 513, 113 N.W. 130, 25 L.R.A., N.S., 542 [the statute provided that defendant suffer death or life imprisonment "in the discretion of the jury"; the appellate court reduced the penalty because of errors in the admission of evidence which did not require reversal but probably influenced the jury in choice of penalty].)

court the trier of fact is vested with exclusive discretion to determine punishment (see People v. Odle (1951), 37 Cal.2d 52, 57-58, 230 P.2d 345; People v. Thomas (1951), 37 Cal.2d 74, 77-78, 230 P.2d 351). We note that in People v. Pantages (1931), 212 Cal. 237, 270, 297 P. 890 (a statutory rape case), the jury's selection of punishment is referred to as an "inseparable part of the verdict" but it is obvious that such reference in its context has no bearing on the separation of the question of punishment from the properly decided issues in the case in a situation such as that now before us.

[23] There arises the question of the character of the evidence to be received on the limited new trial for the determination of punishment. Where the question (together with that of the degree of the crime) is determined by the court on defendant's plea of guilty to a charge of murder, the hearing "is not a trial in the full technical sense, and is not governed by the same strict rules of procedure as a trial," and the court in aggravation or mitigation of the offense may consider matters not admissible on the issue of guilt (People v. Gilbert (1943), 22 Cal.2d 522, 528, 140 P.2d 9; People v. Thomas (1951), supra, 37 Cal.2d 74, 76-77, 230 P.2d 351), although the determination must be made upon "competent evidence" (People v. Mendez (1945), 27 Cal.2d 20, 23, 161 P.2d 929). Where the matter is to be determined by a jury, however, it would appear that the proceeding should be "a trial in the full technical sense, and * * * governed by the same * * * rules of procedure" as the trial of the issue of guilt.

For the reasons above stated the judgment and order denying a new trial are affirmed insofar as relates to the adjudication that defendant is guilty of murder and that the murder is of the first degree, but on the question of penalty the judgment and order denying new trial are reversed and the cause is remanded for retrial and redetermination of such question of penalty only, and for the pronouncement of a new sentence and judgment in accord with such determination and the law thereunto applicable. (See People v. Barnett (1946), 27 Cal.2d 649, 658-659, 166 P.2d 4.)

CARTER, TRAYNOR and McCOMB, JJ., concur.

SPENCE, Justice (concurring and dissenting).

I concur insofar as the judgment and order are affirmed, but I dissent insofar as the judgment and order are reversed.

The majority orders a partial reversal "on the question of penalty" and remands the cause "for retrial and redetermination of such question of penalty only." Such partial reversal is based solely upon alleged prejudicial error in the giving of the instruction quoted in the majority opinion.

As recently as 1954 the same instruction was held to be "not erroneous" in People v. Byrd, 42 Cal.2d 200, 210, 266 P.2d 505. That decision was based upon a similar holding by this court in 1948 in People v. Williams, 32 Cal.2d 78, 85-86, 195 P.2d 393, where the entire subject was exhaustively discussed. It would thus appear that the precise question presented here has been settled by the decisions of this court, and that a wholesome regard for the doctrine of stare decisis should dictate an affirmance here.

The majority opinion, however, discusses certain erroneous statements found in some of the earlier decisions and suggests that the same "idea" is embraced in the instruction given here. Such is not the case. This suggestion might be urged more plausibly with respect to the instruction given in People v. Lindley, 26 Cal.2d 780, 794, 161 P.2d 227, 234, which contained further and broader language indicating that the jury might leave to the law "the responsibility of affixing the punishment." In that case Mr. Justice Schauer joined the majority in holding that the giving of such broader instruction "does not constitute error." There was no dissent in that case. Mr. Justice Traynor wrote a special concurring opinion but joined in affirming the judgment. No language similar to the above-quoted language of the Lindley instruction is found in the challenged instruction here. On the contrary, the challenged instruction is the identical instruction which was given in People v. Byrd, supra, 42 Cal. 2d 200, 210, 266 P.2d 505, and which was approved by this court only two years ago.

It would serve no useful purpose to review all the cases cited in the majority opinion. Any erroneous statements in the earlier cases which may have indicated that the jury was not required to agree unanimously upon the punishment were finally set at rest in 1926 by the opinion written by Mr. Justice Shenk in People v. Hall, 199 Cal. 451, 249 P. 859. The jury there brought in a verdict finding the defendant guilty of murder in the first degree but added "But cannot come to an unanimous agreement as to degree of punishment." The trial court received the verdict and sentenced the defendant to suffer the death penalty. This court properly reversed the judgment, holding that the jury must agree unanimously upon the punishment. No subsequent decision has contained any language indicating that a jury is not required so to agree, and no such point is urged by respondent here. In fact, it is conceded by all that the jury did unanimously agree upon the verdict, which expressly provided for the death penalty.

Therefore the matter for decision here is not whether the language contained in some of the earlier cases and relating to a different problem should be overruled or disapproved, but whether the decisions of this court involving precisely the same problem should be followed. The basic question, which is one of statutory construction, may be stated as follows: Should the jury be instructed in effect that it has an absolute and unbridled discretion in fixing the punishment for first degree murder or should it be instructed that its discretion is a legal discretion which may not be arbitrarily exercised? In other words, should or should not the jury be instructed that the choice of the penalty should depend upon whether the jury finds "extenuating facts and circumstances" in the particular case? If the question were an open one, a plausible argument could be made for either construction. But the question is not an open one, at least with respect to the propriety of the particular instruction given here, and I find no sound reason for overruling our recent decision in People v. Byrd, supra, 42 Cal.2d 200, 266 P.2d 505. It is significant that the instruction given here appears to embrace only the considerations which would influence the decision of any reasonable juror in fixing the penalty, and that the broad implications of the term "extenuating facts or circumstances" allow a wide range for the exercise of the juror's discretion. I am therefore of the opinion that upon reason and authority, there was no error in the giving of the challenged instruction.

I would affirm in toto the judgment and order denying a new trial.

Raymond DISHMAN et ux., Plaintiffs and Appellants,

v.

UNION OIL COMPANY OF CALIFORNIA et al., Defendants and Respondents.

Civ. 21537.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California.

Oct. 23, 1956.

Rehearing Denied Nov. 13, 1956.

Hearing Denied Dec. 19, 1956.

Action for declaratory relief. From a judgment of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Clarence M. Hanson, J., both sides appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Doran, J., held that even though Civil Code section, providing for apportionment, according to value, of benefit of covenant running with land, was enacted before discovery of oil in America, it was applicable to agreement by mineral owner to pay surface owners a portion of proceeds of wells drilled.

Reversed with directions.

1. Mines and Minerals ⚡55(7)

Agreement, by mineral owner to pay to surface owners a specified portion of proceeds of wells drilled and providing that right to receive payments should at all times be and remain appurtenant to lands involved, manifested intent to make ineffective any attempt to separate right to payments thereunder from ownership of land; and, in any event, instrument by which owners, deeding away a portion of one of involved tracts, transferred to grantee rights under agreement between mineral owner and surface owners could not be construed as a grant of all of grantor's interest in such agreement.

2. Mines and Minerals ⚡55(7)

Even though Civil Code section, providing for apportionment, according to value, of benefit of covenant running with land, was enacted before discovery of oil in America, it was applicable to agreement by mineral owner to pay surface owners a portion of proceeds of wells drilled. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1467.

3. Improvements ⚡1

Permanent improvements to land become as much realty as land itself.

4. Mines and Minerals ⚡55(7)

Civil Code section, providing for apportionment, according to value of benefit of covenant, contemplated inclusion of improvements in determining value. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1467.

5. Mines and Minerals ⚡79(1)

Oil royalty return which lessee renders to his lessor for estate in land is "rent", or so closely analogous to rent as to partake of incidents thereof.

DORAN, Justice.

The present action for declaratory relief was brought to secure a determination of the proportion or percentage of certain sums of money impounded by the respondent Union Oil Company, resulting from oil drilling operations and allocable under contract to Lot 82, La Habra Heights Tract. The defendants Roche, as joint tenants, own a portion of Lot 82, and the plaintiffs Dishman, as joint tenants, own the remaining portion of said lot. Both the plaintiffs Dishman and the defendants Roche have appealed from the judgment.

In March, 1904, the Rudisills, owning several thousand acres of land, granted to the Union Oil Company the oil, gas and similar items in the lands which included Lot 82 here involved. In 1940 Union determined to explore the area for oil, and as stated in the trial court's memorandum, "concluded that it was advisable to enter into a contract with all the surface owners whereby they would as a unit participate to the extent of 10% of the net proceeds in any wells drilled by it in the entire large unit parcel". On April 1, 1940 Union entered into such an agreement with surface owners including La Habra Heights Co., the then owner of part of the lands formerly owned by the Rudisills, including Lot 82. The purpose of this agreement, as found by the trial court was "to gain and maintain the cooperation and good will of the owners, and their successors in interest, of the surface rights of the real property described".

The agreement provided that each month or period not exceeding three months, Union would "set aside * * * a sum equal to ten per cent (10%) of the value of all oil produced, saved and removed" from the area. This sum was to be paid by Union "to each signatory Owner of lands * * * subject to this agreement, in the same proportion for each such Owner as the assessed value of his holding (land and improvements thereon), subject to this agreement, bears to the total assessed value of all of the lands (and improvements thereon) then subject to this agreement, as shown by the Los Angeles County assessment roll for the fiscal tax year immediately preceding the date upon which Union may have started drilling operations * * *, which assessment roll is hereby fixed as the final criterion of proportionate values hereunder". The assessed valuation for 1943-44 as to Lot 82 was: Land $790, Improvements $2,080 (buildings) and $250 (trees), —a total of $3,120.

It is provided in said agreement that "The right to receive payments * * * shall at all times be and remain appurtenant to the lands in respect to which such payments accrue and shall be and remain inseparable from the ownership of such lands. Any attempt to separate such rights and ownership, respectively, shall be without effect hereunder and shall not be binding upon Union".

As stated in plaintiff-appellants' brief, "Mr. and Mrs. Cole became the owners of Lot 82. The property had a very steep hill * * *. He decided to sell off this unimproved portion keeping the improved portion himself and he did so by deed dated November 21, 1944, to a Miss Deckert. By mesne conveyances this portion, deeded to Miss Deckert, became owned by defendants Roche by deed dated January 21, 1948. Mr. and Mrs. Cole retained ownership of the improved portion of Lot 82 until March 21, 1948, on which date they conveyed the same to plaintiffs Dishman. Plaintiffs Dishman paid $27,000.00 for this portion of Lot 82 and the defendants Roche paid $8,500.00 for their portion of said Lot".

The trial court found that on the basis of acreage, the defendants Roche own 58.24% of Lot 82 and the plaintiffs Dishman own 41.76%, and in accordance with these percentages directed that division be made of the sums due Lot 82. It is plaintiffs' contention that apportionment should be made not according to acreage but according to value. The value of the portion of Lot 82 owned by the Dishmans including the residence thereon was stipulated to be 74.235% and that of defendants Roche 25.765%.

Section 1467 of the Civil Code provides that "Where several persons, holding by several titles, are subject to the burden or entitled to the benefit of a covenant running with the land, it must be apportioned among them according to the value of the property subject to it held by them respectively, if such value can be ascertained, and if not, then according to their respective interests in point of quantity."

It appears that Section 1467 has never received judicial construction but the trial court in a Memorandum Ruling took the position that this section "should be construed, it having been enacted prior to a discovery of oil in America, as applying to agricultural and perhaps other lands, but not to oil lands. If however, the statute should be held applicable, it seems to me that the property subject to the covenant running with the land may be construed as referring in the case of oil lands to the land acreage, without regard to the improvements thereon. If that may not be done, then of course my view is erroneous".

[1] In the cross-appeal of defendants Roche, "It is submitted that Defendant as the successor of Deckert is entitled to 100% of the rights of Lot 82 in the Union Oil-La Habra Agreement" for the reason that the Cole to Deckert deed "grants all of the interest of Cole to Deckert by a writing which this Court can give full force and effect". This is based on the fact that Mr. and Mrs. Cole, owning all of Lot 82, in selling that portion to Deckert which now belongs to cross-appellants Roche, transferred to Deckert "that certain contract and agreement dated April 1, 1940, executed by the La Habra Heights Company and the Union Oil Company * * *". It is the Roche claim that "This language is a grant of all of the Cole interest" in the agreement, and that therefore the Dishmans have no right to receive any of the money allocated to Lot 82 under the agreement. The trial court quite properly refused to accept this view and, as hereinbefore noted, apportioned the funds on the basis of acreage owned by the respective parties. However, as will hereafter appear, the mode of apportionment on the basis of acreage, is deemed incorrect.

"The position of defendant-respondent Union Oil Company of California (not an appellant herein) is essentially one of neutrality", as stated in Union's brief. Attention is, however, therein called to the fact that the agreement "does not transfer any interest in the oil whatsoever", and Union requests that therefore "this money payment be referred to as a payment and not as royalty or rent".

The instant appeals present no serious controversy in respect to material facts, and the single point of law requiring attention relates to the mode of distribution of payments allocated to Lot 82, now owned in part by plaintiffs Dishman and in part by the defendants Roche. As hereinbefore indicated, the cross-appellants' claim that the Dishmans are entitled to no part of the Union payments and that the Roches are entitled to 100% thereof, is untenable and cannot be sustained. To hold otherwise would be to adopt a forced and unnatural interpretation of the language used in the deed from the Coles to Deckert. Moreover, as stated in the Dishman brief, "it is clear that the intent and purpose of the 1940 community agreement is to make ineffective any attempt to separate the right to payments thereunder from ownership of the land". Whatever these payments may be called "The right to receive payments * * shall at all times be and remain appurtenant to the lands".

In the absence of some agreement between the parties as to the method of distribution, and there is none in this case, three possible theories are open, namely,

(1) distribution according to the relative acreage owned by the parties, which was that adopted by the trial court; (2) distribution according to the relative values of the Dishman and Roche lands including improvements; and (3) distribution according to relative values not including improvements.

Whatever method is considered, a solution should be sought which will effect a distribution practical rather than theoretical; and one which will neither do violence to any intention evidenced by the written instruments nor to any applicable statutory or case law. Should acreage be taken as the deciding factor, the Dishmans will be entitled to receive 41.76% of the payments, whereas, if apportionment be made on the theory of relative value of the Dishman and Roche parcels, appellants Dishman will receive 74.235%. No case has been cited which furnishes a direct and positive answer to the problem.

In Carlson v. Lindauer, 119 Cal.App.2d 292, 304, 259 P.2d 925, 931, involving the same 1904 Rudisill grant to Union Oil and the same 1940 agreement with Union, it was held that "The estate in the oil and gas when owned by Union was a profit à prendre" and when Union made the agreement "it granted to the owner of the land the right to receive future royalties, and incorporeal hereditament, and an interest in land. * * * The agreement was a grant within the meaning of section 1462" of the Civil Code.

[2-5] Whatever the present payments are called, the matter should receive no different or special treatment from that accorded in other cases, and it appears entirely logical to conclude all payments allocated to Lot 82 should be apportioned in the manner required by Section 1467 of the Civil Code, that is, according to value. As hereinbefore indicated, the value of the two parcels has been settled beyond controversy. If this statute applies, there is therefore no reason to resort to the matter of acreage in making an apportionment.

The language used in Section 1467 of the Civil Code is general and the prescribed method of distribution according to value seems clearly intended to apply to any and all situations. Oil payments such as those here involved, created by an agreement which, by its terms, is made appurtenant to the land, are not excluded from its purview by any reasonable interpretation. To hold otherwise would amount to judicial legislation and to write into a statute something which is not there.

The assertion by defendants Roche that Union possessed no surface rights and that therefore a different rule should be applied, is without merit. As found by the trial court, under the original Rudisill deed, Union Oil acquired "petroleum, coal oil, naptha, natural gas, other hydro-carbons and like substances, including asphaltum and brea, in and upon and under" the described tract, with a "right to enter upon the surface" of the lands to explore, mine, drill and dig for the substances named. (Italics added.)

It is to be further noted that Section 1467 requiring apportionment according to value of the property, does not mention improvements nor exclude any such improvements. Had it been intended to exclude improvements it would have been an easy matter to have so stated. It is fundamental that permanent improvements to land become as much realty as the land itself. Such being the case, it must be held that the statute contemplated the inclusion of improvements in determining value.

The agreement itself, is persuasive if not decisive that improvements on the lands are to be considered as affecting value, and that assessed value rather than area shall be deemed controlling. As hereinbefore mentioned, the sum in question is to be paid by Union "to each signatory Owner of lands * * * subject to this agreement, in the same proportion for each such Owner as the assessed value of his holding (land and improvements thereon); subject to this agreement, bears to the total assessed value of all of the lands (and improvements thereon)". (Italics added.) There is no apparent reason why this measuring stick should not be applied all along the line. Such method of division is consistent with the terms of the agreement as well as being in harmony with Section 1467 of the Civil Code. Whether such section was enacted before or after the discovery of oil cannot be deemed important in the present controversy, and no California case exists as authority for excepting oil interests from the operation of such statute. Section 1467 is apparently a restatement of the common law in reference to apportionment of rents.

Whatever the payments under the present agreement be properly called, the situation is certainly analogous to the matter of rents. As said in Callahan v. Martin, 3 Cal.2d 110, 123, 43 P.2d 788, 795, 101 A.L.R. 871, "The [oil] royalty return which the lessee renders to his lessor for this estate in the land is rent, or so closely analogous to rent as to partake of the incidents thereof." Likewise in Standard Oil Co. of California v. John P. Mills Organization, 3 Cal.2d 128, 43 P.2d 797, 800, the court follows the principle laid down in the Callahan case, regarding oil royalty "as rent, an incorporeal hereditament, issuing from the profits of land and payable by the lessee in consideration of the privileges and estate vested in him under the lease", and is subject to apportionment. While these cases are not factually identical with that now at hand, the principles announced seem clearly applicable to the present controversy, and decisive thereof.

The judgment is reversed with directions to enter a judgment apportioning the payments involved between plaintiffs Dishman and defendants Roche in proportion to the assessed valuations of the real estate owned by such parties, including improvements thereon.

Respondent,

v.

SEALY MATTRESS COMPANY, Defendant
and Appellant.

Civ. 21809.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California.

Oct. 23, 1956.

Rehearing Denied Nov. 13, 1956.

Action for personal injuries sustained when spring came through mattress manufactured by defendant and penetrated into plaintiff's "gluteal prominence." Recovery was sought on theory of warranty and theory of negligence, and doctrine of res ipsa loquitur was invoked. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, J. F. Moroney, J., rendered judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Doran, J., held that evidence sustained verdict for plaintiff.

Affirmed.

1. Negligence ⇨134(4)Sales ⇨441(1)

In action for personal injuries sustained when spring came through mattress manufactured by defendant and penetrated into plaintiff's "gluteal prominence", wherein recovery was sought on theory of warranty and theory of negligence, evidence sustained verdict for plaintiff.

2. Negligence ⇨138(2, 3)

In action for injuries sustained when spring came through mattress manufactured by defendant and penetrated into plaintiff's "gluteal prominence", res ipsa loquitur instruction was sufficient, and justified by evidence.

3. Sales ⇨285(2)

Notice of breach of warranty, given to manufacturer within a few days after spring came through mattress and penetrated into plaintiff's "gluteal prominence", was timely, as against contention that notice should have been given when it first became apparent that mattress was "bunching".

Downey A. Grosenbaugh, Hollywood, Grayce M. Smith, Los Angeles, for respondent.

DORAN, Justice.

After a trial by jury, a judgment was entered in favor of plaintiff-respondent in the sum of $3,000 for personal injuries sustained when a spring came through a mattress manufactured by the appellant, and purchased from a Los Angeles retail dealer who was not an agent of the appellant.

In the language of appellant's brief, "After plaintiff and her husband had used the same for a year or year and a half, they noticed it was getting soft in the center; there was a lumping or bunching. Several years later, i. e., in April of 1953 more than five years after their said purchase, plaintiff, according to her testimony, was awakened when a spring came through the mattress and, in the words of her pleading, 'penetrated into the said plaintiff's gluteal prominence'."

Recovery was sought on two theories, namely, "Manufacturer's Express Warranty", and "Res Ipsa Loquitur". There was testimony that the plaintiff placed reliance on billboard and radio advertising and upon a ten-year warranty evidenced by a label on the mattress, to which attention had been called by the seller. Shortly after the accident plaintiff's husband talked with the seller who picked up the mattress and took it to the defendant where it was repaired. Plaintiff was given an exchange mattress.

It is appellant's contention that there is lack of evidence of negligence and of express warranty; that the res ipsa loquitur doctrine is inapplicable, and that the trial court's instructions to the jury were erroneous. Appellant also complains that essential elements for recovery on an express warranty were not proven, particularly in reference to reliance on such warranty; that "The claimed guarantee was restricted to structural defects and did not encompass personal injury damage", and that there was "Lack of timely notice of plaintiff's intention to claim damages by reason of the claimed breach".

[1] In respect to the alleged insufficiency of evidence, a survey of the record discloses substantial evidence in support of the verdict and judgment. Such being the case, the well established rule of appellate review prohibits any re-valuation of the weight and sufficiency of the evidence. This was a matter within the province of the jury which rendered a verdict in favor of the respondent.

[2] The appellant complains of the instruction, (B.A.J.I. No. 206-B), given at plaintiff's request, on the res ipsa loquitur doctrine. This instruction told the jury that "From the happening of the accident involved in this case, as established by the evidence, there arises, an inference that the proximate cause of the occurrence was some negligent conduct on the part of the defendant. That inference is a form of evidence, and if there is none other tending to overthrow it, or if the inference preponderates over contrary evidence, it warrants a verdict for the plaintiff. Therefore you should weigh any evidence tending to overcome the inference, bearing in mind that it is incumbent upon the defendant to rebut the inference by showing that it did in fact, exercise ordinary care and diligence or that the accident occurred without being proximately caused by any failure of duty on its part". (Italics added.)

As stated in respondent's brief, "the instruction must be considered in its entirety and * * * in the light of all of the other instructions given. It is improper to single out a portion of any given instruction", such as the italicized words, "as established by the evidence" in the above quoted instruction. Moreover, the quoted phrase was not incorrect or prejudicial, since "both Mr. and Mrs. Maerchlein testified to the occurrence", and "there was corroborative evidence that the mattress was immediately returned * * *". Therefore, the "happening of the accident" was "established by substantial evidence * * *".

There is no merit in the appellant's argument that the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur "is not applicable in this case". Although the final decision rested with the jury, there was substantial evidence justifying submission of this issue. There was evidence that every tenth mattress was pulled off the line and inspected, and, as the respondent says, the jury might reasonably infer that such inspection did not constitute ordinary care.

As said in respondent's brief, "Having made an express warranty the rule of foreseeability follows. In a case such as this where there has been a breach of guarantee on the structure of the mattress and a spring protruded with the force and power which occurred in this case, the natural and foreseeable consequences are that a person resting on the mattress will sustain a personal injury". Even without a guarantee, a manufacturer may be held liable in such a case under appropriate evidence. There is nothing to show on which theory the jury decided in favor of the plaintiff, but there is substantial evidence in support of the verdict.

[3] Appellant's contention that there was "Lack of timely notice of plaintiff's intention to claim damages by reason of the claimed breach", must be deemed untenable. Adequate notice was promptly given within a few days after the accident occurred. Appellant's argument that notice should have been given within a year and a half after purchasing the mattress because it was "bunching and sagging and lumping", would require plaintiff to anticipate that a broken spring would ultimately protrude and result in the injury. The defendant's expert witness testified that this bunching of the mattress would not indicate that there was a broken spring.

The record indicates that the defendant manufacturer has been accorded a full and fair trial of all issues, that there is substantial evidence in support of the verdict and that appellant has suffered no prejudice either in respect to the instructions given, or otherwise.

The judgment, and order denying defendant's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, are affirmed.

Action for injuries sustained by plaintiff when she fell after stepping into hole in sidewalk. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Ellsworth Meyer, J., rendered judgment for plaintiff, and defendant-municipality appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Shinn, P. In action for injuries sustained by plaintiff when she fell after stepping into

2. Municipal Corporations ⚡822(4)

In action for injuries sustained by plaintiff when she fell after stepping into hole in sidewalk, it was proper to refuse instruction that plaintiff, who had glasses and was nearsighted but testified that she did not use them and saw better without them, was required to use greater care because she had defective eyesight.

Roger Arnebergh, City Atty., Bourke Jones, Asst. City Atty., William E. Still, and Moses A. Berman, Deputy City Attys., Los Angeles, for appellant.

Edwin D. Lasker, David L. Mohr, Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHINN, Presiding Justice.

This is an appeal by the City of Los Angeles from a judgment for $9,000 damages for personal injuries suffered by plaintiff due to a fall over a defective portion of a sidewalk. At the close of plaintiff's testimony, a nonsuit was granted to all the other defendants. The case was tried to a jury, and the sole contention on this appeal is that the court erred in refusing to give certain instructions on contributory negligence which were requested by defendant.

The evidence, stated most favorably to plaintiff, is as follows. On September 21, 1952, at about 6:30 p. m., plaintiff, a 65-year old widow, was being taken to dinner by a Mr. and Mrs. Mercer and their son at a restaurant on Beverly Boulevard near its intersection with Martel Avenue. The sun was going down but it was still light. Mr. Mercer parked his car on Martel, just north of Beverly, and the party proceeded to walk south along Martel toward Beverly. As the group reached the corner of Martel and Beverly, they started to turn east on Beverly. In the middle of the turn, Mr. Mercer saw plaintiff lurch and fall on her face. Immediately prior to the fall, plaintiff had been talking to Mrs. Mercer. Mr. Mercer testified that he went to plaintiff's assistance and then noticed a triangular-shaped hole in the sidewalk, about 3 or 4 inches wide and about 16 or 18 inches long. He stuck his finger in the hole and estimated that it was over 3 inches deep. He was about six feet away from the hole when he first observed it.

Plaintiff testified that "I was talking to Mr. and Mrs. Mercer, and I glanced right ahead of me, just a casual glance, and I saw the sidewalk was—looked a little different, a little dark, but I certainly felt so secure. I felt that it was safe * * *. Before I fell, when I was a step or perhaps a couple of steps or a step and a half before I fell, I noticed an unusual—as I glanced over I noticed an unusual dark place, but I assumed that it was perfectly safe. It looked to me as I glanced at it that it had been repaired and was perfectly safe." She then caught her foot in the hole and fell, lurching forward on her face. On cross-examination, she added that although the area was dark, she did not notice any break in the pavement. She also testified that she owned glasses but never wore them, because even though she was nearsighted her vision was better without them.

The court instructed the jury that contributory negligence was an issue in the case, that plaintiff could not recover damages if this were proved, and that the burden of proving contributory negligence by a preponderance of the evidence was upon defendant. The court defined negligence and contributory negligence. At plaintiff's request, it gave the following instruction: "While I have instructed you that if the plaintiff was guilty of negligence which contributed proximately to the happening of this accident she cannot recover, such question is one for you to determine from all the facts and circumstances in this case. You must, in determining this question, take into consideration the physical facts and circumstances surrounding the accident, that is, the location, nature and size of the alleged defect, the familiarity or lack of familiarity of plaintiff with the location of the accident, the opportunity, if any, plaintiff had to observe and avoid the same. In other words, the question of her negligence, or lack of it is to be determined from all the circumstances present at the time and place."

At defendant's request, the court instructed the jury that: "It is the duty of a pedestrian traveling on a public street to use ordinary care for his personal safety and to reasonably exercise the faculties with which he is endowed. The law requires that one exercise ordinary care in observing where he is going so as to avoid perils which ordinary prudence and reasonable use of his eyes would disclose; the failure so to do, is negligence."

[1] Defendant contends that these instructions were mere abstract principles of law which did not disclose to the jury its theory of the case, namely, that plaintiff was negligent in looking at, but failing to see, an obvious defect in the sidewalk and in not exercising the care required of a person with impaired vision. It argues that the court erred prejudicially in refusing the four requested instructions which are quoted in the margin.¹

1. "General human experience justifies the inference that when one looks in the direction of an object clearly visible, he sees it, and that when he listens, he hears that which is clearly audible. When there is evidence to the effect that one did look, but did not see that which was in plain sight, or that he listened, but did not hear that which he could have heard in the exercise of ordinary care, it follows that either some part of such evidence is untrue or the person was negligently inattentive."

"It is as much negligence to look and fail to see a defective and dangerous condition in the sidewalk or street which is in plain sight, or which is plainly to be seen by the exercise of ordinary care, as it is negligence not to look at all, and if, therefore, you believe from all the Plaintiff contends, on the other hand, that the court fully and fairly instructed the jury as to the issue of contributory negligence. We agree.

The first three instructions were argumentative. Assertions such as that one who is looking usually sees what is in plain sight and observes dangers that are clearly apparent will usually be heard in the course of argument that some one was guilty of contributory negligence. Whether the defect in the sidewalk was clearly visible and the danger of it apparent and whether plaintiff either failed to look or to look carefully were factual questions to be argued to the jury. The use in instructions of such terms as "clearly visible and apparent danger" in wholly unnecessary statements of truisms well known to all persons of average intelligence serves no useful purpose and is conducive to misunderstanding. The instructions in question were not proper statements of law and had no place in the court's instruction. Such digressions into the fields of fact and argument are likely to be taken by jurors as suggestions as to the court's impressions. They derive no virtue from the fact that they constitute a somewhat common fault. The three instructions were subject to criticism in other respects which it is unnecessary to discuss.

[2] The instruction that plaintiff was required to use greater care because she had defective eyesight was properly refused. She had glasses and was near-evidence in this case that plaintiff, Nettie-may Callahan, should have, by the exercise of ordinary care, seen the claimed dangerous defect in question before walking or driving into it, and if you further find that by the exercise of ordinary care plaintiff could have avoided the accident, then she was guilty of negligence, and if you further find that such negligence on her part, if any, in some degree contributed and was a proximate cause of the accident, then plaintiff may not recover."

"If a danger is so apparent that a person can reasonably be expected to notice it and protect against it, the condition itself constitutes adequate warning, and if a person fails to heed such warning and sighted but she testified that she did not use them and saw better without them. In refusing the instruction the court made a notation that there was no evidence that plaintiff's eyesight was defective. In effect the instruction declared that plaintiff's eyesight was defective. This vice alone warranted its rejection. Also it stated the law incorrectly inasmuch as it implied that plaintiff was required to use more than ordinary care. Conjorsky v. Murray, 135 Cal.App.2d 478, 287 P.2d 505.

The jury was instructed "The law requires that one exercise ordinary care in observing where he is going so as to avoid perils which ordinary prudence and reasonable use of his eyes would disclose; the failure so to do, is negligence," and was also instructed as to the matters to be considered in judging the reasonableness of plaintiff's conduct. These were proper and pertinent declarations of legal principles.

The question of plaintiff's negligence was a simple one. She saw an irregularity in the sidewalk, did not recognize it as a hole and stepped into it. The instructions that were given clearly defined the issue for decision. Moreover, there is no reason for a belief that the verdict would have been different had the requested instructions been given.

The judgment is affirmed.

is injured as a result thereof, she is guilty of contributory negligence."

"It is the rule that one who has defective vision is required to exercise care sufficient to make good such defect. Plaintiff herein was bound, therefore, to use greater care than a person of good eyesight in order to exercise that care which is required of a person having such impairment of vision. Ordinary care to protect herself from injury, however, was all that was required of her, and ordinary care in the case of such person is such care as an ordinarily prudent person with a like infirmity would have exercised under the same or similar circumstances."

Gilbert S. FORTE, Plaintiff and Respondent, v.John M. SCHIEBE, Defendant and Appellant.
Civ. 21351.District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 3, California.

Oct. 23, 1956.

Modification of Opinion Filed Nov. 14, 1956.

Rehearing Denied Dec. 13, 1956.

Action for compensatory and exemplary damages for assault and battery. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Henry M. Willis, J., entered judgment for plaintiff and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Shinn, P. J., held that where evidence presented a question for jury as to whether defendants' assault and battery was with malice, or was the result of defendant acting upon a sudden impulse with considerable provocation under a mistaken notion as to plaintiff's intentions, yet without legal justification, remarks of trial court that malice existed on the part of both parties, was prejudicial error not cured by its instructions to disregard, but in view of fact that action was the third time parties were in court, in the interest of justice, District Court of Appeal would order judgment reversed and purported appeal from order denying defendant's motion for new trial dismissed unless plaintiff agreed to a modification of judgment eliminating award of exemplary damages.

Judgment modified, and as modified, affirmed.

1. Evidence ⇨378(1)

In action for assault and battery, where a comparison of the typing of a defamatory letter allegedly written by defendant concerning plaintiff disclosed significant similarities with the typing of defendant's typewriter, evidence was sufficient to allow introduction of such letter in evidence.

2. Witnesses ⇨372(2)

In action for assault and battery, sustaining of plaintiff's objection to a question directed to plaintiff on cross-examination as to whether defendant had been acquitted in a prosecution for battery to show bias of plaintiff was not error under the circumstances.

3. Judgment ⇨713(1)

In action for compensatory and exemplary damages for assault and battery, objection to introduction in evidence of the record of a prior civil suit between the parties as allegedly conclusive upon the issue of malice, was properly sustained.

4. Appeal and Error ⇨1046(5), 1140(4) Trial ⇨29(1)

Where evidence presented a question for jury as to whether defendant's assault and battery was with malice, or was the result of defendant acting upon a sudden impulse with considerable provocation under a mistaken notion as to plaintiff's intentions, yet without legal justification, remarks of trial court that malice existed on the part of both parties was prejudicial error not cured by its instruction to disregard, but in view of fact that action was the third time parties were in court, in the interest of justice, District Court of Appeal would order judgment for plaintiff reversed and purported appeal from order denying defendant's motion for new trial dismissed, unless plaintiff agreed to a modification of judgment eliminating award of exemplary damages.

C. Douglas Wikle, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Wallace E. Wolfe and Percy V. Hammon, Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHINN, Presiding Justice.

This is an appeal by defendant from a judgment on verdict awarding plaintiff $3,250 compensatory and $3,000 exemplary damages for assault and battery.

Plaintiff and defendant are law enforcement officers. Plaintiff is Supervising Liquor Enforcement Officer, Alcoholic Beverage Control Act, Southern California; he had been a chief petty officer in the U. S. Navy for 20 years and an employe of the federal government in the days of prohibition. Defendant is a crier in the United States District Court, having previously been in the office of the United States Marshal. The parties had known each other since 1928. At the time of the events that led to the present litigation neither was engaged in the performance of official duties.

The parties lived opposite each other in San Pedro. For a long time they had been on unfriendly terms. Plaintiff testified that defendant had threatened him frequently, using toward him foul and insulting language and on several occasions had shoved him and poked him in the ribs with an elbow while they were leaving a Pacific Electric station. Defendant testified that plaintiff had threatened to kill him and his family, had thrown a rock through a window of a house of defendant's relative, had come across the street on three occasions uttering threats and using bad language until he had been taken by the collar by his, plaintiff's wife and led back home. Each denied in toto all accusations of ungentlemanly conduct upon his part, claiming to have acted only defensively at all times. As we shall see, the trial produced some tall lying.

The undisputed facts of the alleged assault were that on a Sunday morning plaintiff was traversing an alley behind defendant's residence; defendant was in the rear, in or near his garage. Lucas, defendant's brother-in-law, was in his own yard nearby. There was an altercation characterized by the use of foul language and a physical encounter in which plaintiff received injuries to his head. At this point agreement among the witnesses as to the progress of events ceased and the problem of the jurors in the realm of the credibility of witnesses commenced. Plaintiff testified that he was unarmed and was leading a Pomeranian on a leash; defendant ordered him out of the alley and without provocation struck him violently about the left cheek with a shovel. Defendant testified that plaintiff had telephoned him twice early that morning and threatened to come over and bash in defendant's skull; Lucas was in the adjoining yard and called to him that plaintiff was coming; plaintiff entered the garage and struck him with a club; he shoved plaintiff out with his shoulder, plaintiff re-entered the garage twice more and may have fallen against an incinerator in the scuffle. Lucas testified that plaintiff came running down the alley carrying a club and that he warned defendant; plaintiff entered the garage. Lucas did not testify whether he saw blows struck. A neighbor of defendant's, Mrs. Blake, from her window saw Schiebe strike Forte with a shovel. Her testimony fully corroborated that of plaintiff. Another neighbor, Mrs. Hansen, a witness for defendant, testified she heard loud swearing, saw plaintiff enter defendant's garage, but was concerned that her small son finish his breakfast and did not follow further developments. Plaintiff suffered substantial injuries.

[1] The first assignment of error to be considered is that the court allowed the introduction in evidence of a defamatory letter allegedly written by defendant concerning plaintiff upon insufficient evidence that defendant wrote the letter. The evidence was sufficient. A comparison of the typing of the letter and that of defendant's typewriter disclosed significant similarities.

[2] Upon complaint of Forte, Schiebe was prosecuted for battery and was acquitted. Defendant questioned plaintiff on cross-examination whether Schiebe had not been acquitted. Plaintiff's objection was sustained and the ruling is assigned as error. As nearly as we can understand from the record the fact of the acquittal was offered to prove that plaintiff, having instituted an unsuccessful prosecution of defendant, would feel frustrated, and biased and prejudiced in his testimony. The court ruled at one time that the judgment would be admitted, if produced, but the matter appears to have been dropped. We need not discuss the admissibility of the evidence. According to plaintiff he suffered from more than frustration. Moreover, time and again it was stated by the court and counsel in the presence of the jury that defendant had been acquitted. Plaintiff's attorney requested that the jury be instructed to disregard the discussion of the acquittal but the court declined to do so saying: "Oh, don't get worried. That jury is there performing a function."

[3] Next defendant offered in evidence the record of a civil suit of Forte v. Schiebe. Plaintiff's objection was sustained. The record does not disclose the nature of the action except by vague statements which cast no light on the subject. However, we recognize the action as one that was before us in 1949 and is reported in 93 Cal.App.2d 22, 207 P.2d 881. It is now asserted that plaintiff and his witness O'Malley, who testified in the present case to verbal abuse of plaintiff by defendant in the Pacific Electric Railway Station, testified in the same manner in the former case, and that since the court in that case found the allegations of such abuse to be untrue, the former judgment is conclusive of some material issue in the present case. Counsel says "The record of the prior case was offered as conclusive evidence upon the issue of malice upon which Respondent had offered testimony in the instant trial." There is no logic in this argument. It appears to have been born of the confusion during the trial in connection with defendant's endeavor to introduce the records of the former cases.

[4] We now come to the assignment of error attributed to the allegedly prejudicial remarks of the trial court. Counsel for defendant cited to the court the case of Marriott v. Williams, 152 Cal. 705, 93 P. 875, to the proposition that the fact that Forte had unsuccessfully prosecuted Schiebe for assault would tend to prove bias and prejudice affecting Forte's testimony in the present case. In the cited case there was also a question of malice. In the discussion of defendant's offer of the record in the civil case, it was confused with the offer of the record in the criminal case and the question of bias of plaintiff as a witness was confused with the question of malice of the defendant in the assault. During the discussion the court made remarks as follows:

"For a half a dozen good legal reasons the objection to the introduction of that record will have to be sustained. It has nothing to do with this case. The sole purpose that it could ever be used for would be to prove malice, and that, as this court says in this case, is so evident here by the actions of the parties that it is patent that no one can deny that they had the malice. * * *

"Mr. Wolfe: If your Honor please, if there are to be any more statements, may they be made out of the hearing of the jury?

"The Court: No. The jury is part of this court.

"Mr. Wolfe: I realize that, but, if your Honor please, we are now arguing the admissibility—

"The Court: You are not arguing it. I am not going to let you argue it. * * * the only relation that this case could bear to the previous case that you are now offering would be on the thin thread of a connecting line involving malice; and I am telling you that there is no basis for offering it here in support of malice when malice is confessed on both sides. The testimony of both these parties makes it manifest that there is malice between them. * * * Now, that shows that in that case the court let it get by as harmless error because it was admissible only in support of malice, and that the malice was already admitted by them in the record, the same as in this case. In this case the existence of malice on both sides cannot be disputed by either as to the other."

There was ample evidence to support a finding of malice on the part of defendant but it was not conclusive upon that issue. It could have been found that defendant acted upon a sudden impulse, with considerable provocation and under a mistaken notion as to plaintiff's intentions, and yet without legal justification. But after hearing the statements of the court it was unlikely that the jury would have found an absence of malice. To be sure the court gave an instruction that the court had not stated nor intended to state its conclusions as to any of the controverted issues, and that any statement indicating the court's views should be disregarded. But the court had done exactly what it told the jury it had not done and there was no retraction of the statement that malice on the part of both parties was not only conclusively proven but admitted.

No fact is better known to trial lawyers than that the minds of jurors are easily swayed by statements from the bench as to the merits of the matters in issue. Especially is this true in the case of a venerable and respected judge whose considered and definite statements convey to the eager minds of jurors an implied direction as to what their finding should be on a material issue. Words spoken with finality, as in the present case, leave an indelible impression. The mere formal admonition that they should be forgotten was no more effective than would have been a statement that although the court meant what it said the jurors should forget that the court said it. The instruction did not remove the harm.

Plaintiff contends that defendant cannot complain of the statements of the court because he made no objection to them and no request that the jury be admonished to disregard them. By failure to protest in the trial court defendant did not forfeit the right to urge the point on appeal. We think a special admonition would not have cured the harm caused by the court's remarks respecting the existence of malice. Moreover, it appears from the record that if defendant had requested that the jury be admonished the request would have been refused.

Defense counsel experienced much difficulty in his efforts to produce his evidence as to the earlier litigation. He was not permitted to make a desired offer of proof nor to present any argument. There was extensive discussion between the court and counsel and numerous statements by the court in addition to those we have quoted. Some of them were considered by plaintiff's attorney to be prejudicial and he made a request with the result that is illustrated by the following passages:

"Mr. Wolfe: Your Honor, I must protest against this continually talking about that case as prejudicial.

"The Court: We will get rid of that by simply ignoring any further consideration of the matter. This case will have to stand and be decided on the facts that have been produced here through the regular channels of our method of procedure.

"Mr. Wolfe: Would your Honor instruct the jury to disregard the discussion between Court and counsel regarding this file?

"The Court: Never mind. Don't be worrying about the jury. When I get through reading my instructions to them, they will have a complete set-up of what the law is which is to govern them. The colloquy, argument during the course of the trial in the presence of a jury between counsel and the Court, is a constant occurrence in busy courts. Notwithstanding that, each time the attorneys usually get up and say 'Please instruct the jury it is none of their business to listen to this,' or they want to go into chambers. I am not one of those judges that tries my cases half in the dark and half in the light. I have them tried out in the wide open light, in the courtroom. If the jurors can't control their judgment and their consideration under the guidance and instruction of the Court, why, then it is just too bad that we don't have different kind of jurors. I have no fear of submitting any of these cases to the jurors that we are getting here in our courts at the present time."

Following this the court instructed the jurors that they should not pay any attention to and should not believe or accept anything that the lawyers said. Although this would have been a proper occasion for an instruction that the jurors should disregard what the court had said, no reference was made to the court's remarks. We are convinced that any protest by defendant respecting the court's remarks would have been unavailing.

We entertain no doubt as to the prejudicial effect of the court's statements upon the defendant's case. There was evidence from which the jury could have concluded that Schiebe's attack upon Forte was actuated by malice. At the same time it could have been concluded that although he was guilty of an assault he acted upon sudden impulse, with considerable provocation and without malice. But the jury found that Schiebe entertained malice and it assessed exemplary damages of $3,000. This issue was not fairly tried and that award may not be allowed to stand. However, the situation respecting compensatory damages is different. The court's statements respecting the existence of malice reflected upon the credibility and motives of Forte and Schiebe equally. They would have been as likely to convey a suggestion that Forte attacked Schiebe with a club as that Schiebe attacked Forte with a shovel. They bore no relation to and we think could not have affected the award of compensatory damages. As to those damages, the judgment should be affirmed. As to the exemplary damages it should be reversed unless plaintiff consents to a modification which will eliminate the award of exemplary damages.

This is the third time the parties have been in court during the course of their ridiculous feud. They have had more than a fair share of the court's time. Plaintiff's right to compensatory damages was well established. The amount is reasonable. The evidence would have sustained the award of exemplary damages, and a like award might be made in another trial. In the interests of justice this litigation should be put to rest at the present stage and under the following conditions.

If plaintiff and respondent within ten days after the filing of this opinion files a written consent to a modification of the judgment, eliminating the award of exemplary damages, the judgment will be modified and affirmed; if such consent be not filed the judgment will be reversed and the purported appeal from the order denying motion for new trial will be dismissed.

Order Re Modification of Opinion

PER CURIAM.

Plaintiff and respondent having filed herein a written consent to a modification of the judgment eliminating the award of exemplary damages in accordance with the opinion heretofore filed, the judgment appealed from is modified by striking out the award of $3,000 as exemplary damages and, as so modified, is affirmed. Each party shall bear his own costs on appeal.

The PEOPLE of the State of California,
Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Conrad MENDOZA, Defendant and Appellant.
Cr. 5617.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California.

Oct. 23, 1956.

Prosecution for violation of narcotics statute. The Superior Court, Santa Barbara County, Ernest D. Wagner, J., entered judgment of conviction and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Fourt, J., held that evidence sustained finding that police officers had reasonable cause to believe that defendant, whose house was under surveillance and who had been visited by known narcotic users, may have committed a felony thereby entitling officers to arrest him without a warrant and that evidence obtained by search incidental to arrest was admissible.

Judgment affirmed and appeal from order denying new trial dismissed.

1. Arrest ⇨63(4)

In prosecution for violation of State narcotics statute, evidence was sufficient to sustain finding that police officers had reasonable cause to believe that defendant, whose house while under surveillance had been frequented by known narcotic users, may have committed a felony so as to justify arrest without first procuring a warrant. West's Ann. Health & Safety Code, § 11500.

2. Arrest ⇨63(4)

Probable cause sufficient to justify arrest of defendant without first obtaining a warrant, has been defined as a suspicion founded upon circumstances sufficiently strong to warrant a reasonable man in the belief that the charge is true. West's Ann. Pen. Code, § 836, subs. 3, 5.

3. Municipal Corporations ⇨189(1)

Police officers may make calls upon suspects and interview them when they have observed suspicious activities.

4. Arrest ⇨63(4), 71Criminal Law ⇨394

In prosecution for violation of State narcotics statute evidence sustained finding that police officers, who had kept defendant's apartment under observation and noticed it being frequented by known narcotic violators and who had arrested persons coming therefrom under the influence of narcotics, and who entered house with landlady's consent, knocked upon door and were told by defendant to come in and thereupon observed defendant under influence of narcotics and saw narcotic materials lying around, entered defendant's apartment with his consent and were justified in making arrest and search without a warrant and therefore evidence was properly admitted.

FOURT, Justice.

The defendant was charged in an information in the county of Santa Barbara with the crime of violation of section 11500 of the Health and Safety Code, a felony, in that he did, on or about, October 14, 1955, unlawfully possess heroin. It was further alleged that the defendant had suffered four prior convictions, namely, robbery in 1938, the Federal Narcotic Act in 1945, each under the name of Ray M. Teran, forgery in 1950, and a violation of section 11721 of the Health and Safety Code in Santa Barbara in 1955. A jury was waived and it was stipulated that the People's case be submitted on the transcript of the preliminary examination. The defendant admitted the four prior convictions. The court found the defendant guilty as charged in the information and sentenced him to the state prison.

Defendant filed a notice of appeal from the judgment and "from the order denying Defendant's motion for new trial." No motion for a new trial was made and consequently no order denying a motion for a new trial was made, and any purported appeal therefrom should be dismissed.

A fair résumé of the facts is as herein set forth. At about 9:30 o'clock p. m., on October 14, 1955, Officer Thompson of the Police Department of Santa Barbara, with other peace officers, went to 117 West Canon Perdido Street in Santa Barbara, and on the second floor level of the house knocked on a door. The defendant Mendoza, whose voice was recognized by Thompson from a previous arrest having to do with narcotics, said, "Who's there? Come in." Upon entering Thompson identified himself and found the room occupied by the defendant and one Sanford. Officer Thompson observed the defendant's eyes and noticed they were contracted and the pupils were almost pinpointed, and there was no reaction to light—he appeared to be in a stupor and had a glassy look. The officer saw a bowl on the dresser, and in it he found two empty capsules, a piece of wadded cotton and a small amount of liquid. The liquid was identified as containing heroin. Thompson was of the opinion that Mendoza was under the influence of a narcotic and placed Mendoza and Sanford under arrest for illegal use of narcotics and being under the influence of narcotics. A search of the room followed and nine capsules containing a whitish powder, identified as heroin, were found.

Ernest Best, Los Angeles, for appellant.

When the nine capsules of heroin were found the defendant was asked if that was all he had, and he replied, "Yes, that's all I have", and then he was asked if it was "pretty good junk?", and he replied, "It's supposed to be."

On cross-examination, Thompson testified that he had gained entrance to the house by going through the back door which was a private apartment of the landlady and that they had secured her consent so to do. The officer also testified that the door into Mendoza's room was not locked and there was no force applied when they entered.

The officer further testified that prior to the arrest he had had an occasion to watch the house and see known narcotic users frequenting the place. On the day of the arrest he had the house under surveillance from about 2:50 o'clock p. m., and from a vantage point he could see the windows of the front of the house, and further, that he knew and could see the windows of the room occupied by Mendoza; that he saw people walk into the room and saw the defendant arrive at the room with another man. The officer was able to identify the other man who stayed upstairs about fifteen minutes and when he came out he was arrested and examined and found to be under the influence of narcotics. A second man was seen to go to the house, call up to the window, be acknowledged and admitted, and then stayed approximately fifteen minutes. This man was arrested when he left and Officer Crawford testified that he was under the influence of narcotics.

Officer Thompson stated that after observing the establishment occupied by the defendant he entered with the intent of making an arrest for sale and possession of narcotics. Officer Crawford of the Santa Barbara police department testified that on October 14, 1955, he had observed people leaving the defendant's house under the influence of narcotics. He further stated that when he took Mendoza to the county hospital the next day at Mendoza's request, because he was then and there suffering from withdrawals, Mendoza told him he had a big habit of "ten capsules a day".

The defendant took the stand and testified, in substance, that the narcotics found in the room did not belong to him; that the door was forced open; that he had not injected himself with any heroin on the evening in question. He further stated that he had refused to submit to a doctor's examination on the night in question and that he did not recall seeing Officer Thompson before.

In substance, the defendant first contends that there was ample time within which the officers could have secured a search warrant, there being no emergency or element of surprise involved, and that therefore the search was illegal and the evidence illegally obtained and improperly admitted. Secondly he contends that the permission obtained from the landlady to enter a part of the premises did not extend to that part of the house occupied by the defendant; and thirdly, that there was a conflict in the evidence as to whether Mendoza gave permission to enter his room, and that in any event the officer used a ruse to gain entrance and had the defendant known the knock or inquiry originated with police officers, he would not have said "Come in", and further, that he did not intend to extend permission to other than friends and therefore his permission was not free and voluntary.

We are of the opinion that the contentions of the defendant are without merit.

In People v. Kilvington, 104 Cal. 86, 92, 37 P. 799, 801, the court said, with reference to what constitutes reasonable cause:

"There is a substantial agreement in the decisions of the courts as to what constitutes probable cause or reasonable cause such as will justify one in arresting or prosecuting another upon a criminal charge; and perhaps as clear and comprehensive a statement of the rule as can be found is that of Shaw, C. J., in Bacon v. Towne, 4 Cush., Mass., 217: 'There must be such a state of facts,' said he, 'as would lead a man of ordinary care and prudence to believe, or entertain an honest and strong suspicion, that the person is guilty.'

[1] If that rule be applied to this case we believe it is evident that the officer had reasonable cause to believe that the defendant may have committed a felony. The defendant had been convicted in January of 1955 of a violation of section 11721 of the Health and Safety Code, and the officer knew of that conviction. The officer had the house under surveillance for a period of time and he determined during this period that persons who were known narcotic users were entering the house and the room of the defendant. Some of these persons were arrested as they left the place and were found to be under the influence of narcotics at the time. One man went up to the house, called up to the window, was acknowledged, went in and stayed approximately fifteen minutes. Upon his leaving he was arrested and found to be under the influence of narcotics.

[2] Probable cause has been defined as a suspicion founded upon circumstances sufficiently strong to warrant a reasonable man in the belief that the charge is true. People v. Brite, 9 Cal.2d 666, 687, 72 P.2d 122. Knowing what the officers knew and seeing what they saw, it is difficult to see how they could have believed anything other than that the defendant had committed a felony.

In the case of People v. Maddox, 46 Cal. 2d 301, 294 P.2d 6, 8, the court said, in reference to the matter of observing known narcotic users:

"Moreover, in the present case Officer Taylor had defendant's home under surveillance for about a month and had observed known narcotics users frequenting it, and the information Davis gave him before the arrest was reasonable cause for the arrest."

Penal Code section 836 provides in part as follows:

"A peaceofficer may make an arrest in obedience to a warrant delivered to him, or may, without a warrant, arrest a person:

"1. For a public offense committed or attempted in his presence.

* * * * *

"3. When a felony has in fact been committed, and he has reasonable cause for believing the person arrested to have committed it.

* * * * *

"5. At night, when there is reasonable cause to believe that he has committed a felony."

We believe that the officers in this case had good cause to proceed under either subdivision 3 or 5 above quoted.

[3] It is the rule that officers may make calls on suspects and interview them when they have observed suspicious activities. People v. Michael, 45 Cal.2d 751, 754, 290 P.2d 852; People v. Simon, 45 Cal.2d 645, 650, 290 P.2d 531. When the officers were invited into the room they saw enough then and there to confirm their belief that a felony had been, and was being committed by the defendant Mendoza.

It was apparently obvious to the officer that the defendant was under the influence of narcotics, and as said in People v. Jauriqui, 142 Cal.App.2d 555, 298 P.2d 896, 900:

"A narcotic addict is defined as a person who unlawfully uses or is addicted to the unlawful use of narcotics, Health and Safety Code, § 11009. Any person convicted of being an addict is guilty of a misdemeanor. It would appear that, under the Code, addiction is a chronic rather than an ordinary acute offense, and one may be guilty of being a 'drug addict' at any time and place he is found so long as the character remains unchanged, although then and there innocent of any act demonstrating his character."

As to the contention that the officers had ample time and should have secured a search warrant, a complete answer is set forth in the case of People v. Sayles, 140 Cal.App.2d 657, 295 P.2d 579, 581:

"When entering the house Officer Hill acted quickly in order to forestall destruction of evidence that he reasonably believed to be there. He testified: 'At the time I was—my main purpose was getting in there and getting to this particular defendant before he could get to the bathroom and flush whatever evidence he had down the toilet, which is quite common. We meet that quite often. By the time we get to the defendants they are usually near a bathroom and they go to a bathroom and flush it down the toilet.' He had a right to make a forcible entry for the purpose of an immediate arrest. See People v. Maddox, 46 Cal.2d 301, 294 P.2d 6; People v. Martin, 45 Cal. 2d 755, [763,] 290 P.2d 855. This carried with it a right to search the person and premises of defendant.

"The claim that failure to procure a search warrant, given reasonable time so to do, precluded a search as an incident to the arrest, was rejected by the Supreme Court in People v. Winston, 46 Cal.2d 151, 293 P.2d 40, 47. The court there said: 'Defendant unavailingly argues that here the police officers had ample time to procure a search warrant and therefore such warrant was required in order to validate the search and seizure of the incriminating evidence at the time of his arrest. Trupiano v. United States, 334 U.S. 699, 708, 68 S.Ct. 1229, 92 L.Ed. 1663. In United States v. Rabinowitz, 339 U.S. 56, 70 S.Ct. 430, 94 L.Ed. 653, it was held that a search of the defendant's premises incident to his lawful arrest at those premises was not unreasonable.' In the cited case of United States v. Rabinowitz, 339 U.S. 56, 65-66, 70 S.Ct. 430, 435, 94 L.Ed. 653, it was observed: 'It is appropriate to note that the Constitution does not say that the right of the people to be secure in their persons should not be violated without a search warrant if it is practicable for the officers to procure one. The mandate of the Fourth Amendment is that the people shall be secure against unreasonable searches. It is not disputed that there may be reasonable searches, incident to an arrest, without a search warrant. Upon acceptance of this established rule that some authority to search follows from lawfully taking the person into custody, it becomes apparent that such searches turn upon the reasonableness under all the circumstances and not upon the practicability of procuring a search warrant, for the warrant is not required. To the extent that Trupiano v. United States, 334 U.S. 699, 68 S.Ct. 1229, 92 L.Ed. 1663, requires a search warrant solely upon the basis of the practicability of procuring it rather than upon the reasonableness of the search after a lawful arrest, that case is overruled. The relevant test is not whether it is reasonable to procure a search warrant, but whether the search was reasonable. That criterion in turn depends upon the facts and circumstances—the total atmosphere of the case.'"

[4]. There is no merit in the contention that the consent of the landlady to enter a part of the house did not give the officer a right to go upstairs to the defendant's room. The defendant told the officers, "Come in", and the officers did so. The officers thereupon had the consent to enter the house and they were invited into the defendant's room. See People v. Gorg, 45 Cal.2d 776, 291 P.2d 469; People v. Caritativo, 46 Cal. 2d 68, 292 P.2d 513.

On the record before us we have concluded that the officers' testimony constituted sufficient evidence that the entry into the room was made with the consent of the defendant—having lawfully entered and seeing what they saw, the officers were perfectly proper in making the arrest and the search. The evidence was, therefore, properly received.

The judgment is affirmed and the purported appeal from the "order" denying a motion for a new trial is dismissed.

Oct. 23, 1956.

Defendant was convicted in the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, LeRoy Dawson, J., of a narcotics offense and of a prior felony conviction, and he appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Shinn, P. J., found evidence to support the narcotics conviction but none to support the adjudication that defendant had suffered a prior conviction.

Reversed and remanded with directions.

2. Criminal Law ☞1202(3)

Robert Donald Hamm; in pro. per.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., for respondent.

SHINN, Presiding Justice.

Robert Donald Hamm was charged with the wilful, unlawful and felonious possession of a preparation of heroin, Health & Safety Code, § 11500, and with a prior felony conviction, to wit, attempted robbery. Defendant denied the former conviction. Trial was to the court and the evidence consisted of that received at the preliminary hearing and additional evidence introduced at the trial. Defendant was represented by counsel. The court found defendant guilty and also found the charge of prior conviction to be true. He appeals from the judgment and an order denying him a new trial.

There was evidence of the following facts: At about 7:30 p. m. on March 1, 1956, plain-clothes officers White and Northrup were driving northward in an unmarked car on Towne Avenue in the City of Los Angeles. Officer White testified that it was dark and that the only artificial lighting came from the car headlights. He observed defendant and one Rollins walking southward on Towne. Defendant was nearest the curb. His attention was directed to the men by defendant's apparent nervousness. As the car approached, White saw defendant make a backhand flipping motion with his right hand and noticed a light object leave his hand. Rollins did not make a throwing motion. White got out of the car and discovered a cellophane bundle lying on the parking strip in the dirt next to the curb. The bundle was beside a parked car about three feet from where defendant was standing when he threw it. Both men's arms were examined; old needle marks were found on Rollins' arms; none was found on defendant. Officer White placed the bundle in an envelope, sealed it and sent it to the central property police officer where it was examined the next day by Jay Allen, a police chemist. Allen testified that he opened the envelope and found it to contain seven paper bindles, each one holding a quantity of powder. He analyzed the powder and determined it to be heroin.

Defendant, testifying in his own behalf, stated that while he and Rollins were walking southward on Towne Avenue, they were stopped by two plain-clothes policemen. The officers asked him if he was a narcotics user. He told them he had been but had quit it. The officers then examined both men for needle marks. They found none on defendant, but one of the officers accused defendant of being under the influence of narcotics. The officers were about to let them go when one suggested that defendant and Rollins might have dropped something. The officer searched the area with a flashlight and discovered a small package by the curb. Defendant denied that either he or Rollins had thrown the package away. On cross-examination, he admitted the prior conviction, but it was conceded that he had not served a term in prison.

Lovell Rollins, testifying on behalf of defendant, admitted being a narcotics user, but stated that defendant did not have the heroin in his possession.

Upon application of defendant for appointment of counsel, this court referred the matter to the Los Angeles Bar Association Committee on Criminal Appeals. The record on appeal was examined by a member of the committee and a report was made to the court that in the attorney's opinion no meritorious ground for appeal existed and that the filing of a brief would be unjustified. Defendant was duly so advised and his time to file a brief was substantially extended. No brief has been filed. In accordance with our practice, we have made an independent study of the record. See People v. Logan, 137 Cal. App.2d 331, 290 P.2d 11.

[1] The evidence supports the judgment. There was testimony justifying a reasonable inference that Hamm had actual dominion and control over the heroin, and his knowledge that the package was contraband was sufficiently shown by his attempt to dispose of it when he feared apprehension. People v. Tennyson, 127 Cal.App.2d 243, 273 P.2d 593 and cases cited.

[2] The People produced no evidence of defendant's former conviction. He was questioned on cross-examination as follows:

"Q. Have you ever been convicted of a felony, sir? A. Yes, sir, I have.

"Q. What felony? A. Robbery.

"Q. Really it was attempted robbery, wasn't it? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Rather than robbery? A. Yes.

"Q. You never served a term in the Federal or State prison for it? A. No, sir."

This admission of a former conviction was relevant only to the matter of defendant's credibility and was available to the People for the purpose of impeachment only. People v. Carrow, 207 Cal. 366, 368-369, 278 P. 857; People v. Batwin, 120 Cal.App.2d 825, 828, 262 P.2d 88. The adjudication that defendant had suffered a prior conviction was without support in the evidence.

The judgment and order are reversed and the cause remanded to the trial court with direction to that court that if, within twenty days after the filing therein of the remittitur from this court, the district attorney shall apply for an order dismissing that portion of the information which charges defendant with having been convicted of a felony prior to the commission of the offense under section 11500 of the Health and Safety Code charged therein, and said application be granted, and the court shall pronounce judgment and sentence upon defendant, thereupon such judgment shall stand affirmed. If the district attorney shall not within said period of twenty days make said application, the trial court shall grant appellant a new trial as to the accusation of the former conviction only.

Civ. 21653, 21654.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 2, California.

Oct. 24, 1956.

Rehearing Denied Nov. 19, 1956.

Vendors brought quiet title action against purchasers. A trust deed lienor brought separate action against both vendors and purchasers to have it adjudged that property was subject to lien of first trust deed, for foreclosure of same, and for other appropriate relief. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Harold C. Shepherd, J., entered judgment quieting the vendors' title against the purchasers and another judgment granting the prayer of the trust deed lienor, and ordering her trust deed foreclosed, and appeals were taken from each judgment. The District Court of Appeal, Ashburn, J., held that escrow agent, authorized to deliver purchase money upon filing for record of instruments entitling agent to procure title insurance, could not accept personal assurance and liability of title insurance company that title was in shape for writing of policy, and held that where embezzlement of funds by escrow agent occurred while trust deed lien against property was outstanding, loss fell upon purchasers.

Affirmed.

1. Escrows ⇨9

Terms and conditions of an escrow agreement must be strictly performed.

2. Escrows ⇨9

Doctrine of substantial performance is inapplicable to escrow agreements.

3. Escrows ⇨8(1)

Escrow holder is agent for both parties at all times prior to performance of conditions of escrow, but when that event transpires, nature of such dual agency changes to an agency not for both, but for each of parties to said transaction in respect to those things placed in escrow, to which each has thus become completely entitled.

4. Escrows ⇨12

When conditions of escrow have been fully performed, title passes eo instanti, and recordation of documents merely operates to evidence passing of title previously accomplished.

5. Escrows ⇨14(1)

A delivery or recordation by or on behalf of escrow holder prior to full performance of terms of escrow is a nullity, and no title passes.

6. Escrows ⇨8(1)

If escrow holder embezzles funds deposited in escrow and does so before moment for closing arrives, the loss must be borne by him who deposited it, because it is still his money.

7. Escrows ⇨5

Where escrow instructions of vendors and purchasers were on single printed form, signed separately but contemporaneously by parties, they were to be read and considered together, and if, when so read and considered, they contained all of necessary constituent elements to make contract, they were to be regarded as a contract in writing between the parties.

8. Evidence ⇨20(1)

It is a matter of common knowledge that, in Long Beach, policies of title insurance are almost universally demanded by purchasers, and that escrow agent which cannot write such insurance will have to actually close through a title insurance company so that title can be brought down and escrowed instruments recorded simultaneously, or substantially so.

9. Escrows ⇨3, 4

Where escrow agent could not write title insurance and it was accordingly provided that closing of escrow would be handled through title insurance company, and separate escrow for financing transaction also contemplated closing through title insurance company, title insurance company was subagent of escrow agent for purpose of receiving from lender money loaned to purchasers, and when title company received funds from lender, the escrow agent, in contemplation of law, had funds in hand.

10. Escrows ⇨8(1), 9

Escrow agent authorized to deliver purchase money upon filing for record of instruments entitling such agent to procure title insurance could not accept personal assurance and liability of title insurance company that title was in shape for writing of policy; and where embezzlement of funds by escrow agent occurred while trust deed lien against property was outstanding, loss fell upon purchasers.

11. Escrows ⇨8(1)

Purchase money could not be paid to lienor by escrow agent until it became payable to vendors, who were using it to clear their title, and where embezzlement by insolvent escrow agent occurred prior to time when purchase money became payable to vendors, loss could not fall upon lienor, who had authorized escrow agent to use trust deed transmitted to agent only when agent could deliver sum in payment of debt secured thereby.

Denio, Hart, Taubman & Simpson and Roger W. Young, Long Beach, for respondents Burnett.

ASHBURN, Justice.

An insolvent escrow holder embezzled moneys deposited with it as soon as they were received. Who must stand the loss—vendor, vendee, holder of trust deed upon the subject land?

On August 25, 1954, plaintiffs James R. Burnett and wife entered into an escrow with defendants Eldred L. Vestermark and wife, depositing with Broadway Escrow of Long Beach (hereinafter referred to as Broadway) instructions appropriate to consummating a sale by the Burnetts to the Vestermarks of certain property owned by the Burnetts and situated on Pomona Street in the city of Long Beach. The property was subject to the lien of a trust deed held by Mila D. Todd, as executrix of the estate of Newton M. Todd, deceased. She deposited in escrow a demand for the amount necessary to pay her note in full. The escrow holder could not write title insurance and it was contemplated that the closing of escrow would be handled through Title Insurance and Trust Company of Los Angeles so that a policy of title insurance could be obtained for the protection of the buyer. In order to finance the deal the Vestermarks borrowed $7,500 from Beneficial Standard Life Insurance Company, and to that end established a separate escrow with Broadway; it also contemplated closing through Title Insurance and Trust Company. The instructions provided that the money from this loan was to be used in the Burnett escrow.

On September 21, 1954, Broadway requested Title Insurance to file and record all papers then in hand. This request was carried out on September 22, 1954. The title company, having previously received from Beneficial Standard Life Insurance Company the proceeds of its loan to the Vestermarks, transmitted the net amount of $6,421.71 to Broadway, which received the title company check that same day, September 22nd. The check was deposited in a Long Beach bank on the 23rd to the credit of Broadway and the proceeds immediately embezzled by its president. The evidence shows that the bank balance in its trustee account was $1.98 on September 20th. Its business was closed by action of the corporation commissioner on October 8th.

At the time of recordation of the documents by the title company on September 22nd, it did not have in hand any request for reconveyance of the Todd trust deed; it had been requested by Broadway to file the papers and "hold for reconveyance to come." Pursuant thereto it recorded all papers on the 22nd, although it obviously could not clear title at that time because of the continued existence of the Todd lien. It accepted the business risk involved and at some time after September 23rd issued a policy of title insurance dated September 22, 1954, showing property vested as of that date in the Vestermarks free of the Todd lien. Actually it did not receive Mrs. Todd's request for reconveyance until September 30th, and the document was not recorded until October 4th.

The Burnetts brought an action against the Vestermarks in the familiar form of quiet title. Mrs. Todd brought an action against the Burnetts and the Vestermarks to have it adjudged that the property is subject to the lien of her first trust deed, that it be foreclosed, and other appropriate relief granted. The trial court entered judgment quieting the Burnett title against the Vestermarks, and another judgment granting the prayer of Mrs. Todd and ordering her trust deed foreclosed. Appeal having been taken from each judgment, the cases are presented here on a single set of briefs.

[1-6] In order to determine whose money was embezzled by Broadway on September 23, 1954, a careful scrutiny of the escrow instructions is required, and it must be made in the light of certain settled legal principles. It is established in this state that the terms and conditions of an escrow must be strictly performed. Shreeves v. Pearson, 194 Cal. 699, 711, 230 P. 448; Los Angeles City High School Dist. of Los Angeles County v. Quinn, 195 Cal. 377, 383, 234 P. 313; McCarthy & Myer v. Bank of Italy, 68 Cal.App. 166, 170, 228 P. 724; Watts v. Mohr, 86 Cal. App.2d 256, 262, 194 P.2d 758. The doctrine of substantial performance does not apply. Watts v. Mohr, supra, 86 Cal. App.2d at page 262, 194 P.2d at page 761; 19 Am.Jur. § 20, p. 438. The escrow holder is agent for both parties at all times prior to performance of the conditions of the escrow, but when that event transpires " * * * the nature of this dual agency changes to an agency not for both but for each of the parties to said transaction in respect to those things placed in escrow, to which each has thus become completely entitled." Shreeves v. Pearson, supra, 194 Cal. 699, 707, 230 P. 448, 451; see also, Greenzweight v. Title Guarantee & Trust Co., 1 Cal.2d 577, 582, 36 P.2d 186. When the conditions have been fully performed, title passes eo instanti and recordation of documents operates to evidence the passing of title previously accomplished. 18 Cal. Jur.2d § 24, p. 341, § 14, p. 325; Holman v. Toten, 54 Cal.App.2d 309, 313-314, 128 P.2d 808. On the other hand, a delivery or recordation by or on behalf of the escrow holder prior to full performance of the terms of the escrow is a nullity. No title passes. Hildebrand v. Beck, 196 Cal. 141, 147, 236 P. 301, 39 A.L.R. 1076; Greenzweight v. Title Guarantee & Trust Co., supra, 1 Cal.2d 577, 581, 36 P.2d 186; Drinkwater v. Hollar, 6 Cal.App. 117, 121, 91 P. 664; see also, 30 C.J.S., Escrows, § 11, p. 1211. If the escrow holder embezzles funds deposited in the escrow and does so before the moment for closing arrives, the loss must be borne by him who deposited it, because it is still his money. Hildebrand v. Beck, supra, 196 Cal. at page 146, 236 P. at page 303; 18 Cal.Jur.2d § 18, p. 331.

[7] The instant instructions of the Burnetts and Vestermarks are on a single printed form, buyers and sellers signing separately but apparently having done so contemporaneously. "These instructions, having been signed on the same day and as a part of the same transaction, are to be read and considered together. When so read and considered, if they contain all of the necessary constituent elements to make a contract, they are to be regarded as a contract in writing between the parties." Neher v. Kauffman, 197 Cal. 674, 683, 242 P. 713, 717; to the same effect are Thorman v. David, 199 Cal. 386, 390, 249 P. 513; 18 Cal.Jur.2d § 29, p. 354.

The buyers' instructions of the Vestermarks say that they will hand Broadway the sum of $6,000, together with necessary notes and other instruments, "which you are authorized and instructed to use and deliver provided instruments have been filed for record entitling you to procure assurance of title in the form of a Joint Protection Policy of Title Insurance issued by Title Insurance and Trust Company, Los Angeles, California, in its usual form," showing title vested in the buyers subject to a trust deed in the sum of $1,300 to be made by them as a part of the purchase price. The instructions of the Burnetts as sellers say: "The foregoing instructions and conditions are hereby approved and accepted in their entirety and concurred in by me." They agree to supply any funds, notes and other instruments necessary to carry out their end of the instructions, "which you are authorized to use and deliver provided you hold for my account any instruments accruing to me and the sum of $6,000.00." Also, "Recordation of any instruments delivered through this escrow, if necessary or proper in the issuance of the policies of title insurance called for, is authorized, and in connection therewith funds and/or instruments received in this escrow may be delivered to or deposited with the Title Insurance and Trust Company or the Land Title Insurance Company, for the purpose of complying with the terms and conditions of these escrow instructions.

"You are also authorized to open a sub-escrow with the Title Insurance and Trust Company or the Land Title Insurance Company for deposit of the funds accruing in this escrow from a loan or loan which proceeds are to be used toward the financing of this property. * * * Pay demand for release of encumbrance, now of record."

[8,9] The trial judge expressed the opinion that Broadway did not hold any funds for the sellers at the time the escrow was closed because the title company check which it received on the 22nd was not cashed until the 23rd. We do not share this view. The instructions recognize and effectuate a matter of common knowledge, namely, that in this community where policies of title insurance are almost universally demanded by the buyer, the escrow agent which cannot write such insurance must actually close through a title insurance company so that title may be brought down and escrowed instruments recorded simultaneously, or substantially so. Specific recognition of this fact appears in the quoted paragraph concerning the opening of a sub-escrow with Title Insurance and Trust Company. The money which was loaned to the buyers by Beneficial Standard Life Insurance Company was handled in this manner, being paid to Title Insurance and Trust Company. It was the sub-agent of Broadway for that purpose, and when it, the Title Company, received the money Broadway, in contemplation of law, had it in hand. This occurred before the documents were recorded or the sale escrow otherwise closed. The fact that this sum of $6,421.71 was not transferred from the loan escrow to the sale escrow on the books of Broadway, the embezzler, is immaterial. If the fact that the check was not cashed before recordation were the only defect in the closing of the escrow, it would have to be held that Broadway, as escrow holder, had in hand money belonging to the sellers and that they had become entitled to it through performance of all the terms of the escrow, but the status of the Todd lien gave the situation a substantially different complexion.

[10] The buyers' instructions authorize the escrow holder to use and deliver cash, notes and other instruments, "provided instruments have been filed for record entitling you to procure assurance of title in the form of a Joint Protection Policy of Title Insurance." This does not say, and cannot fairly be construed to mean, that the escrow holder can accept the personal assurance and liability of Title Insurance and Trust Company that the title is in shape for the writing of a policy. The buyer must be "entitled" to procure the same, and that right must be based upon instruments filed for record which would per se entitle the buyer to a policy of insurance. This event had not occurred. The authorities above cited forbid substitution of the title company's assurance that title is or will be good when the evidence shows that that was not so at the time of the closing. The buyer had exacted good title which must exist at the moment of closing. It did not exist and therefore the closing was premature, title did not pass to him though the deed and other instruments had been recorded, and the money was still his money when embezzled by Broadway.

The sellers' instructions provide that their money and instruments may be used and delivered "provided you hold for my account any instruments accruing to me and the sum of $6,000.00." The closing of the escrow being premature, Broadway did not then hold any instruments accruing to the sellers, nor did it hold the sum of $6,000 for them. Hildebrand v. Beck, supra, 196 Cal. 141, 145, 236 P. 301, 39 A.L.R. 1076. No question of waiver is here presented, for no opportunity for a waiver was afforded to either party. The closing was wrongful and the money which was embezzled belonged to the buyers, Vestermark.

[11] What about Mrs. Todd's trust deed lien? She was not a party to the escrow. Upon request from Broadway to submit a demand and pertinent papers looking toward payment of that loan, Mrs. Todd's attorneys on September 20th forwarded to Broadway the note, trust deed and a request for reconveyance, concluding their letter of transmittal as follows: "You are authorized to use these instruments when you can deliver to us the sum of $1391.13 plus interest at 6% from July 10, 1954." As above shown, the money in the escrow at the time of actual closing was that of the Vestermarks and there was no authority to pay it to Mrs. Todd, for the moment of proper closing of the escrow had not arrived. That money could not be paid to Mrs. Todd until it became payable to the sellers, Burnett, who were using it to clear their title. The Burnett instructions to "Pay demand for release of encumbrance" could not be carried out, for the money did not belong to the Burnetts. Hence, the escrow company was not in position to deliver to Mrs. Todd the sum she demanded, and the recordation of her request for reconveyance was improper and ineffective.

By its judgments the trial court quieted title of the Burnetts against all claims of the Vestermarks, determined that the Todd trust deed continues as a valid lien on the property and ordered it foreclosed. No complaint is made as to the form of either judgment.

Both judgments are affirmed.

Oct. 23, 1956.

Prosecution for violation of the Dangerous Weapons Control Law. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Joe Raycraft, J., entered judgment of conviction and denied defendant's motion for a new trial and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Shinn, P. J., held that trial court's remarks to the jury after it had reported its inability to agree upon a verdict, asking them to deliberate for a reasonable time longer and telling them that if they could not then agree they would be discharged, did not amount to an attempt to coerce a verdict and did not exceed the bounds of permissible comment upon the issue to be decided, and were not so prejudicial as to require a new trial.

Judgment and order affirmed.

Criminal Law §§865(1), 1174(1)

In prosecution for violation of the Dangerous Weapons Control Law, trial court's remarks to the jury after it had reported its inability to agree upon a verdict asking them to deliberate for a reasonable time longer and telling them that if they could not then agree they would be discharged, did not amount to an attempt to coerce a verdict and did not exceed the bounds of permissible comment upon the issue to be decided, and were not so prejudicial as to require a new trial. West's Ann.Pen.Code, §§ 1237, 12021.

Charles F. Legeman, Long Beach, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Norman H. Sokolow, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

SHINN, Presiding Justice.

Defendant was accused of violating the Dangerous Weapons Control Law, Pen. Code, § 12021, in that he willfully, unlawfully and feloniously had in his possession and under his custody and control, a .38 Special Smith & Wesson chrome-plated revolver, capable of being concealed upon the person. He had previously been convicted of assault with intent to ravish, a felony, in Alabama, and is still on parole for that offense. The trial was to a jury and after a verdict of guilty the court suspended proceedings and granted probation for a period of five years, the first two years to be spent in the county jail. Defendant appeals from the judgment, Pen.Code; § 1237, and the order denying him a new trial. The sole contention raised on the appeal is that the court erred prejudicially in making certain remarks to the jury after it had reported its inability to agree upon a verdict.

Roosevelt Harper, a witness for the People, testified that he had been at defendant's home during the early morning hours of June 18, 1955 and returned there about 5:30 a.m. to get a camera which he had left by mistake. He then walked to his own home and as he passed from the rear to the front of his house he saw defendant sitting in his own car nearby. Defendant called him over to the car. Defendant accused him of stealing $65 which he denied. He testified that he saw a revolver in a holster on the seat and that defendant picked up the gun and held it in his hand. Harper then told defendant that he would ask his wife if she would write a check for the $65, went into his house and called the police. After telephoning he returned to the car and told defendant to get rid of the gun. Defendant said "what gun" and suggested that Harper was drunk. The police officers who answered Harper's call searched both men, but found no gun.

They told Harper that he may have been mistaken and defendant started to drive away.

Officer Bignell testified that he and his partner, Officer Chapman, arrived at about 6 a.m. They searched the men and the car but did not find the gun; that shortly after defendant began to drive away, he looked in the bushes on the west side of Harper's house and found the gun and holster. He then stopped defendant and placed him under arrest.

Officer Chapman stated that he had a conversation with defendant at the police station and that defendant admitted hiding the gun in the bushes. Detective Inspector Harvey testified to a similar conversation. A fingerprint expert testified that a fingerprint pattern found on the gun was the same as one taken from defendant two days after the arrest. It was stipulated that the gun belonged to a George Grey, who resided in the same house as defendant.

Reverend Lawrence Rodgers, defendant's pastor, testified to his good reputation for truth, honesty, and integrity. He stated that on the day following the arrest Harper told him that he had not seen defendant with the gun. This was denied by Harper on cross-examination.

Defendant, testifying in his own behalf, denied he had had a gun in his possession, denied having had a conversation with Officer Chapman, but admitted having had a conversation with Inspector Harvey. During the conversation with Harvey the gun was present and defendant stated that it was handed to him.

The jury retired at 10:45 a.m. and returned at about 3 p.m. to have the information and the testimony of Officer Chapman read. It returned again at 4:12 p.m. and the foreman stated: "Your Honor, we have agreed that we are a hung jury with a nine to three count. Further debate, apparently, seems to be useless to the members of the jury." The court then asked whether the jurors were deliberating in a friendly manner, and upon ascertaining that they were, told them that they had not been out long enough for him to discharge them because of their inability to agree. He asked the foreman whether there was a chance to reach a verdict within a reasonable time and the foreman replied: "Your Honor, before we came in at this time we discussed this matter. * * * It was the opinion of all 12 of us that further discussion would not change this vote even though we are, you might say, listening to each other." A juror then asked the court whether, if defendant were merely living in a house with someone who had a gun, that would constitute possession. The court replied that the question was speculative, that it would be for the jury to decide, but that he did not think that would be possession. He told the jurors that if they did not believe that defendant had the gun in his possession on the morning of June 18th, then the evidence of defendant's fingerprint on the gun would not be sufficient to convict. He stated that: "In other words, it boils down to this, That unless you believe and are convinced beyond a reasonable doubt that defendant had possession of that gun, possession and custody and control of that gun * * * that * * * morning, unless you believe that beyond a reasonable doubt you ought to find him not guilty. * * * It boils down to Leigh [the street on which the car was parked] on that Saturday morning. You either believe that or you don't believe it. If he had possession, control and custody there—he either did or didn't, and that is your issue."

A juror asked the court whether mere knowledge that the gun was hidden in the bush would constitute possession. The court replied that: "He either put it in the bush or had possession or somebody else put it in the bush and he didn't have possession. * * * I don't see how you can believe both ways. He either had possession or he didn't. I don't think the gun walked over there in that bush. * * * So you can take your choice who put the gun in the bush or who had possession of the gun. It is a rather simple issue; it is just a question of what you believe, that is all."

The foreman told the court that the jury was divided as to who put the gun in the bush and the court stated: "I am certainly not going to force a verdict. I will never do that. I will never just hold a jury so long that I am going to force a verdict because it might be a bad verdict. * * * It isn't legal to do that, but I do feel that a little bit more deliberation on your part might bring a verdict and if it doesn't, why then you should be discharged. * * * I think you ought to deliberate a little longer and see if there is any change." A juror then said he thought that the jury ought to deliberate a while longer. The court stated: "We are all reasonable people * * * and here is a rather simple issue to decide and of course there is room for a difference of opinion * * * and you could be absolutely sincere and believe two people could sincerely differ as to their belief and opinion here." One of the jurors then remarked that he didn't think the difference of opinion was so deep that it couldn't be settled.

The colloquy between the court and jury was unduly extended. It lasted for 23 minutes. We have given a fair summary of it, omitting nothing of which complaint could justly be made. The jury retired at 4:35 p.m. and returned at 5:42 with a guilty verdict.

We said in People v. Crowley, 101 Cal. App.2d 71, 75, 224 P.2d 748, 751: "It is well settled that a conviction will not be allowed to stand if the court has made remarks to the jurors which might reasonably be interpreted as indicating the court's belief of the guilt of the accused, and if it also appears upon the entire record that the infringement upon the rights of the defendant resulted in a miscarriage of justice. Under our system of law no reviewing court could hold otherwise. These questions must be answered on the factual basis of the individual case. The courts have not hesitated to reverse convictions where trial judges have urged that an agreement be reached after learning that a small minority of the jurors were holding out for acquittal. [Citing cases.] It is manifestly true that insistence upon an agreement with knowledge that the jurors favoring acquittal constitute a small minority, is an indication of the court's belief that the verdict should be against the accused. The jurors would naturally suppose the court's remarks to be addressed to those who were in the minority. * * * [W]hen the court gains information as to how the jurors are divided greater care should be exercised in order that the court's remarks may not be taken as an indication that the verdict should be one way or the other. However, the forbidden result can be accomplished without its having been disclosed how the jurors are divided upon the question of guilt. The jurors know how they are divided, and the minority, especially if few in number, would be the ones to feel the weight of the pressure."

With these cautionary principles in mind, we have concluded that the statements of the court were not prejudicial. People v. Crowley, supra, 101 Cal.App.2d 71, 224 P.2d 748, and other cases relied upon are not in point. It is unnecessary to point out the particulars in which they are distinguishable. The jurors had deliberated for a few hours when they reported their disagreement. The court ascertained on several occasions that they were discussing the case in a friendly manner and that although they were deadlocked, they were not averse to further deliberation. The court told them that he would not force a verdict because a forced verdict is generally a bad verdict. He asked them to deliberate for a reasonable time longer and told them that if they could not then agree they would be discharged. There was no attempt to coerce a verdict, either by a threat to lock up the jury for the night, by insistence upon a verdict, or reference to the expense of another trial.

The court's remarks were fair to the defendant and did not exceed the bounds of permissible comment upon the issue to be decided. Defendant did not object to any of the court's remarks and we are of the view that he had no valid reason for objecting. The evidence, though in conflict, supports the verdict.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

Oct. 22, 1956.

Action for divorce by wife wherein the husband filed a cross complaint. From an order of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Philbrick McCoy, J., granting plaintiff a new trial, the defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Shinn, P. J., held that action of trial judge was proper.

Order affirmed.

Failure to give five days' notice contemplated by the statute of trial is a proper

On an appeal from an order granting plaintiff a new trial in an action for divorce, appeal was deemed frivolous and penalty by way of costs of $100 was awarded.

SHINN, Presiding Justice.

This is an appeal from an order granting plaintiff a new trial in an action for divorce.

On June 10, 1954, plaintiff, through her then attorney A. A. Goldstone, filed an action for divorce charging defendant with extreme cruelty. She sought all the community property, reasonable support for herself and their minor son, and custody of the child. Defendant answered and cross-complained, likewise seeking custody of the child and all the community property. Plaintiff answered the cross-complaint.

On September 16, 1954, Lester, defendant's counsel, filed a memorandum for setting for trial, which was served by mail on attorney Goldstone. By minute order entered December 27, 1954, the case was set for trial on April 7, 1955. Notice of trial was served by mail on attorney Goldstone on December 29, 1955 and filed on December 31, 1955. Upon receipt of the notice, Goldstone notified attorney Lester that he no longer represented plaintiff, that plaintiff was being represented by Jerry Geisler, and that he had forwarded the notice to Geisler's office. On January 3, 1955, attorney Lester learned from Geisler's office that Mr. Geisler was not representing plaintiff and that she was appearing in propria persona. Two substitutions of attorneys, from Goldstone to Geisler, and from Geisler to plaintiff, were filed on December 31, 1954, but neither was served on attorney Lester.

On March 25, 1955, attorney Lester caused another notice of trial to be mailed to plaintiff, in propria persona, at 300 North Garfield, Alhambra, California, which was the business address of plaintiff's mother's employer. An affidavit of service by mail was filed on April 7th, the case was called for trial in the master calendar department, and plaintiff having failed to appear, it was transferred to the short cause department to be heard as a default matter. Attorney Lester informed the court below that "although I gave notice of trial, nobody appeared." The court thereupon proceeded to hear evidence on defendant's cross-complaint, and at the conclusion of the testimony granted defendant an interlocutory decree, awarding him the community property, including all real and personal property, and custody of the two year old child. The decree recites, inter alia, that plaintiff had been duly served with notice of trial, but did not appear, either in person or by counsel.

Subsequently thereto, plaintiff, through her present counsel, made a motion for a new trial on the grounds that she was not served with a written notice of trial and that she had no actual notice of the trial of the cause on April 7, 1955. The motion was granted.

By affidavit of plaintiff filed in support of her motion she averred that she substituted attorney Goldstone out of the case on December 15, 1954 (prior to the mailing of the first notice of trial) and that thereafter he was no longer her attorney of record. She also averred that she never received the second notice of trial which was allegedly mailed to the Alhambra address and that her mother told her that such notice was never received there. Her mother averred that had a notice of trial been mailed to that address, she would have received it and forwarded it to plaintiff, and that no notice of trial was ever mailed to that address. In this connection, plaintiff states in her brief that attorney Lester admitted at the hearing of the motion for a new trial that the second notice of trial had been returned undelivered by the United States mail and that attorney Lester exhibited the returned envelope to the court; he also admitted that attorney Goldstone told him that his substitution out of the case had occurred prior to receipt of the first notice of trial. These statements are not contradicted by defendant in his reply brief.

The counter-affidavit of attorney Lester set forth the chronology of events to which we have already referred. It also stated that the court had granted defendant the right to see his son on alternate Sundays, that on plaintiff's refusal to comply with the order a bench warrant was issued on January 4, 1955, and that the true reason for plaintiff's failure to appear at the trial was to avoid service of the warrant.

its discretion in granting the motion. Section 594, subdivision 1 of the Code of Civil Procedure requires the service of notice of trial and when the adverse party fails to appear, proof of service. Compliance with this section is mandatory. Simon v. Tomasini, 97 Cal.App.2d 115, 217 P.2d 488; Lapique v. Kelley, 82 Cal.App. 586, 587, 256 P. 229; Beal v. Superior Court, 78 Cal.App. 33, 247 P. 922. And failure to give the five days' notice contemplated by the statute is a proper ground for the granting of a new trial, either on the theory that there has been an "error in law", Smith v. Halstead, 88 Cal.App. 2d 638, 641, 199 P.2d 379; Code Civ. Proc. § 657, subd. 7, or on the theory that the lack of notice constituted an "Irregularity in the proceedings of the court * * * by which either party was prevented from having a fair trial," Code Civ.Proc. § 657, subd. 1." Simon v. Tomasini, supra, 97 Cal.App.2d 115, 123, 217 P.2d 488, 493.

[3] Defendant contends that due and timely notice of the trial was given by the service of notice of trial on Goldstone, who was then plaintiff's attorney of record. In this connection, he relies on sections 284, subdivision 1 and 285 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The former provides that: "The attorney in an action or special proceeding may be changed at any time before or after judgment or final determination, as follows: 1. Upon the consent of both client and attorney, filed with the clerk, or entered upon the minutes; * * *". The latter provides that: "When an attorney is changed, as provided in the last section, written notice of the change and of the substitution of a new attorney, or of the appearance of the party in person, must be given to the adverse party. Until then he must recognize the former attorney." It is defendant's position that service of the notice on attorney Goldstone prior to the time defendant received written notification of the substitution of attorneys was binding on plaintiff under the above-quoted code sections, citing Starkweather v. Minarets Min. Co., 5 Cal.App.2d 501, 504, 43 P.2d 321; Sherman v. Panno, 129 Cal.App.2d 375, 378-379, 277 P.2d 80; Reynolds v. Reynolds, 21 Cal.2d 580, 584, 134 P.2d 251 and Carrara v. Carrara, 121 Cal.App.2d 59, 61, 262 P.2d 591. But there is more involved here than merely a question of technical compliance with the statute.

Before the court could proceed with the trial on April 7, 1955, satisfactory proof of notice to plaintiff was mandatory. At that time, the court had before it the two notices of trial and the two affidavits of service by mail. The only reference to notice in the reporter's transcript of the trial is attorney Lester's statement that "although I gave notice of trial, nobody appeared." Attorney Lester did not disclose to the court at the trial the communications from attorney Goldstone and attorney Geisler's office, by which he learned, within a few days of the service of the first notice, that plaintiff was without counsel.

Concealment from the court of the facts that attorneys Goldstone and Geisler had been released as plaintiff's attorneys before the first notice was given, that attorney Lester knew of their release, and the further fact that the second notice had not been received by plaintiff fully justified the court in granting plaintiff's motion.

The action of the court in granting the motion when the facts were disclosed indicates beyond peradventure that had they been disclosed at the time the matter came on for trial the court would have ruled that sufficient notice had not been given and would not have proceeded with the trial.

Regardless of any question of the legal sufficiency of either notice of trial it is clear to us that attorney Lester had a duty to inform the court that one notice was served on an attorney whose employment had been terminated by plaintiff, that the other notice had not been received by plaintiff and that she had no actual notice of the time of trial. The trial court obviously was of the same opinion.

[4, 5] When a trial judge in a proper proceeding vacates a judgment he has rendered in ignorance of material facts which he believes a party had a duty to disclose to him, and which, if known to him, would have caused him to refrain from ordering the judgment, we will not question his action. The order under review represents, in our opinion, an eminently proper exercise of discretion. It would have been surprising to us if, under the circumstances, the court had suffered plaintiff to lose by default her marital rights, including the custody of the child. We deem the appeal from the order frivolous and deserving of a penalty by way of costs of $100.

The order is affirmed, plaintiff to have $100 additional as costs.

Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

William Fred ANDERSON, Defendant and Appellant.
Cr. 5657.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 2, California.

Oct. 19, 1956.

Defendant was convicted of bookmaking and of keeping and occupying a residence for purpose of recording bets. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, LeRoy Dawson, J., entered judgment of conviction and order denying motion for trial, and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Fox, J., held that as a result of information obtained by telephone call to house and use of listening device outside rear window, officers had sufficient grounds for believing that house was being maintained as a bookmaking establishment to justify forcible entry and search of house without a warrant, after receiving no reply to demand for admittance, and that evidence obtained by such search and by use of listening device was admissible.

Judgment and order affirmed.

1. Criminal Law ☞1023(12)

Where defendant was convicted of offenses, though he was granted probation, such order was deemed a final judgment for purposes of appeal. West's Ann.Pen. Code, § 1237.

2. Gaming ☞60

Searches and Seizures ☞7(10)

As a result of information obtained by means of telephone call and use of listening device outside rear window of house, officers had sufficient grounds for believing that house was being maintained as a bookmaking establishment to justify forcible entry of house without a warrant of arrest or search warrant, after receiving no reply to demand for admittance, and search of house and seizure of evidence of bookmaking found therein were not unlawful and did not violate constitutional rights of man found in house. West's Ann.Pen. Code, § 337a, subds. 2, 4.

3. Criminal Law ☞394

Where officers had sufficient grounds for believing that house was being maintained as a bookmaking establishment, evidence obtained as a result of forcible entry and search of house without a warrant, after receiving no reply to demand for admittance, was admissible in prosecution for bookmaking and for keeping and occupying a residence for purpose of recording bets. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 337a, subds. 2, 4.

4. Criminal Law ☞394

Searches and Seizures ☞7(1)

Use of sound amplifier listening device by officers outside rear window of house did not violate constitutional guarantee against "unreasonable search," and evidence as to defendant's part of telephone conversation overheard by means of such device was admissible in prosecution for keeping and occupying a residence for purpose of recording bets and for bookmaking. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 337a, subs. 2, 4.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Unreasonable Search".

5. Criminal Law §419(3)

Testimony of officer as to telephone conversation with one who answered call to house was admissible as a circumstance tending to show that officers had reasonable cause to believe that bookmaking was being carried on in house and hence had reasonable basis for forcible entry and search thereof without a warrant, over objection that such testimony was hearsay. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 337a, subs. 2, 4.

Albert Jack Chotiner, Russell E. Parsons, Beverly Hills, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Robert S. Rose, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

FOX, Justice.

[1] Defendant was convicted of violating subdivision 2 of section 337a, Penal Code, in that he kept and occupied a residence at 715 E. Arbor Vitae, Inglewood, for the purpose of recording bets on horse races; he was convicted also on a second count of bookmaking in violation of subdivision 4 of the section. He appeals from the judgment¹ of conviction and the order denying his motion for a new trial.

On October 18, 1955, at approximately 4:30 in the afternoon, Deputy Sheriff Allen took up surveillance of the dwelling in question. Soon after 5:00 o'clock defendant emerged and left in his car. About 9:00 o'clock that evening Officer Allen returned to the location. He found no lights on in the house and no other signs of activity. Allen resumed his surveillance shortly before 7:00 o'clock the next morning. Defendant arrived a little after 8:00 o'clock, entered the house, locked the screen and closed the front door.

During the morning of October 19th, Lieutenant Martin requested the telephone company to furnish him the listing of the telephone number ORchard 2-6263. He was advised that this number was listed at 715 Arbor Vitae, Inglewood. Sometime between 1:30 and 1:45 that afternoon Sgt. Johnson, with Officers Gentzvein, Wallace, Seltzer and Fowler, arrived in the vicinity of the above address. Officer Gentzvein had previously ascertained from a newspaper or scratch sheet that a particular horse was scheduled to run at a particular race track on that date. Gentzvein entered a public telephone booth, located at a gasoline station on the corner of Prairie and Arbor Vitae, and dialed ORchard 2-6263. Someone answered, "Hello." The officer then said, "This is Bill for 5 in the 5th at B.M., Third Dawn, 5 to win, 5 to show." The voice replied "OK." At the time Gentzvein entered the booth Sgt. Johnson was some 20 feet to the rear of the Arbor Vitae house in an alley that runs on the east side of the property. After completing this call, Gentzvein signalled Officers Wallace and Seltzer. The officers then proceeded to the house.

Johnson and Wallace used a hearing-aid type of listening device at a rear window which was boarded up with plywood that had a series of quarter-inch holes from which artificial light appeared. Johnson overheard a voice from within say, "Hello, at Bay Meadows" and "I got you." Johnson thereupon stated, "This is the vice detail" and demanded that the door be opened. He announced, "This is the Sheriff's Department. You are under arrest for bookmaking." Upon receiving no reply, he repeated, substantially, his announcement and demand. The officers then heard a scuffling noise right next to the window and smelled what appeared to be something burning. Johnson ordered Gentzvein and Wallace to enter through the door. Being unable to make such an entrance, Johnson ordered them to "try the wall just adjacent to the door." They effected entrance in this fashion. They then assisted Johnson through the window, which he had broken after removing the plywood. He entered a small bedroom in the rear of the house. The room was furnished with two desks, two telephones, a radio, a metal barbecue-type brazier, and a stand with pencils, papers, and pads. The brazier was burning profusely and the smoke in the room was dense. Defendant, who was in this room, was arrested. Several small cards with penciled notations thereon were seized. These were betting markers. There was also a racing form of that date in the room. While the officers were there, the telephone rang several times. The callers were attempting to place bets on the races.

Defendant told Johnson and Wallace that he had been at that place approximately two weeks; that he was paid "$100.00 per week to handle action coming over the phone"; that he took in about $1,000 a day; and that he did not live there. Defendant refused to divulge the name of his employer.

The officers did not have a warrant for defendant's arrest; nor did they have a search warrant.

Defendant's principal contention is that the arresting officers forcibly entered the house in question without reasonable or probable cause; that they thereby invaded his constitutional rights against unreasonable search and seizure; and that the evidence thus obtained was not admissible under the decision in the Cahan case, People v. Cahan, 44 Cal.2d 434, 282 P.2d 905. He argues, "There is no showing whatsoever that they [the officers] had any information that any public offense was being committed at that establishment."

The record does not support factually defendant's argument. We need only refer to the telephone call that Gentzvein placed and to what Johnson overheard by the use of his listening device outside the rear window. But, argues defendant, "the evidence shows, without question of a doubt, that Johnson was actually pulling off the plywood, was actually making a forcible entry of this establishment, before he even received the signal from the officer [Gentzvein] who placed the telephone call." The record does not warrant defendant's position. The inference is quite to the contrary. After Gentzvein concluded his telephone call he signaled Wallace and Seltzer. Wallace was with Johnson at the rear window that was covered with the plywood when they employed the listening device. It is a reasonable inference that Wallace informed Johnson, who was his superior and apparently in charge of this operation, that he had received the signal from Gentzvein. Furthermore, it was Gentzvein and Wallace who, on orders of Johnson, first effected entrance into the house. Wallace then helped Johnson enter through the rear window.

[2, 3] With the information revealed by Gentzvein's telephone call and Johnson's listening device the officers had sufficient grounds for suspecting, and even for believing, that the house occupied by defendant was being maintained as a bookmaking establishment. See People v. Moore, 140 Cal.App.2d 870, 295 P.2d 969, for a definition of "reasonable or probable cause." In People v. Miller, 143 Cal.App.2d 558, 299 P.2d 1010, substantially this identical technique of investigation was employed and by three of the same officers. Upon receiving no response, in the Miller case, to their demand for admission to the apartment the officers kicked in the door and entered. Presiding Justice Shinn there stated, 143 Cal.App.2d at page 561, 299 P.2d at page 1012, that "under the authorities, which it is unnecessary to review, the forcible entry of the premises after demand for admittance and refusal was not unlawful." The court held that it was not error to admit the evidence of bookmaking activities. So, in the case at bar, the forcible entry of the house was not unlawful, the search and seizure that followed did not violate defendant's constitutional rights, and the evidence thus procured was admissible.

[4] In the caption of his second point, defendant enumerates a number of his constitutional rights that he asserts were violated by the use of the listening device on the outside of the rear window. However, his constitutional guarantee against unreasonable search is the only one that he supports with any argument. He claims that this right was violated by the use of the sound amplifier and that his portion of the telephone conversation thus overheard should have been excluded from evidence under the Cahan case. His position is not well taken in view of the decisions in Goldman v. United States, 316 U.S. 129, 62 S.Ct. 993, 86 L.Ed. 1322, and People v. Graff, 144 Cal.App.2d 199, 300 P.2d 837 (hearing denied). In these cases a sound amplifier was placed against the outer wall of defendant's room by which incriminating conversation between the occupants was overheard as well as, in one instance, defendant's part of a telephone conversation, as in the instant case. It was held in both of these cases that the defendant's constitutional right against unreasonable search had not been violated and that the evidence thus acquired was admissible. Under these authorities, defendant's part of the telephone conversation that was overheard by means of the sound amplifier was properly received in evidence.

[5] Defendant's third point is that the telephone conversation of officer Gentzvein to the house under surveillance was hearsay and therefore inadmissible in evidence. Defendant misconceives the purpose of this evidence. It was admissible as a circumstance going to show that the officers had reasonable cause to believe that bookmaking was being carried on in the house and that they therefore had a reasonable basis for their subsequent acts. People v. King, 140 Cal.App.2d 1, 294 P.2d 972. There is no suggestion that the other evidence is not sufficient to support the conviction.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

The Home Indemnity Company, Appellant
Civ. 21540.

District Court of Appeal, Second District
Division 3, California.

Oct. 23, 1956.

Rehearing Denied Nov. 14, 1956.

Action by prevailing plaintiff in action for damages arising out of automobile accident, against insurer of defendant therein and its agent to recover amount of judgment. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Harold P. Huls, J., granted nonsuit as to agent and judgment against insurer and insurer appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Parker Wood, J., held that where insurer had sent notice of cancellation of automobile policy to insured who understood English very poorly and insured thinking it was a notice of premium payment due paid portion of balance due on yearly premium to agent who retained same for some six weeks and until after the accident, question of insurer's waiver of cancellation of policy and estoppel to deny policy was in force at time of accident, presented questions of fact.

Affirmed.

1. Insurance Ⓒ235

In action by the prevailing party in an action for automobile accident damages, against insurer of defendant therein and its agent to recover amount of judgment, evidence supported finding that insured was unable to read notice of cancellation of automobile policy sent by insurer prior to accident and insured reasonably believed that it was a notice to pay money on insurance premium.

2. Insurance Ⓒ235

In action by prevailing plaintiff in action for damages arising from automobile collision against alleged insurer of defendant therein and its agent to recover amount of judgment, where insurer had sent formal notice of cancellation of policy to insured before accident but insured believing it to be a notice of money due on premium made a partial payment of balance due on yearly premium to agent who retained same for some six weeks before attempting to return it after the accident, evidence supported findings that insurer had received and accepted premium payment from insured, waived attempted cancellation of policy and was estopped to claim cancellation.

3. Insurance Ⓒ668(2)

In action by prevailing plaintiff in automobile damage action against alleged insurer of defendant therein and its agent to recover amount of judgment, the extent of agent's authority in accepting insured's partial payment on balance due on yearly premium of automobile policy after insurer had sent him a formal notice cancelling the same, presented question of fact.

4. Insurance Ⓒ645(3)

In action by prevailing plaintiff in action for damages arising from automobile collision against alleged insurer of defendant therein and its agent to recover amount of judgment where insurer pleaded cancellation of a policy as a defense, plaintiff was not required to plead estoppel and waiver in order to introduce evidence thereon and even in absence of such pleadings there was no error by trial court in receiving testimony and making findings based on such issues. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 462.

5. Insurance Ⓒ83(1)

Where action was upon contract of insurance and evidence showed that a person signed policy or contract as agent for insurer, the agent was not liable on contract.

Crawford & Baker, and J. Ames Crawford, Los Angeles, for respondents.

PARKER WOOD, Justice.

Prior to the commencement of this action, plaintiffs recovered judgment for $9,286.27 against one Paolo Bonomo for damages sustained as a result of an automobile collision.

The present action is to recover the amount of that judgment from Home Indemnity Company which had issued an automobile insurance policy covering the automobile of Bonomo. The agent of the indemnity company, J. D. Palmer, who represented the company in issuing the policy, was also a defendant. In a trial without a jury, a nonsuit was granted as to the agent. Judgment was for plaintiffs against defendant Home Indemnity Company. The indemnity company appeals from the judgment.

Appellant, hereinafter referred to as defendant, denied in its answer that the policy was effective on the date of the collision, and alleged that prior to the collision the policy had been cancelled.

The court found, among other things, that defendant is estopped to claim cancellation of the policy and that the defendant waived any attempted cancellation of the policy.

Defendant contends in effect that the evidence was insufficient to support such findings.

On June 14, 1952, defendant, acting through its agent Palmer, issued its policy of automobile liability insurance covering the automobile of Bonomo for a year, commencing on said date, at a premium of $48.-60, and at that time Bonomo paid $10 as part payment of the premium. It does not appear that any arrangement was made as to the payment of the remainder of the premium. Bonomo resided in Yucaipa, California. Palmer's office was in San Bernardino. The defendant, through its Los Angeles branch office, caused an investigation to be made of Bonomo by the Retail Credit Company. In June or July, 1952, a representative of that company went to Bonomo's home and interviewed him. About July 18, 1952, the Los Angeles office of defendant received the investigation report which stated, among other things, that Bonomo's hearing, speech, understanding of English, and financial condition were poor, and that he was not recommended. On August 27, 1952, the Los Angeles office of defendant mailed a notice to Bonomo which was entitled "Cancellation Notice," and which stated:

"We elect to cancel our Policy No. 7073519 issued to you on June 14th 1952 and hereby give you notice hereof, as provided by the terms of said policy.

"Take notice that at 12:01 A.M., Standard Time, on the 6th day of September, 1952, the said policy will terminate and cease to be in force.

"The excess of paid premium above the pro rata premium for the expired time (if not tendered) will be refunded as soon as practicable.

"Respectfully yours,

"The Home Insurance Company

Bonomo received the notice about August 30, 1952. Palmer received a copy of the notice on August 29, 1952. Bonomo testified that he did not understand the notice; he presumed it was a premium notice; he asked his neighbor to explain and interpret it; the neighbor said "to send the money on through before they cancel on you"; on the same day that he received the notice he sent a money order for $20 "to the company." Palmer received the money order on September 2, 1952. He testified that he deposited the money order in "my trustee account for the insurance company." Palmer was asked: "That was an account which you kept for the Home Indemnity Insurance Company to deposit sums of money in and forward out for them, is that right, sir?" Palmer replied, "Correct."

On October 12, 1952, a collision occurred between Bonomo's automobile and plaintiffs' automobile. The following morning Mr. Grasso, acting on behalf of Bonomo, telephoned Palmer's office and reported the collision. Also, on that day (October 13) Bonomo mailed a money order for $18.60 to Palmer. This amount and the $10 and $20 paid previously totalled the full amount of the premium.

On October 17, 1952, Palmer mailed a check for $18.82 to Bonomo, as the unearned portion of the premium as of the date of cancellation on September 6, and he also returned the money order for $18.-60 to Bonomo. It therefore appears that Palmer, after the collision, deducted $1.18 from the $20 which Bonomo had paid at the time he received the notice of cancellation (which $20 Palmer had held approximately six weeks after the notice of cancellation and prior to the accident, without advising Bonomo whether or not the $20 was acceptable). A few days later Palmer sent his check for $9.15 to defendant as its share of the earned premium. There was no communication between Bonomo and Palmer, or Bonomo and defendant, from August 30 to October 13, 1952. Bonomo testified that between August 30 and October 17, 1952, he believed he had an insurance policy in effect with Home Indemnity Company. He was asked to explain why he believed he had an insurance policy in force between those dates. He replied (through an interpreter) that "he believed it was in force for the simple reason that after he sent payment of $20.00 and they kept it until October 17, that he had every reason to believe it was in force at that time that the accident occurred."

Appellant argues, in support of its contention regarding insufficiency of the evidence, that there was no basis for a reasonable belief on the part of Bonomo that the notice of cancellation was a notice to pay more money; and that there was no evidence that Palmer had authority to rescind or waive cancellation of the policy.

[1] With reference to the reasonableness of Bonomo's belief, there was substantial evidence that Bonomo's understanding of English was poor—defendant's records show that an investigator reported that Bonomo's understanding of English was poor; and Bonomo testified that he could not read English very well. The notice of cancellation stated that the policy would be cancelled on September 6 (which was about a week after the notice was received by Bonomo). Nor reason for the cancellation was stated in the notice. At the time the notice was received, the fact was that more money was due on the policy (the \$10 which had been paid was about $\frac{1}{5}$ of the full premium of \$48.60, and the policy had been in effect about $\frac{1}{5}$ of a year—from June 14 to August 30). The neighbor of Bonomo, who read and explained the notice to Bonomo, told him to send in some money before the policy was cancelled. Bonomo sent \$20 immediately. The court found that Bonomo was unable to read the notice of cancellation and reasonably believed that it was a notice to pay money on the insurance premium. That finding is supported by the evidence.

With reference to the authority of Palmer, it was admitted in the answer that he had authority to issue policies and collect premiums. The manager of defendant's Southern California office (at Los Angeles) testified that Palmer had authority to return money, and that it was a standard practice among defendant's agents to have a trustee account for money collected as premiums. Palmer testified that he maintained a trustee account for defendant. It is true that the manager also testified that an agent does not have authority "to continue a policy in effect after the company has sent notice of cancellation." It is to be noted, however, that about five weeks before the notice of cancellation was sent to Bonomo, the Los Angeles office of defendant sent a letter to Palmer requesting the return of the Bonomo policy for cancellation. Also, it is to be observed that about three weeks before the notice of cancellation was sent to Bonomo, the Los Angeles office sent another letter to Palmer stating that the policy had not been received, and "We are wondering if you prefer to have us send Mail Notice direct from this office. If we do not hear from you within the next ten (10) days, we will assume that it is your wish to have us cancel the policy and will mail the Notice direct to the assured."

It is also to be noted that Palmer, after he had received a copy of the notice of cancellation, deposited the payment in the trustee account which he kept for the defendant and in which he kept money that belonged to the defendant. He did not advise Bonomo, during the six weeks preceding the collision, that the money was not acceptable. Prior to the collision he did not return any money to Bonomo but he retained it in the trustee account. Five days after the collision, Palmer returned $18.82 of the $20 payment, and he retained $1.18 as payment of balance of earned premium to September 6.

[2,3] The court found, among other things, that Palmer was authorized by defendant to rescind and waive cancellations. There was no evidence that defendant had expressly authorized Palmer to receive or waive cancellations. It is not necessary to decide whether said finding is supported by the evidence. Regardless of the sufficiency of the evidence to support that finding, there was substantial evidence to support the findings that defendant received and accepted the premium payment sent by Bonomo about August 30, 1952, and that defendant waived the attempted cancellation of the policy and is estopped to claim cancellation. As above stated, Palmer deposited the $20 in the trustee account where he kept money that belonged to defendant. Palmer said that the money in the trustee account belonged to defendant. The manager of defendant's Los Angeles office said that it was standard practice for defendant's agents to have a trustee account for money collected as premiums. It is conceded, as above shown, that Palmer was authorized to issue policies and collect premiums. The notice of cancellation stated that the excess of paid premium would be refunded as soon as practicable. During the six weeks following the notice of cancellation and preceding the collision, the defendant did not make a refund to Bonomo and it did not advise him whether or not there would be a refund. The failure of defendant to communicate further with Bonomo with respect to a refund, as contemplated in the notice of cancellation, would tend to indicate that defendant was satisfied with Palmer's acceptance of the $20. The trial court could have inferred that Palmer's act in accepting and keeping the $20 payment, after notice of cancellation, was with the approval of defendant, even if Palmer had not been expressly authorized to accept payment after cancellation. Whether there was an estoppel was a question of fact. See Parke v. Francis, 194 Cal. 284, 297, 228 P. 435; Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. v. State Bd. of Equal., 134 Cal.App.2d 149, 156, 285 P.2d 305. Also, the question as to whether there was a waiver of the cancellation was a question of fact. See Kerr v. Reed, 187 Cal. 409, 414, 202 P. 142. "If a forfeiture has occurred for breach of any condition in a policy of insurance * * * and the company * * * or its duly authorized agent, thereafter, with knowledge of the facts, unconditionally accepts and retains a premium * * * it thereby waives such forfeiture * * * and is thereafter estopped from setting the same up as a defense * * *." (Couch, Cyclopaedia of Insurance Law, vol. 3, § 687a, p. 2275.) "It is a well-settled rule of law that an insurer which with knowledge of facts entitling it to treat a policy as no longer in force, receives and accepts a premium on the policy, is estopped to take advantage of the forfeiture. It cannot treat the policy as void for the purpose of defense to an action to recover for a loss thereafter occurring, and at the same time treat it as valid for the purpose of earning and collecting further premiums." (29 Am.Jur., § 857, p. 653.) In Bittinger v. New York Life Ins. Company, 17 Cal.2d 834, at page 837, 112 P.2d 621, at page 623 the court said: "But assuming that respondent company is correct in its contention that the policy provided that it would immediately lapse on non-payment of interest, such provision was waived by the acceptance of the premium payment. The company could not at the same time accept the premium payment and declare the policy lapsed, nor could it lapse automatically at that time." In Bank of Anderson v. Home Ins. Co., 14 Cal.App. 208 at page 218, 111 P. 507, at page 510, it was said: "[W]here there is an agency, the company is bound as to the third persons dealing with the agent in good faith as to all matters within the scope of his real or apparent authority." The extent of the agent's authority, and whether under the circumstances of this case the agent was authorized to accept the $20, were questions of fact. See Phillips v. Reserve Life Ins. Co., 128 Cal.App. 2d 540, 546, 275 P.2d 554. In Mackintosh v. Agricultural Fire Ins. Co., 150 Cal. 440 at page 448, 89 P. 102, 105, it was said (in quoting from Cooley's Briefs on Insurance): "'If an insurer, or authorized agent, consents to changes which are required to be indorsed on the policy, and promises to make the necessary indorsement, having access to the policy for this purpose, but fails to make the indorsement through mistake, oversight, or neglect, the insurer will be bound, if not by a waiver, at least by an estoppel in pais.'" In Truck Ins. Exchange v. Industrial Accident Comm., 36 Cal.2d 646, 226 P.2d 583, an employer failed to pay the premium on a compensation insurance policy, and the insurance company mailed a notice of cancellation to the employer at an address given by him. The employer had made various changes of address and by reason of time lost in forwarding mail the employer did not receive the notice of cancellation prior to the time an employee was injured. Other facts were stated therein pertaining to the insurance agent's method of handling the employer's insurance. It was held therein that an implied finding that the insurance company was estopped to rely upon the notice of cancellation was supported by the evidence. In the present case the evidence was sufficient to support the findings that defendant is estopped to claim cancellation of the policy and that the defendant waived any attempted cancellation of the policy.

[4] Appellant contends that the court erred in receiving testimony and making findings based on estoppel and waiver which were not pleaded. The complaint alleged that the defendants executed and delivered the policy and that about October 12, 1952, while the policy "was in full force and effect," Bonomo caused injuries to plaintiffs, and thereafter plaintiffs recovered the judgment (above referred to) against Bonomo. The answer denied that the policy was in effect on October 12, 1952, and alleged that prior to October 12, 1952, the policy had been cancelled. Defendant objected to the introduction of any evidence as to estoppel and waiver, on the ground that neither estoppel nor waiver was pleaded in the complaint. The objection was overruled. At the conclusion of plaintiff's case, defendant made a motion to strike the evidence as to estoppel and waiver. The motion was denied. At the conclusion of the trial, plaintiff made a motion to amend the complaint to conform to proof by alleging waiver and estoppel. The motion was denied on the ground that the action had been tried on the theory that evidence of estoppel was admissible without pleading estoppel in the complaint.

Cancellation was an affirmative defense that was brought into the case by the answer. It was deemed controverted under section 462 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Under the circumstances here, plaintiffs were not required to plead waiver or estoppel. In Atha v. Bockius, 39 Cal.2d 635, at pages 644-645, 248 P.2d 745, 750, it was said: "The plaintiff was not required to plead the defense of equitable estoppel. Her complaint relied on her title to the automobile and the comity doctrine was brought into the case by the answer. In this state of the pleadings, the new matter in the answer must be deemed controverted, Code Civ.Proc., § 462, and there was no need for the plaintiff to plead lack of diligence on the part of the defendants, since estoppel was relied upon as a defense to matter set up in the answer." See also Buford v. Florin Fruit Growers' Ass'n, 210 Cal. 84, 91, 291 P. 170; Arnold v. American Insurance Co., 148 Cal. 660, 668, 84 P. 182, 25 L.R.A.,N.S., 6.

[5] Appellant contends further that the nonsuit in favor of Palmer and the judgment against defendant are inconsistent. He argues to the effect that the judgment was based upon the acts of the agent Palmer in retaining the money, that the basis for the finding of estoppel was "akin to a tort of misrepresentation," and that if the agent is not liable the principal is not liable. The action was upon the contract of insurance, and the evidence shows that Palmer signed the policy or contract as agent for defendant. Palmer, the agent, was not liable on the contract. (See Carlesimo v. Schwebel, 87 Cal.App.2d 482, at pages 488-489, 197 P.2d 167, wherein rules are stated with reference to nonliability of an agent who signs a contract for a disclosed principal.)

The judgment is affirmed.

v.

John S. ROMERO and Thomas Chavez,
Defendants and Respondents.

Civ. 21613.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 3, California.

Oct. 22, 1956.

Hearing Denied Dec. 19, 1956.

Action for injuries sustained by pedestrian who was struck by automobile of defendant while pedestrian was crossing street between intersections. From a judgment for defendants in the Superior Court, Los Angeles County, J. F. Moroney, J., the plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Vallée, J., held that the evidence was insufficient to justify the application of the last clear chance doctrine and that there was no reversible error in refusing instructions.

Affirmed.

1. Trial ⚭252(8)

In action for injuries sustained by pedestrian when struck by automobile while attempting to cross street between intersections, where plaintiff claimed that defendant's automobile came over the center line, and jury was plainly informed that it was a violation of the statute to drive other than on the right half of the highway and there was no evidence that defendant was attempting to pass another vehicle, court did not err in refusing to read to jury paragraph of the statute prohibiting motorists from driving to the left of the center line of the highway. West's Ann.Vehicle Code, § 525.

2. Negligence ⚭136(32)Trial ⚭252(7)

Whether there is any substantial evidence justifying application of the doctrine of last clear chance is a question of law and in the absence of such evidence, trial court properly refused to instruct the jury with respect thereto.

3. Negligence ⚭141(9)

An instruction on the "last clear chance" doctrine is proper where the plaintiff has been negligent and, as a result thereof, is in a position of danger from which he cannot escape by ordinary care, defendant has knowledge thereof and the last clear chance to avoid the accident by ordinary care and fails to exercise the same, and accident results thereby, and plaintiff is injured as proximate result of such failure.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Last Clear Chance".

4. Negligence ⚭83.1

If any one of the elements for the application of the doctrine of last clear chance is absent, the doctrine does not apply and the case is governed by the ordinary rules of negligence and contributory negligence.

5. Automobiles ⚭244(59)

In action for injuries sustained by pedestrian when struck by automobile while pedestrian was crossing street between intersections, where there was no evidence that after motorist discovered the pedestrian's danger he had the last clear chance to avoid the accident by ordinary care, evidence was insufficient to justify the application of the last clear chance doctrine. West's Ann.Vehicle Code, § 562.

6. Negligence ⚭83.8

The last clear chance doctrine presupposes time for effective action and it is not applicable where the emergency is so sudden that defendant did not have time to avoid the accident.

7. Trial ⚭260(2)

Instructions on presumptions and preponderance of evidence were properly refused where adequately covered by those given.

8. Negligence ⚭121(1)

Where a party who is the subject of the presumption of due care appears in court and testifies fully as to his own conduct at the occurrence in question, there is no room for the presumption.

9. Trial \Rightarrow 203(1)

A court is not required to give every instruction requested even if considered by itself it may state a correct and pertinent principle of law, and all that is required is that the jury be fully and fairly instructed on all the issues presented.

10. Trial \Rightarrow 235(1)

In action for injuries sustained in an automobile accident, refusal to instruct on the power and duty of the jury in accordance with the statute, that the jury's power of judgment of the effect of evidence is not arbitrary, was not error. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 2061, subd. 1.

VALLÉE, Justice.

Appeal by plaintiff from a judgment for defendants entered on a jury verdict in an action to recover damages for personal injuries sustained when he came in contact with an automobile owned by defendant Chavez and operated with his permission by defendant Romero.

On May 1, 1954, about 9:45 p. m., plaintiff was walking west across Figueroa Street in the middle of the block where there was no crosswalk when he was struck by the left front side of the automobile going south on Figueroa. Figueroa is 66 feet wide and is divided in the center by double white lines. At the time of the accident no other vehicle was in the immediate vicinity. The only conflict in the evidence is as to where plaintiff was standing at the time he was injured.

Plaintiff's evidence tended to establish that he was crossing at a point approximately 200 feet south of the intersection of Washington Boulevard and Figueroa Street; he was walking at a normal gait;

as he approached the center of the street he observed the traffic signal at Washington Boulevard had changed so he decided he "couldn't get across"; he stopped "a foot to two feet" east of the double white line for five to eight seconds to allow the traffic to clear; during that period he looked to the right and to the left; he first observed defendant's automobile as he looked to the right; it was then 10 to 14 feet away and bearing down on him; he was still standing a foot to two feet from the double line; the car came over the double line at an angle directly toward him; and he had no opportunity to avoid being hit.

Defendants' evidence tended to establish that defendant Romero had stopped for the signal at Washington Boulevard; he was driving in the inside lane about one foot from the center line at a speed of 25 to 30 miles an hour when he suddenly observed plaintiff walking west about a foot or so on the west side of the center line; he was then about 5 or 8 feet away from plaintiff; he immediately applied his brakes, but he had already struck plaintiff. Romero testified, "When I first saw him—well, I had no warning at all. I mean it came all of a sudden. I didn't have any chance of doing anything to prevent it." After he struck plaintiff he swerved to his left, to a point about one foot east of the center line. Plaintiff was struck by the left front headlight and fender of the car. There were 34 feet of skid marks made by the left wheels of the car beginning one foot east of the double center line and ending at a point four feet east of the line. There was no testimony as to where the skid marks started or terminated in relation to the point of impact.

Plaintiff contends the court erred: 1) in refusing to instruct on paragraph (b) of section 525 of the Vehicle Code; 2) in refusing to instruct on the doctrine of the last clear chance; 3) in overemphasizing the rule on burden of proof and in failing to properly instruct thereon and on the subject of due care; and 4) in refusing to instruct on the power and duty of the jury. The sufficiency of the evidence is not questioned.

The court read to the jury the following provisions of section 525 of the Vehicle Code:

"(a) Upon all roadways of sufficient width a vehicle shall be driven upon the right half of the roadway, except as follows:

"(1) When overtaking and passing another vehicle proceeding in the same direction under the rules governing such movement."

It refused to read paragraph (b), proffered by plaintiff, which provides:

"(b) The State Department of Public Works shall by regulation determine a distinctive roadway marking which shall indicate no driving over such marking, and is authorized either by such marking or by signs and markings to designate any portion of a state highway where the volume of traffic or the vertical or other curvature of the roadway renders it hazardous to drive on the left side of such marking or signs and marking. When such markings or signs and markings are in place, the driver of a vehicle shall not drive along the highway to the left thereof, but this shall not prevent turning to the left across any such markings at any intersection or private driveway." ¹

[1] It is apparent from section 525 in its entirety that paragraph (a) makes it unlawful to drive on any part of the left half of the roadway except under conditions noted in subdivisions (1) through (4). The deleted paragraph (b) makes no change in the law in respect to the duty to drive on the right half of the roadway, other than to make the exceptions inapplicable under certain conditions. The jury was plainly informed it was a violation of the Vehicle Code to drive other than on the right half of the roadway. There is no evidence Romero was attempting to pass another vehicle. The jury's answer to the question whether the automobile crossed over the center line and struck plaintiff while he was standing in a position of relative safety was dependent entirely on which factual situation they chose to believe and accept. The court did not err in refusing to read subdivision (b) of section 525 to the jury. Contrary to plaintiff's claim, the jury was instructed that it was a violation

1. Section 525 in toto reads: "Drive on Right Side of Roadway—Exceptions. (a) Upon all roadways of sufficient width a vehicle shall be driven upon the right half of the roadway, except as follows:

"(1) When overtaking and passing another vehicle proceeding in the same direction under the rules governing such movement.

"(2) When placing a vehicle in a lawful position for, and when such vehicle is lawfully making a left turn.

"(3) When the right half of a roadway is closed to traffic while under construction or repair.

"(4) Upon a roadway designated and signposted for one-way traffic.

"(b) The State Department of Public Works shall by regulation determine a distinctive roadway marking which shall indicate no driving over such marking, and is authorized either by such marking or by signs and markings to designate any portion of a state highway where the volume of traffic or the vertical or other curvature of the roadway renders it hazardous to drive on the left side of such marking or signs and marking. When such markings or signs and markings are in place, the driver of a vehicle shall not drive along the highway to the left thereof, but this shall not prevent turning to the left across any such markings at any intersection or private driveway.

"(c) It is unlawful to drive any vehicle upon any highway which has been divided into two or more roadways by means of intermittent barriers or by means of a dividing section of not less than two feet in width either unpaved or delineated by curbs, lines or other markings on the roadway except to the right of such barrier or dividing section, or to drive any vehicle over, upon, or across any such dividing section, or to make any left turn or semicircular or U-turn on any such divided highway, except through an opening in such barrier designed and intended by public authorities for the use of vehicles or through a plainly marked opening in such dividing section." of law to cross over a center line except when overtaking and passing another vehicle.

[2-4] Whether there is any substantial evidence which would justify the application of the doctrine of the last clear chance in a given case is a question of law; and in the absence of such evidence, it is not error for the trial court to refuse to instruct the jury with respect to the doctrine. Doran v. City & County of San Francisco, 44 Cal.2d 477, 487, 283 P.2d 1. An instruction stating the doctrine is proper when there is evidence showing: "(1) That plaintiff has been negligent and, as a result thereof, is in a position of danger from which he cannot escape by the exercise of ordinary care; and this includes not only where it is physically impossible for him to escape, but also in cases where he is totally unaware of his danger and for that reason unable to escape; (2) that defendant has knowledge that the plaintiff is in such a situation, and knows, or in the exercise of ordinary care should know, that plaintiff cannot escape from such situation, and (3) has the last clear chance to avoid the accident by exercising ordinary care, and fails to exercise the same, and the accident results thereby, and plaintiff is injured as the proximate result of such failure." Daniels v. City & County of San Francisco, 40 Cal.2d 614, 619, 255 P.2d 785, 788. If any one of the elements is absent, the doctrine does not apply and the case is governed by the ordinary rules of negligence and contributory negligence. Doran v. City & County of San Francisco, 44 Cal.2d 477, 483, 283 P.2d 1.

[5,6] There was no evidence that after Romero discovered plaintiff's position of danger he had a last clear chance to avoid the accident by the exercise of ordinary care. He had a right to assume plaintiff would yield the right of way. Veh.Code, § 562. He observed nothing to put him on notice of danger of injury to plaintiff. None then existed. If Romero saw plaintiff approaching the center of the street walking in the manner shown by the evidence, the evidence is uncontradicted that he did not have knowledge of plaintiff's position of danger until he was only 5 or 8 feet from him. He immediately applied his brakes. The accident then happened in a split second. Considering the relative time and distance factors, it is obvious there was not sufficient evidence from which it could be inferred that Romero had a last clear chance to avoid the accident. "[T]he doctrine presupposes time for effective action and that it is not applicable where the emergency is so sudden that defendant did not have time to avoid the accident; that in order to invoke the doctrine, there must be evidence that defendant had knowledge of the fact that plaintiff was in a dangerous situation from which he could not extricate himself by the exercise of ordinary care and, at that time, defendant had a clear chance to avoid injuring plaintiff by exercising ordinary care and failed to do so." Story v. Cox, 130 Cal.App.2d 231, 234, 278 P.2d 720, 722. See Jefferis v. La Gore, 131 Cal.App.2d 181, 185-186, 280 P.2d 140. The court did not err in declining to instruct on the doctrine of last clear chance.

The trial court gave four instructions on the burden of proof requested by defendants. We have examined the instructions and find no overemphasis of the subject.

[7] Plaintiff asserts the court erred in refusing to give three instructions requested by him. Two of the instructions defined "presumptions"; the third, the term "preponderance of the evidence." The text of these instructions was adequately covered by those given.

[8] It is asserted the court erred in refusing to give an instruction on the presumption of due care. Where the party who is the subject of the presumption appears in court and testifies fully, as to his own conduct at the occurrence in question, there is no room for the presumption. The instruction was properly refused since plaintiff testified fully as to his own conduct. Gigliotti v. Nunes, 45 Cal.2d 85, 93, 286 P.2d 809; Elm v. McKee, 139 Cal.App.

2d 353, 363, 293 P.2d 827; Ford v. Chesley Transportation Co., 101 Cal.App.2d 548, 552, 225 P.2d 997.

[9, 10] Plaintiff claims the court erred in refusing to instruct on the power and duty of the jury in accordance with section 2061, subdivision 1, of the Code of Civil Procedure which reads: "That their [the jury's] power of judging of the effect of evidence is not arbitrary, but to be exercised with legal discretion, and in subordination to the rules of evidence". A court is not required to give every instruction requested even if, considered by itself, it may state a correct and pertinent principle of law; all that is required is that the jury be fully and fairly instructed on all the issues presented. Risley v. Lenwell, 129 Cal.App.2d 608, 655, 277 P.2d 897. It was in the present case.

No error was committed in refusing or in giving the considered instructions.

First degree robbery conviction was sustained by evidence.

2. Criminal Law ☞769

Notwithstanding use of permissive "may" in constitutional provision for instructing jury, it is mandatory duty of court to instruct jury regarding law applicable to facts of case. West's Ann. Const. art. 6, § 19.

3. Criminal Law ☞656(5, 9), 757(1), 763(1)

A court may, when it charges jury in criminal case, express its opinion as to weight of evidence and as to credibility of any witness but it must, while evidence is being received, refrain from such comments. West's Ann. Const. art. 6, § 19; West's Ann. Pen. Code, § 1127.

4. Witnesses ☞246(2)

Considerable latitude must be allowed trial judge in questioning of witness, and while he must not take on role of a partisan and should exercise his power to examine witness with discretion and in such way as not to prejudice rights of prosecution or accused, still he is not compelled to sit quietly by and see one wrongfully acquitted or unjustly punished when a few questions asked from bench might elicit truth.

5. Criminal Law ☞785(3)

Citizen owes no general duty to go to district attorney and volunteer information as to innocence of person accused of crime; and in robbery prosecution it was improper for trial judge to tell jury, in effect, that alibi witness had been under legal duty to give such information to district attorney and the court in which charge lay, as well as to defense counsel, and that, having failed to do so, witness was therefore suspect in matter of her credibility.

6. Criminal Law ⇨656(5)

In robbery prosecution, it was improper for trial judge to intimate that witness had not told truth by stating that he wanted witness to be "square" with court and by reminding witness that judge wanted him to tell truth.

7. Criminal Law ⇨655(1)

Even though matter of calling confessed participant in robbery had been ejected into case by prosecution, it was improper for trial judge, in robbery prosecution, to intervene, where such intervention was not for purpose of eliciting evidence from witness, nor to clear up any uncertainty in testimony, and where implicit in gratuitous offer of court, to cause confessed participant to be brought in, was a challenge to defense to call such participant to stand.

8. Criminal Law ⇨1166½(12)

On record presented in robbery prosecution it could not be said that a different result would likely have been arrived at if trial judge had not commented on evidence while it was being received and indicated disbelief of defense witnesses; and accordingly such improper conduct on part of trial judge would not require reversal.

9. Criminal Law ⇨824(1, 4)

Court is required, without request, to instruct upon general principles of law involved in criminal case, but in absence of request for instruction thereon, it is not duty of trial court to give specific charge on defense of alibi.

10. Criminal Law ⇨769

It is a matter of common knowledge that a person cannot be in two places at one time; and it is unnecessary to instruct jury upon so plain a matter.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., by G. A. Strader, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

VAN DYKE, Presiding Justice.

Appellant appeals from a judgment based upon a verdict of guilty of the crime of first degree robbery, and from an order denying him a new trial. He contends that the evidence was insufficient to support the verdict, that the trial judge was guilty of prejudicial misconduct, and that error was committed by the court in failing on its own motion to give an instruction on alibi. We shall discuss these assignments in the order in which they are made.

[1] There was evidence as follows: At approximately 1:30 A.M. on Sunday, May 1, 1955, two men, masked with silk stockings, entered the King of Clubs Bar at 28th and X Streets in Sacramento. Present at the bar were Mr. Tufts, bartender, and five patrons, Mrs. Roberts, Mr. and Mrs. Mitchell, Mr. Dodds and Mr. Trelease. One of the two robbers was Fred Ash and the People contended that appellant was the other. This second person wore a dark overcoat which was too large for him, a brown hat, carried a gun in his right hand and walked in a crouched position. The robbers ordered everyone into the women's rest room and told them to remain there until they (the robbers) left. When the bartender and the patrons returned to the bar it was discovered that the robbers had taken approximately $300 from the cash register; that the purses of Mrs. Roberts and Mrs. Mitchell, which had been left on the bar, were missing; that the bartender's wallet, which he had been ordered to drop as he entered the rest room, was missing, and that a tray used for holding nickels had been taken. Ash, charged as appellant's codefendant, had resided for approximately a year before his arrest on May 2, 1955, in a converted garage apartment in the rear of a home owned by Mrs. Wilma Connell. On Friday, May 6th, and again on Sunday, May 8th, Mrs. Connell received telephone calls relative to Ash. The caller on May 6th identified himself as "Frank". The caller on May 8th did not identify himself, but Mrs. Connell testified his voice sounded the same as that of the man who had called on May 6th. After receiving the call on May 8th, Mrs. Connell's husband and a Mr. Hunton went to the garage apartment of Mr. Ash, where they were soon followed by Mrs. Connell. Hunton testified that upon going to the apartment he began looking for a green box and discovered one in the attic. He opened the box and after the three had taken a hasty look at the contents the police were called. At the trial the box was shown to have contained the nickel tray, a dark blue overcoat, a pair of ladies' hose, the purses of Mrs. Roberts and Mrs. Mitchell, the bartender's wallet and a gun. The gun was similar to the one used in the robbery. Shortly thereafter the officers arrested appellant along with James Duran and a juvenile girl. Appellant's fingerprints were found on the gun. When confronted with the box and its contents, appellant denied ever having seen any of the items the box contained. Duran testified that appellant had asked him to come to his home; that while there he overheard a conversation between Corrigan and one Dillon relative to the making of telephone calls; that Dillon then left the apartment for the expressed purpose of making a call; that during the conversation between appellant and Dillon much had been made of the fact that Ash was in jail. Corrigan stated that "the heat was on" and that he hoped Ash had had sense enough to do something with the box; that he wanted the box hidden; that there was something in it "stockings and stuff like that" and he expressed the hope that "you guys got sense enough to get rid of that box because in the box was the stockings and the gun and these fingerprints were all over it." Several of the patrons of the bar and the bartender testified that the coat, the hat and the stockings found in the box were similar to those worn by the robber who displayed the gun. Appellant claimed that his fingerprints were placed on the gun after he had been arrested and while being questioned by the officers, who handed him the gun and asked him if he had seen it before. The officers, however, denied that he touched the gun at any time after it had been found in the box, and on appeal we must accept the testimony of the officers. Several witnesses to the robbery testified that appellant resembled the man who had handled the gun during the robbery, although admittedly their identification amounted to nothing more than testimony as to similarity. Appellant's defense was that of alibi. Four witnesses testified to having either been with him or having seen him under circumstances which strongly supported his claim of alibi, but in resolving the issue as to sufficiency of the evidence this testimony does no more than raise a conflict with the evidence presented by the prosecution. We hold that the verdict of the jury is sustained by the record.

The claims of misconduct revolve around several examinations of defense witnesses by the trial judge and amount to contentions that during the receipt of evidence the judge in a number of instances unreasonably and unnecessarily interfered with the examination of witnesses to the prejudice of appellant, and that while appellant's witnesses were on the stand the judge commented upon their testimony in such a way as to indicate that he disbelieved them, all with the result that appellant was denied a fair trial.

The Constitution provides in Article VI, Section 19, that:

"The court may instruct the jury regarding the law applicable to the facts of the case, and may make such comment on the evidence and the testimony and credibility of any witness as in its opinion is necessary for the proper determination of the case. The court shall inform the jury in all cases that the jurors are the exclusive judges of all questions of fact submitted to them and of the credibility of the witnesses."

[2] It is to be noted that the Constitution uses the permissive "may" not only in relation to comment upon evidence and upon witness credibility, but also in relation to instructing the jury regarding the law. This latter duty is, of course, considered mandatory and it is unnecessary to cite the numerous opinions which, in criminal cases, have declared that the court must instruct the jury regarding the applicable general rules of law. There seems to be a reluctance to comment on the part of trial judges not justified by the language of the Constitution. The section in its present form was enacted into the Constitution by the People in 1934 and immediately drew the attention of both trial and appellate courts. The purpose of the enactment and the evil at which it was aimed were fully discussed by the Supreme Court in People v. Ottey, 5 Cal.2d 714, 56 P.2d 193, 198. The court noted that the section had before the amendment prohibited judges from charging juries with respect to matters of fact, though permitting them to state the testimony and declare the law and then defined the purposes of the change to be as follows: To abolish the prior limitations which case law had placed upon the trial judge's participation in the trial with respect to comment on the evidence and on the credibility of the witnesses; to place in the trial judge's hands more power in the trial of jury cases and then to make him a real factor in the administration of justice in such cases instead of being in the position of a mere referee or automaton as to the ascertainment of the facts; to establish the rule in this state in substantial harmony with practice in other jurisdictions where like powers were exercised by trial judges. The court quoted from Chitty (Brickwood's Sackett on Instructions to Juries, p. 126 et seq.) as follows:

"It is the practice for the judge at nisi prius not only to state to the jury all the evidence that has been given, but to comment on its bearing and weight, and to state the legal rules upon the subject and their application to the particular case, and to advise them as regards the verdict they should give."

The court quoted with approval from Malaga v. United States, 1 Cir., 57 F.2d 822, wherein that court declared:

"The right of a trial judge to aid the jury in arriving at a just verdict is a valuable and important judicial function in the administration of justice. We have no desire to limit it except within its proper sphere. It is a trite saying, but a true one, that in the interest of justice a judge should be permitted to control the conduct of the case rather than counsel for the litigants. A trial in a court of justice should not be a game over which the judge presides in the capacity of umpire to see that certain rules are observed, but a proceeding in which a just verdict is the sole aim.

"The trial judge must declare the law governing the rights of the parties and determine what evidence it is proper for the jury to consider under the established rules of evidence. He should also by reason of his training in analyzing testimony, and experience in determining the credibility of witnesses, and the influence that personal interest, bias, and prejudice have in influencing witnesses, be permitted to assist the jury in determining what evidence has a bearing on the disputed issues in the case, and aid them in weighing the evidence, taking care that the jurors clearly understand that it is their own judgment which must finally determine what the facts are. To this end a judge in the federal courts may inform the jury of the impression certain evidence makes on his mind. But having in mind the weight that jurors ordinarily give to the opinion of the presiding justice, he should take especial care that they understand that it is their independent judgment which must finally determine the factual issues, and are not unduly influenced by the opinion of the court.”

Finally, the Supreme Court, further defining the right of comment, declared that a trial court could in a proper case express its opinion upon guilt or innocence. Said the court: “Expressions of the court’s opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the defendant have been held to be within the scope of ‘comment,’ so long as the province of the jury as defined by the constitutional section is not invaded.” 5 Cal.2d at page 729, 56 P.2d at page 200. But when, during the trial, shall the court exercise its right and duty to comment? To that question we now turn our attention. Shortly after the constitutional amendment was approved by the People the legislature amended the existing Section 1127 of the Penal Code to include the subject of comment. It read:

“* * * In charging the jury the court may instruct the jury regarding the law applicable to the facts of the case, and may make such comment on the evidence and the testimony and credibility of any witness as in its opinion is necessary for the proper determination of the case * *. The court shall inform the jury in all cases that the jurors are the exclusive judges of all questions of fact submitted to them and of the credibility of the witnesses. * * *

This section is the legislative interpretation and implementation of the constitutional amendment, and it states that comment is to be made during the charge to the jury. It appears that no appellate decision rendered in this state since the amendment has expressly stated when comment should occur. The Model Code of Evidence of the American Law Institute states the matter in this way, under the heading of “Comment by Judge”, page 81:

“After the close of the evidence and arguments of counsel the judge may sum up the evidence and comment to the jury upon the weight of the evidence and the credibility of the witnesses, if he instructs the jury that they are to determine for themselves the weight of the evidence and the credit to be given to the witnesses and are not bound by the judge’s comment thereon.”

The text then quotes from Capital Traction Co. v. Hof, 174 U.S. 1, 13, 14, 19 S.Ct. 580, 43 L.Ed. 873, wherein that court defined a trial by jury as follows: “Jury trial is a trial by a jury of twelve men, in the presence and under the superintendence of a judge empowered to instruct them on the law and to advise them on the facts.” We may here add a quotation from Sir Matthew Hale (The History of the Common Law of England, 6th ed., p. 346) descriptive of the jury trial of his day:

“Tenthly, another excellency of this trial is this; that the judge is always present, at the time of the evidence given in it. Herein he is able, in matters of law, emerging upon the evidence, to direct them; and also, in matters of fact, to give them a great light and assistance, by his weighing the evidence before them, and observing where the question and knot of the business lies: and by showing them his opinion even in matter of fact; which is a great advantage and light to lay-men. And thus, as the jury assists the judge in determining the matter of fact, so the judge assists the jury in determining points of law, and also very much in investigating an enlightening the matter of fact, whereof the jury are the judges.”

It was to this concept of the trial by jury, respecting comment, that it was the purpose of the People to return when they amended Article VI, Section 19, of the Constitution; and while our courts have not expressly so declared yet they have done so by implication for implicit in the cases is a rule that limits the right of the trial judge to comment, as that term is used in the Constitution, to the time when the court charges the jury. Thus in Peo- ple v. O'Donnell, 11 Cal.2d 666, 671, 81 P.2d 939, 942, it was said:

"* * * A trial judge is rigorously prohibited from action or words having the effect of conveying to the jury his personal opinion as to the truth or falsity of any evidence. This rule should be strictly adhered to."

This was said in a case where, while the evidence was coming in, the court had expressed an opinion as to credibility of a witness. And in People v. Byrd, 88 Cal. App.2d 188, 191, 198 P.2d 561, 562, in discussing a question asked by the trial judge of the defendant as to whether his denial of past conviction of a felony was just as true as his contention of innocence in the case at bar, the court said:

"Our courts have many times reversed convictions in criminal cases because of intimations by the trial judge during the taking of testimony that the defendant or his witnesses was not believed by the judge. See People v. Mahoney, supra, 201 Cal. 618, 621-627, 258 P. 607; People v. Boggess, 194 Cal. 212, 239-240, 228 P. 448; People v. Bowers, 79 Cal. 415, 417, 21 P. 752; People v. McNeer, 8 Cal.App.2d 676, 681, 47 P.2d 813; People v. Singh, 78 Cal.App. 488, 248 P. 986; People v. Conboy, 15 Cal.App. 97, 113 P. 703; People v. Long, supra, 63 Cal.App.2d 679, 682-686, 147 P.2d 659."

[3] It is impossible to harmonize our case law except upon the proposition that while a court may, when it charges the jury in a criminal case, express its opinion as to the weight of evidence and as to the credibility of any witness, it must, while the evidence is being received, refrain from such conduct. While the Constitution is not explicit on the matter we so construe the case and statute law.

The actions and conduct of the trial judge challenged on this appeal, therefore, do not come within the constitutional permission as to comment and expression of opinion, for all occurred during the receipt of evidence. We will now proceed to examine the record with the charges of misconduct in view. To do that we must make extensive references thereto.

Appellant opened his defense by calling one Nick Bakotich as an alibi witness. This witness testified that on the date of the robbery he had been with appellant Corrigan; that he met him in the Diamond Club on 8th and L Streets in Sacramento and had a drink with him there; that they left around 10 o'clock and went to a second bar at 13th and K Streets with a friend of Corrigan whose name the witness did not recall; that after staying awhile they went across the street to a third bar, arriving there around 11:30 to a quarter to 12, where they stayed a little over an hour, taking them up to about 1 o'clock; that they went back to the Sapphire again and stayed until it closed at 2 o'clock; that during that time Corrigan did not leave the group for any appreciable length of time; and that the witness had been with him all the time. The People's counsel cross examined this witness quite extensively. He asked Bakotich how he could remember the particular date he had been with Corrigan and why he could not remember the name of the third man; he had the witness describe this third man, and drew from him the admission that there was nothing in the conversation or anything that happened that would serve to identify this third man; he developed that the witness had gone to bars with Corrigan a few times before, and he took him over the route the three men had followed during their stay together. It was developed that in previous meetings the men had been together at about the same time of day as on the evening of the robbery; that their meetings had been largely accidental, and that they were not intimates; the witness was asked to tell of other people whom he had seen and recognized while with Corrigan, and he named some people who were called to the stand later as additional alibi witnesses and who corroborated the testimony of Bakotich. The length of his acquaintance with Corrigan was gone into, and the witness admitted that he wanted to help Corrigan out by his testimony. He was closely questioned as to why he had not come forward and told the officers who were holding Corrigan that Corrigan could not have committed the crime with which he was later charged. He said he had no reason at all to give why he had not done so. He was asked as to his acquaintance with Ash, with the prosecution witnesses Dillon and Duran, and said he had none. Without going further, it is apparent from the record that the cross examination by counsel for the People, which occupies 25 pages of the transcript on appeal, was extensive and detailed. At that point counsel for the People asked the witness if he habitually associated with ex-convicts and received a negative answer. The court then interrupted and embarked upon a further examination of the witness which embraces the next 15 pages of the transcript. It began as follows:

"The Court: Wait a minute. Where did he work?

"The Witness: Who?

"The Court: Corrigan?

"The Witness: I don't know. I didn't know whether he was working or not.

"The Court: How many times did you see him?

"The Witness: I guess about six or seven times.

"The Court: Spend the evening with him?

"The Witness: That would be night there at April the 30th I was with him, yes.

"The Court: What other nights did you spend with him?

"The Witness: Oh, a couple of other occasions I met him uptown.

"The Court: Tell me the last night before the 30th.

"The Witness: I guess it might have been around three, four days before.

"The Court: Might have been three or four days. Tell me the last time you were with him before the 30th. You ought to know. You say you were there. Where were you with him the last time before the 30th? And tell me how long you were with him that time and what you talked about?

"The Witness: I don't recall.

"The Court: You don't know. You don't know, is that it? Do you know or don't you know?

"The Witness: No.

"The Court: You don't know, is that right?

"The Witness: (Nodded affirmatively.)

"The Court: All right, that's one time. You said you were with him how many, five or six times? When was the last time before that that you were with him, and what did you talk about?

"The Witness: Well, I—

"The Court: Didn't you ever talk about where he worked?

"The Witness: With him?

"The Court: With him, yes.

"The Witness: Oh, I asked him. Yeh, I asked him.

"The Court: What did he tell you?

"The Witness: He wasn't working at the time I asked him.

"The Court: Did you ever ask him where he ever worked?

"The Witness: I don't understand. He told me he came from out of town.

"The Court: That's all you knew about him, is that it?

"The Witness: That's right.

"The Court: All right. Now then this party that was with you from, was it 9:00 o'clock until 2:00 o'clock in the morning, what did you talk about that night from 9:00 until 2:00? Tell us?

"The Witness: Oh, we talked about sports.

"The Court: What sports.

"The Witness: Baseball."

Without going further, enough has been quoted to indicate that the court was endeavoring to test the witness' memory more thoroughly than had been done by the prosecuting attorney. In large part the questions went on with the same evident purpose. The witness was asked where he got the money that he spent for drinks and said that he borrowed it from his brother. He was asked as to the amount of the loan and as to where his brother worked. We quote further:

"The Court: All right. Now how much money did Corrigan have?

"The Witness: Jeez, I have no idea.

"The Court: Let's get the brother. Is one of the boys here?

"Mr. De Cristoforo [the prosecuting attorney]: Yes, Your Honor.

"The Court: Bring him in this afternoon. Find out before this man leaves the Courthouse. We want that man brought in.

"All right. Now you have got fifteen dollars from your brother. Did you spend all of that that night?"

[4] We cannot agree to appellant's criticism of this detailed examination by the court of the most important alibi witness presented during the trial. It is true that the district attorney had cross examined the witness; that the court took over before that cross examination had been completed, and that counsel for the People then resumed. Nevertheless, considerable latitude must be allowed the trial judge as to the court's questioning of a witness. The law on the subject is well stated in People v. Golsh, 63 Cal.App. 609, 614-615, 219 P. 456, 458, from which we quote:

"* * * The duty of a trial judge, particularly in criminal cases, is more than that of an umpire; and though his power to examine the witnesses should be exercised with discretion and in such a way as not to prejudice the rights of the prosecution or the accused, still he is not compelled to sit quietly by and see one wrongfully acquitted or unjustly punished, when a few questions asked from the bench might elicit the truth. It is his primary duty to see that justice is done both to the accused and to the people. He is, moreover, in a better position than the reviewing court to know when the circumstances warrant or require the interrogation of witnesses from the bench."

But, as said by Judge Learned Hand, speaking for the court in United States v. Marzano, 2 Cir., 149 F.2d 923, 926:

"* * * Despite every allowance he [the judge] must not take on the role of a partisan; he must not enter the lists; he must not by his ardor induce the jury to join in a hue and cry against the accused. Prosecution and judgment are two quite separate functions in the administration of justice; they must not merge."

The next assignment of misconduct relates to the following incident. The witness Rheba Boyd, who had testified as an alibi witness for Corrigan, was asked by the prosecuting attorney why, when she had read a newspaper article concerning the arrest of Corrigan, it had not occurred to her that she should go and tell the police what she knew about his whereabouts on that night. The following occurred:

"Q. Well then, why didn't you tell the police about it? A. Well, why should I?

"Q. Well— A. A lot of people had seen him there that night, and should they all come up to the Police Department and tell them?

"Q. You knew that Mr. Corrigan had been in the Sapphire Club on that evening; is that right? A. Yes.

"Q. All right. And you knew that the information that you had would tend to clear Mr. Corrigan of these charges at that time, didn't you? A.

Yes, but I didn't think of it that way. I just knew he couldn't have done it because he was—

"Q. You knew he couldn't have done it but you didn't do anything about it; is that right? A. That's right.

"Q. But you are here today to tell the jury that he couldn't have done; is that correct? A. I was subpoenaed.

"Q. You are here in response to a subpoena, aren't you? A. Yes.

"Q. Now there is no doubt that you consider yourself to be Mr. Corrigan's friend? A. Yes.

"Q. You would like to help him out if you could? A. Yes.

"Q. Is that right?"

At this point, the court interrupted:

"The Court: Let me ask you this. You became quite concerned there when you were asked why you didn't go to the authorities and tell them. Why didn't you go to the authorities and tell them that you knew where Corrigan was that night? I don't want anything that a lot of other people saw him. They haven't come up and testified to it, but you have. Tell us why you didn't go. If you knew this man was innocent, why did you wait until today to tell this Court where he was charged or to tell the District Attorney or the Chief of Police? Why did you wait until today? A. Well, actually this Jack Travis, this bartender I was going with, he didn't want me to get involved anyway or anything.

"The Court: You mean that the bartender was the one? Who is Jack Travis? A. The fellow I was going with.

"The Court: Where is he? Does he know anything about this?

"Witness: No.

"The Court: Well, all right. Now tell me, why, if you knew that this man was innocent, if you knew he was innocent, why did you wait until today? Give me your answer? You say it was your friend?

"Witness: Well I thought if he needed me he would certainly get in touch with me.

"The Court: Did anybody ever get in touch with you?

"Witness: Mr. Cayocca is the only one.

"The Court: All right, then what happened? Why didn't you go after you talked to Mr. Cayocca?

"Witness: He didn't suggest it.

"The Court: Did he suggest that you don't go.

"Witness: No, he did not.

"The Court: Well, then what stopped you from going?

"Witness: Actually, I don't—I don't know why I didn't go. Just never occurred to me.

"The Court: You are here today. Aren't you?

Witness: Yes.

"The Court: And you are here under a subpoena; isn't that right?

"Witness: Yes.

"The Court: When did you get that subpoena?

"Witness: About a week and a half ago.

"The Court: All right. At that time you knew that you were going to be brought into Court, didn't you?

"Witness: Yes.

"The Court: Why didn't you then go to the District Attorney and tell him that you knew this man was innocent?

"Witness: Well, I don't know why, I just figured that I would have to be here today and that's all there was to it; I mean I just didn't think any more about it.

"The Court: You never thought any more about it?"

"Witness: No.

"The Court: Is that it?"

"Witness: Yes.

"The Court: Is that what you want to tell me?"

"Witness: Yes.

"The Court: All right. Now then, who was this you said told you not to become involved in it?"

"Witness: This Jack Travis I was going with him, and he was just a little jealous of Frank, that's all.

"The Court: All right. And for that reason Jack Travis told you not to go and tell about it; is that it?"

"Witness: Well, he didn't say not to, but he said if you are not careful, he said, you may get a subpoena; that's all.

"The Court: You told me he was jealous of Frank?"

"Witness: He was.

"The Court: And is that the reason you mean to tell me that because he was jealous of Frank, that you would let a man be convicted of a crime of robbery because this bartender told you not to go to the police?"

"Witness: He didn't tell me not to go.

"The Court: Well, why didn't you go?"

"Witness: Judge, I don't know why I didn't go.

"The Court: All right. All right."

[5] We know of no general duty of a citizen upon learning that someone has been accused of crime and is about to be tried under that accusation to go to the district attorney and volunteer information as to that person's innocence. This witness had done what the ordinary citizen would have thought was adequate in giving the information she had to counsel for the defendant and she was not obliged either in law or in morals to also go to the district attorney and give him the same information. It may have been proper enough for the prosecuting attorney to cross question her as to why she had not given the information to him as well as to counsel for the defense, but it was not proper for the trial judge, this having been done, to take over the cross examination and tell the jury in effect that the witness was under the legal duty to give the information to the district attorney and to the court in which the charge lay, as well as to the defense counsel, and, having failed to do that, was therefore suspect in the matter of her credibility, was such a person as "would let a man be convicted of a crime of robbery." Though not done expressly, this was the expression of an opinion as to credibility made during that part of the trial where such expressions are not within the proper function of a trial judge. This was error.

The next assignment of misconduct has to do with the recall to the stand for further cross examination of the witness Bakotich. He stated that he wanted to change his testimony theretofore given to the effect that he was positive of the date and of the hours he had been with appellant. He said that he now was not sure that he had the right date. The following occurred:

"[By the prosecuting attorney]:

Q. Is it correct, Mr. Bakotich, that you are not sure that you were with Mr. Corrigan on the specific date of the 30th of April as you have previously testified? A. It's possible.

"Q. All right. But you did testify originally positively that you were sure; is that right? A. That's right.

"Q. All right sir. Now do you now realize that if you lie under oath you are committing perjury? A. Yes sir.

"Q. All right. You understand that now; is that correct? A. Yes.

"Q. All right. Now why was it then that at the time you were testifying earlier this afternoon you said that you were positive that you were with Mr. Corrigan on the 30th? A. Well, I figured—I said I was, but then again I thought I might—possibly I was with him at the time, I thought, because quite a few times like I said I have been out with Frank five or six times, and it might have been a chance that I might have been with him on that night.

"Q. But you are not sure? A. No sir.

"Q. All right. Why was it that you told the jury originally that you were sure? A. Excuse me?

"Q. Well, let me ask you this. Weren't you just trying to help Frank out when you first told your story to the jury? A. Yes, the first one, yes.

"Q. That is correct, isn't it? You were trying to help— A. Yes sir.

"Q. —out Mr. Corrigan, and the truth of the matter is that you could not know and you are not sure that you were with Mr. Corrigan on the 30th; it could just as easily have been another date; is that correct? A. It's possible.

"Q. Well, possible or is it correct? A. Yes sir, it's possible, yah; yes sir.

"Q. All right sir. I have no further questions."

Counsel for defendant then took the witness on redirect and established that after he had left the courtroom under reservation by the People of the right to further cross examine and under the order of the court to wait in the corridor he had been in a room talking to five or six detectives. On recross counsel for the People asked him the following questions:

"Q. Did anyone use any force on you? A. No sir.

"The Court: He doesn't say that. They didn't—you were taken in there in regard to the fact that your brother was supposed to come down here, was that it?

"Witness: Well—

"The Court: They took you in there? A. Yes, I was taken in there."

"Witness: Yes.

"The Court: And you saw the District Attorney, did you?

"Witness: Well, I don't know who he was.

"The Court: Do you know the District Attorney? A. Yes, I do."

"Witness: No, sir, I don't.

"The Court: Well, let's see if you know this man here, Mr. J. Francis O'Shea, the District Attorney of this County?

"Witness: No, he wasn't in there.

"The Court: All right. He wasn't there?

"Witness: No, I don't think so.

"The Court: Well, this man here was there, was he?

"Witness: He was in there, yes.

"The Court: And did anybody at that time tell you you had to change your story or anything?

"Witness: No, they were talking to me in there. They had questioned me about this here that occurred with Frank on this here testimony of mine.

"The Court: And then you told them that; is that right?

"Witness: Yes, I was talking to them.

"The Court: All right, they didn't—did Mr. De Cristoforo ask you if they made any threat, did they make any threat?

"Witness: Well, they were talking about perjury and all that stuff.

"The Court: Well, they told you—did somebody tell you that if you told a lie on the witness stand it would be perjury?

"Witness: That's right.

"The Court: Is that the first time you knew that?

"Witness: Yes, I just found out.

"The Court: And up to that time, as I understand your testimony to Mr. De Cristoforo was that up to that time you thought you could help Frank out; is that it?"

"Witness: That's right.

"The Court: All right, that's all."

Here again the charge is that of undue interference by the trial judge with the conduct of the case and we think again the charge is unjustified. The witness had under the described conditions made a material change in his testimony. He was the principal alibi witness. There had been an intimation that the change had been unlawfully compelled by officers. We think the court was well within its power in taking up the questioning and advancing it as was done.

In connection with this same occurrence and at the close of the testimony of the next alibi witness the court again ordered the witness to remain in the corridor as it had theretofore ordered Bakotich to do. The following occurred:

"Mr. Cayocca [defense counsel]: Your Honor, I would like to make an objection at this time as to the witnesses who testified here, to have them in the corridor is all right, but as to taking them into the District Attorney's Office and two or three people accuse them of perjury, and jumping all over them—

"The Court: Well now, wait, there is no evidence before this Court of anybody accusing anybody of perjury.

"Mr. Cayocca: What I call a—

"The Court: All right, there is no evidence before this Court that anybody accused anybody of perjury. There is testimony that this boy was told that if he didn't tell the truth it would be perjury, and then your witness changed his story. That's what you wanted to know?"

"Mr. Cayocca: All right, your Honor.

"The Court: Call the next witness."

There was no misconduct here. The defense counsel had strongly intimated that the officers were intimidating his witnesses and that the court was affording them the opportunity to do so because it was requiring them to wait and not excusing them from further attendance on the court. The intimation is not borne out by the record and the court merely stated the fact to be so and then said that Bakotich had been told that if he didn't tell the truth it would be perjury, whereupon he changed his story. There was no misstatement of the record by the court and the court was acting properly in setting the matter straight.

The next assignment of misconduct has to do with examination by the court of the fourth alibi witness. The witness had testified that Corrigan left the bar which he tended at 1:15 in the morning, saying as he went out, "I will see you later"; that he came back into the bar at 25 minutes to 2 and remained there until 2 o'clock; that no one left with him when he first left at 1:15; that there were about 25 customers in the place while Corrigan was there. People's counsel then asked questions, testing the accuracy of the witness' observation by inquiring as to what he knew about the time others came and went. At this point the court interposed the following:

"The Court: Let me ask you this, whenever anybody goes out, says, 'I will see you later,' do you always look at the time to see what time they leave?"

"Witness: Well, not exactly, but thirty-four years as a bartender is a little experience, your Honor."

"The Court: Well now, let me get that answer. Read that answer to me. (Reporter read the pending answer.)

"The Court: All right. Now what do you mean by that?"

"Witness: Well, its—you just seem to sense it in a way.

"The Court: Sense what?"

"Witness: As a person comes and has a drink, at times you can sense it, he can have one drink, you can almost sense if he has two, the type of a person that's in front of you.

"The Court: Yes. Now then you are testifying in some regard here from your observation as a man behind the bar for thirty-four years; is that right?

"Witness: Yes.

"The Court: All right. Now let me ask you this. How many other people left that night that you could tell us left at 1:00 o'clock, that you looked at the clock when they left?

"Witness: I didn't look at the clock but I could tell you a few.

"The Court: All right. But you did look at the clock when Corrigan left; is that it?

"Witness: No, I didn't look at the clock.

"The Court: Didn't you tell us you looked at the clock?

"Witness: But at 1:00 o'clock I did look at the clock and I spaced the time as fifteen minutes.

"The Court: I see. As the time that he left?

"Witness: Yes, I would say that at the time he left I spaced it at fifteen minutes.

"The Court: How did you happen to do that? Why did you do that with him any different than anyone else?

"Witness: Well, I don't do it any different with anyone else, your Honor, it's just that I know the time some come in and some go out is all.

"The Court: Now isn't it a fact, let me ask you this and let's you and I be on the square with each other.

"Witness: Yes.

"The Court: Do you definitely know what time Corrigan left there that night? Don't forget I want you to tell me the truth.

"Witness: Well, I am telling you the truth to the best of my knowledge.

"The Court: All right, and you say at 1:15.

"Witness: Yes, I would say."

[6] We cannot approve the latter part of this questioning. The witness had just stated that Corrigan left at a certain time. The court then proposed to ask again if he really knew when Corrigan left and intimated that the witness had not told the truth, or as the court put it, "Let's you and I be square with each other". The question was then repeated in this way: "Do you definitely know what time Corrigan left that night? Don't forget, I want you to tell me the truth." We think the jury could not fail to get the strong impression that the court disbelieved the witness and thought the witness had not told the truth and so had not been "square" with the court. We believe that the questions asked and the comments made cannot receive any other reasonable construction. We think it undoubtedly true that the court did not believe the witness, but the error lay in expressing that distrust at that point in the case.

During the course of the trial, Ash was brought into the courtroom in the custody of deputy sheriffs for the purpose of identification. Thereafter, when the defendant was being cross examined, the following occurred:

"Q. The fact that he pleaded guilty was of course, good news to you, wasn't it? A. Not necessarily, sir. Why should it be good news to me?

"Q. So that he wouldn't testify.

"Mr. Cayocca: Why wouldn't he testify?

"Witness: The man is in the County Jail.

"Mr. Cayocca: He is over in the County Jail. They can call him any time.

"The Court: Wait a minute, one at a time. Have you got some objection to make?

"Mr. Cayocca: I mean making a statement he pleaded guilty.

"The Court: Is there any objection?

"Mr. Cayocca: This is an objection.

"The Court: What is your objection?

"Mr. Cayocca: Objection to the question, your Honor.

"The Court: What is the ground?

"Mr. Cayocca: The ground is that it is an improper question the way it is phrased.

"The Court: Read the question. (The reporter read from lines 18 to 22, page 421.)

"The Court: He said why and that is the answer."

Upon redirect examination, the record discloses the following:

"By Kenneth B. Cayocca, Esq., of counsel on behalf of defendant:

"Q. Now you mentioned Mr. Ash. As far as Ash testifying in this case, do you have any fear of Ash coming in here and testifying? A. Not at all, sir.

"Q. You feel if he came in here and told the truth it would have any effect upon your charge? A. If he could come in here and tell the truth, yes, sir, it wouldn't hurt me a bit."

On recross examination, the record discloses the following:

"By Joseph De Cristoforo, Esq., Deputy District Attorney in and for the County of Sacramento, State of California:

"Q. You said, Mr. Corrigan, that you have no fear of Mr. Ash testifying; is that right? A. Well, I have no fear of what his testimony would be.

"Q. That's right, you are not afraid of that, are you? A. No, sir, not at all.

"Q. And isn't it a fact, Mr. Corrigan, that the reason you are not afraid is that you know that Mr. Ash will get up there and say that you were not the man with him? A. Why if he tells the truth, he will, sir.

"Q. That wasn't my question."

"Mr. Cayocca: That's just the answer to your question.

"The Court: Ask the next question.

"Mr. De Cristoforo: No further questions.

"The Court: It's already been asked and answered.

"Mr. De Cristoforo: I have no further questions.

"Mr. Cayocca: May I have the question read and answered again for my own benefit? I didn't get clear on it.

"The Court: He asked him—don't you remember it?

"Mr. Cayocca: No, I don't.

"The Court: All right, I will repeat it to you. He asked him, 'Isn't it a fact that you know that if Ash is called here as a witness he will get on the witness stand and testify that you weren't with him?' That's the answer.

"Mr. Cayocca: That's what I wanted. All right, thank you, Mr. Corrigan.

"The Court: Do you want him called as a witness?

"The Witness: That's up to my attorney, sir.

"The Court: Well it's up to you, too, I am asking you now, do you want him? I will order him here.

"The Witness: I don't care, sir, either way.

"The Court: If you want him, he is available. I will bring him here from prison if you want.

"Mr. Cayocca: Well, your Honor—

"The Court: If you want him, he is available for you.

"Mr. Cayocca: Your Honor, from what has gone on before with some of these other fellows that testified, I have already advised Mr. Corrigan that I would not call Ash.

"The Court: I don't understand what you mean by that. If you want him, I will order him here so he is available for you."

[7] The matter of calling Mr. Ash, who should do so and why, was injected into the case by the prosecution. It could be said that the defense had rather the better of the exchange. But appellant criticises the intervention of the court, and we cannot approve it. It was not to elicit evidence from the witness, nor to clear up any uncertainty in testimony. Implicit in the gratuitous offer of the court to cause Ash to be brought in was a challenge to the defense to call Ash to the stand. However, on the whole record of this incident we think no prejudice was suffered.

[8] Although with regard to the incidents noted we cannot approve what was done and think the court fell into error, it remains to apply the test of the Constitution as to whether the errors merit reversal of the judgment. People v. Ottey, supra, 5 Cal.2d at page 726, 56 P.2d at page 199. We do not view the case as one of those so close as to merit reversal. The case against appellant was strong and this is particularly true with regard to the testimony as to his extrajudicial statements, and as to the existence of his fingerprints upon the gun which he himself by extrajudicial statements identified as that used in the robbery. We do not think it probable that a different result would have been arrived at if the trial court had not commented as it did and indicated its disbelief of the defense witnesses when it did. No miscarriage of justice in our opinion occurred and reversal of the judgment and order appealed from is not warranted.

[9, 10] Appellant further contends that the court erred in failing to instruct the jury upon the defense of alibi. This contention cannot be sustained. No instruction was requested. While it is clearly established that the court is required without request to instruct upon the general principles of law involved in a criminal case, it is equally well established as to the defense of alibi, that in the absence of any request for an instruction thereon, it is not the duty of the trial court to give a specific charge on the subject. People v. Whitson, 25 Cal.2d 593, 603, 154 P.2d 867, and cases cited. It can be well observed, also, that in such a case as this, where the defense of alibi is made out if the defendant was not personally present at the time the crime was committed, the jury do not need to be told that proof he was absent from the scene would constitute a defense. It is a matter of common knowledge that a person cannot be in two places at one time. It is unnecessary to instruct a jury upon so plain a matter.

The judgment and the order appealed from are affirmed.

SCHOTTKY, J., concurs.

PEEK, Justice (dissenting).

I am entirely in agreement with the conclusion of the majority on the question of comment, that, " * * * while a court may, when it charges the jury in a criminal case, express its opinion as to the weight of evidence and as to the credibility of any witness, it must, while the evidence is being received, refrain from such conduct." However, I cannot agree with the final conclusion that the conceded misconduct of the trial judge was not prejudicial. As the majority notes, "A trial judge is rigorously prohibited from actions or words having the effect of conveying to the jury his personal opinion as to the truth or falsity of any evidence. This rule should be strictly adhered to." People v. O'Donnell, 11 Cal.2d 666, 81 P.2d 939, 942. But is this rule being strictly adhered to in the present case? I am not convinced that it is.

From my reading of the transcript I cannot escape the conclusion that from the outset of the trial, by the persistent, aggressive and lengthy cross examination of the witnesses, the context of the questions asked, the innuendoes contained therein, as well as the inferences to be drawn therefrom, and what amounted to voluntary comments contained in such questions, the trial judge definitely stepped out of his character as a judge and took over the role of the prosecutor. And, by such actions and words, he very forcefully conveyed to the jury his personal opinion as to the truth or falsity of the evidence and the credibility of the witnesses. Although the majority opinion has quoted much of the extensive and repetitious examination of the witnesses by the court, it seems to me that only by a reading of the entire transcript can the true effect on the jury of such questioning be evaluated. However, I hesitate to unduly burden the opinion with further quotations. Suffice it to say that the interrogation by the court, in addition to the portions quoted in the majority opinion, is replete with such comments and questions as:

"* * * You ought to know. You say you were there * * *. You don't know. You don't know, is that it? Do you or don't you know? What joint were you in * * * you say. * * * You guess * * *. Now you are telling us. Is that right? And you don't—didn't even know his name * * *? Might have been Freddy but you don't know whether it was Freddy or not, is that right? You just guess it was during April; is that right? You are not sure are you? Are you sure it was in April or you just say it must have been, you guess? * * * All right, now let me ask you this. * * * You don't remember that very well? You don't know the date. Was it Saturday night, Sunday night, or do you know? Have you any idea? * * * Who said? They said? Who are they?"

The majority opinion, while holding that such interrogation and comment by the trial court was error, concludes that it was not prejudicial error, because as it is there stated the case against the defendant was strong, first by reason of his extrajudicial statements, and second by reason of his fingerprints which were found on the gun which he, by extrajudicial statements, identified as that used in the robbery; and therefore this case comes within the saving provisions of Article VI, section 4½, of the Constitution.

I cannot agree that the case was strong. The evidence concerning the identification of the two persons who participated in the robbery was entirely circumstantial. The testimony of the bartender and the four bar patrons, some of whom had been at the bar for quite some time, was in complete confusion. Their only agreement was as to what clothing was worn by the two men; that is, the nylon stockings worn as masks, the overcoat, hat and gloves, and the similarity of the gun used with the one introduced at the trial. The defendant herein was never directly identified. His only connection with the robbery was established by reason of the fingerprints being found on the gun and certain conflicting statements made by two of the State's witnesses concerning comments said to have been made by defendant following two telephone calls to Ash's landlady. The landlady testified to one version and one of the paroled ex-convicts testified to another, and one which was different from his testimony at the preliminary hearing. Durand, the other ex-convict parolee who was called by the prosecution gave still another version. Again there was conflict as to whether it was Dillon or Corrigan who made statements such as: that the "heat was on" when he was informed that Ash was in jail; that he hoped that Ash had enough sense to do something with the box the police were said to have found; that there were stockings, gloves and other stuff in the box and fingerprints all over it. Corrigan denied that it was he who made such statements. But even assuming that he did, I do not consider such comment can be interpreted either as an admission on his part of participation in the robbery or as an identification of the gun. No incriminating evidence was found in the possession of Corrigan. The box was found in the attic of Ash's apartment.

The fingerprints found on the gun were not so placed as they would have been had the gun been held in a normal position. It was Corrigan's testimony that his fingerprints were left on the gun when he was asked to examine it at the police station. All of the witnesses testified that the robber who held the gun wore gloves at the time of the robbery. Thus the fingerprints must have been placed on the gun either before or after the robbery. The most that was said concerning the gun, by any of the witnesses, was merely that it was similar to the gun used at the time of the robbery.

It is true, as the majority notes, a trial is not a game in which the judge can only act as an umpire, and "sit quietly by and see one wrongfully acquitted or unjustly punished". People v. Golsh, 63 Cal. App. 609, 614-615, 219 P. 456, 458. But it is equally true that he must not become a partisan advocate. Therefore when, during the examination of the witnesses, a court by words or actions departs from the role of an impartial judge and conveys to the jury "his personal opinion as to the truth or falsity of any evidence", People v. O'Donnell, 11 Cal.2d 666, 671, 81 P. 2d 939, 942, and it could well be added, of the credibility of any witness, he has by so doing placed himself without the bounds of Article VI, section 19.

No one will deny that jurors are most sensitive to and rely with great confidence on the fairness of judges and the correctness of their views expressed during the course of a trial. "For this reason, and too strong emphasis cannot be laid on the admonition, a judge should be careful not to throw the weight of his judicial position into a case, either for or against a defendant." People v. Mahoney, 201 Cal. 618, 627, 258 P. 607, 610; People v. O'Donnell, 11 Cal.2d 666, 81 P.2d 939.

Conviction or acquittal may equally be the result of a miscarriage of justice. In either event a fundamental right of the people or of the defendant has been disregarded or denied. It is an essential part of justice that the question of guilt or innocence shall be determined by an orderly legal procedure, in which the substantial rights belonging both to the people and the defendant shall be respected. People v. Long, 63 Cal.App.2d 679, 147 P.2d 659.

The situation as presented by the record before this court, when viewed in light of the rules noted by the majority as well as this dissent, convinces me that to approve the conceded error in this case is to deny a fair, impartial trial to the defendant and to extend the saving grace of section 4½ just a bit too far.

Truman C. DRIVER and Tena B. Driver, his wife, Plaintiffs, Cross-Defendants and Respondents,

v.

A. A. ACQUISTO, Individually and A. A. Acquist, transacting business under the fictitious name of Anthony Motors, Defendant, Cross-Complainant and Appellant.
Civ. 21359.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 3, California.

Oct. 23, 1956.

Action by conditional buyers for conversion of automobile by seller. The Superior Court, Ventura County, Walter J. Fourt, J., entered judgment for buyers and seller appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Parker Wood, J., held that under the circumstances the buyers could not recover the full value of automobile but merely that amount less the balance due on contract at time of conversion.

Judgment affirmed as modified.

1. Sales ⇨481

In action by conditional buyers against seller for conversion of automobile, evidence relating to seller's provocation and buyers' anger and statements made at time of the taking raised question of fact as to whether buyers consented to the repossessing of automobile by seller.

2. Sales ⇨481

In action by conditional buyers against seller for conversion of automobile, evidence relating to seller's assignment of contract to bank and to bank's subsequent dealings with seller and buyers in respect to contract supported findings that seller had no interest in automobile or contract of sale when he repossessed automobile.

3. Sales ⇨481

Where converter of property subject to conditional sales contract is a stranger and has no interest in property and purchaser is under obligation to pay balance of contract price to the owner of the contract, purchaser may recover full value of property converted.

4. Sales ⇨481

Where conditional buyers of automobile brought action against seller for conversion and it was admitted that after seller repossessed automobile he repurchased previously assigned conditional sales contract, assessment of buyers' damages for conversion should not have included the unpaid balance on such contract.

5. Trial ⇨397(3, 4)

In action by conditional buyers for conversion of automobile by seller who counterclaimed for unpaid balance due on said contract, where buyer did not plead that such contract was in violation of statute limiting percentage of time price differential and there was no evidence introduced in support of such contention, trial judge in hearing case without jury committed no error in refusing to make finding that such contract was in violation of statute. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 2982.

John R. Danch and Wallace Hatcher, Ventura, for appellant.

William Leeker, Carpenteria, for respondents.

PARKER WOOD, Justice.

Plaintiffs sought damages for conversion of an automobile. Defendant filed an answer, denying the alleged conversion; and he filed a cross-complaint, seeking $55.75 allegedly due as a deficiency, under a conditional sale contract, after the automobile had been repossessed and resold by defendant. Judgment was for plaintiffs for $1,093, and that cross-complainant take nothing. Defendant appeals from the judgment. (The action was commenced in the Municipal Court at Santa Barbara, and upon a motion for change of venue was transferred to the Superior Court of Ventura County.)

Appellant contends that the evidence was insufficient to support the judgment.

About September 10, 1953, defendant Acquistio and plaintiffs entered into a written conditional contract of sale whereby defendant sold to plaintiffs a 1950 Mercury automobile. The contract stated, in part, that the cash price was $1,425.13; the down payment was $475.13 which was an equity in a Pontiac and trailer; the unpaid balance of the cash price was $950; the time-price differential was $237.28; the contract balance was $1,187.28, which was to be paid in 24 monthly instalments of $49.47 beginning October 11, 1953. The contract was signed as follows: Anthony Motors, by A. A. Acquistio, owner. Truman C. Driver. Mrs. Tena B. Driver. J. W. Glover, Co-maker.

Prior to the making of the contract, the Mercury automobile was owned by J. W. Glover who had an equity of approximately $400 in it, and he owed the Bank of America $900 on the automobile. Glover and plaintiff Mr. Driver entered into an arrangement whereby it was contemplated that plaintiffs would buy the automobile by paying Glover the amount of his equity and by financing the balance on an installment plan through Acquisto. Glover conferred with Acquisto relative to the financing, and thereafter the conditional contract of sale, above referred to, was executed. No automobile or trailer was transferred (as indicated by the contract) to Acquisto by plaintiffs as a down payment or at all. Plaintiffs paid Glover, for his equity, $379 cash and transferred a Ford automobile to him for the agreed amount of $75, making the total payment of $454 to Glover. Acquisto paid to the Bank of America the $900 indebtedness of Glover.

On September 21, 1953, Acquisto sold and assigned the contract to Citizens Bank of Santa Paula. The bank notified plaintiffs by letter that the contract had been assigned to it, and that in making the payments to the bank the plaintiffs should use a payment book which was enclosed in the letter. Mr. Driver's salary was paid to him on the 15th of each month and he requested the bank to change the due date of the automobile payments from the 11th to the 15th of each month. The bank changed the due date to the 15th. Plaintiffs made payments to the bank as follows: October 19, 1953, $49.47; November 17, 1953, $49.47; December 31, 1953, $98.94. In other words, the payments due prior to February, 1954 were paid.

The conditional contract of sale provided that Acquisto may insure the automobile and that the plaintiffs would pay the premium. Also, the plaintiffs agreed in writing that within 10 days after September 10, 1953, they would furnish an insurance policy covering the automobile. They furnished such a policy but it was canceled on December 18, 1953, because plaintiffs did not pay the balance due on the premium.

About February 10, 1954, Acquisto told plaintiff Mr. Driver that Acquisto would get another insurance policy on the automobile if Driver would pay the premium on February 15. Driver testified that he told Acquisto that he would pay the premium and also pay the February payment of $49.47 on February 15, 1954, between 6:30 p. m. and 8:30 p. m. at Acquisto's office. Another policy was issued on February 11 and the premium was $53. Driver testified that he and his wife went to Acquisto's office on February 15 at 7:15 p. m. to pay said amounts, but Acquisto was not at his office; they returned to his office about 7:45 p. m. and about 10:30 p. m. but Acquisto was not there.

On the following morning, February 16, Acquisto telephoned Driver at his place of employment and asked him why he had not paid the money on February 15. Driver testified that he replied that he had been to the office (at the times above stated) and that Acquisto was not there; that Acquisto then said that perhaps he had stepped out for a sandwich and coffee; that Acquisto also said that he had been to the home of the Drivers on the night of February 15; that he told Acquisto that Mrs. Driver would be at Acquisto's office that afternoon (February 16) to make the payment; that Acquisto "got rather nasty" and said that if Driver did not pay the money by 10:30 a. m. of that day (February 16) he would take the car; then Mr. Driver was "rather mad" and he said, "Well, if you think you have the right to take my car, you go ahead and take it then." At that time the automobile was at the home of plaintiffs—Mrs. Driver had used it in taking Mr. Driver to his place of employment and she returned it to their home.

On February 16, about 1:30 p. m., Acquisto went to plaintiffs' home and took the automobile and drove it to his office. Acquisto testified that when he arrived at plaintiffs' home he told Mrs. Driver that he could store the car if they would take care of the insurance; that she replied that they could not pay; he asked her for the keys and she handed them to him; he asked for the registration certificate (white slip) and she gave it to him.

On February 16, after taking the automobile, Acquisto sent a letter to plaintiffs wherein he demanded payment of the balance of $1,010.73 not later than February 22. The bank had not made any demand upon plaintiffs for the February payment, and the bank did not instruct Acquisto to repossess the automobile.

On January 17, 1952 (prior to the transaction herein between Acquisto and the Citizens Bank of Santa Paula), Acquisto and the bank had entered into a "Dealers Repurchase Agreement" which provided that the bank would purchase conditional sales contracts from Acquisto and that a sale of such a contract by Acquisto to the bank would be without recourse except as to any contract which may become 60 days delinquent, and as to such a contract Acquisto would repurchase it from the bank on demand.

On February 26, 1954, (after taking the automobile) Acquisto paid $868.40 to the bank, and the contract was transferred to him. On April 30, 1954, Acquisto sold the automobile to Mr. Hamelin for $1,095.

Plaintiff Mr. Driver testified that he did not consent to the taking of the automobile by Acquisto. Mrs. Driver was in Oklahoma at the time of the trial.

The court found that on February 16, 1954, plaintiffs were the owners and entitled to the possession of said automobile, and on said date defendant took the automobile and converted it to his own use; on said date the value of the automobile was $1,093, and defendant had no interest in the automobile or in said conditional contract of sale; on said date the Citizens Bank of Santa Paula was the owner and holder of said contract, and plaintiffs were not in default in the performance of any of the provisions of the contract; the defendant, in taking the automobile on said date, was not the agent, representative or employee of said bank and had not been authorized by the bank to take possession of the automobile on behalf of the bank at any time; on said February 16 there was insurance on the automobile as required by said contract and by a certain other agreement to furnish an insurance policy, and that said insurance was in effect on said date; the payment due by plaintiffs under the contract of sale for the month of February 1954, and the payment due on the insurance premium were due on February 15, 1954; on said February 15 plaintiffs were ready to pay all payments due under the contract of sale and the agreement to furnish insurance, and they presented themselves at defendant's place of business for the purpose of making the payments but the place was closed and no one was there to receive the payments; plaintiffs did not, nor did either of them, consent to the taking of the automobile by defendant on said February 16 or at any time; about April 30, 1954, defendant resold the automobile for $1,095, and said resale was made without notice to either plaintiff and without the knowledge or consent of either of them; the value of the interest of plaintiffs in the automobile on said February 16 was $1,093.

[1] Appellant argues that there was no conversion because plaintiffs consented to the taking of the automobile. As above stated, the court found that the plaintiffs did not consent. Appellant, in presenting the argument that plaintiffs consented to the taking, quotes his own testimony which was, in substance, that Mr. Driver got mad and told him to pick up the car, that he (Driver) did not have a driver's license and could not drive; and that, when he (Acquisto) arrived at plaintiffs' home, Mrs. Driver said that she knew what he wanted, that her husband had told her, and that they could not pay for the insurance; and that when he asked Mrs. Driver for the keys and the white slip she handed them to him. Of course, the trial judge was not required to accept the testimony of Acquisto as to what was said and done when he took the automobile from plaintiffs. Apparently the judge accepted Driver's testimony which was to the effect that he had gone to Acquisto's office on the night of February 15 for the purpose of paying Acquisto; that on the morning of February 16, in response to Acquisto's telephone call, he told Acquisto that he had tried to pay him the night before and that Mrs. Driver would be at Acquisto's office in the afternoon of that day to make the payment; and that when Acquisto got nasty and made him mad he (Driver) said, "Well, if you think you have the right to take my car, you go ahead and take it then." In view of the circumstances under which that quoted statement of Driver was made it cannot be said, as a matter of law, that the statement amounted to consent that the car be taken. Under the circumstances, particularly the circumstances as to provocation and anger, the statement might be regarded as a warning or threat on the part of Driver that if Acquisto did take the car his right to take it would be challenged and he would be held accountable for taking it. Whether the plaintiffs consented to the taking was a question of fact for the trial judge. The finding that they did not consent is supported by the evidence.

[2] Appellant also argues that he had a sufficient interest in the automobile and contract of sale to entitle him to repossess the automobile. The appellant had assigned the contract to the bank without recourse. Although he had a written agreement with the bank whereby, under certain circumstances, he would repurchase the contract on demand, no such demand had been made upon him and he had not repurchased the contract at the time he repossessed the automobile. Although there was evidence that he had an oral arrangement with the bank whereby he "works" his delinquent accounts, there was also evidence that the bank had extended the due date of the monthly payments to the 15th day of each month; that the bank's policy was to send a demand or delinquent notice on the 5th day of delinquency; that the bank had not demanded payment by plaintiff on February 16; and the bank had not instructed appellant to repossess the automobile. The findings that appellant had no interest in the automobile or contract of sale when he took the automobile and that he converted the automobile to his own use are supported by the evidence.

[3,4] Appellant contends further that, even if plaintiffs were entitled to judgment by reason of conversion, they were not entitled to recover more than the value of their limited interest in the automobile, that is, the value of the automobile less the unpaid purchase price. The court found that the value of the automobile was $1,093. It is to be noted that the court also found that the value of the interest of the plaintiffs in said automobile was $1,093. Since plaintiffs were awarded $1,093, it appears that they were awarded (as their interest in the automobile) the full value of the automobile. It appears that the balance due to the bank under the contract of sale, at the time of the conversion, was approximately $868.40. (Acquisto testified that on February 26—ten days after he took the automobile—he purchased the contract from the bank for $868.40.) Appellant alleged in his cross-complaint that on February 26, 1953 (1954), he paid $868.40, the unpaid balance due to the bank on the contract, and that the bank transferred the ownership of the automobile to him. Plaintiffs, in answering the cross-complaint, denied that allegation (basing their denial upon lack of information). The court did not make a finding upon that issue. A finding should have been made thereon. If it is a fact that appellant was the owner of the contract at the time of the trial, the court in fixing the amount of damages for the conversion should not have included therein the unpaid amount of the purchase price. (Plaintiffs state in their brief that they concede that appellant, after retaking the vehicle, paid the bank $868.40 and received from the bank a transfer of the contract.) It is true that under some circumstances a purchaser under a conditional sale contract (who has not paid the full contract price) may recover the full value of the property converted. An example of such circumstances is where the converter is a stranger and has no interest in the property and the purchaser is under an obligation to pay the balance of the contract price to the owner of the contract. In Goldberg v. List, 11 Cal.2d 389, at page 393, 79 P.2d 1087 at page 1090, 116 A.L.R. 900, it was said: "[A]n analysis of the authorities which support the rule that a recovery of the full value of the property converted may be had by a person having only a limited or qualified interest therein, indicates that the underlying reason and basis for such recovery is the fact that the party having the limited or qualified interest is liable over to the owner of the remaining interest, and in order to be adequately compensated must receive sufficient compensation not only to compensate himself for his own loss but to satisfy the demands of such owner." It was also said in that case 11 Cal.2d at page 393, 79 P.2d at page 1090: "That this is the true basis for the permitting of the recovery of the full value of the property converted by one owning a qualified interest is demonstrated by the fact that when the action is against the owner of the general interest, the owner of a qualified interest can only recover for the value of such limited interest, in order 'avoid circuity of action'. [Citations.]" In the present case it appears that the appellant was the owner of the contract "or general interest" at the time of the trial, and that the plaintiffs were not obligated to pay the balance of the contract price to the bank but were obligated to pay it to the appellant. If appellant was the owner of the contract at the time of trial, plaintiffs were not entitled to recover the full value of the automobile, but they were entitled to recover the value of their limited interest in the automobile which is the difference between the value of the automobile and the amount of the unpaid purchase price at the time of the conversion. As above stated, the court erred in not finding upon the issue as to whether appellant had purchased the contract from the bank. Plaintiffs concede, however, as above stated, that appellant had purchased the contract from the bank for $868.40. They also stated in their brief that the question, with respect to amount of recovery, is whether the plaintiffs are entitled to $1,093 (the full value), or to that amount less $868.40, or a net of $224.60. The amount of the judgment should have been $224.60.

[5] Plaintiffs assert that the conditional sale contract was in violation of section 2982 of the Civil Code and may not be enforced by appellant. That section provides that the "time price differential" in a conditional sale contract for the sale of a motor vehicle shall not exceed a certain percent of the unpaid balance, which percent is to be computed in a manner specified therein. The section also provides that if the seller, except as the result of accidental error, violates the provision as to time price differential the contract shall not be enforceable. This contention of plaintiffs relates to involved computations which, according to plaintiffs, show an overcharge by appellant of $9.50. The proposed findings, which were submitted to the judge, included a finding to the effect that defendant violated said section to the extent of such overcharge and that the overcharge was not the result of an accidental error. The judge deleted that proposed finding from the findings as made. Plaintiffs did not plead that there was a violation of said section. The computations as to the alleged error were not presented at the trial. Even if there had been such an error, this court cannot decide whether the error was accidental. Appellant asserts in his brief that if plaintiffs had not avoided, in their pleadings and proof, the question of illegality of the contract, appellant could have shown at the trial how he arrived at his calculations. The trial judge did not err in not making a finding as to the alleged violation.

The judgment is modified by reducing the amount thereof to $224.60, and as so modified the judgment is affirmed. Each party to pay his own costs on appeal.

The PEOPLE of the State of California
Plaintiff and Respondent

v.

William Coburn WILLIAMS, Defendant
and Appellant.

Cr. 5628.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 2, California.

Oct. 18, 1956.

Prosecution of six defendants for grand theft accomplished through embezzlement. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, H. Burton Noble, J., entered judgments of conviction as to all defendants, and one of the defendants appealed from judgment and order denying his motion for new trial. The District Court of Appeal, Ashburn, J., held that evidence sustained embezzlement conviction of trustee of union welfare fund, who withdrew excessive amounts from trust fund as alleged compensation for services.

Affirmed.

1. Trusts §315(1)

A trustee under trust instrument that does not expressly provide for compensation for services is not entitled to any until the same has been approved and allowed by a court.

2. Embezzlement §11(1)

Where trustee of union welfare fund withdrew excessive amount from fund in the form of a cashier's check which he did not endorse or cash, but which check was still outstanding, there was a completed embezzlement, regardless of his alleged intention to return check to trust fund. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 512.

3. Embezzlement §24

In prosecution of six trustees of union welfare fund for grand theft accomplished through embezzlement of funds from such trust, where evidence clearly established a conspiracy between the six trustees and a continuous course of conduct pursuant thereto, individual trustee was responsible as a principal for everything done by his co-conspirators regardless of fact that conspiracy was not alleged in the indictment. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 1131.

4. Criminal Law §1159(2)

In passing on sufficiency of evidence to sustain a conviction, before a reversal may be had, it must be clearly apparent that upon no hypothesis whatever is there sufficient, substantial evidence to support the conclusion reached in the court below.

5. Criminal Law §1144(13)

In support of judgment of conviction, District Court of Appeal must assume the existence of every fact which the trial court could have reasonably deduced from the evidence, and then determine whether the facts justify the inference of guilt.

6. Criminal Law §1159(2)

On review of criminal conviction, if circumstances reasonably justify determination of trier of fact, opinion of the reviewing court that those circumstances might also reasonably be reconciled with the innocence of defendant, will not warrant a reversal.

7. Embezzlement §44(1)

In prosecution for grand theft accomplished through embezzlement, evidence sustained embezzlement conviction of defendant for his activities as a trustee of union welfare in withdrawing excessive amounts from trust funds as alleged compensation for his services.

8. Criminal Law §829(3)

In prosecution for grand theft accomplished through embezzlement by defendant, who as trustee of union welfare fund, withdrew excessive amounts therefrom for alleged compensation for services performed, any error in refusing defendant's requested instructions that trustees of the trust were entitled to compensation, was not prejudicial where the law was adequately covered by another charge concerning necessary elements in crime of theft by embezzlement.

Thomas Higgins, Jr. and Harold J. Ackerman, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Norman H. Sokolow, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

ASHBURN, Justice.

Appellant Williams and five others (Davison, Thomas, Welker, Kidwell and Young) were convicted by a jury upon two counts of grand theft accomplished through embezzlement of funds held by them as trustees of an express trust. The court denied their motions for new trial, suspended further proceedings and granted probation. Williams appeals from the judgment (i. e. order granting probation; Pen.Code, § 1237, subd. 1) and from order denying his motion for new trial. The other defendants have not appealed.

Under a labor agreement made by Lathing Contractors Association of California and Lathers Local Union 42A, a trust known as Lathers Welfare Fund was created to administer certain "fringe benefits" conferred upon the workers, chiefly group insurance; the moneys were supplied by contributions of employers made in lieu of increase in wages. A written declaration of trust was made in July, 1952, and three trustees were appointed by the union and three by the association. Defendant Williams, a contractor, was appointed by the association. The trust instrument does not specifically provide any compensation for the trustees' services but does call for reimbursement of their expenses. Under an express grant of power to adopt necessary rules and regulations the trustees resolved that each should be paid $20 for attendance upon a board meeting and $3.75 per hour for other time spent on the business of the trust. The board resolution specified that each trustee "should keep a record of the time spent and the work performed" and "submit to the Board of Trustees a statement of the time and work performed." The trustees were paid at the prescribed rates for a while, but no written record or statement was ever submitted as a basis for payment. Near the end of 1953 the trustees paid themselves $2,500 each as compensation to date. By 1954 receipts exceeded disbursements of the trust and defendants entered into a series of abstractions which brought about the indictment.

A tax reserve of $16,371.18 had been set up in a savings account of the trust but the government ruled in April, 1954 that the trust was exempt, whereupon the trustees drew said sum out of the bank and split it six ways, $2,728.53 each, putting it through the books as compensation for services performed. This was the subject of count I of the indictment.

In July, 1954 trust funds in the amount of $414.96 were expended for six automatic wrist watches, one for each trustee. It was handled on the books as compensation for services. This gave rise to count II of the indictment.

On September 16, 1954, a refund or "dividend" was received from West Coast Life Insurance Company in the sum of $2,816.70. Defendant Kidwell took possession of the check in San Francisco, brought it home, endorsed it and purchased six cashier checks, one for each defendant, in the sum of $469.30. The bookkeeper and accountant, whose business it was to record all transactions on the books of the trust, were told nothing and knew nothing about the receipt or expenditure of this sum. The books do not reflect the transaction in any respect, nor do the minutes of the trustees. It had been discussed by them previous to its receipt and counsel for defendant stipulated at the trial that each defendant received his check. This transaction caused count III of the indictment.

On September 24, 1954, California Physicians Service paid the trust $7,862.47 on account of a cancelled policy. The check for same was delivered to the trustees at one of their meetings. It was not deposited as required by the trust instrument, but was cashed by Kidwell and Thomas (who had authority with the bank to endorse checks), and the proceeds were used to buy six cashier checks, one to each trustee for $1,310.26. No information about this matter was given to the bookkeeper or accountant; the books and the minutes contain no entries or information concerning same. Hence, count IV of the indictment.

The jury acquitted all defendants on counts I and II, and convicted all on counts III and IV.

The trust accounts disclose (after giving effect to the $2,816.70 and $7,862.47 items) that each of the trustees other than Welker received on and before January 14, 1955, by way of asserted fees, $9,358.09; that Welker received $9,418.09. The total receipts of the trust were $244,719.14, which exceeded costs by $121,863.38. There was a bank balance of $47,438.11, leaving $74,425.27 out of which the trustees took a total of $57,840.15. This last figure exceeds 23% of the total receipts.

[1] Appellant says that the prosecution did not prove that defendants did not render services worth the amount of the money received. A trustee whose agreement does not expressly provide for compensation for services is not entitled to any until same has been approved and allowed by a court, —in an instance such as this, a court of equity. Fernald v. Lawsten, 26 Cal.App.2d 552, 565, 79 P.2d 742; 90 C.J.S., Trusts, § 408, p. 763; 54 Am.Jur. § 527, p. 417. When he takes without such approval large sums which on their face are disproportionate to services normally to be expected, and handles the withdrawal in a manner contrary to established practice and in stealthy secrecy, he raises an inference of guilt and consciousness of guilt on his part. Moreover, when facts raising that inference have been shown and he takes the witness stand to explain and fails as miserably as did the defendants at bar, he thereby furnishes evidence corroborative of the state's claim.

Counsel make certain contentions applicable to Williams alone. It is argued that although there is proof that Williams got a $1,310.26 check, it was not shown that he ever endorsed or cashed it. He refunded that exact amount to the trust after he had been interviewed in the district attorney's office. That is enough evidence that he had previously received it.

[2] It is said that, although he received the check for $469.30 (out of the West Coast refund), he did not endorse or cash it; and the exhibit so indicates. But it is a cashier's check, which fact connotes a withdrawal of that amount from the trust fund; it is still outstanding. In other words, that sum was embezzled from the trust fund and taken into the possession of defendant Williams. What he later did with it is of no consequence. An intent to return it to the trust (if one be assumed to have existed) or a later restoration would not affect the fact of a completed embezzlement. Pen. Code, § 512; People v. Colton, 92 Cal.App. 2d 704, 710, 207 P.2d 890.

[3] While the evidence does not single Williams out for separate consideration except at a few points, it establishes clearly a conspiracy between the six trustees to appropriate to themselves the excess funds of the trust and a continuous course of conduct pursuant thereto. Williams therefore is responsible as a principal for everything done by his co-conspirators, and the fact that a conspiracy was not alleged in the indictment is immaterial. People v. Bryant, 101 Cal.App. 84, 90, 281 P. 404; People v. Terrell, 138 Cal.App.2d 35, 54, 291 P.2d 155. Even if it were established that the defendant Williams did not receive his share of the $2,816.70 and $7,862.47 abstractions and that the proof was $1,779.56 ($469.30 plus $1,310.26) short of the amount charged in counts III and IV of the indictment, that variance would not impair the integrity of the verdict against all the conspirators. Pen.Code, § 1131; People v. Gray, 66 Cal. 271, 277, 5 P. 240.

Defendant Williams took the stand in his own behalf but confined his testimony to a denial of Mr. Gomes' testimony that he, Williams, had said he wanted to plead guilty. The defendant's testimony comprises but one page of a 706 page transcript. His failure to explain or to attempt to explain the other direct and indirect evidence against him is persuasive of the truth of the evidence of the prosecution.' People v. Ashley, 42 Cal.2d 246, 268, 267 P.2d 271; People v. Goldstein, 136 Cal.App.2d 778, 791, 289 P.2d 581.

[4-6] "It should also be borne in mind in passing on the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain a conviction that, before a reversal may be had, it must be made clearly to appear that upon no hypothesis whatever is there sufficient substantial evidence to support the conclusion reached in the court below. People v. Newland, 15 Cal.2d 678, 681, 104 P.2d 778. We must assume in support of the judgment the existence of every fact which the trial court could have reasonably deduced from the evidence, and then determine whether the facts 'justify the inference of guilt.' People v. Deysher, 2 Cal.2d 141, 149, 40 P.2d 259, 263. If the circumstances reasonably justify the determination of the trier of fact, the opinion of the reviewing court that those circumstances might also reasonably be reconciled with the innocence of the defendant will not warrant a reversal. People v. Newland, supra; People v. Gould, 111 Cal.App.2d 1, 243 P.2d 809." People v. Frankfort, 114 Cal.App.2d 680, 689, 251 P.2d 401, 407.

[7] The trial judge in ruling upon the motion for new trial said: "I just can't conceive how anybody can be involved in as brazen an embezzlement as I have ever seen, and still maintain that they didn't do anything wrong. I can't understand it. Every opportunity that they had to cut a melon six ways, they did. They not only did that, but they went down and bought six wrist watches for themselves." He did not overstate the matter. One of the conditions of Williams' probation is restitution of $4,575.89 (subject to a credit of $1,310.26 upon a showing of that amount having been received by the trustee of the Welfare fund). This is only $1.36 short of one-sixth of the total alleged to have been embezzled in the four counts of the indictment. It indicates a belief of the trial judge that defendants were guilty of all the charges.

Certainly the evidence sustains such a conclusion.

"It is not the province of a reviewing court to present a detailed argument on the sufficiency of the evidence to support the findings where it appears that the question is one purely of determining which side shall be believed. The trial court having determined this with the witnesses before it, the controversy is settled." Sonkin v. Hershon, 130 Cal.App.2d 491, 492, 279 P.2d 156, 157.

[8] It is argued that there was error in refusal of three requested instructions concerning the right of trustees to compensation for their services. Two of them are manifestly inapplicable. The other is as follows: "You Are Instructed that the trustees of a trust are entitled to compensation for services when such compensation is based upon fairness and justice, and said compensation is just and reasonable." In so far as it correctly states the law, it was adequately covered by the following portions of instructions which were given: "* * * Thus in the crime of theft by embezzlement, a necessary element is the existence in the mind of the perpetrator of the specific intent to fraudulently appropriate trust funds to a use and purpose other than that for which said funds were entrusted, and, unless such intent so exists, that crime is not committed." "Upon any indictment for embezzlement, it is a sufficient defense that the property was appropriated openly and avowedly, and under a claim of title preferred in good faith, even though such claim is untenable. * * *" It was doubtless on this theory that the defendants were exonerated of the charges of counts I and II. If there were error in the refusal of the proffered instruction it could not be said to have worked a miscarriage of justice.

The judgment (order granting probation) and order denying new trial are affirmed.

Civ. 20771.

District Court of Appeal, Second District
Division 2, California.

Oct. 16, 1956.

As Modified Nov. 8, 1956.

Hearing Denied Dec. 12, 1956.

Action for declaration of partnership, plaintiff's interest therein, an accounting of profits arising therefrom and for other relief. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Jerold E. Weil, J., rendered judgment rejecting demand and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Moore, P. J., held that evidence sustained finding that the advancement of money by plaintiff to producer to finance production of 39 radio shows in return for a share of profits arising from sale of such shows, constituted a loan repayable out of profits rather than the creation of a partnership.

Affirmed.

1. Jury ☞9

A person has a right to a jury trial only in actions based upon the common law of 1850 in the event the cause of action, or one essentially similar, existed. West's Ann.Const. art. 1, § 7.

2. Trial ☞10

If an action is addressed to equity powers of the court, the matter is one for the trial court alone, or sitting with an advisory jury. West's Ann.Const. art 1, § 7.

3. Jury ☞13(1)

Whether an action sounds in equity and therefore is not required to be tried by a jury, may be determined from the relief sought as well as from the nature of facts stated.

4. Jury ☞13(5)

Even though the general gist of an action is equitable, particular significant and separate issues which were actionable at common law must be heard by a jury if there is an appropriate demand.

5. Trial ☞4

Trial court could properly try equitable issues before legal issues especially where the equitable issues would determine the law suit and prevent a more costly jury trial.

6. Quietting Title ☞27

An action to establish title which does not include a prayer to obtain possession of property is equitable in nature. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. §§ 738, 1060.

7. Jury ☞14(9)

Where plaintiff sought declaration of partnership and his interest therein as well as an accounting of profits derived from the use of certain alleged partnership property and as an incident to the account when rendered demanded a share of the profits as money had and received by other alleged partners, trial court properly determined that major relief sought was equitable and ordered a non-jury trial of those issues, and having determined that plaintiff was not a partner and had no interest in alleged partnership property, plaintiff was not entitled to jury trial on common-law counts for money had and received. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 1062.

8. Declaratory Judgment ☞390

Statute providing that no declaratory judgment should preclude any party from obtaining additional relief based upon the same facts does not allow a litigant who is determined not to have any rights to relitigate his claim in quest of different relief. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 1062.

9. Partnership ☞44

Although a partnership relation is to be presumed where parties enter into a profit sharing agreement and actually share profits, such a presumption evaporates when substantial evidence is introduced showing the relationship to be one of borrower and lender with the shares of profit being paid for services rendered or money advanced.

West's Ann.Corp.Code, §§ 15006, 15007(4) (d).

10. Partnership ⇨3

One of the essential elements of a partnership is the "carrying on" of a business which means that a community of interest exists among the partners. West's Ann.Corp.Code, §§ 15006, 15007(4) (d).

11. Partnership ⇨3

Persons jointly associated may agree that the management of the enterprise be entrusted to one of the group and there still may be a community of interest among such persons since making of agreement to relinquish control is itself an exercise of the right to control which is a requisite of a partnership. West's Ann.Corp.Code, §§ 15006, 15007(4) (d).

12. Partnership ⇨53

In action for declaration of partnership and of plaintiff's interest therein as well as for an accounting of profits and declaration that certain property was owned by such partnership, evidence supported finding that no partnership arose out of transaction whereby plaintiff with another advanced certain moneys for production of radio program from which plaintiff and other were to receive a percentage of profits.

13. Joint Adventures ⇨5(2)

In action involving, among other things, determination of amounts due plaintiff from advancement of funds to producer to enable completion of 39 radio shows in return for a share of profits arising from sale of such shows to advertiser, evidence supported finding that plaintiff's share of profits was restricted to "first-runs" and did not extend to world or re-issue rights.

14. Appeal and Error ⇨931(1)

Where there is any reasonable doubt as to the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the finding, the appellate court is in duty bound to resolve the doubt in favor of the finding.

MOORE, Presiding Justice.

Appellant sued for a declaration that Dills, Dowd and Hire are associated as partners and that the partnership owns the idea, format and style for the Wild Bill Hickok radio shows. His demands rejected, he appeals.

In order fairly to appraise the contentions now urged for a reversal of the judgment, a glimpse into the background of the controversy is necessary.

During 1949 Dills and Dowd were merchandiser manager and buyer for a popular emporium. After a conference with other merchants, a group of them agreed that a new name and personality should be originated and advertised for the purpose of promoting sales of the products of such merchants by the use of a label bearing the imprint of the new hero. In February 1950, Dills having learned of David Hire's success as a motion picture producer invited him to join the group. Six manufacturers agreed upon the plan and furnished $25,000 to finance a California corporation. On April 13th, the nine persons organized the Delira Corporation and distributed its 25,000 shares equally among themselves. In June 1950 Hire suggested "Wild Bill Hickok" as the promotional hero. By reason of the duties of Dills and Dowd in the emporium, neither could participate in the technical work of developing a radio and television show. Hire was entrusted with the management thereof. By August 1950, Delira's capital had been practically consumed in the production of a "television pilot film and five 15-minute recordings of radio programs." The latter had been produced by "David Hire Productions," which then meant produced by Hire for Delira. At the same time he was vice president of Delira and manager of its productions, while Dowd was its president. Although by February 8, 1951, Kellogg Company, a cereal food manufacturer, had agreed to sponsor the television programs, finance was needed for the production of the radio show. After learning that the mercantile stockholders were not interested in such productions, Hire told Dills that, if the radio show could not be financed through Delira, he, Dills and Dowd "could handle it".

All three of them were stockholders, officers or promoters of, and therefore in a fiduciary relationship to, Delira which relied upon the skill, ability, knowledge and honesty of each to them and for that reason entrusted them with the care and management of its property and affairs. On behalf of Delira they contributed to the conception and development of the radio show and its programs and transcriptions. All were made under the supervision of Hire on behalf of Delira. He always used the words "David Hire Productions" to designate that Delira was the producer. Its rights and interests in the radio show were a principal asset.

To produce and finance the radio show during the spring of 1951, Hire required \$12,000. Late in March, Dills and Dowd agreed with David Hire Productions to advance \$8,000 to be used to produce the radio show. For the loan of such money, Hire's company agreed to repay the loan and to pay Dills and Dowd out of the profits of the first runs of the first 39 shows to the extent of 26 $\frac{2}{3}$ per cent thereof to each for the services of Dills and Dowd. Dills insisted upon a promissory note by David Hire Productions in the amount of \$8,000 to his favor and upon notes by Hire and Dowd individually to his favor guaranteeing the \$8,000 corporate obligation in the amount of \$2,666.66 each. The court found that Hire fully performed his promises and that neither Dills nor Dowd had a claim against David Hire Productions on any other account nor any interest in or claim against the profits of the radio show.

After Hire's agreement with Dills and Dowd, a contract was executed by Delira and David Hire Productions whereby the latter was given the exclusive right "to produce the said series of electrical transcriptions" to be broadcast on the radio for 39 weeks; by its terms Delira was released from the obligation to finance the productions or to pay Hire for the transcriptions. However, the contract was never authorized or approved by Delira and none of its shareholders or directors except Hire knew of it, although, on its face, it was a transfer of a principal asset of Delira to David Hire Productions. Furthermore, Hire supplied other stockholders with misleading information calculated to convince them that the production of the radio show would be a speculative venture and not at all to be profitable, notwithstanding Kellogg had agreed to pay for all radio shows produced. As a result of the inaccurate information supplied to the stockholders by those in a fiduciary capacity to Delira, about March 1, 1951, they renounced any intention of financing such radio shows and left the matter to the attention of David Hire Productions. That event was followed by Dowd and Dills' agreement to advance the $8,000.

Despite the conflict of the evidence as to the extent of the ownership of Dills and Dowd in the radio shows, the court determined that Hire offered them merely a share in the profits to be derived therefrom for their assistance in advancing the $8,000. As shown above, he paid them two thirds of the net profits. They were not promised an ownership interest but only a share of the profits from the first runs of the first 39 shows produced for Kellogg. Such agreement did not grant to Dills and Dowd re-issue or world rights.

The evidence discloses that Hire, acting through an attorney who was ostensibly representing Delira, purchased from it all the rights to Wild Bill Hickok shows but Delira finally asserted its rights and resolved to produce shows for its own account after 1952. Such action was understood to have settled the issue of ownership of Wild Bill Hickok and the shows to be made until this action was filed.

Was Dills Wrongfully Denied A Jury Trial?

[1, 2] Appellant complains that the trial court unconstitutionally denied his demand for a jury trial. Calif. Const., Art. I, § 7. Whether or not appellant was entitled to a jury depends upon the nature of his action. The constitutional provision for a jury trial grants that right only in actions based upon the common law of 1850, in the event the cause of action, or one essentially similar, existed. Ripling v. Superior Court, 112 Cal.App.2d 399, 402, 247 P.2d 117; Grossblatt v. Wright, 108 Cal.App.2d 475, 483 et seq., 239 P.2d 19. If the action is addressed to equity powers of the court, the matter is one for the trial court alone or sitting with an advisory jury. Bettencourt v. Bank of Italy, 216 Cal. 174, 179, 13 P.2d 659; Ripling v. Superior Court, supra; Olson v. Foster, 42 Cal.App. 2d 493, 498, 109 P.2d 388.

[3,4] Does this action sound in equity? Since certain facts are neither legal nor equitable, what is the nature of the claim? Pacific Indemnity Co. v. McDonald, 9 Cir., 107 F.2d 446, 131 A.L.R. 208. This may be determined from the relief sought as well as from the nature of the facts stated. Bettencourt v. Bank of Italy, supra, 216 Cal. at page 179, 13 P.2d 659; Bank of America v. Greenbach, 98 Cal.App.2d 220, 228-229, 219 P.2d 814; Estate of Cazaurang, 75 Cal.App.2d 217, 225, 170 P.2d 694. However, even though the general gist of the action is equitable, particular significant and separate issues which were actionable at the common law must be heard by a jury if there is an appropriate demand. Robinson v. Puls, 28 Cal.2d 664, 171 P.2d 430; Crouser v. Boice, 51 Cal.App.2d 198, 200, 124 P.2d 358. Here appellant alleged the existence of a partnership, sought a declaration of his interest therein, an accounting of profits derived from the use of partnership property, and declared that certain property was owned by that partnership. As an incident to the account when rendered, he demanded a share of the profits as money had and received by defendants. The trial court concluded that the major relief sought was equitable, ordered a non-jury trial of those issues first and following the trial thereof determined that appellant was not a partner of defendants and had no interest in the Wild Bill Hickok shows. Since no such interest existed, there was no need for proceeding with a trial at law upon the common counts.

[5,6] There is no question but that the trial court properly tried equitable before legal issues. This procedure is particularly useful where, as here, a determination of the equitable issue may determine the lawsuit and prevent a more costly jury trial. Connell v. Bowes, 19 Cal.2d 870, 872, 123 P.2d 456; Thomson v. Thomson, 7 Cal.2d 671, 682, 683, 62 P.2d 358, 117 A.L.R. 1; Alton v. Rogers, 127 Cal.App.2d 667, 676, 274 P.2d 487. Courts have stated repeatedly that an action under Code of Civil Procedure section 1060 for declaratory relief is equitable in nature. City of Los Angeles v. City of Glendale, 23 Cal.2d 68, 81, 142 P.2d 289; Adams v. Cook, 15 Cal. 2d 352, 362, 101 P.2d 484; Bess v. Park, 132 Cal.App.2d 49, 52, 281 P.2d 556; Dunlop v. Hersum Lumber Co., 126 Cal.App.2d 815, 820, 273 P.2d 22; Kaliterna v. Wright, 94 Cal.App.2d 926, 933, 212 P.2d 32; Rolapp v. Federal etc. Ass'n, 11 Cal.App.2d 337, 342, 53 P.2d 974. However, most of the cited decisions so held in order to apply some equitable maxim. Only Kaliterna v. Wright dealt with the denial of a jury trial. Writers and encyclopedias have decried the line of reasoning so adopted, at least insofar as used to deny a jury trial. They suggest that declaratory relief is in itself neither legal nor equitable; they question whether a declaration is sought where legal, coercive relief would have been just as appropriate. Borchard, Declaratory Judgments, 2nd ed., pp. 400-401, 674-676; Declaratory Relief, 15 Cal.Jur.2d §§ 15 and 43, pp. 121-124, 172; 50 C.J.S., Juries, § 16 c, p. 732; and see Moss v. Moss, 20 Cal. 2d 640, 643, 128 P.2d 526, 141 A.L.R. 1422.¹ This presents a difficult problem to the trial court. Determining whether an action is

1. Other authorities suggesting that actions for declaratory relief are "sui generis" are Pacific Indemnity Co. v. McDonald, supra, 107 F.2d 446; note, 13 So. Cal. L.Rev. 170.

legal or equitable may be a fair-sized task under ordinary circumstances, as in Ripling v. Superior Court, supra, 112 Cal.App.2d 399, 247 P.2d 117, but the problem is multiplied when the relief sought is a "sui generis" declaration in which event the court is even deprived of the advantage of considering the prayer as an indication of whether or not the claim is addressed to equity. (Declaratory Relief, 15 Cal.Jur.2d § 15, pp. 123-124.)

However, assuming, arguendo, that this is the proper analysis to be used in determining whether a litigant has the right to a jury trial, what then is the essential nature of the relief sought here? Appellant demands a declaration that he is a partner and that an accounting of partnership profits be made. Direct authority exists that when such a declaration is sought, the action is one in equity either for the dissolution of a going partnership and an accounting or for a declaration of a trust in partnership property. Tobola v. Wholey, 75 Cal.App.2d 351, 170 P.2d 952; Lewis v. Winfield, 48 Cal.App.2d 543, 120 P.2d 65; Zimmer v. Gorelnik, 42 Cal.App.2d 440, 109 P.2d 34.² As to appellant's claim of an ownership interest in "Wild Bill Hickok" against the Delira Corporation, which was not alleged to be a partner, it is well settled that an action to establish title which does not include a prayer to obtain possession of the property is equitable in nature. Code Civ.Proc. § 738; Thomson v. Thomson, 7 Cal.2d 671, 680, 62 P.2d 358, 117 A.L.R. 1; Daniels v. Baldwin, 115 Cal.App.2d 487, 489, 252 P.2d 351; Battle v. Niece, 43 Cal.App.2d 655, 658, 111 P.2d 455; Santa Ana Mortg. & Inv. Co. v. Kinslow, 30 Cal.App.2d 107, 109-110, 85 P.2d 899.

[7, 8] Regarding appellant's common counts, when it was determined that Dills had no interest in the radio show and that no additional moneys were due him, the common counts performed no office. It is true that Code of Civil Procedure, section 1062, provides that "no judgment under this chapter shall preclude any party from obtaining additional relief based upon the same facts." However, that language provides merely that when one obtains a declaration, he has not thereby forfeited his right to obtain coercive relief. It certainly was not intended to allow a litigant who is determined not to have any rights to re-litigate his claim in quest of different relief.

Evidence of a Partnership

Dills originally claimed that he had an ownership interest in the idea, style and format of the radio show which he, Dowd and Hire allegedly acquired from Delira in March 1951. However, the trial court found that Delira never parted with its ownership interest in the show. Any action of Delira indicating that it no longer claimed an interest was induced by misinformation supplied by those who stood in a fiduciary relation to the corporation. This finding is not attacked on appeal and is supported by the evidence.

Thus, the most that Dills can claim is that his oral transactions with Dowd and Hire in March through May of 1951 constituted the formation of a partnership between the three for the production of the radio show. In that case, all rights held by Hire are held for and on behalf of the partnership. However, the trial court found that no partnership was created. Dills merely loaned money to Hire and David Hire Productions for use in financing and producing the show. The interest for the loan and services in securing the capital was consideration for a share in the profits of the thirty-nine, 1951 shows. The principal was repaid and the profits were divided. Transactions of such nature are of frequent occurrence without a partnership's resulting.

[9] A partnership is defined as an association of two or more persons, as co-owners, to carry on a business for profit. Corp.Code, § 15006. It is true that a partnership relation is to be presumed where parties enter into a profit-sharing agreement and actually share profits, Corp.Code, § 15007, subd. 4, however, such presumption evaporates when substantial evidence is introduced, as here, showing the relationship to be one of borrower-lender with the profit share's being paid for service rendered or money advanced. Corp.Code, § 15007, subd. 4(d). Thus, appellant must show that no substantial evidence supports the finding of nonpartnership or that the admitted facts do show a partnership as a matter of law. In this he fails. The facts proved are just as consistent with the theory of a loan and interest as with a partnership.

2. It was the dismissal of just such a count which rendered the action "one at law pure and simple" in Horn v. Los Angeles

[10-12] One of the essential elements in the code definition of a partnership is the "carrying on" of a business, meaning thereby that a "community of interest" exists among the partners. Spier v. Lang, 4 Cal. 2d 711, 715-717, 53 P.2d 138; Freedman v. Industrial Accident Commission, 67 Cal. App.2d 629, 631, 154 P.2d 922; Smith v. Grove, 47 Cal.App.2d 456, 461-462, 118 P.2d 324. The settled statement on appeal discloses that Dills himself testified that he never approved the scripts of the radio show; never signed any papers relating to or connected with the property or business of David Hire Productions; never looked at the books; never received copies of the bank statements; never discussed the radio show with any agency whatsoever; never exercised a function of any kind connected with the production, distribution or sale of the show; never performed a task of management, employment or agency in connection with production; never asked anyone for authority to do any of the above. Dowd's testimony disclosed no more active participation on his part. It is true that when persons jointly associated agree that management of the enterprise be entrusted to one of the group, there may nevertheless be a community of interest in view of the fact that the making of the agreement to relinquish control is itself an exercise of the requisite right to control. Singleton v. Fuller, 118 Cal.App.2d 733, 741, 259 P.2d 687; Lyon v. McQuarrie, 46 Cal.App.2d 119, 124-125, 115 P.2d 594; Associated Piping & Engineering Co., Ltd., v. Jones, 17 Cal.App.2d 107, 111, 61 P.2d 536. However, the party seeking to establish the existence of the partnership in those cases proved the existence of such an agreement. There was no such proof here, and the trial court was not obliged to imply an agreement.

Restriction to Profits from First Runs

[13,14] The trial court added to its findings the restriction that appellant's share of the profits from the thirty-nine 1951 shows was to be from only the "first-runs," thereby precluding him from any share in the profits from the sale of "world" or "re-issue" rights. Dills urges that this finding cannot be supported by the evidence since the settled statement on appeal does not include any reference whatsoever in its summarization of the testimony to "first-runs."

The court adopted the evidence of the agreement of the three men that each should contribute or procure sufficient capital to meet the Kellogg commitment for the 39 radio shows, and that the interest on the investment to Dills and Dowd was to be a profit share in the returns from that contract. Therefore, all that remains is to demonstrate that its provisions support the findings. A perusal of the correspondence between Hire and the advertising agency representing Kellogg reveals that the agreement was that the cereal company pay $2,050 for each completed and approved show. Later correspondence established that this price did not include "world" or "re-issue" rights. Sale of those rights was left to subsequent bargaining between the parties. Therefore, since Dills was interested only in the profits from the first Kellogg commitment, he had no claim to profits arising from subsequent use of the electrical transcriptions of the 1951 shows. The evidence was substantial and sufficient to support the finding. Where there is any reasonable doubt as to the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain a finding, the appellate court is in duty bound to resolve the doubt in favor of the finding. Estate of Bristol, 23 Cal.2d 221, 223, 143 P.2d 689; McGrath v. Young, 98 Cal.App.2d 415, 417, 220 P.2d 609.

The judgment is affirmed.

Civ. 21670.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 2, California.

Oct. 24, 1956.

Action for declaratory relief and judgment quieting title to certain real property in which some of the defendants moved for leave to file a belated cross-complaint. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Philbrick McCoy, J., entered order denying motion to file cross-complaint and refusing to vacate prior order denying similar motion, and defendants appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Fox, J., held that an appeal does not lie from an order denying motion to file belated cross-complaint and refusing to vacate prior order denying a similar motion, and such questions were reviewable on appeal only after final judgment or its equivalent had been entered.

Appeal dismissed.

FOX, Justice.

This is an appeal from an order vacating a prior order granting leave to defendants Jack R. Stein and his wife (hereinafter designated the Steins) to file a supplemental cross-complaint. It is another chapter in the meandering judicial odyssey of this voluminous litigation.¹ Only the proceedings germane to the determination of this appeal will be delineated.

216 P.2d 117; Stein v. Simpson, 37 Cal.2d 79, 230 P.2d 816; Stein v. Simpson, 116 Cal.App.2d 559, 253 P.2d 1026. An-

The first pleading in the instant action was filed November 19, 1951, by one Lou Miller, who sought declaratory relief and a judgment quieting his title to certain real property regarding which a controversy existed. Among the defendants named were the Steins, David Welts, R. B. Simpson, and the Realty Title Company, Ltd. The Steins filed an answer to the Miller complaint,² but no cross-complaint.

[1] On August 16, 1955, the court, by minute order³ denied a motion by the Steins to file a "supplemental cross-complaint." [The designation of such document as a "supplemental cross-complaint" is an obvious misnomer. The Steins had filed no cross-complaint at the time they answered. The pleading must be regarded as a belated cross-complaint which may be filed only by permission of court. Gallo v. Boyle Mfg. Co., 30 Cal.App.2d 653, 655-656, 86 P.2d 1067.] On September 22, 1955, the Steins filed a notice of motion under section 473, Code of Civil Procedure, accompanied by supporting affidavits, to vacate the minute order of August 16, 1955, and requesting leave to file the proposed "supplemental cross-complaint" attached thereto. This pleading was for declaratory relief, injunctive relief and damages, named among the cross-defendants Simpson, Miller, Realty Title Company, Ltd., and Cruce, and sought to bring in as new parties defendants Jack McElhose and Max Tendler. No counter-affidavits were filed in opposition.

On September 28, 1955, the Steins' motion to vacate the minute order of August 16, 1955, and for leave to file their proposed cross-pleading was heard by Judge McCoy. After hearing the motion, Judge McCoy granted the motion. This order was not then entered in the official minutes, and obviously constituted an oral pronouncement by the court. Some time later on the same day (September 28), the court, sua sponte, signed and filed a document entitled "Memorandum." This document reads in part:

"The order heretofore made this day granting the motion of Jack R. Stein and Bernice C. Stein to file a 'Supplemental Cross-Complaint for Declaratory Relief; Injunctive Relief and Damages' is vacated and set aside.

"The court has re-examined the proposed pleading to which the notice of motion refers. [Here follows a summary of reasons which the court regards as sufficient for a denial of the motion.]

"On reconsideration of the entire record, the court is satisfied that it would be an abuse of discretion to allow the proposed pleading as submitted to be filed.

"As stated above, the court's earlier order is vacated and set aside. The motion for leave to file the proposed 'Supplemental Cross-Complaint' is denied."

On September 30, 1955, a minute order dated September 28, 1955, was entered by the clerk describing the proceedings which took place on that day. That minute order, which describes the proceeding as a motion (1) to vacate and annul the minute order of August 16, 1955, and (2) for leave to file supplemental cross-complaint, reads: "Motion granted. Proposed pleading as filed to be considered served and filed as original as of this date.

"Later the court makes the following order:

"The Court's earlier order is vacated and set aside. The motion for leave to file other offshoot of this litigation is pending in Division One of this court sub. nom. Cruce v. Stein, No. 21480.

2. On October 2, 1952, defendants Simpson and Welts filed their answers to the Miller complaint, together with a cross-complaint in which the Steins, among others, were named as cross-defendants.

It was not until July 11, 1955, that the Steins were served with this cross-complaint. On July 18, 1955, the Steins filed an answer thereto, but no cross-complaint.

3. No record of the proceedings of August 16 appear in the Clerk's Transcript.

the proposed 'Supplemental cross-complaint' is denied.

"Memorandum of Ruling filed this date.

"Counsel Notified."

The basic question presented is whether, upon its own motion and without notice, the court could make a second order vacating its prior oral order before the entry of the first order in the official minutes.

[2] Section 1003 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides: "Every direction of a court judge, or justice, made or entered in writing, and not included in a judgment, is denominated an order." (Italics added.) Unless otherwise required by statute, an order in writing becomes legally effective at the time it is signed and filed by the judge. Maxwell v. Perkins, 116 Cal.App. 2d 752, 756, 255 P.2d 10. Although there exists authority to the contrary, the rule has been developed in the most recent cases that an oral order of the court is subject to change prior to its written entry in the official minutes of the court. People v. McAllister, 15 Cal.2d 519, 526, 102 P.2d 1072; Ex parte Monckros Von Vetsera, 7 Cal.App. 136, 139, 93 P. 1036; Smith v. Ross, 57 Cal.App. 191, 194, 207 P. 55; Engleman v. Green, 125 Cal.App. 2d Supp. 882, 884, 270 P.2d 127. See, also Brownell v. Superior Court, 157 Cal. 703, 708, 109 P. 91; Jablon v. Henneberger, 33 Cal.2d 773, 775, 205 P.2d 1.

In Ex parte Monckros Von Vetsera, supra, the petitioner was before the court on a writ of habeas corpus. On October 15 the judge announced in open court that the prisoner was illegally detained and ordered his discharge. This verbal order was not reduced to writing nor entered in the minutes. On October 17, the court, in the absence of the petitioner, made and signed a written order vacating the prior order. The petitioner asserted before the reviewing court that the order of October 15 was a final adjudication and that the court below lost jurisdiction to subsequently enter any different order. In rejecting the contention that the oral order of the court was irrevocable, the court stated 7

Cal.App. at page 138, 93 P. at page 1036: "Until the judgment had been entered in the minutes of the court, or had been in some authentic manner reduced to writing, as by the judge signing a written order, it must be held that the judgment lay in the breast of the judge, and that the court had plenary power thereover."

In People v. McAllister, 15 Cal.2d 519, 524, 102 P.2d 1072, 1074, the Supreme Court reaffirmed this rule, and quoted as follows from the case last cited: "In the case at bar the order relied on by petitioner for his discharge, never having been entered in the minutes of the court, was subject to be vacated and revised by the court; and, having been thus vacated, affords no warrant for his release from the imprisonment * * *" In the McAllister case, the court sentenced defendant to pay a fine in its morning session. Later that day, the judge ordered defendant to return, and revised his order by pronouncing the alternative sentence of time in jail upon failure to pay the fine levied. In upholding the court's action, the Supreme Court stated that, "if the sentence pronounced has not been entered by the clerk in the minutes * * * then it is proper for the court to change the sentence originally pronounced." 15 Cal. 2d at pages 526-527, 102 P.2d at page 1075. At page 527 of 15 Cal.2d, at page 1075 of 102 P.2d, the court, in pointing out that the clerk must enter his minutes within a reasonable time after orders are made, observed: "It is not necessary for us to pass upon the question as to what is a reasonable time for the clerk to perform this duty as we are satisfied that in this case when the two acts of the court occurred on the same day, no duty was imposed upon its clerk to enter the first sentence of the court before adjournment of the court for that day."

[3] Adopting these principles as controlling authority and expressive of a salutary procedural rule, it is plain that the trial court possessed the jurisdiction to vacate its earlier order. Adverting to the record, we find that the original order made on September 28 was unwritten and not as yet entered in the official minutes of the court. It was, in the language of the cases, still "in the breast of the court" and subject to his plenary control. Ex parte Monckros Von Vetsera, supra; Smith v. Ross, 57 Cal.App. 191, 193, 207 P. 55; People v. McAllister, supra; Engleman v. Green, 125 Cal.App.2d Supp. 882, 884, 270 P.2d 127. On the very same day, the court superseded what was still an oral pronouncement by a signed written order which was filed September 28. When the written order was signed and filed, it immediately became effective as the formal order of the court. Badella v. Miller, 44 Cal.2d 81, 84-85, 279 P.2d 729. Nothing further was required to give vitality to the second order, its subsequent entry in the minutes serving merely to fix the running of time for appeal. Code Civ.Proc., sec. 1003; Badella v. Miller, supra; Maxwell v. Perkins, 116 Cal.App. 2d 752, 757, 255 P.2d 10. We must conclude, therefore, that when the court made and filed its written order it still retained jurisdiction because its earlier order had not been entered in the official minutes and was subject to change. Such a rule, which permits an oral decision to be changed by the judge upon more extended reflection at any time before it has been regularly entered in the court's official minutes, seems one best calculated to promote the more efficient discharge of the judicial process.

[4] Turning now to the posture of the case before us, it appears that the appeal has been taken from an order denying a motion to file a belated cross-complaint and refusing to vacate a prior order denying a similar motion. An appeal does not lie from such an order, these questions being reviewable only upon appeal after a final judgment or its equivalent. Code Civ.Proc. sec. 963; Marx v. McKinney, 23 Cal.2d 439, 444, 144 P.2d 353; Litvinuk v. Litvinuk, 27 Cal.2d 38, 43-44, 162 P.2d 8. See Sjoberg v. Hastorf, 33 Cal.2d 116, 118, 199 P.2d 668. The fact that the cross-complaint sought to bring in Tendler and McElhose as new cross-defendants does not make the order appealable since, leave to file said pleading having been denied, they never became parties to the action, and the order adjudicated nothing as between the Steins and Tendler and McElhose. Evans v. Dabney, 37 Cal.2d 758, 759, 235 P.2d 604; Kennedy v. Owens, 85 Cal.App.2d 517, 520, 193 P.2d 141. Since we have before us only an attempted appeal from a non-appealable order, which of itself makes no final disposition of any issues affecting the Steins, the correctness of the order can properly be determined only upon appeal from the final judgment.

For the foregoing reasons, the purported appeal is dismissed.

The PEOPLE of the State of California,
Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Imogene Joy YOKUM, Defendant and Appellant.
Cr. 2684.

District Court of Appeal, Third District,
California.

Oct. 22, 1956.

Rehearing Denied Nov. 2, 1956.

Hearing Denied Nov. 21, 1956.

Prosecution for murder of husband. The Superior Court, Mendocino County, Hale McCowen, J., entered judgment of conviction, and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Schottky, J., held that it was error to exclude evidence which tended to show violent and turbulent character and reputation of husband and to exclude testimony of husband's prior threats and violent conduct toward defendant where such evidence was relevant to issue of self-defense, and to appellant's state of mind and intent.

Reversed.

1. Criminal Law §552(1)

The terms "indirect evidence" and "circumstantial evidence" are interchangeable and synonymous. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., §§ 1831, 1832.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Circumstantial Evidence" and "Indirect Evidence".

2. Criminal Law §552(1), 559

An "inference" is a conclusion as to existence of a material fact that a trier of fact may properly draw from existence of certain primary facts, and inferences drawn from physical facts amount to circumstantial evidence. West's Ann.Code Civ. Proc., § 1832.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Inference".

3. Criminal Law §552(1)

"Circumstantial evidence" as distinguished from direct evidence is testimony not based on actual personal knowledge or observation of the facts in controversy, but of other facts from which deductions are drawn, showing indirectly the facts sought to be proved. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 1832.

4. Homicide §7

"Murder" is the unlawful killing of a human being with malice aforethought.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Murder".

5. Homicide §146

When evidence shows an unlawful killing to have been committed, a presumption arises that the killing was done with malice aforethought and that the killing was murder.

6. Homicide §9, 21

To find defendant guilty of either first or second degree murder, one of the elements required to be proved was guilty intent or malice aforethought.

7. Criminal Law §784(1), 1173(2)

In prosecution for second degree murder, material element consisted of defendant's state of mind which was necessarily shown by circumstantial evidence and court committed reversible error in refusing to instruct jury that in order to justify a conviction, facts and circumstances must not only be entirely consistent with theory of guilt but must be irreconcilable with any other rational conclusion.

8. Criminal Law §784(1), 1173(2)

In prosecution for murder of husband, where evidence of intent was reasonably susceptible of interpretations that defendant did not intend to kill husband, that defendant acted without malice, and that defendant acted in self-defense, court's refusal to instruct jury that where evidence is susceptible of two constructions, each of which appeared to be reasonable, one pointing to guilt of defendant and other to innocence, it is jury's duty to adopt that interpretation which points to innocence, was prejudicial to defendant.

9. Criminal Law §789(3)

In prosecution for murder, where no instructions were given as to law necessary to proper consideration of circumstantial evidence and no instructions were given defining direct and indirect evidence, instruction that each essential chain of circumstances must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt should have been given.

10. Criminal Law §863(2)

In prosecution for murder, where court, at jury's request reread instructions and omitted some instructions which had been given previously and were substantially to same effect as others given and court was not requested by defendant's counsel to reread omitted instructions, under the circumstances, failure to reread such instructions was not error.

11. Criminal Law §656(1)

A judge may comment on the evidence, including the credibility of witnesses, but this privilege has inherent limitations and comment not be of nature which would invade province of jury.

12. Criminal Law Ⓒ656(1)

Rule permitting judge to comment on evidence and credibility of witnesses requires that such comment be fair, temperate, judicial, dispassionate, and free from apparent contentiousness, partisanship or advocacy.

13. Criminal Law Ⓒ656(1)

In prosecution for murder, court's comments on evidence relating to self-defense did not go beyond right to comment given by constitution permitting court to make such comment on evidence and testimony and credibility of witnesses as in its opinion is necessary for proper determination of case. West's Ann.Const. art. 6, § 19.

14. Homicide Ⓒ276

In prosecution for murder of husband, evidence presented issue of self-defense.

15. Homicide Ⓒ188(1)

In prosecution for murder, where defense of self-defense is interposed, defendant may introduce evidence that reputation of deceased for peace and quiet was bad and known to defendant to be bad.

16. Homicide Ⓒ188(1)

In prosecution for murder, defendant may introduce evidence of turbulent and dangerous character of deceased when the immediate circumstances of the killing are equivocal and raise a doubt in regard to question whether defendant acted in self-defense.

17. Homicide Ⓒ163(2), 188(1)

In prosecution for murder of husband, it was error to exclude evidence which tended to show violent and turbulent character and reputation of decedent and to exclude testimony of decedent's prior threats against and violent conduct toward defendant, since such evidence was relevant to issue of self-defense and as to defendant's state of mind and intent.

18. Criminal Law Ⓒ1186(4)

Under constitution providing for reversal where error results in miscarriage of justice, a miscarriage of justice should be declared only when the court, after an examination of entire cause, including evidence, is of opinion that it is reasonably probable that a result more favorable to appealing party would have been reached in absence of the error. West's Ann.Const. art. 6, § 4½.

John J. Golden, Ukiah, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., by G. A. Strader, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

SCHOTTKY, Justice.

Imogene Joy Yokum was charged by indictment with the murder of her husband, Donald Alfred Yokum. The jury found her guilty of murder in the second degree and she has appealed from the judgment pronounced on said verdict and from the order denying her motion for a new trial.

Appellant does not attack the sufficiency of the evidence to support the judgment, but contends that the trial court committed the following reversible errors: (1) Refusing to give three requested instructions: CALJIC Nos. 26, 27 and 28; (2) omitting four essential instructions upon a rereading of the instructions to the jury; (3) exceeding permissible bounds when commenting on the evidence during the charge to the jury; and (4) excluding evidence. Before discussing these contentions we shall give a brief summary of the evidence as shown by the record.

On December 6, 1955, defendant, Imogene Joy Yokum, shot and killed her husband, Donald Yokum, at their residence in Willits, California. The defendant, the Yokum children and the witness Marie Lancaster were present when Donald Yokum and the witness Vernon Shuster arrived at the Yokum residence about 3:30 or 4:00 p. m. that day. Then Mrs. Yokum proceeded to prepare a meal. The two men sat down at a table and drank several glasses of wine. Mrs. Yokum also had a glass of wine. Thereafter, defendant's mother came to the Yokum yard and defendant went out and talked with her. Then defendant returned to the house and told her husband about a suggestion made by her mother that the children attend a particular Sunday School. At this proposal Donald Yokum became very angry and stated that the children were not to attend Sunday School. Mrs. Yokum testified that Mr. Yokum referred to her parents in a derogatory manner, and then she referred to his parents in a derogatory manner. Then Mr. Yokum struck or slapped defendant several times about the head and she fell. Mr. Yokum appeared to be very violent and to be striking at her violently. He was somewhat intoxicated and while striking her made the statement that "he was going to beat the hell out of her." Mr. Shuster intervened and succeeded in pulling Mr. Yokum away from defendant. Mrs. Yokum then left the house and was next seen by Mrs. Lancaster on the service porch at the rear of the house. The defendant was crying, appeared very upset and told Marie that she was afraid of decedent and wanted to get away so there wouldn't be any more trouble and that she was going to leave. Marie then returned to the kitchen. This was the last time anyone saw defendant until after her husband was shot.

After Marie had returned to the kitchen and from five to fifteen minutes after the scuffle between defendant and her husband, the latter was sitting or standing and talking with Shuster. Shuster stated, "Well, I was just standing there talking to Don, and I just noticed him make a sudden lurch or dive, and I heard a shot, and he dropped." He did not hear either defendant or her husband say anything. Marie Lancaster heard the shot, turned and saw Yokum lying on the floor and saw defendant standing with a rifle in her hand. Neither Mrs. Lancaster nor Mr. Shuster saw defendant before Donald Yokum was shot.

Defendant testified in her own behalf that when she left the utility porch she took the gun and started out to the front of the house to get the children and leave. Her husband had told her that he would kill her if she ever left him and she took the gun because she was afraid of him, thought that if he saw the gun he wouldn't come near her and that she did not intend to shoot anybody with it. As she approached her husband, he jumped up and started toward her. She felt terribly frightened and then the gun jarred in her hand. She did not know the gun was loaded.

When Mr. Olan Greenwood, Chief of Police of Willits, arrived at the premises shortly after the shooting, defendant and Mr. Shuster were sitting on the running board of a Model T automobile. She appeared to be somewhat disturbed but in general was fairly calm and was not hysterical. She appeared to have been drinking but was not drunk. Mr. Greenwood asked her, "Who has been hit?" She answered, "Oh, it's Don, Olan, I just killed the son-of-a-bitch. He's in the house and the gun's lying over there." Mr. Greenwood entered the house, determined that Donald Yokum was dead, returned outside and she stated then, "I hit him in the cheek, didn't I? How is he?" She kept asking, "How is Don?"

An autopsy was performed by Dr. Smalley who determined the cause of death as being a bullet wound in the head and neck. The bullet entered the left side of the face about the angle of the jaw, went into the right side of the neck and broke into fragments. From the direction of the bullet, which creased decedent's shoulder, it appeared to Dr. Smalley that the decedent had thrown up his shoulder in an apparent attempt to guard against the bullet.

Appellant contends that the court erred in refusing to give three instructions offered by her. The substance of these was as follows: (a) CALJIC No. 26 states that where the evidence is susceptible of two constructions, it is the jury's duty to adopt that construction which points to the defendant's innocence; (b) CALJIC No. 27 states that where circumstantial evidence is relied upon as proof of guilt to justify a conviction, the facts or circumstances must not only be entirely consistent with the theory of guilt but must be inconsistent with any other rational conclusion; (3) CALJIC No. 28 states that each essential fact in a chain of circumstances must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt.

Appellant contends that such instructions are required where there are issues, the proof of which depends upon circumstantial evidence, and that here defendant's intent and state of mind could not be directly perceived or proved without any inferences or presumptions, and so the proof of her intent and state of mind necessarily depended upon circumstantial evidence. Respondent contends that proof of defendant's guilt did not rest primarily or chiefly upon circumstantial evidence. Respondent summarizes this proof: The fact that defendant shot her husband was established by direct testimony; there were three eyewitnesses to the killing, which witnesses were Mr. Shuster, Marie Lancaster and defendant, each of whom testified at the trial. Respondent argues that there was no issue of self-defense presented at the trial because defendant testified that the shooting was accidental. Respondent claims that on the issue as to whether there existed sufficient provocation to reduce the crime to manslaughter, the prosecution established its case by direct evidence.

"Direct evidence is that which proves the fact in dispute, directly, without an inference or presumption, and which in itself, if true, conclusively establishes that fact." Code Civ.Proc. sec. 1831. "Indirect evidence is that which tends to establish the fact in dispute by proving another, and which, though true, does not of itself conclusively establish that fact, but which affords an inference or presumption of its existence." Code Civ.Proc. sec. 1832.

changeable and synonymous. As is well stated in People v. Goldstein, 139 Cal.App. 2d 146, at page 152, 293 P.2d 495, at page 500:

"Circumstantial evidence is that which is applied to the principal fact, indirectly, or through the medium of other facts, from which the principal fact is inferred. The characteristics of circumstantial evidence, as distinguished from that which is direct, are, first, the existence and presentation of one or more evidentiary facts; and, second, a process of inference, by which these facts are so connected with the fact sought, as to tend to produce a persuasion of its truth. (Burrill on Circumstantial Evidence, 4, 5.) An inference is a conclusion as to the existence of a material fact that a trier of fact may properly draw from the existence of certain primary facts. Blank v. Coffin, 20 Cal.2d 457, 460, 126 P.2d 868. Inferences drawn from physical facts amount to circumstantial evidence. McCready v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 212 S.C. 449, 48 S.E.2d 193, 196. It has been said that circumstantial evidence, as distinguished from direct evidence, is testimony not based on actual personal knowledge or observation of the facts in controversy, but of other facts from which deductions are drawn, showing indirectly the facts sought to be proved. Aday v. State, 28 Okl.Crim. 201, 230 P. 280, 281."

[4-7] In the instant case appellant was charged with the murder of her husband. Murder is the unlawful killing of a human being with malice aforethought. It is true that when the evidence shows an unlawful killing to have been committed a presumption arises that the killing was done with malice aforethought and that the killing was murder. To find appellant guilty of either first or second degree murder one of the elements required to be proved was guilty intent or malice aforethought. The only direct testimony disclosed by the record upon the question of defendant's intent or state of mind at the time of the shooting was given by her. She testified that she did not intend to shoot anybody with the gun, that the gun jarred in her hand and that she did not know that the gun was loaded. Here a material and essential element consisted of defendant's state of mind at the time of the shooting, which element was necessarily shown by circumstantial evidence.

In People v. Yrigoyen, 45 Cal.2d 46, 286 P.2d 1, the Supreme Court found reversible error in the court's failure to give on its own motion an instruction embodying the principle (CALJIC No. 27) that to justify a conviction on circumstantial evidence the facts and circumstances must not only be entirely consistent with the theory of guilt but must be inconsistent with any other rational conclusion. In that case proof of guilt was not entirely circumstantial as in People v. Bender, 27 Cal.2d 164, 163 P.2d 8, cited by respondent. The court said, 45 Cal.2d at page 49, 286 P.2d at page 3:

"* * * It is true that in the Bender case proof of guilt was entirely circumstantial, whereas in the present case there was direct evidence that defendant issued the check without sufficient funds in or credit with the bank, and circumstantial evidence was relied upon to show his criminal knowledge and intent. However, in the Bender case, it is stated that where circumstantial evidence is substantially relied upon for proof of guilt, adequate instructions on the rules governing the application of such evidence must be given. 27 Cal.2d at page 175, 163 P.2d at page 15. And it has been held that the instruction must be given where criminal knowledge is shown only by circumstantial evidence. People v. Candiott, 128 Cal.App.2d 347, 355-356, 275 P.2d 500. Cases holding that the instruction need not be given, even upon request, where circumstantial evidence is only incidental or corroborative are not, of course, applicable here. See People v. Jerman, 29 Cal.2d 189, 197, 173 P.2d 805; People v. Alexander, 92 Cal.App.2d 230, 235, 206 P.2d 657."

"Plaintiff contends that when the evidence is primarily direct and the circumstantial evidence is merely incidental or corroborative, the jury need not be instructed that the evidence must be irreconcilable with the theory of innocence. That is true within the meaning of such statements as made in People v. Jerman, 29 Cal.2d 189, 173 P.2d 805, and People v. Harmon, 89 Cal.App.2d 55, 200 P.2d 32. In the Jerman case, the defendant's own testimony gave evidence of every element of the charge. Hence, every element of the charge was covered by direct evidence, none thereof depended upon circumstantial evidence. Obviously, in such a case, the circumstantial evidence was 'incidental' or 'corroborative'; the evidence relied upon was 'primarily' direct; and by definition the rule under discussion did not apply. Similarly, in the Harmon case, the reviewing court, having found that the accused 'admitted the possession of narcotics', at page 61 of 89 Cal.App.2d, at page 36 of 200 P.2d, presumably an admission made on the witness stand, concluded that this and other direct evidence relegated the circumstantial evidence to a secondary position; no element of the charge depended primarily or solely upon circumstantial evidence. If proof of a significant element of the charge depends upon circumstantial evidence, the instruction should be given. Thus, in People v. Hatchett, supra, 63 Cal.App.2d 144, 146 P.2d 469, the defendant, under prosecution for murder, admitted the shooting but claimed it was done in self-defense. The state's evidence bearing upon that issue was almost wholly circumstantial. Failure to give the instruction was cause for reversal of the judgment. In People v. Rayol, 65 Cal.App.2d 462, 150 P.2d 812, there was direct evidence (testimony of witnesses) of the physical acts committed but the question whether or not the defendant was a knowing participant rested entirely upon circumstantial evidence. Judgment was reversed for failure to give the instruction. Similarly, in the instant case, proof of defendant's knowledge wholly depended upon circumstantial evidence.

"In the instant case, the failure to include in the instructions given a direct statement of the precise principle under discussion was error."

We conclude that under the rule laid down in People v. Yrigoyen, supra, the court committed reversible error in refusing to instruct the jury that in order to justify a conviction the facts and circumstances must not only be entirely consistent with the theory of guilt but must be irreconcilable with any other rational conclusion. For it is clear that criminal intent and malice aforethought could only be shown by evidence as to facts and circumstances surrounding the homicide in the instant case, and that circumstantial evidence must be relied on to prove the criminal intent or state of mind of appellant. The following statement in People v. Yrigoyen, supra, 45 Cal. 2d at page 50, 286 P.2d at page 3, is quite applicable to the instant case:

"Had the instruction in question been given, the jury might have concluded that the circumstantial evidence, while entirely consistent with defendant's guilt, was also consistent with a rational conclusion that he was innocent."

[8] Appellant contends also that the court erred in refusing to instruct the jury that where the evidence is susceptible of two constructions, each of which appears to be reasonable, one pointing to the guilt of the defendant and the other to her innocence, it is the jury's duty to adopt that interpretation which points to her innocence. In People v. Merkouris, 46 Cal.2d 540, 297 P.2d 999, where the evidence was entirely circumstantial, one of the four grounds upon which the court found reversible error was the trial court's failure to give the requested two reasonable theories instruction. In People v. Goldstein, supra, it was held error, but not prejudicial, to refuse to give requested instructions embodying the principles in CALJIC Nos. 26 and 27 where the court held that the evidence of defendant's guilt was clear. In People v. De Voe, 123 Cal.App. 233, 11 P.2d 26, the court held that the court did not err in refusing such instruction where the circumstantial evidence was merely incidental to and corroborative of the direct.

We believe that the instruction should have been given in the instant case because the proof of appellant's criminal intent was based substantially upon circumstantial evidence, and the evidence was reasonably susceptible of several interpretations: (1) That appellant did not intend to kill her husband; (2) that she acted without malice; and (3) that she acted in self-defense. We are unable to agree with respondent's contention that the court's failure to give it was not prejudicial to appellant.

[9] Appellant contends further that the court erred in refusing to give CALJIC instruction No. 28 which states that each essential fact in a chain of circumstances must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt. In People v. Watson, 46 Cal.2d 818, 299 P.2d 243, a case based wholly upon circumstantial evidence, cited by respondent, the Supreme Court held that in a case which rests entirely on circumstantial evidence it was error to refuse an instruction that each fact which is essential to complete a chain of circumstances that will establish defendant's guilt must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt. Such error was not prejudicial where the jury was correctly instructed on the doctrine of reasonable doubt (CALJIC No. 21), the principles embodied in CALJIC Nos. 26 and 27 and other related matters. Respondent quotes in great detail from the Watson case where the Supreme Court reviews various decisions including People v. Mansour, 103 Cal.App.2d 592, 230 P.2d 52, also cited by respondent. The Supreme Court said, 46 Cal.2d at page 831, 299 P.2d at page 251:

"Properly interpreted, CALJIC No. 28 applies the doctrine of reasonable doubt not to proof of miscellaneous collateral or incidental facts, but only to proof of 'each fact which is essential to complete a chain of circumstances that will establish the defendant's guilt.' Although the import of the opening phrase in CALJIC No. 28 may be somewhat confusing because of the reference to its applicability when the People's case rests 'chiefly' on circumstantial evidence, it is clearly applicable to cases such as the present one, which rests entirely upon circumstantial evidence. Accordingly, the trial court erred in refusing to give defendant's instruction which substantially embodied CALJIC No. 28. See cases collected: Stout on 'Appellate Review of Criminal Convictions on Appeal,' 43 Cal.L.Rev. 381, 446-447.

"However, the jury here was correctly instructed on the doctrine of reasonable doubt (CALJIC No. 21; Penal Code, §§ 1906, 1096a), the law applicable where evidence is susceptible of different constructions (CALJIC No. 26), the principle that circumstantial evidence of defendant's guilt must be inconsistent with any other rational hypothesis (CALJIC No. 27), and other related matters as above noted. Under the circumstances, it does not appear here that the court's failure to give a further instruction substantially in the language of CALJIC No. 28 has 'resulted in a miscarriage of justice' within the meaning of the constitutional provision as hereinafter discussed. Const., art. VI, § 4½."

As we have hereinbefore pointed out, the case against appellant rested substantially upon circumstantial evidence and we believe that an instruction substantially in the form of CALJIC No. 28 should have been given. If CALJIC Nos. 26 and 27 had been given, as they were in People v. Watson, supra, the error probably would not have been prejudicial, but in the instant case the jury were given no instructions whatever as to the law necessary to a proper consideration of circumstantial evidence nor were the usual instructions given defining direct and indirect evidence.

[10] Appellant next contends that the court committed prejudicial error in omitting several essential instructions upon a rereading of the instructions to the jury. After the jury had retired to deliberate, it returned to the court and requested the rereading of instructions defining the various offenses included in the charge. Thereupon, the court read the instructions previously given defining first degree and second degree murder, premeditation and deliberation, the presumption that one intends the consequences of his voluntary acts and manslaughter. Then the jury made a further request that the court "read the other side; for the innocence." The court then stated it would read all instructions previously given. Instructions given to the jury when it was first charged and omitted on the rereading were CALJIC instructions Nos. 305-A, 305-B, 320 and 309-A. Appellant urges that because the jury were expecting a rereading of all instructions, the court's omission of these four instructions may have conveyed to the jury the impression that the court believed such instructions not applicable to this case. No. 305-A is to the effect that when the jury is in doubt as to whether the crime is murder of the first or second degree they must convict of second degree. However, as pointed out by respondent, the court did reread No. 115-A which states that if the jury entertains a reasonable doubt as to the degree of the crime it must convict the defendant of the lesser offense. No.

305-B is to the effect that the jury must agree unanimously before they can convict, but as pointed out by respondent, the court did reread No. 115-B which is substantially to the same effect. No. 309-A ("due caution and circumspection" is a relative term) is repetitious of CALJIC No. 309 (definition of term "due caution and circumspection"). This omission was no doubt inadvertent as the court did reread a number of instructions relating to self-defense.

The record shows that when the court completed its rereading of the instructions, juror No. 2, who evidently was the foreman of the jury and who had made the request for further instructions, stated: "I think that covers it," and no request for the rereading of the above mentioned instructions was made by appellant's counsel. Under the circumstances we do not believe that it can be held that the failure of the court to reread said instructions was error.

[11-13] Appellant's next contention is that the court's comments on the evidence relating to the defense of self-defense made during the charge to the jury exceeded permissible bounds and invaded the province of the jury. The record shows that after instructing the jury fully and correctly on the law relating to self-defense the court then stated to the jury that the Constitution of the State of California permits the trial judge to comment to the jury on the credibility of any witness and on any other phase of the evidence, and that he proposed to make certain comments concerning the evidence, but that the jurors were to use their own judgment as to the weight and effect of the evidence and draw their own ultimate conclusions. He further stated that the comments he was about to make were offered solely for the purpose of assisting the members of the jury in their deliberations. He then stated:

"One of the necessary elements to justify a killing in self-defense is that it must appear to the defendant as a reasonable person that the infliction of death or great bodily injury is both present and imminent and that the killing must be done under a well founded belief that the killing is necessary to save one's self from death or great bodily harm.

"From the evidence in this case it appears that shortly before the decedent was killed he made an unprovoked assault upon the defendant during which she suffered no serious injury, that she had withdrawn from the scene and that whatever danger to the defendant there might have been in that encounter had subsided. When a few minutes later she reappeared on the scene armed with a rifle, the decedent was seated, or standing in the living room talking to the witness Shuster. Was the defendant then in any present or imminent danger either actual or apparent of suffering great bodily injury? Were the circumstances then such as to warrant a well founded belief in the mind of a reasonable person that to save herself from death or great bodily injury that it was necessary to kill?

"After a review of the evidence, it is my conclusion that the answer to each of these questions is no and that the fatal shooting was not discharged in self-defense. If your answers to either of these questions is no, the killing was not justifiable and self-defense is not available to the defendant."

The court again repeated its admonition to the jury that they were to exercise their own judgment upon the evidence and to weigh the testimony of the witnesses. He told them that they were the exclusive judges of the credibility of the witnesses and all of the questions of fact, and the court's comments regarding the evidence were made for the sole purpose of aiding them in arriving at a verdict and could not be used by the jury for the purpose of imposing the court's will of compelling a particular verdict.

Appellant argues that the court in this case exceeded the bounds of propriety and invaded the province of the jury by telling them that the defendant was not in present danger of actual or apparent bodily injury, that a reasonable person would not have believed it necessary to kill to escape death or bodily injury, that the killing was not justifiable, and that self-defense was not available to the defendant.

Respondent in reply contends that there was no element of self-defense established by the evidence and that, therefore, no error could have resulted if the court had completely removed the defense of self-defense from the jury's consideration.

We are unable to agree with respondent that there was no element of self-defense established by the evidence and it is clear that the court considered that self-defense was an issue because immediately prior to making the comment complained of, the court gave full instructions as to self-defense.

Section 19 of Article VI of the California Constitution, adopted in 1934, provides that the court "may make such comment on the evidence and the testimony and credibility of any witness as in its opinion is necessary for the proper determination of the case." This section has been considered by appellate courts in many decisions, the effect of which is well summarized in People v. Huff, 134 Cal. App.2d 182, at page 187, 285 P.2d 17, at page 20, as follows:

"While a judge may comment on the evidence, including the credibility of witnesses, Art. VI, § 19, Const.; Penal Code, § 1127, this privilege has its inherent limitations and must not be of a nature which would invade the province of the jury. People v. Ottey, 5 Cal.2d 714, 56 P.2d 193. Even an expression of opinion concerning the guilt or innocence of a defendant may not be fatal provided the province of the jury is not invaded. People v. Eudy, 12 Cal.2d 41, 82 P.2d 359. However, such comments should be temperately and fairly made and trial courts should be cautious in exercising this power of comment with a view to protecting the rights of the defendant. People v. Dail, 22 Cal.2d 642, 140 P.2d 828; People v. DeMoss, 4 Cal.2d 469, 50 P.2d 1031. It has been held that it is improper to commend a witness in the presence of the jury because of the undue weight which would thus be given to the testimony of this witness. People v. Frank, 71 Cal.App. 575, 236 P. 189. A judge should be careful not to throw the weight of his judicial position in a case, either for or against the defendant. People v. Mahoney, 201 Cal. 618, 258 P. 607. The rule is well established that such comments on the evidence 'must be fair, temperate, judicial, dispassionate, and free from apparent contentiousness, partisanship or advocacy.' People v. Hooper, 92 Cal.App.2d 524, 207 P.2d 117, 121. Such comment must be fair and temperate and not argumentative to a degree that makes it characteristically an act of advocacy. People v. Robinson, 73 Cal.App.2d 233, 166 P.2d 17; People v. DeMoss, 4 Cal.2d 469, 50 P.2d 1031."

In the light of these authorities we cannot say that the court went beyond the right to comment given it by the said provision of the Constitution. The court's comment was temperately and fairly made and was not argumentative or contentious to a degree which made it characteristically an act of advocacy. In cases relied upon by appellant the court's statements were argumentative and partisan or intemperate.

Appellant next contends that the trial court erred in rejecting evidence of prior threats and acts of violence by decedent toward appellant, which evidence was offered on the issue of self-defense and to show appellant's state of mind. Appellant argues that the excluded evidence was admissible on the issue of self-defense to show who was the probable aggressor and to assist the jury to determine, in the light of the prior relations between the parties, whether her husband's lurching or diving gesture toward the defendant would naturally cause a reasonable person in her position to act in self-defense. Appellant argues further that such evidence was admissible for the purpose of showing provocation sufficient to reduce the killing to manslaughter.

[14] Respondent argues that appellant testified that the gun discharged accidentally and that therefore the record presented no issues of self-defense or of provocation sufficient to make the killing manslaughter. However, we are convinced that the evidence in the instant case was such that it presented an issue of self-defense and it is to be noted that the court gave full and complete instructions to the jury on self-defense.

[15] In California in a prosecution for murder where the defense of self-defense is interposed, the defendant may introduce evidence that the reputation of the deceased for peace and quiet was bad and known to him to be bad. People v. Brophy, 122 Cal.App.2d 638, 647-648, 265 P.2d 593, 46 A.L.R.2d 1410, and People v. Keys, 62 Cal.App.2d 903, 912, 145 P.2d 589, citing names. The general rule is well expressed in 64 A.L.R. at pages 1029, 1030, as follows:

"The rule is supported by many authorities that on a trial for homicide, or for an assault and battery, the defendant, after laying a proper foundation by evidence tending to show that, in committing the homicide or assault, he acted in self-defense, may introduce evidence of the turbulent and dangerous character of the deceased or party assaulted. While the deliberate, unprovoked killing of a human being cannot in any measure be justified by the fact that he bore the reputation of a turbulent and violent person, the law recognizes the well-established fact in human experience that the known reputation or character of an assailant as to violence and turbulence has a very material bearing on the degree and nature of the apprehension of danger on the part of a person assaulted; also that one who is turbulent and violent may the more readily provoke or assume the aggressive in an encounter. Hence, as bearing on these issues, where a proper foundation has been laid, it is conclusively established in almost all jurisdictions that evidence of the turbulent and dangerous character of the victim of an assault or homicide is admissible."

[16] A defendant may introduce evidence for the trait in question when the immediate circumstances of the killing are equivocal and raise a doubt in regard to the question whether defendant acted in self-defense. People v. Lombard, 17 Cal. 316; People v. Murray, 10 Cal. 309; People v. Edwards, 41 Cal. 640; and People v. Lamar, 148 Cal. 564, 83 P. 993. In the instant case witness Shuster testified, "Well, I was just standing there talking to Don, and I just noticed him make a sudden lurch or dive, and I heard a shot, and he dropped." It could be said that the immediate circumstances of the killing render it doubtful whether the act was justifiable or not. Therefore, the evidence that decedent had a reputation for violence was admissible on the issue of self-defense. Testimony that decedent had made prior threats against defendant is admissible if there is evidence tending to show any act of aggression committed by decedent at the time of the homicide indicating that he intended to attack defendant. Assuming that the act of decedent when he made a lurch or dive forward was such as would have aroused in defendant sufficient apprehension to obscure reason and render the average man liable to act rashly and defendant in fact did so act, the testimony of prior threats was admissible. People v. Gonzales, 33 Cal.App. 340, 342, 164 P. 1131; People v. Scoggins, 37 Cal. 676, 683; and

People v. Lombard, 17 Cal. 316, 320; People v. Logan, 175 Cal. 45, 164 P. 1121. See also 2 Wigmore (3d Ed.) 44-65, sections 246-248.

[17] We believe that it was error to exclude evidence which tended to show violent and turbulent character and reputation of decedent and that it was also error to exclude testimony of decedent's prior threats against and violent conduct toward appellant. This evidence was relevant to the issue of self-defense and was also extremely relevant as to appellant's state of mind and intent. If such evidence had been admitted the jury might well have either acquitted appellant or have found her guilty only of manslaughter.

[18] In view of the foregoing we are convinced that the court erred in refusing to instruct the jury on circumstantial evidence and also that the court erred in excluding evidence as to the violent and turbulent character of decedent and of his prior threats against and violent conduct toward appellant. We are mindful of the most recent expression of our Supreme Court as to what constitutes reversible error under section 4½ of Article VI of our state constitution, as stated in People v. Watson, 46 Cal.2d 818, at page 836, 299 P.2d at page 254, as follows: "That a 'miscarriage of justice' should be declared only when the court, 'after an examination of the entire cause, including the evidence,' is of the 'opinion' that it is reasonably probable that a result more favorable to the appealing party would have been reached in the absence of the error." With this statement in mind we have made a careful study of the entire record and are of the opinion "that it is reasonably probable that a result more favorable to the appealing party would have been reached in the absence of the error."

The judgment and the order are reversed.

v.

FIRST NATIONAL TRUST AND SAVINGS BANK OF SANTA BARBARA, a national banking association, as special administrator with general powers of the Estate of Isobel Field, deceased, Defendant and Respondent.

Civ. 21200.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 3, California.

Oct. 23, 1956.

Hearing Denied Dec. 19, 1956.

Action by remainderman after termination of life estate to recover portion of subject matter of life estate not consumed by life tenant. Judgment for defendant in the Superior Court, Santa Barbara County, Walter J. Fourt, J., and the plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Parker Wood, J., held that the evidence supported finding that proceeds of sale of property of the life estate were consumed and that there was nothing left to distribute to the remainderman.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Trusts ⇨358(1)

Even though mingling of trust fund with his funds is improper the trustee can properly unscramble the funds and after such unscrambling the beneficiaries can look only to the funds apportioned to them.

2. Remainders ⇨17(4)

In action by remaindermen after termination of life estate to recover portion of subject matter of life estate not consumed by the life tenant, evidence supported finding that proceeds of sale of property of the life estate had been consumed by the life tenant and that there was no remainder to be distributed to the remainderman.

3. Pleading ⇨318(1)

In action by a remainderman after termination of life estate to recover portion of subject matter of life estate not consumed by the life tenant, where defendant's answer was a denial of allegation with respect to amount of net proceeds of sale of property of the estate and answers set forth an alleged defense to complaint and defendant did not allege an account, plaintiff was not entitled to a bill of particulars. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 454.

4. Appeal and Error ⇐1039(10)

Denial of plaintiff's motion for a bill of particulars was not prejudicial in view of written stipulation between the parties. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 454.

PARKER WOOD, Justice.

Action by remainderman after termination of life estate to recover the portion of the subject-matter of the life estate that was not consumed by the life tenant. Judgment was in favor of defendant, the special administrator of the estate of the life tenant.

Edward S. Field died in 1936, leaving a will in which he devised real property known as the Serena property to his wife, Isobel Field, for her life with power to do certain things with the property during her lifetime, and upon her death he directed that the remainder of that property be distributed to Lloyd Osbourne, his wife's brother. Under the decree of distribution in the Estate of Edward S. Field, the Serena property was distributed in accordance with the provisions of the will.

A few years thereafter, Lloyd Osbourne died, and his son, Alan Osbourne, plaintiff herein, succeeded to Lloyd's rights with respect to the Serena property.

One of the contentions of plaintiff (appellant) is that the court erred in finding to the effect that there was no remainder to be distributed to him.

In August, 1947, Mrs. Field sold the Serena property, and she moved therefrom to the El Mirasol Hotel in Santa Barbara. At that time she was over ninety years of age, confined to a wheel chair, and required the care of physicians and nurses.

While the escrow in the matter of the sale of the Serena property was pending, Mrs. Field employed Harold S. Chase as her agent to manage her properties, collect rents, pay bills, and in general to attend to her financial affairs. Her property included three business buildings in Santa Barbara, money and stocks and bonds. Her net worth at the time of appointing Mr. Chase as her agent was approximately $260,000. On August 26, 1947, a few days after his appointment as agent, Mr. Chase opened an account at the First National Bank of Santa Barbara, which account was known as the Isobel Field Properties Account. That account was opened with a deposit of $18,856.67 which he received from Mrs. Field's account at the County National Bank of Santa Barbara. The selling price of the Serena property, including furniture, was $65,000. On September 5, 1947, Mr. Chase deposited the proceeds of the sale, $61,461 (after commission and other charges had been deducted), in the properties account. (The check received from escrow was for $61,724.45 but $263.45 was a rebate for taxes and insurance—leaving net deposit of $61,461 for Serena.) Thereafter, various deposits and disbursements, involving several thousands of dollars, were made in connection with that account. Until April 7, 1950, that was the only account used by Mr. Chase in matters pertaining to her property and in paying her bills for hotel, physicians, nurses, income taxes, and other similar bills. One of the disbursements made from that account was $50,000, in 1948, for the purchase of United States Savings Bonds. Another disbursement from that account was $10,000, in 1950, for the purchase of United States Treasury notes. A deposit made in that account, on March 4, 1950, was $73,174, the amount received from the sale of the Hutton Building in Santa Barbara.

On April 7, 1950, Mr. Chase opened another account at the First National Bank of Santa Barbara, which account was known as the Isobel Field Investment Account. On April 10, 1950, he transferred $73,174 (amount received for the Hutton Building) from the properties account to the investment account.

In December 1949, Alan Osbourne, plaintiff herein, commenced a declaratory relief action in the United States District Court for the Southern District of California wherein he sought a declaration of his rights and the rights of Mrs. Field with respect to the Serena property. On April 25, 1952, that court rendered a judgment declaring that under the decree of distribution in Edward S. Field's estate Mrs. Field had a life estate in the Serena property with power to convey, and since the sale of that property she has had a life estate in the proceeds of the sale "with full and unrestricted power to use and consume so much of the proceeds as she desires during her lifetime, but she is prohibited from giving away or disposing of these proceeds by way of testamentary disposition; that unused or unconsumed proceeds of sale or property, whether real or personal, acquired from these proceeds remaining at her death become the property of the remainderman, Alan Osbourne, plaintiff herein; that plaintiff is now not entitled to any other or further relief." (Italics added.) That judgment became final.

Mr. Francis Price, Sr., counsel for Mrs. Field in the federal case, contended in that case that Mrs. Field was the owner of the fee title to the Serena property. About January 2, 1952, a memorandum of the decision in the federal case was received by Mr. Price. Mr. Price testified to the effect that although he believed that the proceeds of the sale of the Serena property had been consumed prior to that decision, he advised Mr. Chase, out of an abundance of precaution in the matter of showing that the proceeds were consumed, to open another account and put into it the amount of the net proceeds of the sale, as determined by Mr. Chase and the accountants employed by him, so that they could be sure that during the lifetime of Mrs. Field the proceeds would be used.

On January 12, 1952, Mr. Chase opened an account at the Security-First National Bank (of Los Angeles) at Santa Barbara, which account was known as the Isobel Field Special Account. The first deposit therein (on January 12) was $10,107.58, which was withdrawn from the investment account. This amount was the proceeds of a sale of the United States Treasury notes (purchased in 1950 with money from the properties account), which notes were sold on January 12, 1952—the date that the special account was opened. The only other deposit in the special account (made on March 8, 1952) was $42,970.83, which was withdrawn from the investment account. This amount was a part of the proceeds of a sale of the United States Savings Bonds (purchased in 1948 with $50,000 from the properties account), which bonds were sold on March 8, 1952, for $47,400 and that amount had been deposited in the investment account. The total of the two deposits in the special account ($10,107.58 and $42,970.83) was $53,078.41, which amount was the amount of the net proceeds of the Serena property as determined by the accountants employed by Mr. Chase. (That amount was determined by deducting $8,382.59, the amount paid as income taxes on the Serena sale, from $61,461, the net amount deposited after close of escrow.)

When Mr. Chase became the agent of Mrs. Field he employed Scholefield and Company, public accountants, to keep the books of account and the records pertaining to Mrs. Field's financial matters. The books kept by those accountants cover the period beginning January 1, 1947, and show that the net worth of Mrs. Field as of that date was $257,010.61.

After January 12, 1952 (when the special account was opened), there were disbursements from the special account which reduced the account, as of September 10, 1952, to $4.06, which amount ($4.06) was then transferred to the investment account. Those disbursements included payments for hotel and personal expenses of Mrs. Field (not including gifts), her medical, accounting, and legal fees, agent's fees, income taxes, and miscellaneous expenses, totaling $27,141.49. Other disbursements from that account were: $564.40 for a television; $35.52 for a coffee table; $337 for a new roof on part of a theater building; and $25,000 in payment of a promissory note, made by Mrs. Field and payable to Metropolitan Trust Company, which note was secured by a trust deed on Mrs. Field's real property at 1018 State Street, Santa Barbara.

Mr. Price (counsel for Mrs. Field) testified to the effect that he advised Mr. Chase to open another account because he (Mr. Price) thought a question might arise as to whether payment of the $25,000 note from the special account was a proper use of the $25,000; and that in order to obviate such a question he advised Mr. Chase to open the account and use it for ordinary expenses of Mrs. Field.

On September 8, 1952, Mr. Chase opened another account in the Security-First National Bank, which account was known as the Isobel Field Agent's Account. He sold shares of stock and bonds in various companies for $28,708.93 and deposited that amount in the account. (It was his intention to deposit only $25,000 in the account, but the proceeds of the sale of stocks and bonds exceeded that amount and the excess was inadvertently included in the deposit.) An additional amount of $128.92 was deposited therein, making a total deposit of $28,837.85. Disbursements from that account were for the living expenses and other expenses of Mrs. Field, except that $500 was transferred to a bank in New York. Mrs. Field died June 26, 1953. All the funds in the agent's account had been expended before her death.

It thus appears that there were three periods of time to be considered in determining whether the proceeds of the Serena property had been consumed. The first period (covering about 4½ years) was from the time the proceeds were received by Mrs. Field on September 5, 1947 (and deposited in the properties account), to the opening of the special account on January 12, 1952 (about 2 weeks after notice of the federal decision). The second period (covering about 8 months) was from the opening of the special account on January 12, 1952, to the time when all the funds in the special account had been spent—September 10, 1952. The third period (covering about 9 months) was from the opening of the agent's account on September 8, 1952, to the time when all the funds in the agent's account had been spent—before the death of Mrs. Field on June 26, 1953.

With reference to the first period of time (after the sale in 1947 to the opening of the special account in January, 1952), appellant asserts that the proceeds from the sale of Serena ($61,461) when deposited in the properties account on September 5, 1947, became commingled with other money of Mrs. Field and it would be impossible to determine whether the Serena proceeds were used to buy property or were consumed in paying taxes and for services rendered to Mrs. Field. The other money of Mrs. Field on deposit in the properties account at that time was $18,856.67, the opening deposit, $1,400 which was also deposited on September 5, and $263.45 the rebate which was included in the Serena check—making a total of $81,981.12, as commingled money. Appellant asserts further that in view of other deposits, exceeding $50,000, made in the properties account before $50,000 was withdrawn from that account (in 1948) to buy United States Savings Bonds, it would be impossible to determine that the $50,000 used for buying bonds was money from the Serena sale. It appears that the other deposits made in the properties account, prior to the opening of the investment account (deposits other than said $81,981.12 and the $73,174 received for the Hutton Building), were approximately $161,000. It appears that the deposits in the investment account, from the opening of the investment account (April 7, 1950) to the date of death of Mrs. Field (June 26, 1953), were approximately $204,000.

With reference to the second period of time (during the existence of the special account—from January 12 to September 8, 1952—which account was opened and depleted for the purpose of proving the expenditure of the Serena proceeds), appellant asserts in effect that, as a result of the commingling, the $53,078.41 deposit in the special account could not be determined to be Serena money. He argues further to the effect that, even if it be assumed that the $53,078.41 was Serena money, the said amount was not the correct amount of the net proceeds of the Serena sale, in that, the $8,382.59 paid as income taxes on the sale (and deducted from the $61,461 received, leaving $53,078.41) was not a proper computation of the taxes for the reason there was no capital gain on the sale but there was a capital loss; that the $8,382.59 was not due as income taxes but was in effect a gift to the United States and California—a gift that could not lawfully be made, even if it be assumed that the $8,382.59 was “unmingled” Serena money—and plaintiff should have had judgment at least for that amount. Appellant argues further to the effect that since the special account is apparently the basis for the judgment, and since the special account shows payments of $564.40 for a television, $35.52 for a coffee table, and $337 for a new roof on a part of the theater building, the plaintiff should have had judgment for those amounts. Appellant also argues that the $25,000 paid from the special account to satisfy the note, secured by trust deed on the 1018 State Street building, should have been found to be a part of the remainder of the Serena proceeds, or if $25,000 (in money) was not a part of such remainder then a portion of said real property (covered by the trust deed), in the amount that $25,000 bears to the whole value of said real property, should have been found to be a part of the remainder.

With reference to the third period of time (covering the existence of the agent's account—from September 8, 1952, to a time prior to Mrs. Field's death—which account was opened and depleted for the purpose of proving the expenditure of the $25,000 for ordinary expenses), appellant argues to the effect that the evidence regarding the agent's account does not support the judgment; that by paying the $25,000 note from the special account and thereby releasing the trust deed, Mrs. Field acquired the unencumbered complete ownership in the 1018 State Street building and increased her interest in that real property; that, even if it be assumed that the special account from which the $25,000 note was paid represented Serena money, the additional interest acquired in the real property by payment of the $25,000 from the special account, remained after her death; and that the expenditure of the money which was in the agent's account ($28,708.93) did not amount to using and consuming the additional interest that was acquired in the real property.

The court found that from the date, August 22, 1947, that Mrs. Field received the net proceeds of $61,461 from the sale of the Serena property and prior to her death on June 26, 1953, she used and consumed all of said proceeds from said sale; that at the date of her death there were no unused or unconsumed proceeds of said sale, and there was no real or personal property, acquired from such proceeds, remaining at the time of her death; that the entire amount of the proceeds from said Serena sale had been used and consumed by Mrs. Field during her lifetime in accordance with the federal decree; that at the time of her death Mrs. Field neither owned nor possessed any portion of the proceeds of the sale of the Serena property in cash or in real or personal property; that she did not give away any portion of such proceeds nor did she dispose of any portion thereof by testamentary disposition.

Appellant contends, as above indicated, that those findings were not supported by the evidence.

[1] The net amount received from the Serena sale (after deducting commission and other charges) was $61,461. That amount was commingled with other money of Mrs. Field. When the money was received, and thereafter for approximately 4½ years, Mrs. Field and her attorney believed that the money belonged to her. During that time her medical and hotel expenses were high—averaging approximately $7,500 a year for medical expenses, and $11,000 a year for hotel expenses. Also, during that time her federal income taxes averaged approximately $9,000 a year. There were other expenses in substantial amounts. There was evidence that, at the time of the Serena sale, Mrs. Field needed additional cash for her living expenses and medical expenses. After the federal decision, wherein it was decided that Mrs. Field had a life estate in the Serena proceeds with the right to consume the proceeds, Mrs. Field's attorney was of the opinion that the Serena proceeds had already been consumed; nevertheless, he deemed it advisable, in view of the problem of proving the use of the proceeds, to open a bank account and deposit therein the net proceeds of the Serena sale. Mrs. Field's agent opened the special account and deposited therein $53,078.41, the amount which Mrs. Field's accountants determined to be the net proceeds of the Serena sale after deducting the commission, other charges, and income taxes paid in connection with the sale. Although the attorney for Mrs. Field believed that the proceeds of the sale had been consumed prior to the opening of the special account, the special account was opened for the purpose of separating or "unmingling" the funds and establishing a record as to use of the separated funds. Appellant asserts that Mrs. Field was in the nature of a trustee toward the remainderman (appellant) and she had the legal duty, when she received the Serena money, to keep it separate from her other money so that she could account to the remainderman; and that when she commingled the money it lost its identity as the Serena money and it was impossible for her to account for the use of the money. It is not necessary to decide whether she was a trustee; but, even if she be regarded as a trustee, she could properly, after it was decided that she had a life estate only, set aside the net amount of the Serena sale and then proceed with the separate account as she could have proceeded if she had made a separate account when she first received the Serena money. In Scott on Trusts, vol. 3, p. 2481, § 517.3, it was said: "Even though the mingling of trust funds with his own funds is improper, the trustee can properly unscramble the funds in some cases." It was also said therein on the same page: "After such unscrambling, it seems clear, the beneficiaries can look only to the funds apportioned to them." In the present case, it was not improper to deposit the Serena money as it was originally deposited. The question involved with respect to depositing the money in that manner pertained to proving the use that was made of the money. Whether or not the Serena proceeds were consumed was a question of fact for the trial judge. Scholefield and Company, public accountants, kept the books of account and records for Mrs. Field from the time the Serena property was sold. Mr. Knapp, an accountant for that company, testified regarding the real and personal property, income and expenses of Mrs. Field as shown by their books and records. Several written summarizations of the various accounts and records were prepared by those accountants and were received in evidence. The summarization as to the special account shows that $53,078.41 was deposited in the account. It also shows expenses as follows: hotel and miscellaneous personal expenses, $10,606.09; medical expenses, $6,452.17; accounting, $600; legal, $1,250; agent's fees, $600; income taxes, $5,784.34; rental property expenses, $2,224.40; rental property repairs and maintenance, $381.98; miscellaneous expenses, $175.37; trust deed note to Metropolitan Trust Company, $25,000; transferred to investment account, $4.06. Those payments depleted the special account.

Then the agent's account was opened for the purpose of establishing a record as to the use of $25,000, in the event that a question arose as to whether the payment of the $25,000 trust deed note from the special account was a proper payment. The summarization as to the agent's account shows that $28,837.85 was deposited in that account. Some of the expenses shown therein are as follows: personal expenses, $8,740.99; medical expenses, $8,213.66; rental property expenses, $6,228.48; property taxes, $1,394.55; architect's fees, $3,328. Other expenses shown therein (including $500 transferred to a New York bank) amounted to $931.67. Those payments depleted the agent's account.

Appellant asserts, as above shown, that $53,078.41, deposited in the special account, was not the correct amount of the net proceeds of the sale, in that $8,382.59 paid as income taxes on the sale (and deducted from the $61,461 received) was not a proper computation of the taxes. Mr. Knapp, the accountant, testified that in his opinion there was a capital gain on the sale and the income return was correct. The $8,382.59 was paid as income taxes on the sale. The evidence was sufficient to support a finding that said amount was properly expended as income taxes.

The amount deposited in the agent's account exceeded $25,000 by $3,837.85. Even if the amounts paid from the special account for a television, coffee table, and new roof (totaling $936.92), and the $500 transferred from the agent's account to a New York bank, should not be regarded as proper payments from those accounts, the total amounts thereof were more than covered by the excess deposit of $3,837.85.

[2] The evidence was sufficient to support the above-stated findings of the court to the effect that the proceeds of the Serena property were consumed.

[3,4] Appellant also contends that the court erred in granting defendant's motion to strike appellant's demand for a bill of particulars. Plaintiff alleged in his complaint that Mrs. Field received, as consideration for the Serena property, $65,000 less five percent commission and the costs of sale; that after paying such commission and costs she had about $61,750 which she was entitled to consume; that the entire amount of the proceeds was unconsumed. Defendant alleged in its answer that the consideration for the property was $65,000, less five percent commission amounting to $3,250 and costs of sale amounting to an additional sum of $8,671.59; and that Mrs. Field received $53,078.41 as proceeds of the sale. Defendant denied, in its answer, the allegation that she did not consume the proceeds, and it alleged that she did consume the proceeds. Appellant argues to the effect that he was entitled to a bill of particulars because defendant alleged an account in its answer. Section 454 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides in part: "It is not necessary for a party to set forth in a pleading the items of an account therein alleged, but he must deliver to the adverse party, within ten days after a demand thereof in writing, a copy of the account, or be precluded from giving evidence thereof. * * *" The defendant's answer was in effect a denial of the allegation of the complaint with respect to the amount of the net proceeds of the sale; and the answer set forth an alleged defense to the complaint. Defendant did not allege an account. The court did not err in granting defendant's motion to strike the demand for a bill of particulars. In any event, pursuant to a written stipulation between the parties, appellant was permitted before the trial to examine the records and accounts of Scholefield and Company pertaining to Mrs. Field's financial transactions. Also, the stipulation provided that appellant had the right to make copies of the records or accounts. Appellant's accountant examined the records and accounts, and Scholefield and Company assisted him in making the examination.

Respondent asserts that the plaintiff (appellant) was not entitled to maintain the action against the bank, as administrator of Mrs. Field's estate, for the reason that if any portion of the Serena proceeds remained unconsumed that portion would not be a part of her estate; that if the bank took possession of any unconsumed portion of the proceeds the bank would be liable in its individual capacity and not as administrator. In view of the above conclusion that the evidence supports the findings that the proceeds were consumed, it is not necessary to determine this contention of respondent.

The judgment is affirmed.

v.

MOBILHOME CO. OF LOS ANGELES et al.,
Defendants and Appellants.
Civ. 21608.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 3, California.

Oct. 23, 1956.

Hearing Denied Dec. 19, 1956.

Action for injuries to a roofing contractor falling through a tarpaper covered chimney hole cut by defendants in roof of house being constructed by them. From a judgment of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Victor R. Hansen, J., for plaintiff, defendants appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Shinn, P. J., held that instruction that plaintiff had right to rely on presumption that defendants complied with law requiring that all roof openings be covered with planks and was not contributorily negligent in failing to anticipate injury resulting from violation of such law was error, prejudicial to defendants, as directing jury to determine issue of plaintiff's contributory negligence in his favor.

Judgment reversed.

1. Negligence ☞31

A roofing contractor, injured as result of falling through tarpaper covered chimney hole cut in roof of house by parties constructing it, was within intended protection of Industrial Safety Division's safety order, requiring that roof openings in buildings under construction be covered with planks or fenced in by standard railings after holes are framed, as such contractor, though not builders' employee in narrow sense, was doing work of one of his own employees entitled to benefit of order. West's Ann.Labor Code, §§ 6303-6305, 6312, 6500.

2. Negligence ☞31

The purpose of Industrial Safety Division's safety orders for protection of building construction workmen should be given effect so as to make them applicable to all persons properly engaged as ordinary workmen in construction work for benefit of those engaging their services. West's Ann.Labor Code §§ 6312, 6500.

3. Trial ☞194(16)

In action for injuries to roofing contractor, falling through tarpaper covered chimney hole cut by defendants in roof of house being constructed by them, instruction that plaintiff had right to rely on presumption that defendants complied with law requiring that all roof openings be covered with planks and was not contributorily negligent in failing to anticipate injury resulting from violation of such law was erroneous as directing jury to determine issue of plaintiff's contributory negligence in his favor. West's Ann.Labor Code, §§ 6312, 6500.

4. Negligence ☞135(4)

In action for injuries to roofing contractor, falling through tarpaper covered chimney hole cut by defendants in roof of house being constructed by them, evidence was sufficient to justify jury's findings of plaintiff's contributory negligence in failing to look at defendants' building plans, inspect roof, or make any inquiry as to where chimney was to be installed or whether an opening was left therefor.

5. Negligence ⇨141(3)

An instruction to jury on doctrine that one may assume that others will obey law and exercise due care must clearly state proviso that he must himself be free from negligence and use ordinary care to learn whether those on whose conduct he relies are complying with their duties.

6. Appeal and Error ⇨1031(6)

A grave doubt as to whether jury's verdict would have been the same but for grievous error in instructions must be resolved in favor of party whose right to fair trial has been invaded thereby.

7. Trial ⇨191(1), 296(9)

The jury's province is invaded by instruction assuming existence of fact not in evidence or respecting which evidence is conflicting, and such error is not cured by charges submitting to jury question whether such fact exists.

8. Appeal and Error ⇨1064(2)

In action for injuries to roofing contractor, falling through tarpaper covered chimney hole cut by defendants in roof of house being constructed by them, error in instructing jury that plaintiff had right to rely on presumption that defendants complied with law requiring that all roof openings be covered with planks and was not contributorily negligent in failing to anticipate injury resulting from violation of such law was prejudicial to defendant, in view of grave doubt as to whether jury's verdict for plaintiff would have been the same but for such error.

9. Negligence ⇨138(1)

In action for injuries to roofing contractor, falling through tarpaper covered chimney hole cut by defendants in roof of house being constructed by them, defendant's requested instruction to jury that one invited to enter on uncompleted building accepts invitation to enter thereon in its then existing condition and assumes risk of whatever he may encounter was properly refused as imposing on plaintiff duty to anticipate, not only dangerous conditions involving no violation of law by defendants, but any and all conditions that might exist because of their violations of law.

10. Negligence ⇨6

Safety regulations and other legislation of like import are matters of public policy.

11. Negligence ⇨105

The rule that one need not, in exercise of ordinary care, anticipate violations of law by others, should not be overridden by rule that one entering uncompleted building assumes risks inherent therein.

12. Negligence ⇨105

The rule that one accepting invitation to enter uncompleted building assumes inherent risk of whatever he may encounter is inapplicable in cases of violations of statutory law, such as Industrial Safety Division's building safety orders. West's Ann.Labor Code, §§ 6312, 6500.

13. Negligence ⇨136(22)

A roofing contractor, going on roof of uncompleted house which he had contracted to roof, did not as matter of law assume risk of builders' failure to comply with Industrial Safety Division's safety order requiring that roof openings in buildings under construction be covered with planks or fenced in by standard railings. West's Ann.Labor Code, §§ 6312, 6500.

14. Negligence ⇨138(2)

In action for injuries to roofing contractor, falling through tarpaper covered chimney hole cut by defendants in roof of house being constructed by them, defendants' requested instruction to jury that plaintiff was conclusively presumed to have knowledge of all that estimator employed by him learned or could have learned from examination of defendants' building plans, seen by him before accident, was properly refused as charging plaintiff with actual knowledge of location of such hole, which estimator was not charged with duty to locate for plaintiff's information.

15. Appeal and Error \Rightarrow 843(2)

Where judgment for plaintiff on jury's verdict in personal injury suit was reversed by District Court of Appeal because of prejudicial error in instruction to jury, question whether new trial should have been granted defendants on ground of newly discovered evidence was moot.

Spray, Gould & Bowers, Los Angeles, for appellants.

Earl Malmrose, Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHINN, Presiding Justice.

Defendants appeal from a judgment for $25,000 damages for personal injuries entered on a jury verdict. They contend that as a matter of law they were not negligent, that the court erred in instructing the jury, and that a new trial should have been granted because of newly discovered evidence.

There was evidence of the following facts: Plaintiff, a roofing contractor, agreed to roof fourteen prefabricated houses which defendants were constructing and assembling on their premises. Twelve of the roofs were to be shingled and the others were to be built-up or rock roofs. Plaintiff testified that his estimator checked over the job but he (plaintiff) never saw the house plans, although he admitted having seen a plot plan which one of defendants' workmen drew for him at the job site. Defendants were to supply the tin fittings and chimney saddles for the roofs; plaintiff admitted that he knew each house would be provided with a fireplace and chimney, to be installed after the buildings were transported to their permanent location. He knew that unfinished roofs would be tarpapered to protect the eaves from weather damage.

Plaintiff had from eight to fourteen employees. Prior to the accident, he had himself worked on only one of the other houses, which had a rock roof and an opening for a chimney cut out near the top of the roof. He went to work on the unfinished house where the accident occurred on the afternoon of November 9, 1953. He climbed a ladder which was leaning against the front of the house and removed the tarpaper covering the edge of the roof on the west side of the building. He then shingled the west side of the roof.

The next morning plaintiff returned to work but did not ask defendants' workmen whether there were any holes under the tarpaper. He testified that he saw no plumbing holes or chimney saddles on the roof. He began removing more of the tarpaper, which was very smoothly rolled and was fastened onto the roofing boards with strips of lumber nailed down at the top and bottom. The rolls of tarpaper were three feet wide, and the roofing boards were 1 x 6 inches, nailed parallel with the edge of the roof and spaced about 4½ inches apart. Plaintiff walked in a stooped position for about 25 or 30 feet down the center of the tarpaper, pulling the nails out of the slats which held the tarpaper in place. He then stepped into a tarpaper covered hole in the roof and fell to the pavement below, sustaining severe injuries. (The hole had been cut by defendants to accommodate the fireplace and chimney which were to be installed at a later date.) He stated that his eyes were on the tarpaper ahead of him and that he noticed no sag in the paper at the spot where he fell through. There was no planking or railing surrounding the hole and he did not know the hole was there.

Two of defendants' workmen, James Mosely and Elmer Johnson, testified for plaintiff. They had covered the roof with tarpaper four days before the accident. Mosely testified that the paper over the hole was as smooth as the rest of the paper even though he had stepped on the hole while laying the tarpaper. He stated that he placed no markings or railings around the hole, that it was impossible to see the hole unless one were practically underneath it, and that he talked to plaintiff just before the accident, but did not warn him of the concealed hole although he knew plaintiff was the roofing man.

Johnson testified that he and Mosely were told to paper the roof to protect the masonite under the eaves against rainfall but that they received no instruction to fence the hole. This was confirmed by Robert Nelson, defendants' construction superintendent, who testified on behalf of defendants. Nelson stated that the house was in a rough frame state of construction at the time of the accident, i. e., the roof was braced, the sheathing applied, the plumbing and heating pipes were installed, and the only opening in the roof was for the fireplace and chimney. According to Nelson, the fourteen houses were of four different models, some having the chimney in front, some on the side and some in a gable.

[1] The first assignment of error to be considered is that the court erroneously instructed the jury that section 1571(a) of Title 8 to the Administrative Code, being a construction safety order applying to buildings prescribed by the Division of Industrial Safety, pursuant to authority granted by sections 6312 and 6500 of the Labor Code, was applicable to the case. The order reads as set out in the margin.¹ The court instructed that defendants had a duty to comply with said order. Defendants argue that the construction safety orders are for the exclusive benefit of employees and that since plaintiff was an independent contractor and not their employee he was not a member of the class intended to be protected by such safety orders.

Plaintiff contends that section 1571(a) operates protectively not only as to employees but also as to the general public. He cites Pierson v. Holly Sugar Co., 107 Cal.App.2d 298, 237 P.2d 28, which he says is controlling authority. In that case it was held that certain safety orders, not identified in the opinion by number, which regulated the maintenance and operation of elevators were for the benefit of the public at large. Undoubtedly, the court gave effect to the precise wording of the safety orders relating to elevators. Plaintiff has not compared the wording of those sections with the wording of section 1571(a) and, of course, the case does not hold that all safety orders are applicable to the general public. However, it is unnecessary to consider the implications of the holding in the Pierson case. Our question is not whether section 1571(a) is applicable to the general public but whether it was applicable to plaintiff under the circumstances and at the time of his injury.

The orders of the Division of Industrial Safety relate to many different subjects arranged alphabetically from "Air Pressure Tank Orders" to "Window Cleaning" orders. Subchapter 4 deals with "Construction Safety Orders." The authority of the division is derived from sections 6312 and 6500 of the Labor Code which are set out in the margin.² These sections are found in division 5, part 1 of the Labor

1. "1571. (a). As soon as the hole is framed all floor or roof openings within a building or other structure during the course of construction, alteration or repairing, shall be covered with planks so as to carry safely any load which may be required to be supported thereon or it shall be fenced in on all sides by a standard railing. Note: 'As soon as the hole is framed' means when the header beams are nailed to the joist and before the sheathing is laid."

2. § 6312. "The division has the power, jurisdiction, and supervision over every employment and place of employment in Cal.Rep. 301-302 P.2d—53 this State, which is necessary adequately to enforce and administer all laws and lawful orders requiring such employment and place of employment to be safe, and requiring the protection of the life and safety of every employee in such employment or place of employment."

§ 6500. "The division, after a hearing had upon its own motion or upon complaint, by general or special orders, rules or regulations, or otherwise may:

"(a) [Safety devices, etc.] Declare and prescribe what safety devices, safeguards, or other means or methods of protection are well adapted to render the employees of every employment and

Code entitled "Safety in Employment"; "Workmen's Safety." They relate to all places of employment, impose duties on employers to comply with stated requirements for the protection of life and safety of employees and forbid the construction of any unsafe place of employment by any employer, owner or lessee of real property. The clear purpose of the labor code sections is to provide for the safety of employees. The purpose of the "Construction Safety Orders" is the same. The words "employment," "employer" and "employee" are defined in sections 6303, 6304 and 6305 of the Labor Code.³ While the definition of "employee" brings in all workmen who are required or directed by an employer to go to work or be in a place of employment, it is not to be understood as excluding workmen who may not precisely fit into the definition but are clearly of a class for whose protection the safety measures are required.

Defendants point out that plaintiff was roofing the building under contract; that he was therefore an independent contractor and was excluded from protection of the safety order in question. We agree that plaintiff was an independent contractor but are nevertheless of the opinion that under the circumstances of the accident he was within the intended protection of the safety order. In many situations there are significant distinctions between independent contractors and employees, but we think there is no occasion to recognize any distinction under the facts of the present case.

[2] The safety orders are intended to provide protection for workmen engaged in construction work. Effect should be given to the purpose of the orders so as to make them applicable to all persons who are properly engaged as ordinary workmen in construction work for the benefit of those who have engaged their services. While in a narrow sense plaintiff was not an employee of defendants, he was doing the work of one of his own employees who themselves would have been entitled to the benefit of the safety order. Mula v. Meyer, 132 Cal.App.2d 279, 284, 282 P.2d 107; Slovick v. James I. Barnes Const. Co., 142 Cal.App.2d 618, 298 P.2d 923. Plaintiff for the time being, was of the class of his employees. While he was shingling the roof he was exposed to the same dangers as other workmen, needed the same protection, and, we think, was entitled to it. It was the duty of defendants to comply with the safety order as a protection to men who would be working on the roof under engagement by and for the benefit of place of employment safe as required by law or lawful order.

"(b) [Standards: Uniform safety devices, etc.] Fix reasonable standards and prescribe, modify, and enforce reasonable orders for the adoption, installation, use, maintenance, and operation of reasonably uniform safety devices, safeguards, and other means or methods of protection, which are necessary to carry out all laws and lawful orders relative to the protection of the life and safety of employees in employments and places of employment.

"(c) [Construction, repair and maintenance standards] Fix and order reasonable standards for the construction, repair and maintenance of places of employment necessary to make them safe.

"(d) [Other acts.] Require the performance of any other act which the protection of the life and safety of the employees in employments and places of employment reasonably demands.

"[Signing general orders.] General orders issued under this section must be signed by three members of the board."

3. " 'Employment' includes the carrying on of any trade, enterprise, project, industry, business, occupation or work, including all excavation, demolition and construction work, or any process or operation in any way related thereto, in which any person is engaged or permitted to work for hire except household domestic service."

" 'Employer' shall have the same meaning as in section 3300 and shall also include every person having direction, management, control, or custody of any employment, place of employment, or any employee."

" 'Employee' means every person who is required or directed by any employer, to engage in any employment, or to go to work or be at any time in any place of employment."

defendants. We think that duty was extended to plaintiff when he took his place beside or in the place of one of his workmen. This definition of the duty of defendants seems to us just and reasonable and an application of section 1571 (a) in accordance with its clear purpose.

Our views have support in the statement of learned counsel for defendants, found in their closing brief, "The requirements are clearly not meant for the benefit of all persons on the premises during construction, but for workmen only."

We have not overlooked the claim of defendants that there was no direct evidence that the hole had been "framed" which was a condition to the duty to cover it or fence it. We think the evidence left no doubt that the hole was framed; otherwise defendants would not have had plaintiff putting on the roof.

We, therefore, hold that it was not error to give the instruction on the applicability of section 1571(a).

[3] But, although the foregoing instruction was not erroneous, we are of the opinion that prejudicial error was committed in the giving of another of plaintiff's instructions. At the request of the plaintiff the court gave an instruction as set out in the margin.⁴ Defendants say that the concluding sentence of the instruction was not only erroneous but that the effect of it was to direct the jury to determine the issue of contributory negligence in favor of the plaintiff. We are obliged to agree that such is the case. Except for the concluding sentence the instruction was a correct statement of the law.

4. "A person who, himself, in exercising ordinary care has a right to assume that others, too, will perform their duty under the law, and he has a further right to rely and act on that assumption. Thus it is not negligence for such a person to fail to anticipate injury which can come to him only from a violation of law or duty by another. However, an exception should be noted: The rights just defined do not exist when it is reasonably apparent to one, or in the exer-

[4] There was ample evidence to justify a finding that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence. He was an experienced roofer. He knew the houses were to have chimneys. On the day preceding the accident he had been working on the roof for several hours. It was the practice to cover holes left in a roof with tarpaper to protect the material underneath. Plaintiff had knowledge of this practice. He did not look at the plans nor did he make an inspection of the roof nor any inquiry to learn where a chimney was to go or whether an opening had been left for a chimney. These facts of themselves would have supported a finding that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence. Although he had a right to assume that if an opening had been left in the roof for a chimney it would have been planked over or fenced as required by the safety order, the right to act upon the assumption was dependent upon his exercising ordinary care to learn whether there were any holes in the roof. The fact that there was no fence around the hole did not relieve him from that duty of care. The question of his contributory negligence was the one upon which the case would naturally turn. In view of the evidence the only reasonable conclusion was that defendants had not complied with the safety order and were therefore guilty of negligence. If plaintiff was free from contributory negligence the negligence of the defendants would have been the sole proximate cause of the accident. There was no evidence that defendants were negligent except with respect to their failure to comply with the safety order. The issue was narrowed down to the question whether plaintiff, through recise of ordinary care would be apparent to him that another is not going to perform his duty. Thus in the instant case, the plaintiff has a right to rely on the presumption that defendants complied with the law requiring that all roof openings be covered with planks and it was not contributory negligence in failing to anticipate injury which resulted from a violation of this law."

liance upon the assumption that since there was no railing there was no hole, was guilty of negligence in failing to discover whether a hole had been left for a chimney either by inspection or by making inquiry.

[5] The doctrine that one may assume that others will obey the law and exercise due care is a dangerous one. Any one who places too great reliance upon it is likely not to be long for this world. When a jury is instructed upon the doctrine of reliance, nothing could be more important than a clear statement of the proviso that in order to rely upon the assumption one must himself be free from negligence and that he must use ordinary care to learn whether those upon whose conduct he relies are complying with their duties. The rule was sufficiently stated in the part of the instruction which preceded the last sentence. In other instructions the court had defined contributory negligence as a failure to exercise ordinary care under the circumstances. Except for the italicized portion of the instruction the court's statements of the law were in the abstract. The questioned statement made direct application of the law to the facts of the case. The clause commencing "Thus in the instant case," would convey the same meaning as if it had read "In view of the evidence and the rules just stated the plaintiff had a right to rely on the presumption that defendants complied with the law" etc. He did not have that right unless he was free from negligence. Again the court said "it was not contributory negligence in failing to anticipate injury which resulted from a violation of this law." That was the precise question the jury had to decide. Plaintiff says that the jury would have read into the instruction the exception previously stated. We do not believe so. The exception was stated as an abstract proposition. It was left out of the concluding sentence undoubtedly by design. If the court had intended to state that in view of all of the evidence in the case it appeared as a matter of law that plaintiff was not guilty of negligence in failing to discover the hole in the roof it could scarcely have composed a more appropriate statement for that purpose. "Thus in the instant case," encompasses all the evidence and the legal principles which had a bearing upon the question of plaintiff's contributory negligence. The statement took from the jury the question of plaintiff's contributory negligence.

[6] We cannot say that but for the error the verdict would have been the same. Where grievous error has been committed in the instructions, and there is grave doubt whether but for the error the verdict would have been the same, justice would seem to require that the doubt be resolved in favor of the party whose right to a fair trial has been invaded.

[7, 8] The rule is stated in 24 California Jurisprudence § 101, page 841 et seq., as follows: "The province of the jury is invaded where an instruction assumes the existence of a fact which is not in evidence, or with respect to which there is a conflict of evidence, and any error in this respect is not, it has been held, cured by other charges which submit to the jury the question whether such fact exists." An imposing array of authorities supporting the rule will be found on page 663, 44 Cal.2d 649, 284 P.2d 487, at page 495 (Pauly v. King). The failure to apply the rule in the present case would be to ignore it. We are firmly persuaded that the error was seriously prejudicial to defendants.

[9-13] One other claim of error merits some consideration. Defendants requested and the court refused instructions to the effect that one who is invited to enter upon an uncompleted building accepts an invitation to enter upon it in its existing condition and assumes the risk of whatever he may encounter, citing Ambrose v. Allen, 113 Cal.App. 107, 298 P. 169; Kolburn v. P. J. Walker Co., 38 Cal.App.2d 545, 101 P.2d 747; Irvine v. J. F. Shea Company, Inc., 41 Cal.App.2d 458, 107 P.2d 80; Mitchell v. A. J. Bayer Co., 126 Cal.App.2d 501, 272 P.2d 870. We do not believe the court was in error in refusing this instruction. It was an incorrect statement of the law because it would have imposed upon plaintiff not only the duty to anticipate dangerous conditions existing in the building which involved no violation of law on the part of defendants but also a duty to anticipate any and all conditions that might exist by reason of violations of law by them. Safety regulations and other legislation of like import are matters of public policy. It would be against that policy to penalize persons who are innocently injured through violations of law. The rule that one need not in the exercise of ordinary care anticipate violations of law by others should not be overridden by the rule relied upon by defendants, namely, that one who enters an uncompleted building assumes the risk inherent therein. In the present case it is sufficient to say that the rule of assumption of risk is not to be applied in cases of violations of statutory law such as the safety orders we are considering. We therefore hold that when plaintiff went upon the roof of defendants' building he did not as a matter of law assume the risk involved in defendants' failure to comply with the safety order.

[14] We do not believe the court was in error in refusing defendants' instruction to the effect that plaintiff was conclusively presumed to have knowledge of all that his employee learned or could have learned from an examination of the building plans. The instruction would have charged plaintiff with actual knowledge of the location of the hole that was left for a chimney. Defendants have cited no case which carries the rule of imputed knowledge to such an extent, and it could not reasonably be extended so as to charge plaintiff with knowledge of the location of holes on the roof for the sole reason that his estimator had seen the plans. He was not charged with the duty of locating holes in the roof for plaintiff's information.

[15] The question whether a new trial should have been granted on the ground of newly discovered evidence is moot.

The judgment is reversed.

Oct. 23, 1956.

Rehearing Denied Nov. 14, 1956.

Hearing Denied Dec. 19, 1956.

Action against proprietor of wrestling club and operator of a refreshment concession for damages for injuries sustained by spectator at a wrestling exhibition when he was struck by a bottle of soft drink thrown by another spectator. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, A. A. Scott, J., entered judgment of nonsuit and spectator appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Parker Wood, J., held, inter alia, that question of whether proprietor of wrestling club used reasonable care to protect spectator from injury from a glass beverage bottle thrown by another spectator was for the jury.

Judgment reversed in part and affirmed in part.

1. Trial \S 139(1)

A motion for nonsuit may properly be granted when, and only when, disregarding conflicting evidence, and giving to plaintiff's evidence all the value to which it is legally entitled, indulging in every legitimate inference which may be drawn from that evidence, the result is a determination that there is no evidence of sufficient substantiality to support a verdict in favor of the plaintiff.

2. Negligence \S 48, 50

The owner of a place of business must use reasonable care to protect his invitees against injury through the negligent or wrongful acts of other invitees on the premises where he has reasonable cause to anticipate such acts and the probability of injury resulting therefrom, and he is under a duty to protect his invitees by taking appropriate measures to restrain conduct by third persons which he should be aware of and which he should realize is dangerous.

3. Theaters and Shows ☞6(33)

In action against proprietor of a wrestling club for personal injuries sustained by a spectator at wrestling exhibition when he was struck by a bottle of beverage thrown by another spectator, question of whether proprietor had used reasonable care to protect spectator from injury from the thrown beverage bottle was for the jury.

4. Theaters and Shows ☞6(14)

An operator of a refreshment stand at a wrestling exhibition did not owe a duty to a spectator to protect him from injury resulting from the act of another spectator in throwing a bottled beverage, since the operator of the concession neither owned nor controlled the wrestling exhibition.

In a jury trial, a nonsuit was granted. Plaintiff appeals from the judgment of nonsuit.

On June 4, 1952, plaintiff attended a wrestling exhibition at the Olympic Auditorium in Los Angeles. He had attended wrestling matches regularly at that place for approximately four years. On said June 4 he paid the required admission fee and sat in the end seat of the press row, apparently the row next to the wrestling ring. The wrestlers in the main event were one Romero and Dangerous Danny McShane.

Plaintiff testified that for approximately five minutes before the first fall in the main event, McShane was very rough, was pulling hair, pulling trunks and jumping outside the ring; for two or three minutes before and two or three minutes after the first fall, the spectators on the opposite side of the ring from plaintiff were jumping up, fighting, booing and throwing paper cups, peanut sacks and "stuff like that" into the ring, and several persons were standing in the aisle shouting and throwing various articles; after the first fall McShane "strutted" around the ring, shouted at the customers on the opposite side of the ring (opposite plaintiff) and shook his fist at them; plaintiff stopped looking at the customers in order to talk to defendant Mr. Eaton, who had come to the place where plaintiff was sitting (plaintiff and Mr. Eaton were acquaintances); then plaintiff heard a commotion and turned, "and all of a sudden a terrific force hit me [him] in the mouth"; he looked down and saw that a full bottle of "coke" had fallen on his foot. He testified further that one of his teeth had cut through his upper lip, several of his teeth were loosened, and his jaw was broken.

On cross-examination he testified that about three or four minutes elapsed between the first fall and the time that he was struck in the mouth by the Coca-Cola bottle; he did not know where the bottle came from; on previous occasions when he had purchased liquid refreshment at the auditorium, the vendor put the refreshment in a paper cup; while he was in the dressing room receiving treatment for his injuries, the man who threw the bottle was brought into the room; the man said that he "lost his head" and threw the bottle.

Defendant Alvah M. Eaton testified that he was the sole proprietor of the Olympic Boxing and Wrestling Club; he conducted the activities of the club at the Olympic Auditorium in Los Angeles; there was a 20-foot-square wrestling ring in the center of the auditorium; the ring was enclosed by ropes and was surrounded by a ledge that was 2 to 4 feet wide; the seating capacity of the auditorium was 10,400; he employed ushers, private police and Los Angeles police officers to maintain order—the number employed at any event depended on the number of spectators expected; he estimated that about 5,000 spectators were present the night that plaintiff was injured; he did not know how many employees were on duty that night; at any wrestling or boxing match the spectators become excited, and sometimes they are more excited than at other times; Romero and McShane were known in the wrestling profession to be good drawing attractions; McShane was considered to be a rougher type of wrestler than the usual wrestler. Mr. Eaton also testified that he had a rule that a bottle should not be given to a spectator; he had instructed his employees not to permit a spectator to obtain possession of a bottle under any circumstance; he had not instructed the ushers, vendors, private guards or police officers, who were employed by him, to quell a disturbance that might arise; he had seen spectators at the auditorium throw paper cups, popcorn wrappers, cigar butts and articles of that kind on occasions previous to the night that plaintiff was injured; it was very seldom that he had seen such throwing; he had instructed his employees to stop spectators from throwing things. Mr. Eaton testified further that he was in the immediate presence of plaintiff at the time plaintiff was injured; he saw plaintiff immediately after plaintiff was struck; plaintiff was bleeding slightly at the mouth at that time.

Mrs. Lopez testified that she attended a wrestling match at the Olympic Auditorium in Los Angeles when Romero and McShane were the contestants; she sat next to the aisle in the 10th or 12th row from the ring; for four or five minutes before the first fall, McShane pulled Romero's trunks and hair; everyone was excited and very angry, especially the man who sat across the aisle from her to her left (later identified as the man who threw the bottle); the man used bad language before the match began and became angry when McShane bit Romero; the man used very bad language and threw cups during the four or five minutes before the first fall; McShane went outside the ropes, onto the ledge surrounding the ring, and then (upon returning to the ring) gave Romero the "atomic bomb" or "drop"; the referee raised McShane's hand (indicating that McShane had won the fall); at that time, a boy about 17 years of age, who was carrying a tray containing Coca-Cola bottles, stood in the aisle close to the man who sat across the aisle from her; the boy was looking at the wrestling ring; the man took a Coca-Cola bottle from the tray with his right hand and threw the bottle at McShane who was in the ring; the boy "didn't do anything" when the man took the bottle; she saw the bottle strike plaintiff who was seated in the first row on the opposite side of the ring from where she was seated.

Defendant Mrs. Eaton testified that there was an arrangement with her husband, Alvah M. Eaton, whereby she and her husband's father, Edwin Eaton, had and operated the concessions at the Olympic Auditorium; she and Edwin Eaton operated the concessions under the name of Olympic Auditorium Concessions; all the "cokes" dispensed at the auditorium from the cases carried by the vendors were dispensed by employees of Olympic Auditorium Concessions; the vendors were instructed to retain all full and all empty Coca-Cola bottles, not to release the bottles, and to watch the bottles to the extent that they would not get out of the vendors' possession.

[1] "A motion for nonsuit may properly be granted '* * * when, and only when, disregarding conflicting evidence, and giving to plaintiff's evidence all the value to which it is legally entitled, indulging in every legitimate inference which may be drawn from that evidence, the result is a determination that there is no evidence of sufficient substantiality to support a verdict in favor of the plaintiff.' [Citations.] 'Unless it can be said as a matter of law, that * * * no other reasonable conclusion is legally deducible from the evidence * * * the trial court is not justified in taking the case from the jury.' [Citations.]" Palmquist v. Mercer, 43 Cal.2d 92, 95, 272 P.2d 26, 28.

[2, 3] The owner of a place of business must use reasonable care to protect his invitees "against injury through the negligent or wrongful acts of other invitees on the premises where he has reasonable cause to anticipate such acts and the probability of injury resulting therefrom." Winn v. Holmes, 143 Cal.App.2d 501, 299 P.2d 994, 996. He is under a duty to protect his invitees "by taking appropriate measures to restrain conduct by third persons which he should be aware of and which he should realize is dangerous." Edwards v. Hollywood Canteen, 27 Cal.2d 802, 810, 167 P.2d 729, 733. In the present case the evidence showed that for six or seven minutes before plaintiff was struck by the bottle, the spectators on the opposite side of the ring from plaintiff were fighting and throwing various articles. There was no evidence that the ushers, private police, police officers or anyone made any attempt to stop the fighting among the spectators or to stop the throwing of things by the spectators. At the time the spectators were fighting and throwing various articles, the boy, who was carrying the tray of Coca-Cola bottles and was looking at the ring, stood close to the man, who threw the bottle—the man who for several minutes had been angry and had been using bad language and throwing paper cups. No one made any attempt to stop the man from taking or throwing the bottle. Mr. Eaton testified that he did not know how many ushers, private police or police officers were present at the auditorium the night plaintiff was injured; he had not instructed the vendors, or the ushers, private police or officers employed by him, to quell a disturbance; he had instructed his employees not to permit a spectator to obtain possession of a bottle under any circumstances; on previous occasions he had seen spectators throw paper cups, cigar butts and articles of that kind; he had instructed his employees to stop spectators from throwing things.

It cannot be said as a matter of law that defendant Mr. Eaton used reasonable care to protect plaintiff from injury. Whether he used reasonable care to protect plaintiff was a question of fact for the jury. See Stockwell v. Board of Trustees, 64 Cal.App.2d 197, 204-205, 148 P.2d 405; Thomas v. Studio Amusements, Inc., 50 Cal.App.2d 538, 123 P.2d 552; Philpot v. Brooklyn Baseball Club, 1951, 303 N.Y. 116, 100 N.E.2d 164. In Philpot v. Brooklyn Baseball Club, supra, plaintiff, a spectator at a ball game, was in a seat in a lower stand (of the grandstand) and a part of a broken Coca-Cola bottle fell or was thrown from an upper stand (of the grandstand) and struck plaintiff. The court said therein 303 N.Y. at page 121, 100 N.E. 2d at page 167: "Upon this record we cannot say as a matter of law that the means adopted by the defendant Baseball Club were sufficient to protect the plaintiff as a spectator at Ebbets Field from risk of bodily harm reasonably to be foreseen from the misuse or mishandling of empty glass beverage bottles." In the present case the motion for nonsuit as to Mr. Eaton should not have been granted.

[4] It does not appear that defendant Mrs. Eaton, as an operator of the refreshment concession, owed a duty to spectators to protect them from injury resulting from wrongful acts of other spectators. In Philpot v. Brooklyn Baseball Club, supra, the person who operated the bottled beverages concession at the ball park was also a defendant. The court therein said 303 N.Y. at page 121, 100 N.E.2d at page 167 that the concessionaire neither owned nor controlled the baseball park (Ebbets Field), "nor was responsible for collecting spectators for profit" and there was "no proof of breach of duty owing to the plaintiff by that defendant." A motion for a nonsuit as to Mrs. Eaton was properly granted.

The judgment is reversed as to defendant Alvah M. Eaton; and is affirmed as to defendant Mrs. Alvah M. Eaton.

John C. O'STEEN and Leland Blair, Plaintiffs and Appellants,

v.

Alys S. CRAIG and Charles C. Breckenridge, Defendants,

Alys S. Craig, Respondent.

Civ. 21555.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California.

Oct. 23, 1956.

Rehearing Denied Nov. 13, 1956.

Hearing Denied Dec. 19, 1956.

Action on note executed in State of Nevada, wherein maker made motion for order to vacate an attachment levied upon certain of her real property located in California to satisfy unpaid note. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, LeRoy Dawson, J., dissolved writ of attachment and payees appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Fourth, J., held that where note executed in Nevada as payment of part of purchase price of hotel in Nevada recited that payment thereof could be demanded by holder within or without State of Nevada, parties contemplated that payment might well be demanded in California and consequently property of maker of note located in California could be attached in satisfaction of unpaid note under statute providing for such attachment in an action upon an unsecured claim based on a contract payable in the state.

Reversed and remanded with directions.

1. Attachment ⇐5

Bills and Notes ⇐123

Where note, which was executed by purchaser in Nevada as payment on purchase price of hotel in Nevada, recited that maker promised to make payment wherever demanded by holder thereof, parties to the note contemplated that demand could be in California and consequently property of maker located in California could be properly attached to satisfy note under California statute providing for such attachment in an action on an unsecured claim based on a contract payable in the state. West's Ann. Code Civ.Proc., § 537, subd. 1.

2. Payment ⇐6

In absence of any agreement or stipulation to contrary, a debt is payable at place where creditor resides, or at his place of business, if he has one, or wherever else he may be found, and ordinarily it is duty of debtor to seek creditor for purpose of making payment, provided that creditor is within state of his residence when payment is due, unless provided otherwise by statute.

3. Payment ⇐6

When place of payment is fixed by agreement express or implied, payment must be made at place agreed on unless both parties consent that it be made elsewhere and creditor should be present in person or by agent to receive it, and also where a debt is payable at either of two or more places, payment must be made wholly in one place or another and not in part at each place.

Culver Van Buren, Burbank, for appellants.

John J. Bradley, Los Angeles, for respondent.

FOURT, Justice.

This is an appeal by the plaintiffs from an order granting the motion of defendant Alys S. Craig to vacate an attachment levied upon certain of her real property. The motion was made upon the ground that the note sued upon was neither made nor was it payable in the state of California.

It appears from the record that on or about July 31, 1954, plaintiffs and defendants entered into a contract of sale wherein plaintiffs agreed to sell and defendants agreed to buy the Farris Hotel and Casino in Winnemucca, Nevada, for a consideration of $85,000. The agreement, made and entered into in Winnemucca, set forth that "Charles C. Breckenridge, of the County of Los Angeles State of California, and Alys Craig, of the County of Los Angeles State of California," would be referred to as the buyers, and further provided for the execution of certain promissory notes to evidence the payments to be made. On July 31, 1954, a promissory note in the sum of $20,000 was executed by Alys Craig, the respondent herein, in favor of O'Steen and Blair, as a part of the transaction and apparently pursuant to the agreement, which note reads in part as follows:

"* * * As hereinafter agreed, after date, for value received, I promise to pay to John C. O'Steen and Leland B. Blair, or order at Winnemucca, Nevada, or wherever payment may be demanded by the holder hereof, within or without the State of Nevada, the sum of Twenty Thousand ($20,000.00), in lawful money of the United States of America, at five (5) per cent rate of interest from date until paid. * * *"

The note was not paid on the due date and demand was made of the maker that she pay the same at the office of the attorney for the plaintiffs in Burbank, California.

Affidavits were filed by the appellants and respondent. Appellants stated in substance in their affidavits that the defendants were at all times residents of the county of Los Angeles; that respondent Alys Craig did, on or about September 1, 1954, in her home in Van Nuys, California, give to O'Steen her check in the sum of $5,000 drawn on a California bank, pursuant to the terms of the agreement. These statements were not denied by the respondent.

The sole question involved is whether the trial court was correct in discharging that portion of the attachment which was based upon the promissory note referred to.

Section 537, Code of Civil Procedure, provides in part as follows:

"The plaintiff, at the time of issuing the summons, or at any time afterward, may have the property of the defendant attached, as security for the satisfaction of any judgment that may be recovered, unless the defendant gives security to pay such judgment, as in this chapter provided, in the following cases:

"1. [Unsecured claims on contract.] In an action upon a contract, express or implied, for the direct payment of money, where the contract is made or is payable in this State, and is not secured by any mortgage, deed of trust or lien upon real or personal property, or any pledge of personal property, or, if originally so secured, such security has, without any act of the plaintiff, or the person to whom the security was given, become valueless; provided, that an action upon any liability, existing under the laws of this State, of a spouse, relative or kindred, for the support, maintenance, care or necessities furnished to the other spouse, or other relatives or kindred, shall be deemed to be an action upon an implied contract within the term as used throughout all subdivisions of this section." (Emphasis added.)

We are of the opinion that, under the facts of this case, an attachment should be permitted.

The respondent has placed strong reliance on the cases of Dulton v. Shelton, 3 Cal. 206; Eck v. Hoffman, 55 Cal. 501; Drake v. De Witt, 1 Cal.App. 617, 82 P. 982 and Atwood v. Little Bonanza, etc., Co., 13 Cal.App. 594, 110 P. 344, each of which are factually dissimilar to the instant case. In the Dulton case, decided in 1853, the action was brought by the plaintiff, a resident of Boston, Massachusetts, to recover of the defendants, residents of San Francisco, money for goods sold by the plaintiff to the defendants. The evidence was that the defendants had purchased, on several occasions, goods from plaintiff in Boston and had remitted payment to Boston; that no payment had been made to plaintiff in San Francisco, nor demanded of defendants, and the letters of the plaintiff to defendants accompanying the invoices of goods forwarded stated, "funds in payment of the same to be in Boston two-and-a-half months after arrival of vessel." "In future I should prefer remittances, if convenient, being made direct to me." "Cash to be in Boston two-and-a-half months after arrival of vessel." "In no case omit remitting." There was also evidence that one of the partners, defendants, resided in Boston for some time during the relations between the plaintiff and defendants. The plaintiff contended that although the contract was not, by its terms, payable in this state, yet because the defendants resided here, the action was transitory and therefore payable here, and he was entitled to the attachment. The court said, 3 Cal. at page 208: "We can only follow the rule in this case by denying the right of attachment, except where the contract is made within this State, or if made without it, then accompanied by a stipulation between the parties to it, that the money is to be paid here."

The Eck case was one on several dishonored bills of exchange drawn by one of the defendants upon the other in favor of the plaintiff. At that time all of the parties resided in Germany and the bills were drawn and payable there. After the acceptance and before the maturity of the bills, both defendants left Germany and came to the United States under an assumed name. They then came to California. The affidavit for the attachment did not state that there was any express stipulation that the bills should be paid in this state. The theory of the plaintiff was that although the bills were drawn at one place in Germany, and payable in the same country, on their dishonor they became payable wherever the defendants might be found. The court, in deciding the case, said 55 Cal. at page 502: "That is true in a general sense, but that is not the sense in which the phrase 'is made or is payable in this State' is used in the statute. If a contract is not made in this State, there must be an express stipulation that it shall be paid in this State to authorize the issuance of an attachment in an action upon it."

In Drake v. De Witt, supra, the plaintiff brought an action to recover commissions earned under a written contract made in Minnesota. Under the contract Drake took the Saint Paul agency for the sale of certain California lands. As the court said, 1 Cal.App. at page 618, 82 P. at page 982: "The contract before us shows on its face that it was made, and was to be performed by Drake, in the state of Minnesota. There is nothing to indicate that commissions earned were to be paid in California. The stipulations touching monthly reports, and commissions on sales influenced by Drake, but consummated here, evince a contrary intention, and the presumption is that payment was due where the contract was made and the services were rendered." The stipulations touching the monthly reports evinced a contrary intention. The court, in deciding the case said, 1 Cal.App. at page 619, 82 P. at page 982: "Her right to an attachment in any event depends upon the view that this was a contract for the direct payment of money, and it is essential to such right that the agreement itself contain some provision indicating that such money was payable in this state."

In the Atwood case the action was upon certain negotiable instruments executed by the defendant corporation at Boston, Massachusetts, without definite place of payment therein stated. An attachment issued and a motion was made to dissolve the same upon the ground that the instruments were made in another state and were not payable in this state. Affidavits were presented by the defendant at the hearing of the motion to the effect that the corporation was a foreign company, that the members of the board of directors were all non-residents of California, and that the notes were executed in Massachusetts. The plaintiffs filed affidavits to the effect that notwithstanding the omission to specify the place of payment, it was understood and agreed, when the notes were delivered, that the same were payable either in Massachusetts or California. The trial court denied the motion to dissolve. The appellate court reversed the order and said in determining the case, 13 Cal.App. at pages 596-597, 110 P. at pages 344, 345: "But we are confronted with the construction of such section as applied to attachment proceedings in Tuller v. Arnold, 93 Cal. [166], 168, 28 P. [863], 864, where it is said: 'The contract, having been made in Illinois, was presumptively to be performed there, and an attachment could not be taken out here, even although it is true in a general sense that the money was payable wherever the defendants could be found. To authorize the issuance of an attachment, the money must have been made payable in this state by the contract itself'—citing authorities. The right to an attachment in any event depends upon the contract being for the direct payment of money, 'and it is essential to such right that the agreement itself contain some provision indicating that such money was payable in this state.' Drake v. De Witt, 1 Cal.App. 618, 82 P. 982; citing in support, Dulton v. Shelton, 3 Cal. 208; Eck v. Hoffman, 55 Cal. 502. Accepting this as the rule, and the terms of the note being admitted, it follows that no evidence was competent which undertook to change or modify the language of the instrument. Whatever may have been the understanding of the parties as to the place of payment, they are concluded by the terms of their written contract and the legal presumptions attaching thereto, whenever they invoke the attachment laws of this state. No conflict arising, therefore, from competent evidence, we are constrained to hold that as a question of law the writ of attachment should have been dissolved, and that the court erred in denying such motion."

In American Industrial Sales Corp. v. Airscope, Inc., 44 Cal.2d 393, at page 400, 282 P.2d 504, at page 508, the court said: "It is apparent from the above analysis that the rule of the Atwood case, on which defendant relies, rests upon the misapplication of certain general language in the earlier cases. Neither reason nor settled general principals sustain such rule, and its declaration in the Atwood case, along with any language in the preceding cases which would lend support thereto, must be disapproved. See, also, Snapp v. Kidder, 200 Cal. 724, 725, 255 P. 183. Adherence to such rule would place an illogical restriction upon the use of parol evidence for the purpose of establishing attachment rights, which restriction does not prevail in fixing the terms of the contract for other purposes. See Love v. Gulyas, 87 Cal.App.2d 608, 614, 197 P.2d 405. The presumption that a contract, silent as to the place of payment, is payable at the place where the creditor resides is not conclusive, but is rebuttable by competent evidence. Such evidence may relate to a contemporaneous oral agreement which accompanies the execution of the written contract and is wholly consistent with the terms thereof."

[1] In the case before us, there is clear language that the money is payable (1) in Winnemucca, Nevada, or (2) wherever the holder might demand payment. It is undisputed in the record that a proper demand for payment was made in Los Angeles county that the money be paid to the plaintiffs in Los Angeles county at a specified address. It seems inescapable that the parties contemplated, at the time of the agreement and the execution of the note in question, that payment might well be demanded in California. The respondent was a resident of Los Angeles county, and plaintiffs stated in their affidavits that they too were residents of Los Angeles county. It is further undisputed that the respondent did make some payment on the obligation, brought into being by the agreement, to the plaintiffs in California. This conduct would seem to bear out the contention that the parties contemplated the obligation being paid in California.

[2, 3] In 70 C.J.S., under the topic Payment, § 6, on pages 217-218, it is set forth:

"As a general rule, in the absence of any agreement or stipulation to the contrary, a debt is payable at the place where the creditor resides, or at his place of business, if he has one, or wherever else he may be found; and ordinarily it is the duty of the debtor to seek the creditor for the purpose of making payment, provided the creditor is within the state of his residence when the payment is due, unless provided otherwise by statute. * * *

"When the place of payment is fixed by agreement, express or implied, payment must be made at the place agreed on unless both parties consent that it be made elsewhere, and the creditor should be present in person or by agent to receive it. Where a debt is payable at either of two or more places, payment must be made wholly in one place or another and not in part at each place."

In American Industrial Sales Corp. v. Aircscope, Inc., supra, after quoting a part of the above statement, the court said, 44 Cal.2d at page 398, 282 P.2d at page 507: "But such presumption is rebuttable, not conclusive; and plaintiff produced evidence of the contemporaneous oral agreement to rebut the presumption as to the place of payment which would otherwise prevail in view of the contract's silence on the subject. There is nothing in the attachment law, Code Civ.Proc., § 537, which would qualify the application of the parol evidence rule in this state for the purpose of establishing the prerequisites for using the attachment process. While the attachment statute must be strictly construed and one seeking to enforce any right thereunder must affirmatively show that the contract agreed upon falls within its terms (5 Cal.Jur.2d § 4, p. 598), still the statute 'must be reasonably and fairly interpreted so as to give [it] an efficient operation, and so as to give effect, if possible, to the expressed intent of the Legislature. A statute should never be construed so strictly as to render it absurd or nugatory.' Walters v. Bank of America, 9 Cal.2d 46, 52, 69 P.2d 839, 842, 110 A.L.R. 1259. One of the purposes of attachment is to afford the creditor security for the payment of unsecured debts and to prevent the debtor's sequestration of funds or fraudulent transfer of assets in an attempt to hinder or defeat the payment of just claims. (5 Cal. Jur.2d § 3, p. 597.)"

True it is that the parties did not provide that the note was payable exclusively in Los Angeles county, California, and nowhere else. However, they did stipulate that the note would be payable "wherever payment may be demanded by the holder hereof, within or without the state of Nevada." It appears to us that California is a place "without the state of Nevada", that a proper demand was made in the state of California, and that an attachment should be granted. Surely, the legislature did not intend to provide that a contract had to be paid exclusively and only in this state before the creditor could have the benefit of the attachment laws of the state of California.

In Tuller v. Arnold, 93 Cal. 166, 168-169, 28 P. 863, 864, the court said:

"The rule that this court will not pass upon the evidence, when conflicting, does not apply where the evidence is all documentary. It is true this court will not interfere with the discretion of the trial court, except where it can plainly see that there has been an abuse of such discretion; but where, in a matter in reference to which this court has equal advantages with the lower court, it is beyond doubt that error has been committed to the prejudice of the appellant, it is the duty of the court to correct the error. Such error must be held to be an abuse of discretion. Every reversal goes upon this theory, and it should make no difference whether the mistake be as to a conclusion from the evidence, or in construing the law, provided it be made equally clear that error has occurred."

The order appealed from is reversed with directions that the cause be remanded for further proceedings in keeping with the views expressed herein.

PEOPLE of the State of California,
Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Richard George WANG and Grace Elizabeth Wang, Defendants and Appellants.

Cr. 1123.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District,
California.

Oct. 23, 1956.

Defendants were convicted of robbery in the first degree and of assault by means of force likely to produce great bodily injury. The Superior Court, San Bernardino County, R. Bruce Findlay, J., entered judgments on verdicts of guilty and orders denying motions for new trial, and from such judgments and orders, defendants appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Barnard, P. J., held that the circumstantial evidence and the inferences that could reasonably be drawn therefrom were sufficient to support convictions.

Judgments and orders affirmed.

I. Assault and Battery ☞92
Robbery ☞24(1)

Circumstantial evidence and the inferences that could reasonably be drawn therefrom were sufficient to support convictions for robbery in the first degree, and assault by means of force likely to produce great bodily injury.

2. Criminal Law ☞379

Ordinarily, character witnesses called by the defense may testify only to general reputation as limited to the neighborhood where accused resides.

3. Criminal Law ☞1170(2)

In prosecution for robbery and assault by means of force likely to produce great bodily injury, accused's certificate of honorable discharge from the army and his service record could not have affected the verdict, and regardless of whether such papers were admissible in evidence as uniform business records to prove the reputation of accused, any error of trial court in removing such papers from evidence and instructing jury to disregard them was not prejudicial to accused. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., §§ 1953e, 1953f.

Thomas M. Eckhardt, San Bernardino, for appellants.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., William E. James, Deputy Atty. Gen., Lowell E. Lathrop, Dist. Atty., J. Steve Williams, Chief Deputy Dist. Atty., San Bernardino, for respondent.

BARNARD, Presiding Justice.

The defendants were charged with robbery, it being charged that on August 7, 1955, they took $526 from one Mimms. In a second count they were charged with assault by means of force likely to produce great bodily injury, alleging an assault on Mimms on the same day. A jury found them guilty of robbery in the first degree on the first count, and guilty as charged in Count II. A motion for new trial was denied and they were sentenced to imprisonment, the sentences on Count II to run concurrently with those imposed as to Count I. They have appealed from the judgments and from the orders denying their motions for a new trial.

It appears that the defendants stayed at a cafe and motel at Searchlight, Nevada, known as the El Rey Club, from August 5 to August 7, 1955, having registered under the name of Wayne. Mr. Mimms, a prospector and dealer in used automobiles, was in a bar at the El Rey Club during the evening of August 7. While he was discussing mining with another patron, Mrs. Wang joined in the conversation. A little later she and Mr. Wang had a conversation with Mimms about mining, during which she showed Mimms a "hunk of tungsten" in which he expressed great interest. About 9 o'clock that evening they left the El Rey and got into the Wangs' car. Mr. Wang was driving, Mrs. Wang sat on the right-hand side, and Mimms sat in the middle. Mrs. Wang testified that she had on a bathing suit, a white beach jacket, and that she did not think she was wearing any shoes.

Mr. Mimms testified that the next thing he remembered after getting in the car with the Wangs was coming to on the desert at about 5 o'clock the next morning. He was then seriously injured and his money was gone. When he recovered consciousness he crawled to the edge of U. S. Highway 66, where he was picked up by a passerby. This passerby testified that Mimms was in a "very bad condition" and had blood all over him; that he asked Mimms if he had been hit by a car and Mimms replied "No", that a man and woman had beaten him up and robbed him of over $500. The passerby took him to a hospital in Needles.

The point where Mimms was picked up was approximately seven or eight miles west of Needles, fifty miles from Searchlight, and a mile or so east of the point where the road from Searchlight joins Highway 66. Officers who went to the scene early that morning found a blood-stained depression in the sand 161 feet from the highway, where the assault had apparently taken place. Near the depression there were "scuffle marks", and a good sized rock which is largely covered by bloodstains.

Some blood was found on nearby twigs, there were spatters of blood on a paper found in a bush at the scene, and blood on a pink kleenex which was of the same fabrication and color as that of a box of kleenex found in the car of the defendants at the time of their arrest. All of this blood was human blood of the same type as that of Mimms. There were tire marks near the highway where a vehicle had driven in and backed out again, apparently for the purpose of turning around. There were three sets of footprints going from the highway to the depression, and two sets of footprints returning to the highway, one of them a set of bare footprints. The soil was such that plaster casts could not be taken of the footprints.

A doctor who examined Mimms at the hospital, testified that he was in a state of severe shock and partially conscious; that he had been brutally injured on the left side and front of his head, including the left eye; that both upper and lower jaws were fractured and the bones around the left eye were also broken; and that two of his teeth were gone and the gums brutally lacerated. The doctor also testified that in his opinion two instruments had been used in inflicting the wounds on the victim, one a heavy blunt instrument of some kind and the other could have been a bullet since he found a round wound of entrance on the left side of the skull with the point of exit some three inches away which he thought could have been caused by a .22 bullet.

The defendants were arrested on the afternoon of August 8, in Ontario where they were living in a trailer. Their automobile had just been washed and the rubber floor mat in front had just been washed and a portion was still wet. The seat covers on the front seat had been torn off, leaving shreds of fabric around the fastenings. A .22 rifle was found in the car, and a .25 automatic pistol was found at the head of their bed in the trailer. Cartridges for the pistol and the rifle were also found. Mr. Wang testified that he did not remember whether or not he had this pistol with him on the trip to Searchlight. The white jacket which Mrs. Wang had been wearing and the khaki shorts which Mr. Wang had been wearing when they left the El Rey Club had been washed and were still wet. When he was arrested Mr. Wang told the officers that he had been wearing blue shorts that night, but it was later established that he had been wearing khaki shorts. When an officer asked him why he had removed the seat covers he said that "they had gotten dirty." An expert witness testified that he found traces on the white jacket and khaki shorts which indicated that they had been contaminated with blood, but the blood had been removed to the point where no other tests were available. He also found spots on the washed rubber floor mat which he identified as human blood. Mr. Wang's right hand was swollen and pictures of it were introduced into evidence. He testified that he had fallen and injured his hand on August 6, but a dealer in the El Rey Club testified that she observed nothing unusual about his hand when he was playing 21 on Sunday evening. The defendants did not check out from their motel room at the El Rey, and they had mailed the key to the room and payment therefor on the morning of August 8.

While in the bar at Searchlight Mimms had displayed considerable money, talked of his recent good luck in Las Vegas, and had been buying drinks for others very freely. There was evidence that just before these parties left the El Rey that night the defendants offered to show Mimms their claim near Needles where they said the tungsten which Mrs. Wang had shown him had come from, and he expressed a desire to see where it came from. Mrs. Wang testified she could not remember whether her husband talked about owning a claim. Mr. Wang testified that they left Searchlight about 9:00 P.M.; that they had been talking to Mimms, and it was about time for them to eat; that Mimms said he would buy their dinners if they would go to Needles with him, and that he knew a good place to eat in Needles; that he asked Mimms "Why go that far? (about 40 miles) We have a good place to eat right here"; that Mimms insisted and they agreed to go to Needles; that they went out and got in the car; that he backed out or drove out onto the highway and "we no more than got started when Mimms opened the right door"; that Mrs. Wang shut the door and Mimms repeatedly opened it so he drove slowly and then stopped; that before he got fully stopped Mimms got out and started walking back to the El Rey Club; that he called to Mimms to wait but Mimms, who was walking fast, waived and said "Go on", so they "went right straight home"; that they had not checked out and he had forgotten to pay and had the key with him; that the next morning he mailed the key and pay for the room to the motel; that when they reached Highway 66 they turned west and went to Amboy, and then turned south and went through Twentynine Palms; that they stopped to rest between Amboy and Twentynine Palms, "It is quite a winding road there, not too easy to drive"; that they got home about 2:30 A.M., unloaded part of their things, and then went to bed; that about 10:30 the next morning he washed the car and tore off the seat covers which were on the back of the front seat; that he then burned the seat covers; that he could not explain what appeared to be blood on the right-hand side of the floor mat, but explained that his shorts and the white jacket had been washed with a handkerchief on which he had gotten some blood from a blood blister on his hand; that when they left Searchlight none of them was intoxicated; and that when they left to go to Needles to eat dinner he planned to return to the motel. Mrs. Wang testified largely to the same effect. There were some discrepancies between her testimony and that of her husband, and some discrepancies between their statements to the officers and their testimony at the trial.

Appellants' main contention is that the evidence is insufficient to support the verdict. It is argued that in view of the evidence it is physically impossible that they could have committed this assault on Mr. Mimms. It is argued that the doctor who treated Mimms on the early morning of the 8th testified that he tied up the arteries on his face that were bleeding, that there had been a considerable amount of blood and "everything was a massive blood clot", and that the injuries to the victim's face must have resulted from a number of blows; that since it thus appears that the victim must have bled profusely, that blood must have splattered over a considerable distance during the succession of blows with a heavy rock; that this is confirmed by the fact that blood was found on twigs and on the paper in the bush near the depression; that an expert witness testified as to the difficulty in removing all evidence of blood from hands or clothing in a short time; that if appellants had been present it would have been impossible for them to remove all evidence of blood from their hands, and some residue would have been left on the steering wheel and gearshift knob of their automobile, where none was found; and that it would have been impossible for them to have removed all evidence of blood from their clothing which must have been there if they had been present.

This argument was one for the jury, and it does not necessarily follow that the evidence establishes the physical impossibility relied on. Most of the blood indications found were in the depression referred to, and on the rock that was apparently used. This depression was about the size that would have been made by Mimms' head, and it could reasonably be inferred that most, if not all, of the blows to his head were made while he was lying on the ground and that the depression in the sand resulted from these multiple blows. The rock itself was large enough to afford the assailant considerable protection from any spurting blood. Also, the blood on the twigs and the paper may have gotten there when the victim tried to get up after he became conscious. Moreover, the evidence indicates that there had been some blood on appellants' clothing. If any blood did get on their hands, it may reasonably be inferred that they could be sufficiently and quickly cleaned so that they would leave no "residue" on the steering wheel or other hard surfaces of the car, regardless of whether they could be sufficiently cleaned to have immediately foiled a full scientific examination. The entire question was one of fact for the jury, and the evidence is far from sufficient to establish that the only inference, or the most reasonable inference, to be drawn from the evidence in this connection is the one relied on by the appellants.

At the oral argument the appellants also argued that the evidence showed that the bullets for the .22 rifle were lead bullets and that if that rifle had been used the course of the bullet from the point of entrance to the point of exit would necessarily have shown lead tracings. While the doctor who examined the victim the next morning testified that from the size of this entrance hole he thought it might have been made by a .22 bullet it is equally possible that it was caused by a .25 caliber bullet, which would make a hole so nearly the same size as not to be easily distinguished. There was evidence that the .25 caliber pistol found in appellants' trailer had in it copper-jacketed bullets, and that such a bullet would not leave lead tracings. Moreover, the expert testified that a lead bullet will not leave tracings "if it passes through soft tissue parts"; that there was about a quarter of an inch of soft tissue between the bone and outer surface of the scalp where this bullet went through; and that there was no evidence here that "a bullet had at any time impinged itself upon the bone."

[1] The contention that it is physically impossible that the appellants could have committed this assault cannot be sustained, and the evidence is otherwise sufficient. In addition to the other circumstances pointing to their guilt, portions of the story told by the appellants would naturally have an adverse effect upon its credibility, and some of the explanations given were far from satisfactory. The jury could well question the quick washing of certain articles, including the floor mat of the car, and the explanation for the sudden decision to remove and burn the seat covers does not seem plausible in view of all of the evidence. The victim was an elderly man interested in mining, and it would seem more probable that he would be interested in going to see a claim producing this tungsten ore than in going some 40 miles to eat at that time of night. If, as appellants stated, they were reluctant to go to Needles and wanted to eat where they were it seems peculiar that when Mimms got out of the car, almost as soon as he entered it, they would not have gone back to the El Rey to eat. This is especially true since Mr. Wang testified that it was "time to eat" when the trip to Needles was first mentioned and that when they left for Needles they intended to return to the El Rey. If they changed their minds and decided to go on home, while still at or near Searchlight, it would strain anyone's credulity to accept their explanation that they gave no thought to such a thing as the advisability of checking out and paying their bill. The same may be said of the reason given by Mr. Wang for registering at the El Rey Club under a different name. It also seems unusual that the appellants, after they were on Highway 66, would have turned off at Amboy and gone over a winding road through the foothills which was "not too easy to drive," thus leaving the main highway to San Bernardino and points west of there. The appellants also testified that Mimms, when he got out of their car, was worried about having left his own car and the things he had in it. That he would again leave later that night, with another man and woman, seems improbable. While the evidence is circumstantial it is sufficient, with the inferences that the jury could reasonably draw from it, to support the verdict. People v. Newland, 15 Cal.2d 678, 104 P.2d 778; People v. Green, 13 Cal.2d 37, 87 P.2d 821; People v. Kittrelle, 102 Cal.App.2d 149, 227 P.2d 38.

The only other point raised is that the court erred in removing Mr. Wang's discharge certificate from the army and his service record from evidence, and instructing the jury to disregard them. It is argued that these were offered for the purpose of proving the reputation of Mr. Wang, and that they were admissible as Uniform Business Records under Sections 1953c and 1953f of the Code of Civil Procedure.

[2, 3] The court first admitted these papers in evidence and later reversed its ruling and instructed the jury to disregard them. When the documents were first offered in evidence the district attorney offered, in the presence of the jury, to stipulate that Mr. Wang's separation from service was an honorable discharge, expressing the opinion that this was the only legitimate purpose of going into the matter at that time. When the court reversed its ruling and told the jury to disregard this evidence appellants' counsel stated "If you wish me to do so, I will be happy to withdraw them." Ordinarily, character witnesses called by the defense may testify only to general reputation as limited to the neighborhood where the accused resides. Whether or not these papers (the certificate of honorable discharge is particularly relied on) should have remained in evidence, it would be unreasonable to hold that they could have affected the verdict, and no possible prejudice appears. People v. Houser, 85 Cal.App.2d 686, 193 P.2d 937.

UNITED CONCRETE PIPE CORPORA
TION et al., Defendants and Appellants.

Civ. 21458.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California.

Oct. 15, 1956.

Rehearing Denied Nov. 8, 1956.

Hearing Denied Dec. 12, 1956.

Action by children to establish constructive trust in shares of common stock which were purchased by corporation from their father's estate or for the recovery of damages for fraud. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, A. Curtis Smith, J., entered judgments of dismissal after sustaining demurrers without leave to amend and children appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Doran, J., held that complaint which alleged that cousin of children's father took charge of probate of father's estate and that such cousin utilized fiduciary position as administrator of the estate to arrange a purchase of the stock by the corporation at a reduced price, was sufficient to state a cause of action for damages for fraud and also for declaration of a constructive trust.

Judgments reversed with instructions to overrule demurrers.

1. Judgment ⇨443(1)

Where a judgment has been obtained by extrinsic or collateral fraud, relief can be obtained by an independent suit in equity.

2. Judgment ⇨443(1)

The vital question in equity suit to set aside a judgment allegedly obtained by extrinsic or collateral fraud is whether the successful party has by inequitable conduct, either direct or insidious in nature, lulled the other party into a state of false security, thus causing the latter to refrain from appearing in court or asserting legal rights.

3. Limitation of Actions ⇨179(2)

Complaint, which was filed by children to establish constructive trust in shares of stock which were allegedly fraudulently purchased by corporation from their father's estate at a price below value of the shares, and which alleged that upon learning of the unfair price paid for such shares instant action was instituted, was sufficient to show timely commencement of the action.

4. Limitation of Actions ⇨199(2)

Whether a certain circumstance within the knowledge of an alleged defrauded party is sufficient to make it the duty of such person to investigate so as to avoid bar of three-year statute of limitations, is a question of fact to be determined by the jury or the trial court.

5. Fraud ⇨43

Complaint which was filed to establish constructive trust in shares of stock allegedly purchased from estate at a reduced price by means of fraud, and which alleged that cousin of deceased was sent by corporation to take charge of probate of the father's estate for purpose of utilizing his fiduciary position to arrange purchase of the stock at a reduced price by the corporation, was sufficient to state a cause of action for damages for fraud and also for declaration of a constructive trust. DORAN, Justice.

Plaintiffs' Fifth and Sixth Amended Complaints, substantially identical, seek to establish a trust in 1,465 $\frac{1}{2}$ shares of common stock of United Concrete Pipe Corporation, or the recovery of damages for fraud. The plaintiffs are the four children of Veda and John L. Milich who were married in 1927. John L. Milich died intestate on April 12, 1943; the widow, now Veda Milich Nikevich, is joined as a plaintiff herein for the purpose of submitting to jurisdiction and seeks no relief. The four children were all minors at the time of Mr. Milich's death.

John L. Milich was employed by the defendant United Concrete Pipe Corporation at its Modesto, California plant, and previous to the marriage with Veda, had purchased from the defendants Kral, Ukropina and Polich, 2,198 shares of common stock in United. The defendants Kral, Ukropina and Polich were, until 1952, directors and officers in charge of United, and owned more than 90% of the stock. In 1950 all outstanding stock was sold to unnamed third persons, not parties herein.

According to the complaint, shortly after the death of John L. Milich in 1943, Veda, "his widow, retained a local attorney (in Modesto) to handle the probate", but before such attorney "could file a petition for letters of administration, defendant Steve Kral, a cousin of John L. Milich, was sent by defendants * * * from Los Angeles for the purpose of taking charge of the probate of the Estate of John L. Milich." It is alleged that Kral represented to Veda "that the defendants would take care of everything", and that if United's attorneys handled the probate, "no attorneys fees would be charged against the Estate"; that Veda, without business experience, relied on Kral's representations, and agreed to have Kral appointed administrator, whereupon the latter dismissed the Modesto attorney, and retained Stephen Monteleone, Kral's attorney in Los Angeles, who proceeded to have Kral appointed administrator of the Milich estate.

It is further alleged that on September 30, 1943, Kral, as administrator, filed in Stanislaus County, California, verified inventory and appraisal listing as assets in the Milich Estate,

8 shares of Bolsa Chica
Oil Corp. stock	$8.00
2,198 shares, United Concrete Pipe Corp.	$24,596.94
1937 Dodge Sedan	$290.00
Total	$24,894.94

and that the appraisal of the United stock "was made by the inheritance tax appraiser upon the basis of a balance sheet furnished * * * by the defendants; that the said balance sheet did not reflect the true financial condition of United", and that the stock was "worth greatly in excess of the sum * * * and said fact was known to the defendants".

The complaint then alleges that "Steve Kral was familiar with the financial affairs of John L. Milich for over 30 years", and represented to the probate court "that all the property listed was the community property of the decedent and his widow", knowing that the United stock had been acquired from the individual defendants "prior to the time of his marriage and was his separate property", which representations were made "on behalf of all of the defendants, in furtherance of said plan to prevent" the United stock "from becoming the property of his minor children and to permit defendants to acquire the stock at a sum greatly below its true value".

It is then alleged that sometime prior to July 31, 1945, defendants requested Attorney Monteleone to prepare an agreement whereby Veda agreed to sell to United the entire 2,198 shares of United stock at a price of $14 per share, or a total of $30,772, which agreement was duly executed by Veda and United. A copy of this agreement was attached to the complaint as Exhibit A. In this agreement it is stated that when the stock was sold to Milich, "said company, by an oral agreement, reserved the option to repurchase said shares", and that Veda, "as his widow, succeeded to all the right, title and interest of said John L. Milich in and to said shares of stock", which representations were false, and known by the defendants to be false at the time the said agreement was executed. It is alleged that Veda, "by virtue of the trust and confidence she had in the defendants", believed that the statements in the agreement were true and relied thereon in executing the agreement.

There are allegations to the effect that Steve Kral, as administrator, in the First and Final Account, heard and approved on October 1, 1945, made false statements "intended to deceive and did deceive the court so that the court would approve the same", in failing to advise the court of the existence of the agreement whereby Kral's company, United, would purchase the stock; in stating that the stock was in the hands of the administrator, "whereas, the stock had actually been purchased by the defendant United * * * and was in the hands of said defendant" under said agreement with Veda; in stating that all claims against the estate had been paid, whereas the administrator claimed an indebtedness of $7,100.36 upon a promissory note which had never been presented to the court for approval, and "payment thereof having been obtained by Steve Kral pursuant to an authorization procured from Veda * * * to United * * * authorizing immediate payment of said sum together with other claims against Veda * * * and the Estate * * * out of the proceeds payable under the agreement" with Veda; that the statement that the stock was community property was false and since it was the separate property of Mr. Milich, "was required by law to be distributed one-third to Veda * * * and one-sixth to each of his four surviving children".

The complaint also alleges that neither Kral, as administrator, nor Attorney Monteleone, advised the plaintiffs that the stock was separate property in which the children were entitled to share, nor were the minor children advised of the agreement made with Veda, nor of the true value of the stock. It is also charged that the individual defendants conducted the United business "as though it were a partnership or family corporation wholly owned and controlled by said defendants", treated the earnings of United "as their own personal earnings", and "so dominated and controlled the operations * * * that the said corporation constituted a mere conduit whereby * * * defendants carried on their own personal business affairs; that in order to prevent fraud or injustice the separate entity of United Concrete Pipe Corporation should be disregarded".

It is further alleged that in July, 1950, the defendants negotiated a sale of all outstanding stock in United, approximately 60,000 shares, for the sum of \$6,287,800. Upon learning of this sale, Veda caused inquiry to be made, and "after failure of extended negotiations to settle her claim against the defendants arising from the said sale of stock to United," instituted an action on the ground of fraud of Steve Kral, seeking relief from the sale agreement, which action is still pending. It is also alleged that Steve Kral, in a deposition taken in that action, stated that the indebtedness of \$7,100.36 on a promissory note of John L. Milich, hereinbefore referred to, "arose by reason of the purchase of stock from said defendants by John L. Milich prior to the marriage with Veda"; that until such admission by Kral, Veda "believed that the said stock was the community property" of John and Veda. By reason of these facts, it is alleged that "defendants, and each of them, hold in trust for plaintiffs 1,465 $\frac{1}{3}$ shares of common stock in United * * *". A second cause of action pleads the allegations, and seeks damages for fraud, both actual and exemplary.

Demurrers to the amended complaints aver that no cause of action is stated because the Decree of Distribution in the Milich Estate "conclusively determined the ownership of the stock", as community property, and "is an absolute bar to the claim of appellant children", and that such a decree can only be reopened for extrinsic fraud, which is not shown by the complaint. It is also claimed that "The action was filed more than three years after the 'discovery' of the fraud * * * and, accordingly, the Statute of Limitations is an absolute bar to the claims of those appellants who reached their majority prior to the commencement of the statutory period".

The respondents also claim that "The allegations of the complaint are not sufficient to show that the stock was the separate property of the deceased"; and that a cause of action for imposition of a constructive trust has not been stated because it is not shown that United was unjustly enriched; that United "has no property or proceeds upon which a constructive trust can be imposed", and that "it is owned in its entirety by persons who are bona fide purchasers for value without notice of any of the alleged fraud".

[1] Appellants and respondents are agreed on the legal principle that where a judgment has been obtained by extrinsic or collateral fraud, relief can be obtained by an independent suit in equity. Many decisions have been cited stating the general rule and its application to varying situations which, however, involve situations factually dissimilar from those of the present case. As in other matters, the mere statement of an abstract rule is relatively easy but the practical application thereof to a complicated set of facts is the occasion of considerable difficulty.

In Jorgensen v. Jorgensen, 32 Cal.2d 13, 19, 193 P.2d 728, 732, it is said that while the terms "intrinsic" and "extrinsic" fraud or mistake are generally accepted as appropriate to describe two different categories of cases, "They do not constitute, however, a simple and infallible formula to determine whether in a given case the facts surrounding the fraud or mistake warrant equitable relief from a judgment".

Citing the Jorgensen case, a footnote to the opinion in Thiriot v. Santa Clara, etc., School District, 128 Cal.App.2d 548, 551, 275 P.2d 833, 836, says: "Intrinsic fraud may, under appropriate circumstances, furnish a basis for voiding a judgment when a party's adversary has concealed or misrepresented facts in violation of a duty arising from a trust or confidential relation * * * but no such relation obtains in the instant case."

[2] Mere terminology or some abstract classification is, obviously, a matter of secondary importance. The vital question in this and every case must always be whether the successful party has by inequitable conduct, either direct or insidious in nature, lulled the other party into a state of false security, thus causing the latter to refrain from appearing in court or asserting legal rights. This is undoubtedly the gist of plaintiffs' complaint.

As hereinbefore noted, the present appeal is not from judgments rendered after a trial on the merits but from judgments of dismissal entered after the sustaining of demurrers without leave to amend. In two recent cases this court has found occasion, to comment on the well-established rules in respect to demurrer hearings and the duties of trial courts in reference thereto. In Griffith v. Department of Public Works, 141 Cal.App.2d 376, 296 P.2d 838, 842, it is said that upon the hearing of a demurrer, "the allegations of the complaint must be regarded as true, and a reviewing court 'is confined to the allegations of the complaint', as is a trial court, in determining the matter. Other matters, outside the complaint, although doubtless proper subjects for consideration at the trial, should not be considered. Whether plaintiff is able to establish the allegations made, to the satisfaction of a trial court or jury, or what the final outcome may be, are matters of no importance so far as the present inquiry is concerned".

In Hardy v. Vial, — Cal.App. —, 299 P.2d 973, 975, citing the Griffith case just mentioned, the reviewing court says: "The question is one of law only, and if the plaintiff has on any theory stated a cause of action, a trial on the factual issues is warranted". Reversing a judgment entered after sustaining demurrers to the complaint, the court comments on the "liberal rule of pleading [which] has always prevailed in this state and plaintiff should be accorded the benefit of such liberal policy. * * * The sustaining of a demurrer without leave to amend, and entry of judgment thereon, is a matter of the utmost importance, and, unless a high degree of care be exercised by a trial court, such procedure may easily work irreparable damage by denying plaintiff the right to a plenary trial of the issue".

Such appears to be the situation in the instant case. If the truth of the facts alleged be assumed, as it must be at a demurrer hearing, the defendants, with full knowledge of the facts, have indulged in an inequitable course of conduct well designed to lull the plaintiffs into a sense of apparent security, causing the latter to refrain from presenting the true situation to the probate court. The alleged situation becomes even more aggravated when it is considered that Steve Kral, a cousin of Mr. Milich, not only occupied the fiduciary position of administrator but was also one of the managing directors of United, the purchaser of the stock from Mrs. Milich. A trial court or jury might well believe that the defendants' concealment and misrepresentations effectually prevented the plaintiffs from asserting in court the legal rights flowing from Mr. Milich's separate ownership of the United stock. And, if the decree of distribution was thus fraudulently obtained, it cannot be deemed conclusive in determining that the stock was community property in which the minor children would have no interest.

Section 2235 of the Civil Code provides that "All transactions between a trustee and his beneficiary during the existence of the trust, or while the influence acquired by the trustee remains, by which he obtains any advantage from his beneficiary, are presumed to be entered into by the latter without sufficient consideration, and under undue influence".

Section 192, Comment d, of the Restatement of Restitution, reads as follows: "A fiduciary violates his duty to the beneficiary where he purchases for himself individually property entrusted to him for sale, but also where he has a personal interest in the purchase of such a substantial nature that it might affect his judgment in making the sale. Thus, where the fiduciary sells the property entrusted to him to a corporation in which he has a controlling or substantial interest, the sale can be set aside unless the corporation is a bona fide purchaser". (Italics added.)

[3,4] Nor is any substantial merit found in the other assertions made in the respondents' brief. Timely commencement of the action after discovery of the fraud, is sufficiently alleged in the complaint. As said in Bliss v. Martin, 74 Cal.App.2d 500, 506, 169 P.2d 61, 66, "Whether a certain circumstance within the knowledge of an alleged defrauded party is sufficient to make it the duty of such person to investigate is a question of fact to be determined by the jury or the trial court".

The respondents' contention that "The allegations of the complaint are not sufficient to show that the stock was the separate property of the deceased", predicated upon a forced and unnatural interpretation of the language used, is untenable. There is likewise no merit in respondents' charge that no cause of action in reference to a constructive trust has been stated. In reference to these matters and other criticisms of the complaint, the respondents' brief has commented upon matters outside the pleading, which, as hereinbefore mentioned, are not open for consideration on the hearing of a demurrer.

[5] Plaintiffs' complaint, as it stands, is deemed to state a cause of action necessitating a trial on the merits. In certain particulars, doubtless, the complaint could be improved, but under the liberal rule of pleading in force in this state, it was prejudicial error to sustain demurrers thereto and enter judgments of dismissal. Plaintiffs, who were minors and especially entitled to judicial protection, must not be thus deprived of an opportunity to present evidence at plenary hearing. Whether plaintiffs will be able to prove the material facts alleged, is a matter of no importance in reference to the present inquiry.

The judgments are reversed with instructions to overrule the demurrers, to allow the respondents a reasonable time to file answers, if so advised, and to proceed to a trial on the merits.

Louise H. GOUTHRO, Plaintiff and Appellant,

v.

E. A. WINSTANLEY, administrator of the Estate of Fred H. Gouthro, deceased, Defendant and Respondent.

Civ. 21630.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 2, California,

Oct. 24, 1956.

Action by the divorced wife against the administrator of deceased husband's estate involving the issue of whether an award for the wife's support made in an Illinois decree of divorce and designated as alimony, was in fact an award in gross and hence an obligation surviving the death of the husband. Judgment for defendant in the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Joseph W. Vickers, J., and the plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Ashburn, J., held that the award was not of alimony of gross and did not survive the death of the husband.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Divorce \S 389

In action by divorced wife against administrator of the husband's estate involving question of whether an award for wife's support made in Illinois decree of divorce survived the death of the husband, Illinois law was controlling.

2. Divorce \S 247

Under Illinois law periodic payments of alimony, other than installments of a gross award, cease upon death of the wife or husband, or upon remarriage of the wife, regardless of silence of the agreement or decree on the subject.

3. Divorce \S 231, 241, 245(1), 247

Executors and Administrators \S 202(1)

Under Illinois law the term "alimony" is for an indefinite period of time and usually for an indefinite total sum, while the phrase "alimony in gross" or "gross alimony" is for a definite amount and the payment is always for a definite length of time, and is a charge upon the husband's estate and is not modifiable.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Alimony", "Alimony in Gross", and "Gross Alimony".

4. Divorce \S 245(1), 247

The employment of the word "alimony" or the phrase "permanent alimony" in a divorce decree is an indication of intention to make a modifiable and terminable award under Illinois law.

5. Divorce \S 247

Under Illinois law, alimony terminates upon death of the husband in the absence of special provisions in the decree evidencing an intention to bind the heirs to continue such payments.

6. Divorce \S 247

Where court in an Illinois divorce action disposed of property pursuant to an agreement and adjudged that "in addition to the foregoing" the husband should pay to the wife $50 monthly sums as provided in the agreement "as and for her permanent alimony" and for and during the period of her natural life or until she remarried, in which event payments should cease, award was not an award of "alimony in gross" but an award of mere alimony, and its obligations did not survive the death of the husband.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "As and for Her Permanent Alimony" and "In Addition to the Foregoing".

7. Divorce ⚖️241

The payment of a fixed sum forthwith or over a specific period is the essence of an award of alimony in gross, not only in Illinois but also as a matter of general law.

Bachrack & Wilson, Los Angeles, Ralph Wilson, Los Angeles, of counsel, for appellant.

Harold W. Kennedy, County Counsel, and Henry W. Gardett, Deputy County Counsel, Los Angeles, for respondent.

ASHBURN, Justice.

This action, brought by the divorced wife of Fred H. Gouthro, deceased, against the administrator of his estate, presents the question of whether an award for the wife's support made in an Illinois decree of divorce and therein designated as alimony was in fact an award in gross—gross alimony payable in installments—and therefore an obligation surviving the death of the husband. The trial court gave judgment in favor of defendant and plaintiff appeals.

The divorce was granted to the wife (as cross-complainant) on the ground of cruelty on December 26, 1923. Prior to filing of the action the spouses "entered into an agreement as to the disposition of their property rights and the alimony to be paid to the appellant" (quoting agreed statement on appeal). It was merged into the decree, which "finds that the parties hereto have entered into an agreement as to the disposition of their property rights and the alimony to be paid the cross-complainant" (wife). Then follow findings that the agreement provides that two parcels of real property, held jointly, be conveyed to plaintiff; that a certain bank account be retained by her; that another sum of $189 and a Liberty bond be divided equally; "and that in addition thereto the said cross-defendant shall pay to the cross-complainant the sum of Fifty dollars ($50.00) per month, payable in two installments of Twenty-five dollars ($25.00) each on the 1st and 15th day of each month, as and for her alimony, such payments to be made to the said cross-complainant during her natural lifetime or until she re-marries, in which latter event the said payments shall cease; that the said cross-defendant shall at no time be obliged to pay any further sum or sums of money than the said Fifty dollars ($50.00) per month, by reason of the marital relations heretofore existing between the parties." (Emphasis added.)

As indicated, the foregoing are findings as to the contents of the agreement. The court then disposes of the property pursuant to the agreement and adjudges that "in addition to the foregoing" the husband shall pay to the wife the $50 monthly sums as provided in the agreement "as and for her permanent alimony." (Emphasis added.) Same to continue "for and during the period of her natural life or until she re-marries, in which event the said payments shall cease."

[1] Appellant argues that this decree provides for alimony in gross and that the payments continue after the husband's death and until the death or remarriage of plaintiff wife. She relies upon the phrase "for and during the period of her natural life or until she re-marries, in which event the said payments shall cease." It is conceded that the payments cease upon the husband's death if same are mere alimony, but appellant argues that this is an award of "alimony in gross." This presents a question of Illinois law and both sides agree to that.

The trial judge held in the case at bar that the portions of the agreement and the decree relating to wife's alimony "are separable and distinct from those portions of said agreement and said decree, which provides for the disposition of their property rights, and constitute an allowance of periodic payments of permanent alimony to said Louise H. Gouthro, to be construed and dealt with in all respects according to the pertinent law of Illinois applicable to allowance of alimony." We agree.

It is to be noted that the Illinois court finds the agreement to be dual in nature, (1) "the disposition of their property rights" and (2) "the alimony to be paid"; after making appropriate order for division of the property it finds and adjudges that "in addition thereto" the husband shall pay and the wife receive $50 a month "as and for her alimony" and "as and for her permanent alimony." There is no aggregate sum fixed, nor any definite time prescribed for termination of payments. They are to continue "for and during the period of her natural life or until she re-marries, in which event the said payments shall cease." The last quoted phrase is immediately followed by the words, "as and for her permanent alimony." There is no attempt to make the payments binding upon the husband's estate; on the contrary the decree contains a declaration "that the compliance of the cross-defendant with the foregoing provisions of this decree shall be in full and complete settlement and satisfaction of all claims and demands of every kind and character arising out of the marital relations heretofore existing between the said cross-complainant and the said cross-defendant."

[2,3] Under Illinois law periodic payments of alimony (other than installments of a gross award) cease upon death of the wife or the husband, or upon remarriage of the wife; the legal result flows from the event regardless of silence of agreement or decree on the subject. Walters v. Walters, 346 Ill.App. 561, 94 N.E.2d 726, 729; Kramp v. Kramp, 2 Ill.App.2d 17, 117 N.E. 2d 859, 860; Cross v. Cross, 5 Ill.2d 456, 125 N.E.2d 488, 491. The distinction between the ordinary modifiable alimony and gross alimony is made clear in Walters v. Walters, supra, 94 N.E.2d 726, 729: "These and many other Illinois cases hereafter considered indicate that the term 'alimony' bears certain distinguishing characteristics. It is for an indefinite period of time and usually for an indefinite total sum. * * * On the other hand, the phrase 'alimony in gross' or 'gross alimony' is always for a definite amount of money; the payment is always for a definite length of time; it is always a charge upon the husband's estate and has uniformly been held by our courts to be not modifiable." The concurring opinion says, 94 N.E.2d at pages 734-735: "Alimony in gross is a definite, fixed sum for, in lieu of, or in satisfaction of all or a portion of alimony in the usual form of a periodic allowance. * * * The difference between alimony in the usual form of a periodic allowance and alimony in gross is clear. In the latter there is a single award or allowance of an ascertained, fixed sum, payable absolutely and not conditionally or contingently, in a single payment or in instalments, and therefore a vested right in the beneficiary from the entry of the decree. In a periodic allowance of alimony each allowance for a period is separate and distinct from all others, is a mere expectancy which cannot vest until the day of payment, and then only in the event the beneficiary is living." This case was re-heard by the Supreme Court, 409 Ill. 298, 99 N.E.2d 342, at page 344 which said: "Recurrently, decrees in matrimonial cases refer to 'alimony in gross' or 'gross alimony.' Most generally these terms are applied to an amount agreed upon or determined in full or in lieu of all alimony and the amount is frequently payable in installments. Most of the confusion in those cases has resulted from a loose application of these terms and the intention of the parties has not been clearly established by the order or decree. * * * We think the rule in this State is that in cases prior to the amendment of 1949 [Ill.Rev.Stat.1949, c. 40, § 19], where it clearly appears the order is for support and sustenance of the spouse and the provision therefor is plainly separable and segregable from the property provisions of the contract or decree upon which it is based, the total award, when it is so payable in installments, is modifiable at any time, upon a proper showing. In other words, if it is in fact an allowance for alimony, then it is modifiable as such, and therefore, before the amendment, remarriage would bar future payments."

[4, 5] There is no word suggesting a gross award in the decree under discussion. The employment of the word "alimony" or the phrase "permanent alimony" is "an indicium of intention" to make a modifiable and terminable award. Maybaum v. Maybaum, 349 Ill.App. 80, 110 N.E.2d 78, 81. It is said in Cross v. Cross, supra, 5 Ill.2d 456, 125 N.E.2d 488, 491, that alimony terminates with the death of the husband "in the absence of special provisions in the decree evidencing an intention to bind the heirs to continue such payments." Cooper v. Cooper's Estate, 350 Ill.App. 37, 111 N.E.2d 564, 566, quoting Lennahan v. O'Keefe, 107 Ill. 620: "In the absence of language showing, unequivocally, that the intention was to bind the heir by such a decree, we are of opinion that it does not do so, but that its life terminates with the life of the defendant." This case has been followed frequently in other cases by our Supreme and Appellate Courts."

Respondent relies heavily upon Coleman v. Coleman, 341 Ill.App. 462, 94 N.E.2d 507, 509, a case which is persuasive. There the plaintiff was awarded alimony in the sum of $12,000 payable $1,000 within ten days from entry of decree, $500 on the first day of January and of July of each year beginning in the year 1949, up to and including July 1, 1959. Paragraph 11 provided that in the event of the death of the husband prior to that of the wife any unpaid portion of the $12,000 should be paid out of the estate of the husband and constitute a lien thereon. Plaintiff wife remarried in 1948 and defendant successfully moved for an order terminating the payments. In affirming the appellate court adverted to the facts that the agreement provided the $12,000 was to be paid "as alimony" and that the agreement was entitled "'Property Settlement and Alimony Agreement.'" At page 509 of 94 N.E.2d, it is further said: "In the first place, it should be noted that the agreement is entitled 'Property Settlement and Alimony Agreement,' thus indicating at the very beginning that the parties were settling both property rights and alimony. In the second place, paragraph 11 of the agreement does not contain any wording that would indicate the provision for $12,000 was a settlement of property rights. In paragraph 8 the $12,000 is designated 'as alimony.' Other parts of the agreement deal exclusively with property rights. In the third place, the decree of divorce which was probably drawn by plaintiff's attorney and undoubtedly approved by her attorney, in the paragraph (g) above quoted, orders the defendant to pay to the plaintiff 'alimony' in the sum of $12,000. Reviewing the whole agreement and the decree entered by the court, it seems to us quite clear that the $12,000 ordered paid by the defendant under paragraph (g) of the decree was a payment of alimony and not a settlement of any property rights. The clause in paragraph 11 of the agreement above quoted was an attempt by the parties to extend the alimony payments in spite of the contingency of death of either of both parties and perhaps in spite of the remarriage of the plaintiff."

[6] The agreement at bar is dual and divisible in its nature, just like the Coleman agreement. Appellant argues that the gross aspect of the award is found in the emphasized words in the phrase "for and during the period of her natural life or until she re-marries, in which event the said payments shall cease." We cannot agree it has any such significance. Under then existing law periodic alimony payments would cease upon the death of the wife or the husband or upon remarriage of the wife (cases cited supra). The phrase in question suggests dubiety, rather than any purpose to convert the award to one in gross. Certainly it does not make that clear showing which the Illinois cases require.

[7] In re Kuchenbecker's Estate, 4 Ill.App.2d 314, 124 N.E.2d 52, is appellant's chief reliance as supporting authority. In that instance the agreement between the parties, which was held to have been merged in the decree, 124 N.E.2d at page 54, required the husband to pay to the wife $325 a month "during the remainder of her natural life, or until such time as she remarries"; also, to maintain insurance on his life in the sum of $25,000 payable after his death in monthly installments of not less than $325 "until said policy has paid out, so long, only as she shall remain single and unmarried." 124 N.E.2d at page 53. But the decree into which the agreement was merged provided that the payments to be made during lifetime should continue until further order of court, and defendant was ordered to pay the premiums and keep the insurance in force "until the further order of the court." This phraseology clearly denotes an intention to reserve jurisdiction for the purpose of modification or termination at any appropriate time. Plaintiff wife sought to enforce the obligation for monthly payments against the estate of the husband. She succeeded in the appellate court. At page 54 of 124 N.E.2d the opinion says: "The sole question presented upon this appeal is whether the decree and the agreement of the parties embodied therein clearly disclose an intention to settle all of the property rights; and whether it constitutes a settlement of alimony in gross payable in installments; or whether the decree must be considered as a decree for the payment of alimony only, payable in installments, which ceased upon the death of the defendant." Relying upon what it deemed to be the purport of Walters v. Walters, supra, 346 Ill.App. 561, 94 N.E.2d 726, the court said: "We think that the instant case presents as strong a showing of property settlement, constituting a settlement of alimony in gross, as that appearing in the Walters case. In harmony with the holding of this court and the Supreme Court in the latter case, we are compelled to conclude that the claim in question is a proper one and survived the death of the defendant in the decree." No mention is made of the cardinal facts that the Walters agreement and decree expressly provided for an award of "alimony in gross" and that a fixed sum of $34,540 was awarded, payable in installments which were expressly made a charge upon the estate of the husband. There was in the Kuchenbecker's case no fixed sum and no fixed period for payments except as the $25,000 of insurance had that aspect. The effect of the merger of the agreement into the decree was a substitution of the obligations of the decree for those of the agreement. Flynn v. Flynn, 42 Cal.2d 55, 58, 265 P.2d 865. The language, "during the remainder of her natural life or until such time as she re-marries" thus became "until the further order of the court." As we see it, this Kuchenbecker's Estate case has little of gross alimony in it and does not square with the other decisions in that state, especially Walters v. Walters, supra, which is reported in 94 N.E.2d 726 and in 99 N.E.2d 342. The payment of a fixed sum forthwith or over a specific period is of the essence of an award in gross, not only in Illinois but also as a matter of general law. See Robinson v. Robinson, 79 Cal. 511, 515, 516, 21 P. 1095; Huellmantel v. Huellmantel, 124 Cal. 583, 588, 57 P. 582; Honey v. Honey, 60 Cal.App. 759, 761-762, 214 P. 250; Tremper v. Tremper, 39 Cal.App. 62, 65, 177 P. 868; 27 C.J.S., Divorce, § 235, p. 966; 17 Am.Jur. § 594, p. 466; Ballentine's Law Dictionary, p. 66. To say that the phrase, "during the remainder of her natural life or until such time as she re-marries" effects that result, seems to force a desired conclusion. Under then existing Illinois law such periodic payments would automatically cease upon remarriage of the wife or death of either party. Whether the Kuchenbecker's case ever found its way to the Supreme Court we do not know. But it appears not to have been cited in any later Illinois case. It is our opinion that this case is not reconcilable with Walters and Coleman, supra, and that it does not correctly reflect the Illinois law. Hence it is not controlling here. The ruling of the trial court was correct.

Judgment affirmed.

Loretta L. SIMPSON, Plaintiff and Appellant,

v.

The CITY OF SANTA MONICA, a Municipal Corporation, et al., Defendants and Respondents.

Civ. 21745.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 2, California.

Oct. 24, 1956.

Suit against city to compel restoration of plaintiff's permit to operate a rock steam bath and massage parlor. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Orlando H. Rhodes, J., entered a judgment of dismissal, and the plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Fox, J., held that evidence supported city council's action in revoking plaintiff's permit on ground that the permit was being abused to detriment of public or was being used for a purpose different from that for which it was issued.

Affirmed.

1. Section 6124 of the Santa Monica Municipal Code provides as follows:

"Revocation of Permit. Any permit

1. Physiclans and Surgeons §11(3)

Fact that report of police officer assigned to investigate plaintiff's operations was read at hearing before city council to revoke permit to operate a rock steam bath and massage parlor did not establish that the entire evidence before council was hearsay, where officer was personally present at hearing before council and testified that the report would be his statement as to the investigation that he had made in the matter.

2. Physiclans and Surgeons §11(3)

In proceeding before city council to revoke permit to operate a rock steam bath and massage parlor on ground that permit was being abused to detriment of public or was being used for a purpose different from that for which it was issued, purpose for which place was being used or occupied need not be established by direct evidence, but may be gathered from all the surrounding circumstances shown by the evidence.

3. Physiclans and Surgeons §11(3)

Evidence supported action of city council in revoking permit to operate a rock steam bath and massage parlor on ground that permit was being used to detriment of public or was being used for a purpose different from that for which it was issued.

A. Brigham Rose, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Robert G. Cockins, City Atty., Robert D. Ogle, Asst. City Atty., James W. Shumar, Deputy City Atty., Santa Monica, for respondents.

FOX, Justice.

In January, 1955, the Police Chief of the city of Santa Monica issued plaintiff permit No. 105 to operate a rock steam bath and massage parlor at 2815 Pico Boulevard. On May 20, 1955, after an investigation, the chief revoked¹ the permit.

issued by the chief of police pursuant to this code may be suspended or revoked, by the chief of police when it shall appear

Five days later plaintiff duly appealed² by requesting a hearing before the city council for a restoration of the permit. The city council held such hearing on June 14, 1955. Plaintiff had been present when the hearing date was set. Subsequently a letter was sent to her advising her of the time and place. She was neither present in person nor represented by counsel at the hearing. At the conclusion of the hearing the city council voted to sustain the action of the chief in revoking the permit, and authorized the mayor to sign proper findings.³

By her amended and supplemental complaint, plaintiff seeks to have her permit restored. She incorporated in her pleading a transcript of the proceedings before the city council. The demurrer of the city and the chief of police was sustained without leave to amend. The action was thereupon dismissed. Plaintiff appeals from the judgment of dismissal.

[1] Plaintiff's position is that the entire evidence before the city council was hearsay. She then argues, relying on Walker v. City of San Gabriel, 20 Cal.2d 879, 129 P.2d 349, 142 A.L.R. 1383, and Desert Turf Club v. Board of Supervisors, 141 Cal.App.2d 446, 296 P.2d 882, that hearsay evidence alone is insufficient to support the revocation of her permit. Plaintiff, however, misconceives the state of the record. The evidence before the city council was not entirely hearsay. Officer Tom, who was assigned to investigate plaintiff's operations, was personally present at the hearing before the city council and testified. True, his report, or at least a part thereof, was read at this hearing. But he testified that the report would be his statement as to the investigation that he made in this matter. Hence he adopted the report as his testimony and vouched for its correctness. Furthermore, he was present and available for cross-examination had plaintiff been present or represented by counsel.

Officer Tom called the telephone number of the address in question on May 19, 1955. A woman answered the telephone. The officer told her he was from out of town and had been given the address of her place by a friend. The woman told him that "Dee," which was the nickname of the telephone subscriber, was out, but to call back after 1:00 o'clock. The officer again telephoned at 2:30. The same woman answered the call. She told the officer that Dee did not know him by name (Jack Coleman), and that she and Dee were very angry with the man who had given him the unlisted telephone number. She said the man should have known better, as telephone deals were dangerous. Officer Tom gave the fictitious friend's name as Harry Shaperio. The woman stated that that the business of the person to whom such permit was issued has been conducted in a disorderly or improper manner, or in violation of any statute of the state, or ordinance of this city, or any provision of this code, or that the person conducting said business is of unfit character to conduct the same, or that the purpose for which the permit has been issued is being abused to the detriment of the public, or that the permit is being used for a purpose different from that for which it was issued * * * (Emphasis added.)

2. Section 6126 of the Santa Monica Municipal Code reads as follows:

"Right of Appeal. Any person aggrieved by the action of the Chief of Police or the City Manager in suspending or revoking any such permit or license may appeal to the City Council by filing a written notice thereof with the City Clerk within ten days from the date of mailing notice of such action. The Council shall make a decision within thirty days from receipt of the notice by the City Clerk, and the decision of the Council, after a hearing on the appeal, upon notice to the permittee or licensee shall be final and conclusive."

3. The findings include, inter alia, the following:

"The City Council finds that the purpose for which the Police Permit No. 105 was issued is being abused to the detriment of the public and is being used for a purpose different from that for which it was issued."

Dee had told her to tell him, i. e. the officer, to get Shaperio to come with him to her place or to telephone and verify that he was OK. The woman said any time Saturday afternoon would be fine. She said "Shaperio knows better than to give strangers this number," and to tell Shaperio when he saw him that "they were disappointed in him." A massage or steam bath was not mentioned in either conversation. Later that afternoon the officer went to the address in question wearing Douglass badge No. 428 and sought admission. He was met at the door by a man dressed in a white outfit. This person said the masseuse had gone home and no one could take care of him. The officer remarked that some friends at Douglass had suggested that he come by. The man replied: "Bring some of them with you next time, and if we know them, you'r OK." Officer Tom saw no steam or other evidence of steam baths being given there. On the outside of the building was "a very small sign"—about 2 or 2½ inches high, containing three words—"Rock Steam Bath." The reception area was approximately four by five feet; a wooden partition completely blocked the view into the rest of the house. One could not see into the building, either in the front or in the rear.

[2, 3] If this place had been at the time legitimately operated as a steam bath and massage parlor there could have been no necessity for its prospective patrons to be vouched for by former customers. The evasiveness in connection with making an appointment, the oblique interrogation of prospective clients, and the clandestine operation of the enterprise are entirely out of harmony with the purpose for which the permit was issued. The evidence and the reasonable inferences therefrom amply support the finding of the city council, quoted in footnote 3, for "The purpose for which the place was being used or occupied need not be established by direct evidence, but may be gathered from all the surrounding circumstances shown by the evidence". District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 3, California.

Oct. 24, 1956.

Actions for money alleged to have been lent and for a divorce wherein counter claims were filed. From an adverse judgment of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Walter R. Evans, J., the wife appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Vallée, J., held that where the court found an accounting was not necessary to joint venture and that it was terminated by mutual consent and that wife was indebted to the husband in a certain amount, evidence supported court's findings that court did not err in not awarding costs to wife in the action for money lent and that manner of payment of attorneys' fees was not improper.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Joint Adventures Ⓒ5(1)

Under ordinary circumstances, one joint adventurer may not sue his associate for return of money contributed to the venture except by an action for dissolution and an accounting.

2. Joint Adventures Ⓒ5(1)

Where the joint adventurer has been terminated and one of the adventurers is entitled to a sum certain, he may sue another for breach of the contract or for a share of the profits or losses or for a contribution for advances made in excess of his share.

3. Joint Adventures Ⓒ5(2)

In action for money lent where defendant counterclaimed on the ground that the parties were engaged in a joint adventure and that the money was advanced to the venture and that profits and losses were to be shared alike, evidence sustained finding that an accounting was not necessary, that the joint adventure was terminated by mutual consent and that the defendant was indebted to the plaintiff in a certain amount.

6. Joint Adventures Ⓒ5(1)

Where venture for the purchase or sale of jewelry had been terminated and the court found that the plaintiff was entitled to sum certain, he was entitled to sue at law therefor and an accounting was not necessary.

7. Costs Ⓒ32(1)

In an action for money lent, where the defendant counterclaimed on the ground that parties were engaged in a joint venture and that the money lent was advanced to the venture and that profits and losses were to be shared where the judgment was rendered in the favor of plaintiff, the court did not err in not awarding cost to the defendant in the action for money lent. VALLÉE, Justice.

Appeal from parts of a judgment in consolidated actions for money alleged to have been lent and for a divorce.

Benjamin Barlin brought an action (624730) against Ina Schoncite Barlin for money lent in two counts: 1) that he had loaned $20,000 to defendant, only $7,243 had been repaid, leaving a balance due and owing of $12,787; and 2) he had loaned an additional $11,000 to defendant, no part of which had been repaid, and there was due and owing to him the sum of $11,000.

Ina filed an answer and counterclaim, denying she was indebted to Benjamin. She pleaded affirmatively that she, Benjamin, and one Sidney Wolfe were engaged in a joint venture, the $20,000 was advanced to the joint venture, and profits and losses were to be shared alike. As to the second count she pleaded the $11,000 was neither loaned to her nor advanced to the joint venture for any purpose whatever. In her counterclaim she alleged that upon the repayment of moneys advanced by Benjamin, along with his share of the profits arising out of the joint venture, she overpaid him $5,344.62 through error; and that upon her demand for repayment, he refused to pay. She prayed for a judgment against him in the sum of $5,344.62. As her second counterclaim, she alleged that on February 4, 1954 the joint venture was terminated by mutual consent of the parties and the business was dissolved.

Ina was the owner and operator of a retail jewelry store in Beverly Hills. Sidney Wolfe was an expert diamond cutter and dealer in the purchase of diamonds and other valuable gems. Benjamin was an entrepreneur. On January 1, 1953 the three entered into a joint venture for the purchase and sale of jewelry on these terms and conditions: 1) Benjamin was to advance all necessary funds for the purchase of the jewelry; 2) Wolfe was to locate and purchase the jewelry with the funds advanced by Benjamin; 3) Ina was to sell the jewelry through her retail store; and 4) the profits and losses of the venture were to be shared equally.

Benjamin advanced $20,010 to Wolfe for the purchase of five or six pieces of jewelry. Wolfe bought the jewelry and left it with Ina for sale. Certain pieces of the jewelry were sold and the profits were divided equally. One piece purchased for $1,525 never was sold and Ina has it. Another item was sold for $8,250 plus taxes, towards which Ina advanced $1,200 for additional diamonds. She was not reimbursed for the $1,200. The customer paid $3,200 on account, leaving a balance of $5,050, plus taxes in excess of $1,000. Ina brought an action in her own name against the buyer for the amount owed. The $8,250 to be derived from the sale of the latter piece of jewelry, when paid in full, plus the unsold item for $1,525, constituted the assets of the joint venture on its dissolution.

In October 1953 Ina and Benjamin married. The joint venture continued until February 4, 1954, when they separated. On February 11, 1954 Benjamin instituted the action (624730) for money alleged to have been lent Ina.

On February 16, 1954 Ina commenced the action (D-464637) for divorce against Benjamin. He answered and cross-complained for annulment. The two actions were consolidated.

The trial court found: 1. Ina was not indebted to Benjamin under the first count for money lent but that a joint venture existed between Benjamin, Ina, and Wolfe; the profits and losses of the venture were to be divided equally; Ina took over all of the remaining property of the venture; Benjamin advanced certain money to the venture and Ina is now indebted to him in the sum of $5,045. 2. The $11,000 alleged in the second count was not advanced to the joint venture nor loaned to Ina. 3. Ina did not overpay plaintiff. 4. By reason of the method of doing business by the joint venture, no accounting was necessary between the parties; the joint venture was by mutual consent and agreement terminated and dissolved on February 4, 1954, and that upon such dissolution Ina became indebted to Benjamin in the sum of $5,045, which has not been paid.

One judgment was rendered in the consolidated actions. It decreed: 1) Ina is entitled to a divorce from Benjamin; 2) Benjamin shall recover $5,045 from Ina; 3) Benjamin shall pay Ina's attorneys $2,800 as attorneys' fees and that the amount shall be paid as follows: Ina shall deduct the $2,800 from the $5,045 awarded to Benjamin in the action for money lent and pay the money to her attorneys and pay the balance of $2,245 to Benjamin. 5) Benjamin shall take nothing on the second count in the action for money lent; 6) Ina shall take nothing by reason of her first and second counterclaims; and 7) each of the parties shall bear his or her own costs except to the extent of costs theretofore paid by Benjamin in the divorce action. Ina appeals from the part of the judgment which awards Benjamin $5,045, and the parts which deny her counterclaim for moneys alleged to have been overpaid to Benjamin, provide the manner of payment of attorneys' fees, and decree that each party is to bear his or her own costs.

The assignments of error are: 1. The court erred in rendering judgment in favor of Benjamin for $5,045 when it found that a joint venture existed. 2. The court erred in not awarding her costs in the action for money lent. 3. The court erred in adjudicating the rights of the parties which arose out of the joint venture since Sidney Wolfe was not made a party to the action. 4. The court erred in not rendering judgment in her favor for certain sums of money allegedly advanced by her to Benjamin outside the joint venture. 5. The court erred in setting up terms and conditions for payment of her attorneys' fees.

Ina's first assignment of error is based on the premise that a joint adventurer is not entitled to sue another member at law until an accounting has been had and it has been determined that the other is indebted to him.

[1,2] Under ordinary circumstances one joint adventurer may not sue his associate for the return of money contributed to the joint venture except by an action for dissolution and an accounting. Elias v. Erwin, 129 Cal.App.2d 313, 318, 276 P.2d 848. Where the venture has been terminated and dissolved and one of the joint adventurers is entitled to a sum certain, he may sue another at law for a breach of the contract or for a share of profits or losses or for a contribution for advances made in excess of his share. Elsbach v. Mulligan, 58 Cal.App.2d 354, 369-370, 136 P.2d 651.

[3-6] The court found an accounting was not necessary, the joint venture was terminated and dissolved by mutual consent, and Ina is indebted to Benjamin in the amount of $5,045. We cannot say the evidence does not support these findings. Ina says there is no basis in the evidence for the figure $5,045. The findings are presumed to be supported by the evidence. The burden is on her as appellant to show they lack evidentiary support. This she has not done. The most she says is that the manner in which the court arrived at the figure $5,045 is "a complete mystery." This is not enough. She must show that under no possible view of the evidence could the court have arrived at that figure. The record is deficient. Numerous exhibits were introduced in evidence, including financial statements, statements of account, a ledger sheet, cancelled checks, and income tax returns. None of them is here. It appears that the testimony of one witness, Fleming, is not in the reporter's transcript. We are unable to say from the maze of figures that do appear in the record that the figure $5,045 is not supported by the evidence. Ina further claims the court should not have awarded judgment in favor of Benjamin for any amount without an accounting. Since the venture has been terminated and dissolved and the court found that Benjamin was entitled to a sum certain, he was entitled to sue at law therefor. The court did not err in adjudging that an accounting was unnecessary.

[7] Nor did the court err in not awarding costs to Ina in the action for money lent. The judgment in that action was in favor of Benjamin and he was entitled to costs. Code Civ.Proc., § 1032. He is not complaining because costs were not awarded to him.

[8] Since the court found that the joint venture had been terminated and dissolved by agreement of the joint adventurers prior to the commencement of the action for money lent; that an accounting was unnecessary; and that it was Ina, not Wolfe, that was indebted to Benjamin, Wolfe was not a necessary party to the action.

[9] We cannot say the court erred in not rendering judgment in favor of Ina on her counterclaim for $5,344.22 alleged by her to have been paid Benjamin out of the moneys of the joint venture through error. She says now the amount should be $3,318.41. The effect of the judgment is to vest title in Ina to the two pieces of jewelry remaining in her possession and to award Benjamin judgment against her for $5,045. The argument of appellant is not persuasive. It is largely based on her erroneous premise that the court should have ordered an accounting. Examination of her computations in the light of the record shows them to be erroneous in several respects. No purpose would be served in attempting to reconcile all the various transactions between the parties. Many of them were outside the joint venture and apparently between them as husband and wife.

[10, 11] As noted, the court ordered Benjamin as defendant in the divorce action to pay Ina's attorneys $2,800 as attorneys' fees; and ordered that the amount be paid by Ina by deducting it from the judgment for $5,045 in favor of Benjamin in the action for money lent, and pay it to her attorneys. The argument in support of the claim that the manner of payment is erroneous seems to be that section 137.5 of the Civil Code gives Ina's attorneys "the right of judgment" for attorneys' fees and that Benjamin should have been ordered to pay the full amount to them. Ina's attorneys had no "right of judgment." Whether attorneys' fees in a divorce action will be made payable to a party or to his attorney is a matter in the discretion of the trial court. "Such fees may, in the discretion of the court, be made payable, in whole or in part to the attorney." Civ.Code, § 137.5. The court merely set off Benjamin's obligation to Ina against her obligation to him. We find nothing improper in its doing so.

The parts of the judgment appealed from are affirmed.

J. G. TRESCONY, Defendant and Respondent.*
Civ. 16883.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 1, California.

Oct. 18, 1956.

Hearing Granted Dec. 13, 1956.

Action against farmer for balance due under contract for construction of grain elevator by person who did not hold contractor's license. The Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, William T. Sweigert, J., entered judgment for farmer, and builder appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Bray, J., held, in part, that grain elevator, which was constructed on land owned by farmer in unincorporated town, on main street adjacent to railroad tracks, about three and one half miles from farm, was "on farm" within requirement that structure be constructed "on farm" to be within exemption of construction or operation incidental to farming from statute precluding recovery for work done by one who does not have contractor's license.

Judgment reversed.

1. Licenses ⇐39.43

Use by farmer of grain elevator for storage of his own grain produced on his own premises is incidental to his farming operation and is part of his farm, within requirement that structure be constructed "on farm" to be within exemption of construction or operation incidental to farming from statute precluding recovery for work done by one who does not have contractor's license. BRAY, Justice.

The questions posed by this appeal by plaintiff from a judgment in favor of defendant are whether the following findings are supported (they bear on the question of whether the work was agricultural, exempting plaintiff under section 7049, Business and Professions Code, from the requirement of a contractor's license under section 7031):

1. That the grain elevator was not constructed on a farm, either actually or constructively.

2. Was the fact that the elevator was to have some rental use fatal to the exemption?

Record.

Plaintiff, a licensed mechanical engineer, and defendant entered into a written contract for the construction for defendant of a grain elevator and storage facility¹ on certain premises owned by defendant. Upon completion of the work plaintiff sued defendant for the balance claimed due under the contract.² At the trial it was stipulated that there were only two issues: (1) whether the construction was on defendant's farming land and incidental to his farming operations, thereby bringing the exemption of section 7049 into play, plaintiff admittedly not having a contractor's license; (2) the amount due. This appeal is limited to the court's finding on the first issue.

The court found that the elevator was constructed on land owned by defendant in the unincorporated town of San Lucas, at a location on Main Street (which is improved with business buildings and homes on town lots) and the Southern Pacific main line railroad tracks and highway 101, adjacent to the railroad depot and to buildings and commercial grain sheds and tanks of an individual; that the site is approximately 3½ miles from defendant's farm and its only access therefrom is by public highway. This finding is not challenged. The court further found "That said grain elevator and storage facility was designed with the intent that it would be usable primarily for the defendant's own produce, but also for the storage of the grain of others on a rental basis; and that said structure was incidental to both farming and commercial operation by the defendant." This finding is challenged, except as to the portion finding that the primary use was for defendant's own produce. The court also found, and the finding is challenged, that the elevator "was not constructed on a farm, either actually or constructively * * *." The court's judgment was that as the elevator was not constructed on a farm and was to be used to some extent for commercial purposes, the exemption of section 7049 did not apply, and plaintiff, not having the contractor's license required by section 7031, could not recover herein.

1. Was the Construction on a Farm?

It is conceded that plaintiff must have the contractor's license required by section 7031 unless the work contracted for is "farming" or "agriculture" which section

1. Hereafter referred to as "elevator."

2. Formerly plaintiff appealed from an order sustaining defendant's demurrer to his complaint without leave to amend. Fraenkel v. Trescony, 40 Cal.2d 905, 256 P.2d

573. That appeal was consolidated with his appeal in Fraenkel v. Bank of America, 40 Cal.2d 845, 256 P.2d 569, hereafter discussed, the decision in which was expressly made controlling of both appeals.

7049 exempts from the requirements of section 7031. Section 7049 reads: "This chapter does not apply to any construction or operation incidental to the construction and repair of irrigation and drainage ditches of regularly constituted irrigation districts, reclamation districts, or to farming, dairying, agriculture, viticulture, horticulture, or stock or poultry raising, or clearing or other work upon land in rural districts for fire prevention purposes, except when performed by a licensee under this chapter." (Emphasis added.)

In Fraenkel v. Bank of America, supra, 40 Cal.2d 845, at page 850, 256 P.2d 569, at page 572, the court said: "So here, if the grain elevator was built on defendant's farm and designed to function as an incidental part of his own farming operations rather than as a commercial enterprise * * * there would be a factual basis for holding such structure to be within the terms of the exemption as a 'construction or operation incidental to * * * farming'. * * *" At the trial both parties assumed as the law of the case the apparent holding in the Fraenkel case (and its companion case, the former appeal herein) that to come within the exemption of section 7049 the work must be (1) on a farm and (2) incidental to farming operations.³

[1] Accepting the Supreme Court requirement that the construction must be on "defendant's farm," was the site of the elevator a part of defendant's farm? We believe that within the intent of section 7049 it was. In the Bank of America case the court said, 40 Cal.2d at pages 849-850, 256 P.2d at page 571: "In exempting construction 'incidental' to farming, agriculture, and allied occupations from the licensing requirements, the Legislature undoubtedly considered that such construction would include only those structures so closely appertaining to and necessary for the conduct of the designated occupations that they may reasonably be dissociated from the objects and purposes of the licensing law.

* * * Not only are the nature of the activity and its close relationship to agriculture among the elements to be considered, but an additional factor is the nature of the business conducted by the person for whom the service is rendered. Thus, specialized services on a farm * * * performed for the farmer himself and constituting an essential contributing factor to the efficient operation of his farming enterprise, are regarded as part of the general farming operation * * *. Plaintiff testified that before the contract was entered into defendant wanted the elevator built on his own land, showing him concrete foundations of an old barn; that plaintiff advised defendant that those foundations were unsuitable and it would be more advantageous to build the elevator near a railroad track. Defendant then stated that his sister had land near the railroad which he thought he could obtain from her. This he did. Suppose that the elevator had been built just across the highway from the 5,000 acres owned by defendant, on a site purchased for and limited to the elevator, could it be contended that the site was not a part of defendant's farm? The use by a farmer of a grain elevator for storage of his own grain produced on his own premises is certainly incidental to his farming operation and in the sense required by section 7049 is likewise a part of his farm. Particularly is this so when it is realized that the logical place for an elevator is near a railroad, and unless the farmer is fortunate

3. We have some doubt as to whether the setting forth of the rule in those cases was not dicta, as the only questions before the court were (1) the propriety of sustaining a demurrer to a complaint which alleged neither that plaintiff had a contractor's license nor that the proposed uses of the building were those for which exemption was allowed, and (2) the propriety of denying plaintiff the right to amend. See Millsap v. Balfour, 158 Cal. 711, 714, 112 P. 450; Tomaier v. Tomaier, 23 Cal.2d 754, 757, 146 P.2d 905, for the proposition that dictum cannot establish the law of the case. However, the case was tried on the sole theory that the test of exemption is as set forth in the Bank of America case.

enough to have a railroad adjacent to the land where his crops are grown, he must necessarily build such a structure where the railroad exists. The fact that to construct the elevator at the most convenient and adequate spot meant constructing it approximately 3 miles from the growing operations would in no wise make the elevator and its use any the less incidental to his farming operation, nor the site any less a part of his farm. It is undoubtedly true that if "on a farm" means on a single tract of land which is used for growing crops, the elevator was not "on a farm". But such an interpretation of this phrase seems much too narrow in this day and age. "A farm" is no longer predominantly thought of as a unitary acreage where all the operations pertaining to that farm are carried on. Farming is now commonly a more complex operation primarily because of the advancements in mechanization of farm machinery and transportation. No longer is a farmer restricted by the practical factors of time and space to operating on a single tract. He may now conduct an efficient operation on multiple widely-scattered tracts. Applicable here is the following from Irvine Co. v. California Emp. Comm., 27 Cal.2d 570, 582-583, 165 P.2d 908, 915: "Agriculture, like industry, has developed, changed and grown under modern conditions incident to the adoption of new methods and the advent of improved machinery, including the use of electrical power and the internal combustion engine. This has also brought about, in some cases, changes in the methods and ways of doing the necessary work in carrying on agricultural operations. * * *

A large part of agricultural production now takes place on large farms, the efficient operation of which would, in many instances, have been impossible a generation ago, and which systematically utilize modern methods and machinery. But despite such changes in methods and means of operation, they still are agricultural enterprises and are operated for the purpose of producing agricultural crops. It may fairly be said that the determinative consideration here is whether the act in question contemplated 'agricultural labor' under the conditions then actually existing and well known to the Legislature, and as broadly applying to the business of agriculture in its entirety, or whether the general exemption was intended to be limited to 'agricultural labor' under primitive conditions or as pursued a century or more ago, and to apply only insofar as those conditions and methods may still survive. Reasonably viewing the generality of the term, it would seem that it was intended to cover and apply to the conditions prevailing when the act was adopted and under which agriculture now flourishes throughout the state."

We can well paraphrase the following portion of the paragraph above quoted by inserting the words "farming" and "agriculture" for the words "'agricultural labor.'" "It may fairly be said that the determinative consideration here is whether the act in question contemplated * * * ['farming' and 'agriculture'] under the conditions then actually existing and well known to the Legislature, and as broadly applying to the business of agriculture in its entirety, or whether the general exemption was intended to be limited to * * * ['farming' and 'agriculture'] under primitive conditions or as pursued a century or more ago, and to apply only insofar as those conditions and methods may still survive."

In determining that the Supreme Court did not intend a narrow interpretation of the expression "on a farm" used in the Bank of America case, the following language from that case is significant: "* * * the Legislature undoubtedly considered that such construction would include only those structures so closely appertaining to and necessary for the conduct of the designated occupations that they may reasonably be dissociated from the objects and purposes of the licensing law. Thus, the Legislature may well have had in mind prevailing conditions in many rural districts where there are few, if any, licensed contractors and where other persons in the area having the necessary training and experience are readily available for doing various construction jobs as the need may arise. Moreover, many farmers themselves develop special skill in various construction trades qualifying them for contracting among themselves for undertaking the erection of structural improvements upon neighboring farms and yet they are not regularly licensed for such occasionally performed work." 40 Cal.2d at p. 849, 256 P.2d at page 571; emphasis added.

It is inferable that the Legislature in taking cognizance of the situation described in this quotation, also took cognizance of the factual situation which seems to obtain in the instant case in relation to large farming corporations, particularly grain farming not far from a railroad. The word "on" does not necessarily have a fixed, rigid, narrow meaning. The word "on" is frequently understood to mean "'with respect or pertaining to'". Jerome H. Sheip Co. v. Amos, 100 Fla. 863, 130 So. 699, 704; 29 Words and Phrases, p. 426. It may mean "near, or adjacent to". O'Mara v. Jensma, 143 Iowa 297, 121 N.W. 518, 519; Fisher v. Sun Ins. Co. of London, 74 W.Va. 694, 83 S.E. 729, 730, L.R.A.1915C, 619; Hinton v. Vinson, 180 N.C. 393, 104 S.E. 897, 900; 29 Words and Phrases, p. 422. In interpreting "on a farm" in the Bank of America case it is important to bear in mind the discussion in California Employment Commission v. Butte County, etc., Ass'n, 25 Cal.2d 624, 636, 154 P.2d 892, 897, where the Supreme Court was considering "agricultural labor" "incident to ordinary farming operations". There the court said, 25 Cal. 2d at page 636, 154 P.2d at page 897: "Thus, to come within the 'agricultural labor' exemption, off the farm services must be an integral part of farming operations performed for the farmer as such—not for a third person separate and apart from such fundamental concept." It thereby recognized that a farming operation could be conducted "off the farm", that is, off the growing area of the farm, provided that the "off the farm" operation was not only incidental to farming but to the farming of the employer. Thus, in the Bank of America case the court required (1) that the construction be incidental to the farming operation of the owner and (2) that it be "on a farm" in the sense that the operation is limited to the owner's own farming operation. An operation might be incidental to the farming operation of a farmer, but not restricted thereto. Thus a farmer building an elevator principally for commercial purposes, would nevertheless be using it incidentally for his own farming operation if he used it for storage of his own grain, and yet such storage might be a minor portion of the elevator business. But the Supreme Court said that in addition to the construction being for a purpose incidental to his farming operation, it must be "on a farm" in the sense that it is primarily for that purpose rather than secondarily.

Defendant contends that the specially concurring opinion in the Bank of America case proves that the majority opinion intended to give a very narrow interpretation of the phrase "on a farm", because the concurring opinion points out in effect that although the only limitation placed by section 7049 upon the type of construction exempted is that it must be "incidental * * * to farming," and the majority opinion might be construed to require the construction to be on the physical limits of the growing area. Such is not necessarily the fact. The interpretation of the writer of the concurring opinion is not necessarily the interpretation which the majority had in mind. Moreover, the writer of the concurring opinion may have written for the purpose of suggesting by way of precaution a means of broadening sometime in the future the seemingly narrow interpretation of the expression "on a farm".

A somewhat similar situation was presented by the majority and the specially concurring opinions in People v. Gory, 28 Cal.2d 450 and 459, 170 P.2d 433, involving the question whether or not a charge of violating the narcotics law included, as an element, knowledge by the defendant that the substance possessed or sold was of a narcotic character. Some things said in the majority opinion seem susceptible to the interpretation that all the defendant needed to know was that he possessed or sold this substance, not that he needed to know that it was of a narcotic character.

The writer of the specially concurring opinion said in part: "I do not agree to the implication, if there be such, that mere conscious possession of an object, not knowing its true character (as, for example, possession of marijuana believed in good faith to be ordinary tobacco), any more than conscious possession of an object lawful in itself but within which, unknown to the possessor, contraband is concealed, constitutes a criminal act." 28 Cal.2d at page 459, 170 P.2d at page 438.

Later, in People v. Cole, 113 Cal.App.2d 253, 258, 248 P.2d 141; People v. Candiott, 128 Cal.App.2d 347, 350-353, 275 P.2d 500; People v. Winston, 46 Cal.2d 151, 293 P.2d 40, it was held that the majority opinion in the Gory case did not mean what the concurring opinion said it implied. Thus, here, the statements in the concurring opinion in the Bank of America case do not require a narrow interpretation of the expression "on a farm" as used by the majority.

[2,3] The test as to whether land not attached to the particular land upon which growing operations are carried on is a part of a farm, is the use to which the former is put. As stated before, storage of grain produced on the owner's own property is a use necessarily incidental to and a part of his farming operation.

2. Commercial Use.

[4] The court found that while the purpose of the elevator was primarily for the storage of defendant's own produce, it was also to be used for the storage of the grain of others on a rental basis. Defendant contends that the latter part of the finding is not supported by the evidence. The finding is based upon defendant's own testimony. He stated that although he proposed to use the elevator for his own crops, he intended that if he had a short season he would rent storage for his neighbors. He had been told by the owner of the adjoining elevator that he would rent storage if defendant had space. He stated that plaintiff had told him that he could make money renting the elevator. Was the fact that rental of space not necessary to defendant's use was contemplated fatal to the exemption? In considering this question, it must be remembered that a narrow interpretation of this question will result in the plaintiff, who according to his testimony was told by defendant that the elevator was to be used only for defendant's own grain, being denied a recovery for his work and material, and defendant will, by a technicality, receive an unconscionable gain.

[5,6] The building consisted of a concrete dump put where trucks would unload grain into a bucket elevator which would raise the grain to an elevation where it could be spouted into the five tanks erected to store it. The fifth tank was not included in the original contract but was added during the construction of the rest of the building to be used specially for defendant's seed grain. The size of the structure was determined from the acreage and past harvests as stated by defendant. Defendant claimed to be producing 800-1000 tons of grain per season and desired such capacity. Defendant told plaintiff that the elevator was for use in his farming operations and mentioned nothing about using the elevator for commercial renting or storage or any use other than for his own grain. After the construction was started defendant told plaintiff that his crop came out exceptionally well that year and he wanted another storage bin for his seed grain. Defendant did not have a warehouseman's license. Defendant borrowed money from the Commodity Credit Corporation for the erection of the elevator. The note he signed stated that the loan was made "for the purpose of enabling the borrower to construct farm storage facilities." Defendant understood that the regulations of the Commodity Credit Corporation allowed such loans only for the purpose of erecting storage facilities for the farmer's own produce, and not for commercial or other purposes. This regulation was read to defendant when he signed the note: "'Storage loans will not be available to increase storage facilities for commodities purchased or for commodities in which the borrower has no interest in the production.'" Defendant testified that when he first discussed the capacity of the elevator with plaintiff he said he would need 800 tons, which was the capacity contemplated in the contract. The additional 200 tons capacity was added later as above set forth. The capacity of the elevator as built was 1000 tons. In actual use defendant used the elevator for his own grain and only rented the excess storage space. Thus, the first year he stored 800 tons of his own grain, and 200 tons on rental; the next year he stored 700 tons of his own grain and 300 on rental. We doubt that the rental of excess space changes the purpose of the elevator's use to commercial. In determining this question, it must be borne in mind that it must be determined as of the date of the construction. What was the intended use? The mere fact that after construction the building was used for a different purpose than originally contemplated, if it were, would not relate back to the period of the construction so as to deprive the contractor of payment for his services and material. For example, suppose that a contractor agreed to construct a barn for a farmer who represented that it was to be used for storage of hay, and that after being finished, the farmer used it as a public dance hall, could the farmer successfully claim that he did not have to pay for the barn's construction because the contractor did not have a license? Obviously not. So here, as far as the contractor was concerned, this was to be an elevator for the farmer's own crops, built for a farmer who had acreage enough to reasonably require the storage space provided, had no warehouseman's license, and who had obtained a loan from the Commodity Credit Corporation based upon his representation that he would only use the building for his own crops. The plaintiff denied that defendant told him he intended to rent excess space. The court did not find whether defendant did; it only found that the defendant intended to rent excess storage space. Assuming, however, that defendant told plaintiff that he intended to rent space if his crops did not come up to expectations, we do not believe such fact, in view of all the circumstances, required plaintiff to obtain a contractor's license. Defendant did not intend to and did not enter into a commercial enterprise. We see no reason why the renting of the amount of excess space here would convert defendant's operations in any sense or part into a commercial enterprise. Certainly in constructing a farm building, a farmer must allow space for variance in the size of his crops, and when a smaller crop occurs, he should have the right to rent his excess space. Suppose that during vacation the farmer should rent his home for a month or two, while he is on a trip with his family, such fact would not make the home any less a farmhouse.

Machinery Engineering Co. v. Nickel, 1951, 101 Cal.App.2d 748, 226 P.2d 78, is not in point. There the plaintiff constructed a large and complicated hay mill adjacent to extensive hay lands owned by several of the defendants. Admittedly the mill was not to be connected with, used as a part of, or in connection with, any particular farm. It was to be used to mill the hay of others than the six individuals who contracted for its construction. It was intended to be "a commercial enterprise * * * to grind the hay of farmers generally * * *." 101 Cal.App.2d at pages 751-752, 226 P.2d at page 80. Nor are the facts in California Employment Commission v. Butte County, etc., Ass'n, supra, 25 Cal.2d 624, 154 P.2d 892, at all comparable to those in our case. There the defendant was an incorporated cooperative association. The warehouse was to service nonmembers as well as members. As said by the court, the defendant intended to operate "a profitable public warehouse business." 25 Cal.2d at page 636, 154 P.2d at page 897.

There is no evidence that defendant's estimate of the capacity required for his crops was not made in good faith, nor that his statement that his crops ran from 800 to 1000 tons per year was untrue. The fact that defendant contemplated renting storage in the event that the crops in any year did not come up to expectancy did not justify a finding that defendant was building the elevator for "commercial operation."

The judgment is reversed.

Leola WASHINGTON, a/k/a L. W. Holmes,
Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

George WASHINGTON, Defendant and Appellant.

S. F. 19249.

Supreme Court of California,
 In Bank.

Oct. 30, 1956.

Divorced wife brought action against divorced husband for partition and for declaratory judgment that divorced wife had an interest in personal injury judgment obtained by divorced husband. The Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco, George W. Schonfeld, J., entered judgment adverse to divorced husband, and he appealed. The Supreme Court, Traynor, J., held that cause of action for personal injuries vests in injured spouse when marriage is dissolved by divorce.

Reversed.

Shenk, J., dissented.

Opinion, 296 P.2d 896, vacated.

1. Husband and Wife ⇨223

A spouse's entire cause of action for personal injuries survives to such spouse, and does not abate, on death of other spouse.

2. Husband and Wife ⇨223

Civil Code provisions concerning survival of actions do not affect causes of action which would not otherwise abate on death and do not affect surviving spouse's interest in his or her cause of action for his or her own injuries. West's Ann.Civ. Code, § 956.

3. Assignments ⇨24(2)

Divorce ⇨249(3)

Causes of action for personal injury are not assignable and therefore the court in a divorce action cannot assign the cause of action as if it were ordinary community property. West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 146, 956.

4. Husband and Wife ⇨272(1)

In the absence of a rule permitting apportionment of damages resulting from personal injury between the separate interests of the spouses and their community interests, the entire cause of action for personal injuries vests in injured spouse on dissolution of the marriage by divorce.

5. Husband and Wife ⇨272(1)

Where judgments for husband for his personal injuries did not become final until after entry of final divorce decree, wife acquired no interest in the judgments.

TRAYNOR, Justice.

Plaintiff and defendant were married in October, 1944, and separated in August, 1946. There was one child of the marriage. In October, 1946, plaintiff filed an action for divorce on the grounds of extreme cruelty, and defendant answered putting the existing property rights of the parties in issue. In September, 1948, defendant lost a leg as a result of a collision between a San Francisco police car and a car driven by Mervin E. Garner. He filed an action against the City and County of San Francisco and Garner, and in December, 1950, the jury returned a verdict against both defendants for $85,000. Judgment was entered on the verdict against Garner, but the trial court granted the City and County's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict. The judgment against Garner became final in August, 1951, after he dismissed his appeal. The judgment in favor of the City and County was reversed on appeal with directions to enter judgment on the verdict. The City and County then moved for a new trial, and following the denial of its motion, appealed from the judgment, which was affirmed and became final in April, 1954. In the meantime, the divorce action was brought to trial, and an interlocutory decree in favor of plaintiff was entered in March, 1950. No supplemental pleadings were filed putting in issue the parties' rights in the cause of action for defendant's personal injuries, and no disposition of property rights was made in the interlocutory decree and no alimony or child support was awarded.¹ The custody of the minor daughter of the parties was awarded to plaintiff. A final decree of divorce was entered in May, 1951, and plaintiff remarried in November, 1952. After the judgment against the City and County became final in 1954, plaintiff brought this action for declaratory relief and partition asserting the right to half of defendant's recovery. Deductions were made for attorneys' fees and costs advanced by them, and judgment was entered in favor of plaintiff for $34,087.11, half the remainder, plus costs and interest. Defendant appeals.

[1, 2] In Kesler v. Pabst, 43 Cal.2d 254, 258, 273 P.2d 257, 259, we pointed out that although a wife's cause of action for personal injuries is community property, it differs from ordinary community property in that on her husband's death the entire cause of action survives to her by operation of law. He "cannot, either by exercising or failing to exercise his power of testamentary disposition over half of the community property, affect his wife's rights in her cause of action." Although the Kesler case was concerned with the wife's cause of action for her injuries, there is no reason to treat the husband's cause of action for his injuries differently. As pointed out in the Kesler case, the reason the wife's entire cause of action survived to her was to prevent her loss of full recovery for her injury by the abatement of her husband's interest in her cause of action on his death. Moody v. Southern Pac. Co., 167 Cal. 786, 790-791, 141 P. 388. For the same reason the husband's entire cause of action for his injuries survives to him on his wife's death. It is true that in 1949 the Legislature enacted section 956² of the Civil Code providing for the survival of causes of action for personal injuries, and it may be contended that it is no longer necessary for the entire cause of action to survive to the injured spouse to prevent its partial abatement on the death of the other. To interpret section 956 as changing the rule of the Moody case, however, would require reading into it words that are not there. As here relevant that section provides that certain actions shall not abate on the death of one or another of the parties, but it contains no provisions affecting causes of action that would not otherwise abate on such a death. Accordingly, since under the rule of the Moody case, an injured spouse's cause of action has never abated in whole or in part on the death of the other spouse, section 956 does not affect the surviving spouse's interest in his or her cause of action for his or her own injuries.

[3] In the present case the marriage was dissolved by divorce rather than death, and the question presented is whether a cause of action for personal injuries vests by operation of law in the injured party

1. It appears that the community property referred to in the pleadings had been exhausted before trial and that defendant was unable because of his injury to earn money to pay alimony or child support.

2. "A thing in action arising out of a wrong which results in physical injury to the person or out of a statute imposing liability for such injury shall not abate by reason of the death of the wrongdoer or any other person liable for damages for such injury, nor by reason of the death of the person injured or of any other person who owns any such thing in action. When the person entitled to maintain such an action dies before judgment, the damages recoverable for such injury shall be limited to loss of earnings and expenses sustained or incurred as a result of the injury by the deceased prior to his death, and shall not include damages for pain, suffering or disfigurement, nor punitive or exemplary damages, nor prospective profits or earnings after the date of death. The damages recovered shall form part of the estate of the deceased. Nothing in this article shall be construed as making such a thing in action assignable."

when the marriage is dissolved by divorce. We have concluded that just as the rule that personal actions abated on the death of the plaintiff compelled treating a spouse's cause of action for personal injuries differently from other community property in its devolution on the death of the other spouse, the rule prohibiting the assignment of such a cause of action compels the same disposition of the cause of action when the marriage is dissolved by divorce. See, Chase v. Chase, 72 Mass. 157, 159. It is significant in this respect that although the Legislature has provided for the survival of such causes of action, it has expressly retained the rule that they are not assignable. Civil Code, § 956. Clearly the court in a divorce action could not exercise its power to assign the community property (e. g., by assigning all or a major share of a spouse's cause of action for personal injuries to the other in a case of adultery or extreme cruelty) over a cause of action for personal injuries without violating the foregoing rule. See, Civil Code, § 146. Moreover, it would be anomalous if such personal elements of damages as pain, suffering, and disfigurement, which still abate on the death of the injured party, Civil Code, § 956, should be assignable to the other spouse in the case of divorce. On the other hand, the rule by which the entire cause of action vests in the injured party on death or divorce does not violate the rule that such actions do not fully survive or the rule that they are not assignable. Moody v. Southern Pac. Co., supra, 167 Cal. 786, 790-791, 141 P. 388; Kesler v. Pabst, supra, 43 Cal.2d 254, 258, 273 P.2d 257.

[4] It is not unfair to the uninjured spouse to terminate his or her interest in the other's cause of action for personal injuries on divorce. The rule that a spouse's cause of action for personal injuries is necessarily community property has been criticized on the ground that it fails to distinguish between damages that could reasonably be considered personal to the injured spouse such as those for pain, suffering, and disfigurement and damages properly belonging to the community such as those for loss of earning power, past and future medical expenses incurred or to be incurred, and disability of the injured spouse directly to contribute to the community venture. See, 1 De Funiak, Principles of Community Property, 225-230. A rule permitting apportionment of the damages as suggested, however, has never been adopted in this state, and in the absence thereof, treating the entire cause of action as community property protects the community interests in the elements that clearly should belong to it. See, 2 Armstrong, California Family Law 1513. Although such a rule may be justified when it appears that the marriage will continue, it loses its force when the marriage is dissolved after the cause of action accrues. In such a case not only may the personal elements of damages such as past pain and suffering be reasonably treated as belonging to the injured party, but the damages for future pain and suffering, future expenses, and future loss of earnings are clearly attributable to him as a single person following the divorce. Moreover, as in any other case involving future earnings or other after acquired property, the wife's right, if any, to future support may be protected by an award of alimony. Since we have no rule permitting the apportionment of the elements of a cause of action for personal injuries between the spouses' separate and community interests and since such a cause of action is not assignable, it must vest in the injured party on the dissolution of the marriage.

[5] In the present case no judgment was entered against the City and County until after the entry of the final decree of divorce, and the judgment against Garner did not become final until after that time. Accordingly, since the cause of action against the City and County was not assignable and the judgment against Garner could not be assigned until it became final, Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. v. Nakano, 12 Cal. 2d 711, 713-714, 87 P.2d 700; see, 121 A.

CARTER, Justice.

I concur in the result reached in the majority opinion.

I think it is clear, however, that this court now recognizes that its former opinions, holding that causes of action for personal injuries are community property, are unrealistic and outmoded.

In Zaragoza v. Craven, 33 Cal.2d 315, 202 P.2d 73, 76, 6 A.L.R.2d 461, in which I dissented, it was held that " * * * it must be considered as the present law of this state that the cause of action for personal injuries suffered by either spouse during marriage, to whatever extent such cause of action may constitute property (see Franklin v. Franklin, supra, 67 Cal. App.2d 717, 725, 155 P.2d 637), as well as any recovery therefore, constitutes community property—at least in the absence of agreement otherwise between the spouses. Any contrary implications which may be derived from the language of the Franklin case are disapproved."

The accident here involved occurred after the plaintiff had sued for divorce, but before the interlocutory decree was entered. The parties were therefore still husband and wife despite the fact that the divorce action had been filed almost two years prior to the accident in which defendant was injured.

I am of the opinion now, as I have always been, that a cause of action for personal injuries is a separate and personal one and that the recovery therefor should be the separate property of the injured spouse except for the actual loss to the community in the earning power of the injured spouse, see dissenting opinion in Zaragoza v. Craven, 33 Cal.2d 315, 323, 324, 202 P.2d 73, 6 A.L.R. 461. As I have heretofore pointed out in my dissents, Zaragoza

v. Craven, supra; Flores v. Brown, 39 Cal.2d 622, 633, 248 P.2d 922; and Kesler v. Pabst, 43 Cal.2d 254, 260, 273 P.2d 257, 260, there is no reason whatsoever to characterize a cause of action for personal injuries a " 'community cause of action.' " The wife, or husband, has a right to sue in her, or his, own name, Code Civ.Proc. § 370; Sanderson v. Niemann, 17 Cal.2d 563, 567, 110 P.2d 1025, and the recovery therefor should be the individual's sole and separate property, De Funiak, Principles of Community Property, pp. 225, 232; 24 Cal.L.Rev. 739; Rest.Torts, § 487.

In Zaragoza v. Craven, supra, a majority of this court held that a cause of action for personal injuries which arose during the marriage relationship was community property (thereby overruling a contrary statement in Franklin v. Franklin, 67 Cal. App.2d 717, 155 P.2d 637). In Flores v. Brown, supra, Mr. Flores died as a result of the accident giving rise to Mrs. Flores' cause of action and, in order to avoid its former rule of imputation of contributory negligence, a majority of this court decided that even though the cause of action arose during marriage, that marriage was terminated by Mr. Flores' death at the time of the accident and therefore the entire cause of action devolved to Mrs. Flores and that the contributory negligence of Mr. Flores was not imputable to her. I pointed out in my dissent in Kesler v. Pabst, supra, that the holding in the Flores case was quite inconsistent with the majority holding in the Zaragoza case.

It has been said quite often and with a great deal of truth that "hard cases make bad law."

In the instant case, a woman who has brought suit against her husband for divorce and who was separated from him, seeks to recover half of the compensation awarded him for an injury which took place while the marriage was still in being although after suit for divorce had been filed. If what was said in the Zaragoza case is still the law, the cause of action accruing during the existence of the marital relationship, because of defendant's personal injuries, was community property and any judgment recovered as a result thereof should relate back so as to take on the same character.

In the case under consideration, however, in neither the original complaint for divorce, nor in the amended complaint, did Mrs. Washington allege the cause of action for Washington's personal injury to be community property and pray for a division thereof when the same had been reduced to final judgment.

As Mr. De Funiak aptly said, Principles of Community Property, p. 225: "Their [courts] usual decision to consider the property received in exchange for separate property as taking the character of separate property is a fortunate triumph of common sense over a lack of understanding of the principles of community property. But apparently the courts are inclined to apply a similar reasoning to the right of action for personal injuries and to the compensation received; that is, it is a property acquired during marriage and is not acquired by gift, etc., therefore it must be community property. But this overlooks the principles of onerous and lucrative titles and other pertinent principles. Except for gifts clearly made to the marital community, community property only consists of that which is acquired by onerous title, that is, by labor or industry of the spouses, or which is acquired in exchange for community property (which, of course, was acquired itself by onerous title, again with the exception as to the gift). It must be plainly evident that a right of action for injuries to person, reputation, property, or the like or the compensation received therefor, is not property acquired by onerous title. The labor and industry of the spouses did not bring it into being. For that matter it is not property acquired by lucrative title either. * * * Since the right of action for injury to the person * * * is intended to repair or make whole the injury, so far as is possible in such a case, the compensation partakes of the same character as that which has been injured or suffered loss."

If this court would hold, logically and reasonably, once and for all that a cause of action for personal injuries was personal to the injured spouse and that the recovery constituted his, or her, separate property (see section 171c, Civil Code, as it relates to the wife) then it would not be necessary to engage in legal acrobatics in a case such as this in order to reach a just result. I have no complaint with the statements in the majority opinion that the causes of action for the personal injuries to Mr. Washington were not assignable and that no assignments thereof could be had until final judgments had been rendered therein. When this case and the Flores case are considered together, it appears to me that perhaps, in time, a majority of this court will recognize the fallacy in earlier holdings that a cause of action for personal injuries accruing during marriage is community property.

I am happy to see a majority of the members of this court depart from the rule of the Zaragosa case which, if carried to its logical conclusion, would have prevented the conclusion reached in Flores v. Brown, supra, and the just result reached in the case under consideration. I am hopeful that in time the court will come to the full realization that a cause of action for personal injuries and the compensation received therefor is personal to the injured person since such cause of action and compensation were always intended as a substitute for the violation of a personal right. The majority opinion, however illogical in the light of the rule of the Zaragosa case, is a small step in the right direction.

SHENK, Justice (dissenting).

In no uncertain terms the Legislature has classified property owned by spouses before marriage and property acquired by them after marriage. Since 1872 section 162 of the Civil Code has provided that "All property of the wife, owned by her before marriage, and that acquired afterwards by gift, bequest, devise, or descent, * * * is her separate property." And for a like period section 163 of the same code has provided that, "All property owned by the husband before marriage, and that acquired afterwards by gift, bequest, devise or descent, * * * is his separate property." Section 164 then and since has provided that, "All other property acquired after marriage by either husband or wife, or both * * * is community property".

Without question the right of action acquired by the defendant was property. It was a chose in action and personal property as defined by section 14 of the Civil Code. See also 6 West's Anno.Calif.Code p. 67 and cases cited in note 15. It was acquired during the marriage and lifetime of the spouses and before the entry of the interlocutory decree. That decree did not sever the marriage relationship. On the record here presented the cause of action and the fund derived therefrom continued to be community property. Brown v. Brown, 170 Cal. 1, 147 P. 1168. Such a cause of action was held to be community property in Zaragosa v. Craven, 33 Cal.2d 315, 202 P.2d 73, 6 A.L.R.2d 461, and that case cannot be distinguished from the case at bar. The property right here involved was either the separate property of the defendant or the community property of the spouses. It could not be both. The Legislature has so defined separate property as to exclude it from that category. The Legislature has also declared that all property not defined as separate property is community property. Now the court holds that all does not mean all, and declares in effect that the cause of action was not community property. The statutory definitions include all property of whatever description owned or acquired by the spouses. The fund here involved is certainly not included within the definition of separate property and is therefore community property.

I can see no justification for setting at naught the decision in the Zaragosa case and other cases cited therein in support thereof. The District Court of Appeal of the First District, Division Two, affirmed the judgment in a well-considered opinion authored by Mr. Justice Dooling and reported in 296 P.2d 896. For the reasons stated in that opinion and on the authority of the Zaragosa and other cases to like effect, I would adhere to the plain language of the statute as heretofore applied by this court and affirm the judgment.

The CITY OF TAFT, a Municipal Corporation, Glen Black, Jack Kirsner, Ted Pheal, William O. Erickson, Dale Huey, as members of the City Council thereof, and Walter McKee, as Chief of Police thereof, Defendants and Appellants.

Building contractor's action to enjoin city and others from enforcing its building ordinance against him in connection with construction of public school building. The Superior Court, Kern County, William L. Bradshaw, J., entered judgment for contractor and defendants appealed. The Supreme Court, Carter, J., held that the state had pre-empted the field of regulating public school building construction so that construction of such building by school districts is not subject to building regulations of municipal corporation within which building is erected.

Affirmed.

Opinion 297 P.2d 686, vacated.

1. Schools and School Districts 20

2. Schools and School Districts ⇨20

The power of the state Legislature over the public schools is plenary subject only to any constitutional restrictions. West's Ann.Const. art. 9, §§ 6, 6½, 8, 14.

3. Municipal Corporations ⇨592(1)

Public school system is of state-wide supervision and concern and legislative enactments thereon control over attempted regulation by local government units. West's Ann.Const. art. 9, §§ 6, 6½, 8, 14.

4. Schools and School Districts ⇨65

Public school property is held in trust for school purposes by the persons and corporations authorized for the time being to control such property, and it is within the power of the Legislature to provide for a change in the trusteeship of such property in certain contingencies.

5. Schools and School Districts ⇨71

Constitutional provision giving any county, city, town or township power to enforce within its limits all local, police, sanitary and other regulations not in conflict with general laws, does not confer upon local unit power to regulate construction of public school buildings. West's Ann. Const. art. 11, § 11; West's Ann.Gov.Code, §§ 38601, 38660.

6. Municipal Corporations ⇨592(1)

The state has completely occupied the field of regulating public school building construction, and construction of such school buildings by school districts is not subject to the building regulations of a municipal corporation in which the building is constructed. West's Ann.Education Code, §§ 5021, 5041, 18001, 18002, 18009, 18055, 18057, 18101, 18102, 18151, 18191, 18193, 18194-18196, 18199-18201.

7. Municipal Corporations ⇨592(1)

A city may not enact ordinances which conflict with the general laws on statewide matters.

8. Schools and School Districts ⇨71

The provisions of the Health and Safety Code requiring buildings with certain exceptions to meet certain standards as well as requiring building permits to be obtained from proper city or county officers charged with enforcement of laws for regulating construction, do not limit or modify provisions of Education Code delineating standards for public school buildings. 9. Schools and School Districts ⇨71

Purpose of rules adopted for construction of school buildings under the Education and Health and Safety Codes is to protect lives and property of people by regulating the design and construction of public school buildings so that, in addition to the normal loads to which such buildings are subjected, they shall resist future earthquakes. West's Ann.Health & Safety Code, §§ 19100-19170, 19130, 19132, 19150, 19151; West's Ann.Education Code, §§ 18191 et seq., 18202-18204, 18221, 18222.

Defendants, Taft, a non-chartered city of the sixth class, its council and chief of police appeal from a judgment enjoining it from enforcing against plaintiff, a building contractor, its building ordinance.

There is no dispute as to the facts. On April 22, 1955, plaintiff as contractor entered into a contract with Taft Union High School and Junior College District, hereafter called district, a school district duly organized under the state laws, to construct in Taft for the district, a school building for $614,113. The plans and specifications for the building were approved by the State Department of Education and State Division of Architecture. Plaintiff commenced construction which was to be completed in 320 days, but work was "stopped" by Taft, the city, demanding that plaintiff obtain a building permit from it involving a $300 fee and submission to the building ordinance¹ of Taft. The district has employed an inspector to assure that the building is constructed according to the plans and specifications. Defendants assert that plaintiff has refused to obtain a permit from the city for the construction of the building and they intend to enforce the penal and civil provisions of the building ordinance of the city.

The issue is whether a municipal corporation's building regulations are applicable to the construction of a public school building by a school district in the municipality. Taft argues that it had power to adopt police regulations—building construction regulations under the Constitution.²

[1] The public schools of this state are a matter of statewide rather than local or municipal concern; their establishment, regulation and operation are covered by the Constitution and the state Legislature is given comprehensive powers in relation thereto. The Legislature shall not pass local or special laws "Providing for the management of common schools." Cal. Const. art. IV, § 25, subd. 27. "A general diffusion of knowledge and intelligence being essential to the preservation of the rights and liberties of the people, the Legislature shall encourage by all suitable means the promotion of intellectual, scientific, moral and agricultural improvement." Emphasis added; id., art. IX, § 1. There is a State Board of Education, an elected superintendent of public instruction and there are county superintendents whose salary and qualifications are prescribed by the Legislature, id., art. IX, §§ 3, 3.1, 7. The proceeds of all public lands that have been or may be granted by the United States to the state and other property is "inviolably" appropriated to the support of the common schools, id., art. IX, § 4, and "Out of the revenue from state taxes for which provision is made in this article, together with all other state revenues, there shall first be set apart the moneys to be applied by the State to the support of the Public School System and the State University." Id., art. XIII, § 15. "The Legislature shall provide for a system of common schools by which a free school shall be kept up and supported in each district at least six months in every year, after the first year in which a school has been established." Emphasis added; id., art. IX, § 5. "The Public School System shall include all kindergarten schools, elementary schools, secondary schools, technical schools, and State colleges, established in accordance with law and, in addition, the school districts and the other agencies authorized to maintain them. No school or college or any other part of the Public School System shall be, directly or indirectly, transferred from the Public School System or placed under the jurisdiction of any authority other than one included within the Public School System. * * *

The education of the children of the state is an obligation which the state took over to itself by the adoption of the Constitution. To accomplish the purposes therein expressed the people must keep under their exclusive control, through their representatives, the education of those whom it permits to take part in directing the affairs of state." School districts are agencies of the state for the local operation of the state school system. Cloverdale Union High School Dist. of Sonoma County v. Peters, supra, 88 Cal. Rapose*, supra, 125 Cal.App.2d 819, 271 P.2d 522. The beneficial ownership of property of the public schools is in the state. It is said in Pass School Dist. of Los Angeles County v. Hollywood Dist., supra, 156 Cal. 416, 419, 105 P. 122, 124, 26 L.R.A.,N.S., 485: "To the contention that a transfer of ownership thus accomplished works the taking of property without due process of law, it should be sufficient to point out that in all such cases the beneficial owner of the fee [of public school property] is the state itself, and that its agencies and mandatories—the various public and municipal corporations in whom the title rests—are essentially nothing but trustees of the state, holding the property and devoting it to the uses which the state itself directs. The transfer of title without due process of law, of which appellant so bitterly complains, is nothing more, in effect, than the naming by the state of other trustees to manage property which it owns and to manage the property for the same identical uses and purposes to which it was formerly devoted. In point of law, then, the beneficial title to the estate is not affected at all. All that is done is to transfer the legal title under the same trust from one trustee to another. In this sense the trustees of the Hollywood City School District became, by operation of law, successors to the trustees of the Pass School District, as is directly held in [School Township of] Allen v. School Town of Macey, 109 Ind. 559, 10 N.E. 578, where it is said: 'It is now a well-recognized legal inference deducible as well from general principles as from the decided cases that under the Constitution and laws of this state, public school property is held in trust for school purposes by the persons or corporations authorized for the time being to control such property, and that it is in the power of the Legislature to provide for a change in the trusteeship of such property in certain contingencies presumably requiring such a change, or, indeed, to change the trustees of that class of property whenever it may choose to do so.'

[5] Even if such well-established principles could be set aside under the plea that they work injustice in the individual case, this plea here presented is without merit. The state is profoundly interested in the education of its young, but has no deep concern over the personality of the trustees who shall administer this trust, so long as the administration is in the orderly form of law." See, Fawcett v. Ball, 80 Cal.App. 131, 136, 251 P. 679; Butler v. Compton Junior College Dist., 77 Cal.App.2d 719, 176 P.2d 417; Kennedy v. Miller, 97 Cal. 429, 32 P. 558; Gridley School District v. Stout, 134 Cal. 592, 66 P. 785. While a large degree of autonomy is granted to school districts by the Legislature, we are referred to no statute or constitutional provision which, as far as the question here involved is concerned, expressly makes school buildings or their construction any more amenable to regulation by a municipal corporation than structures which are built and maintained by the state generally for its use. When it engages in such sovereign activities as the construction and maintenance of its buildings, as differentiated from enacting laws for the conduct of the public at large, it is not subject to local regulations unless the Constitution says it is or the Legislature has consented to such regulation. Section 11 of article XI of the state Constitution, supra, should not be considered as conferring such powers on local government agencies. Nor should the Government Code sections which confer on a city the power to regulate the construction of buildings within its limits, see Government Code, §§ 38601, 38660, be so considered. It is said in In re Means, 14 Cal.2d 254, 258, 93 P.2d 105, 107, 123 A.L.R. 1378, holding that a state employee working on a state structure in a city need not meet the requirements of a city charter provision: "If one who has been employed by the state may not work on state property within a municipality without the consent of the municipality obtained after examination, the city has, in effect, added to the requirements for employment by the state, and restricted the rights of sovereignty. * * *

"Turning to the contentions of the respondent that the regulation of plumbing is a municipal affair, the rule to be applied is not entirely a geographical one. Under certain circumstances, an act relating to property within a city may be of such general concern that local regulation concerning municipal affairs is inapplicable. * * * For example, where one of the city's streets has been declared by an act of the legislature to be a secondary highway, the improvement of that street is not a municipal affair within the meaning of the Constitution. * * * Also, regulations prescribed by charter or ordinance of a city requiring that the work of altering and improving buildings be subject to local supervision have been held inapplicable to state buildings. City of Milwaukee v. McGregor, 140 Wis. 35, 121 N.W. 642, 17 Ann.Cas. 1002.

"In the case of Kentucky Institution for Education of Blind v. City of Louisville, 123 Ky. 767, 97 S.W. 402, 404, 8 L.R.A., N.S., 553, the city attempted to enforce an ordinance relating to fire escapes with respect to a state institution for the blind. The court held the ordinance inapplicable, stating: 'The principle is that the state, when creating municipal governments, does not cede to them any control of the state's property situated within them, nor over any property which the state has authorized another body or power to control. The municipal government is but an agent of the state—not an independent body. It governs in the limited manner and territory that is expressly or by necessary implication granted to it by the state. It is competent for the state to retain to itself some part of the government even within the municipality, which it will exercise directly, or through the medium of other selected and more suitable instrumentalities.' How can the city have ever a superior authority to the state over the latter's own property or in its control and management? From the nature of things it cannot have." See, also, Board of Education of City of St. Louis v. City of St. Louis, 267 Mo. 356, 184 S.W. 975; Salt Lake City v. Board of Education, 52 Utah 540, 175 P. 654; 31 A.L.R. 450.

Pasadena School Dist. v. City of Pasadena, 166 Cal. 7, 134 P. 985, 47 L.R.A., N.S., 892, fails to consider the factors above mentioned and insofar as it is inconsistent with this opinion it is overruled. The question here considered was not involved in Roman Catholic Welfare Corporation of San Francisco v. City of Piedmont, 45 Cal.2d 325, 332-333, 289 P. 2d 438.

[6, 7] Moreover, in connection with the foregoing and as an additional ground why the construction of school buildings by school districts are not subject to the building regulations of a municipal corporation in which the building is constructed, is that the state has completely occupied the field by general laws, and such local regulations conflict with such general laws, when we consider the activity involved. A city may not enact ordinances which conflict with general laws on statewide matters. Simpson v. City of Los Angeles, 40 Cal.2d 271, 253 P.2d 464; Pulcifer v. County of Alameda, 29 Cal.2d 258, 175 P.2d 1; Ex parte Daniels, 183 Cal. 636, 192 P. 442, 21 A.L.R. 1172; Atlas Mixed Mortar Co. v. City of Burbank, 202 Cal. 660, 262 P. 334; Ganley v. Claeys, 2 Cal. 2d 266, 40 P.2d 817; In re Murphy, 190 Cal. 286, 212 P. 30; In re Mingo, 190 Cal. 769, 214 P. 850; Natural Milk Producers Ass'n of California v. City & County of San Francisco, 20 Cal.2d 101, 124 P.2d 25; Pipoly v. Benson, 20 Cal.2d 366, 125 P.2d 482, 147 A.L.R. 515; Tolman v. Underhill, 39 Cal.2d 708, 249 P.2d 280. The particular situation presented and discussed in those cases is not helpful. In re Means, supra, 14 Cal.2d 254, 93 P.2d 105, 123 A.L.R. 1378, herein discussed is most pertinent as it involves the attempted regulation of a state activity by a city, as distinguished from regulations of the members of the public.

The Education Code sets out a complete system for the construction of school buildings. The Legislature there declares that it is in the interest of the state to aid school districts in the construction of school buildings for the maintenance of the public school system inasmuch as the system is of general concern and the education of the children is an obligation and function of the state. Ed.Code, §§ 5021, 5041. The governing board of any school district shall manage and control the school property within its district, id., § 18001. It (the board) shall furnish and repair the school property. Id., § 18002. It shall provide as a part of school buildings patent flush water closets for the use of the pupils, id., § 18009. It may repair old buildings by day's labor or by force account, id., §§

18055, 18057. The State Department of Education shall: "Establish standards for school buildings", review and approve all plans and specifications for buildings and disapprove those not meeting the standards, furnish plans, specifications and "building codes," and make rules and regulations to carry out those activities, id., §§ 18102, 18101. "The governing board of any school district may, and when directed by a vote of the district shall, build and maintain a schoolhouse", id., § 18151. Except in cities having a board of education the county superintendent shall pass upon all plans for school buildings and plans shall be submitted to him. "The Division of Architecture of the Department of Public Works under the police power of the State shall supervise the construction of any school building or, if the estimated cost exceed four thousand dollars ($4,000), the reconstruction or alteration of or addition to any school building, for the protection of life and property." Id., § 18191. "Construction or alteration" as used in this article includes any construction, reconstruction, or alteration of, or addition to, any school building." Id., § 18193. "The Division of Architecture shall pass upon and approve or reject all plans for the construction or alteration of any school building. To enable it to do so, the governing board of each school district and any other school authority before adopting any plans for a school building shall submit the plans to the Division of Architecture for approval, and shall pay the fees prescribed in this article." Id., § 18194. "Before letting any contract for any construction or alteration of any school building, the written approval of the plans, as to safety of design and construction, by the Division of Architecture, shall be first had and obtained." Id., § 18195. "In each case the application for approval of the plans shall be accompanied by the plans and full, complete, and accurate specifications, and structural design computations, and estimates of cost, which shall comply in every respect with any and all requirements prescribed by the Division of Architecture." Id., § 18196. All plans and specifications shall be prepared by a duly state licensed architect or engineer and the supervision of the work shall be by a duly licensed person. Id., § 18199. No contract for construction is valid and no public money shall be paid for any work or materials furnished thereunder "unless the plans, specifications, and estimates comply in every particular with the provisions of this article and the requirements prescribed by the Division of Architecture and unless the approval thereof in writing has first been had and obtained from the division." Id., § 18200. Progress reports must be made to the division, id., § 18201. "The State Division of Architecture shall make such inspection of the school buildings and of the work of construction or alteration as in its judgment is necessary or proper for the enforcement of this article and the protection of the safety of the pupils, the teachers, and the public. The school district, city, city and county, or the political subdivision within the jurisdiction of which any school building is constructed or altered shall provide for and require competent, adequate, and continuous inspection during construction or alteration by an inspector satisfactory to the architect or structural engineer and the Division of Architecture. The inspector shall act under the direction of and be responsible to the architect or structural engineer." Emphasis added; id., § 18203. The division may adopt rules and regulations to carry out its duties and a violation of the provisions is a felony, id., §§ 18202, 18204. If the supervisor of health of any school district notes any defect in "plumbing, lighting, or heating," he shall report to the district and if it does not act, to the county superintendent. Id., § 18221. Each building, if two or more stories, shall have fire escapes, id., § 18222.

[8] It is urged, however, that the foregoing provisions must be read in the background in which they were adopted, that is, that some of them were placed in the Education Code from the Field Act adopted in 1933, Stats.1933, ch. 59, and must be construed with the Riley Act of 1933, Stats. 1933, ch. 601, now in the Health & Safety Code, sections 19100-19170. The Riley Act provides that all buildings (with certain exceptions Health & Safety Code, § 19100) must meet certain standards which are set forth, id., §§ 19150, 19151. Building permits must be obtained from the proper city or county officers charged with the enforcement of laws regulating construction, id., § 19130. Any city or county may establish construction standards higher than those established by sections 19150 and 19151 of the Health & Safety Code. Plans and specifications for buildings shall be filed with the application for a building permit, id., § 19132. Both the Field and Riley Acts were enacted as urgency measures, the urgency being stated to be the series of earthquakes occurring shortly prior thereto, Stats.1933, ch. 59, § 9; 1933, ch. 601, § 8. We do not believe, however, that the Health & Safety Code provisions (Riley Act) limit or modify the provisions of the Education Code (Field Act) above discussed. The former deal with structural design aimed at procuring buildings less dangerous from the standpoint of earthquakes, Health & Safety Code, §§ 19150, 19151, while the latter, as above pointed out, are broad and comprehensive including the whole field of construction regulations. The urgency that impelled the Legislature to enact both as urgency measures may have been the same but the scope is clearly different. Hence the provisions in the former providing for more stringent local regulations are not applicable to the latter.

[9] Reference is made to rules and regulations, past and present, adopted for the construction of school buildings under the Education and Health & Safety Codes. Calif. Administrative Code, Title 21, Public Works, Division of Architecture, Chap. 1, subchap. 1. The purpose of the rules (we refer to the rules now in existence) is to protect lives and property of the people by regulating the design and construction of public school buildings so that, in addition to the normal loads to which such buildings are subjected, they shall resist future earthquakes. Title 21, subchap. 1, Group 1, Art. I, § 1. The rules are intended to establish "reasonable standards and minimum requirements" for the construction of such buildings in order to attain the requisite stability to withstand loads and forces "and to insure safety of construction" id., § 2. The detailed regulations set forth in sections 101 to 1206 have been adopted as a basis for the approval of plans and specifications. "It is not the intention to limit the ingenuity of the designer nor to interfere with existing building rules and regulations where such rules and regulations are more stringent. Where the designer desires to depart from the methods of analysis set up by these rules and regulations, it will be necessary that he submit his method in detail together with complete information including computations and test data covering the design in question. Permission to deviate from these rules and regulations is optional with the Division of Architecture and is dependent upon the division being satisfied that the structural members or portions of the building involved would provide at least such safety as would have been obtained had these rules and regulations been adhered to strictly." Id., § 70. "Regulations and design values established in these rules and regulations are minimum requirements. Nothing herein contained shall be interpreted to interfere with or to waive the requirements of applicable local or state building laws or ordinances where the requirements of those laws are more stringent than the requirements of these rules and regulations." Id., § 115. However, it is also provided that: "No rule or regulation shall be construed to deprive the Division of Architecture of its right to exercise the powers conferred upon it by law; or to limit the division in such enforcement of the act as is necessary to secure safety of construction and the proper administration of the law." Id., § 5.

[10] It is very doubtful that those rules indicate an intention to interpret the Education Code sections to mean that a city's building regulations must be met in the construction of a school building. They tend more to indicate that the school districts could follow such regulations as well as those of the state but are not bound to do so. In any event, since the final construction of a statute is the function of the courts (2 Cal.Jur.2d, Administrative Law, § 17), we hold the statutes here involved should not be construed as requiring a school district to comply with the building regulations of a city.

There is no necessity for comparing in detail Taft's building code and the numerous comprehensive building regulations contained in the Education Code and the rules and regulations of the Division of Architecture, for as we have seen the state has occupied the field. As said in In re Means, supra, 14 Cal.2d 254, 258, 260, 93 P.2d 105, 107, 123 A.L.R. 1378, in speaking of the effect of a city ordinance, establishing standards for plumbers, on a state employee in a city, the state civil service system provides a comprehensive plan for the selection of state employees and although the city ordinance does not purport to prescribe the conditions for state employment, "If one who has been employed by the state may not work on state property within a municipality without the consent of the municipality obtained after examination, the city has, in effect, added to the requirements for employment by the state, and restricted the rights of sovereignty. * *

"Although the legislature has enacted no statute regulating plumbing, if the city's ordinance is a valid exercise of power, then one whom the state has examined and found eligible for employment as a plumber and who has later entered the state civil service, may be unable to work on state property because he cannot pass the examination of a city health officer or licensing board. The result is a direct conflict of authority. Either the local regulation is ineffective or the state must bow to the requirement of its governmental subsidiary. Upon fundamental principles, that conflict must be resolved in favor of the state." (Emphasis added.) The same comments apply to the references in the instant construction contract and specifications that the building is to be constructed in compliance with local regulations.

The judgment is affirmed.

Civ. 16862.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 2, California.

Oct. 18, 1956.

Rehearing Denied Nov. 16, 1956.

Hearing Granted Dec. 12, 1956.

Action by holder against co-makers to enforce payment of two notes and to foreclose a chattel mortgage given to secure them. The Superior Court, County of Contra Costa, Hugh H. Donovan, J., entered judgment against co-makers and they appealed. The District Court of Appeal held, inter alia, that where only advantage co-maker of certain notes could have received from maker securing a loan from holder of the notes was that maker would be freed from financial difficulty and would be better able to work on organization of a corporation for co-maker, co-maker was an accommodation maker and was discharged from liability under the notes when holder did not secure his consent to remain liable as surety at time holder released maker from liability on the notes by electing to Herron & Winn, John Wynne Herron, San Francisco, for respondent.

PER CURIAM.

In April, 1951, plaintiff sued to enforce payment of two negotiable promissory notes and to foreclose a chattel mortgage given to secure them. Both notes were dated June 14, 1950, formulated in the singular, (I promise) and signed by all defendants, Arvidson, Carroll, Reed and Cairns, as makers. One note was for $30,000 due April 14, 1950, the other for $10,000 due December 14, 1950. Both provided for the payment of 5% interest and of costs and attorney's fees in case of suit. The chattel mortgage was executed by defendant Reed on the same date as the notes it secured.

In the action Reed defaulted and judgment was entered as to him and foreclosure of the chattel mortgage decreed. The other defendants answered in two separate pleadings one of defendant Cairns one of defendants Arvidson and Carroll. As for the purpose of the appeal there is no essential difference between the answers they will be considered together. They contained the following defenses on the ground of which said defendants moved for a summary judgment, to wit, that an agreement made on October 12, 1950 between plaintiff, Reed and Reed's wife regarding the debts and mortgage constituted a novation, which released the cosigners of the notes, that the fact that plaintiff had brought suit on said agreement and had obtained judgment constituted an election which estopped plaintiff from proceeding on the notes and that plaintiff by his prior action had waived the chattel mortgage to the prejudice of the defendants and had thereby lost his rights against them. The answers contained also allegations to the effect that the answering defendants were accommodation makers for Reed, who received the consideration, a loan of $30,000, that the note of $10,000 was given as a bonus for the loan and lacked consideration and that the transaction as a whole was usurious. The trial court dismissed the action summarily as to all defendants except Reed. Plaintiff appealed from the summary judgment of dismissal, which was reversed by the other division of this court, Williams v. Reed, 113 Cal.App.2d 195, 248 P.2d 147.

In the opinion, herein further called the prior opinion, Mr. Justice Wood stated and analyzed the contents of the agreement of October 12, 1950 at length. It can be summarized as follows: Williams agreed to accept payment of $35,000 plus interest on or before October 28, 1950 in full settlement of both notes. Until said date action on the notes and on the chattel mortgage would be withheld. Reed agreed to pay the $35,000 within said time, and confessed judgment accordingly. Reed and his wife waived all defenses and remedies against the contract, the notes, the chattel mortgage, the judgment and its execution on their personal property including that subject to the chattel mortgage. Mrs. Reed agreed that the chattel mortgage be deemed to have been executed by her as well as by her husband. Reed warranted that the chattel mortgage was the paramount lien on all chattels subject to the mortgage.

At the time of the prior appeal it appeared that judgment on the contract had been obtained but that nothing had been paid on it and it did not appear that any steps to enforce the judgment by levy of execution or otherwise had been taken. The district court held that from the agreement of October 12, 1950, without further evidence, no intention to substitute said agreement for the notes appeared and that even if there had been a substitution as to Reed such would not necessarily have released Reed's comakers. That the comakers of notes as here involved were presumed to be jointly and severally liable, Civil Code, §§ 1660, 3098 subd. (7) and that then not bringing of action against one, but only satisfaction in some form could constitute a bar as to the others. That section 726 of the Code of Civil Procedure recognizing for a debt secured by mortgage one form of action only and prescribing the requirements for a deficiency judgment was not applicable to the prior action of plaintiff because it was not brought on the secured notes but on the separate agreement with the Reeds. The reversal of the summary judgment was stated to be without prejudice as to any issue of fact thereafter to be tried. The Supreme Court denied a hearing.

In the further proceedings the cause of action relating to the note of $10,000 was dismissed on plaintiff's motion. After trial the court found in substance that from the note of $30,000 only $687 had been paid, which amount was received from the foreclosure sale of the chattel mortgage, that each of the defendants received valuable consideration for the making of the note and were not accommodation parties, that with respect to the note of $30,000 no usury was involved as the note of $10,000 given was a separate transaction, that the defendants approved the execution of the agreement of October 12, 1950, that the execution of said agreement did not cause a novation, or a merger of the obligation of defendants under the note, that the same applies to the complaint and judgment in the prior action, that the liability of defendants was in no way extinguished and that the present action did not violate section 726 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Judgment was for plaintiff and the three defendants appeal.

Only Cairns filed briefs on appeal. Arvidson and Carroll joined in said briefs, although it is the position of Cairns, that he did not become a comaker of the notes under the same circumstances as Arvidson and Carroll. He urges on appeal that the finding that he received consideration and was not an accommodation maker is not supported by the evidence, that as an accommodation maker he may interpose the defenses that by obtaining a judgment on the agreement of October 12, 1950, procuring a writ of execution and recording an abstract of judgment respondent made a binding election which precluded him from further action on the notes and the chattel mortgage also as to appellants, especially when section 726 of the Code of Civil Procedure is considered and that the alteration of the obligation of Reed by the agreement of October 12, 1950 to which appellant Cairns did not consent exonerated him. He urges that the finding of his consent is contrary to the evidence. Finally, he predicates error on the allowing of interest, and the finding of absence of usury from the note of $30,000, because the evidence shows that the two notes were a single transaction.

[1] The evidence shows that Arvidson, Carroll, and Cairns were all in business relations with Reed. Reed professed to be able to assist each of them in organizing the various projects in which each was interested in the form of a foundation to be directed by a corporation of which the defendant would be a director. The character of a foundation would make possible the obtaining of large funds from organizations like the Rockefeller foundation and the defendant would obtain profit by means of his directorate of the managing corporation or still more indirectly. There would also be an important advantage with respect to taxes. Reed himself pretended to be a large scale operator in this manner, but to be temporarily short of money, which he proposed to obtain by a fantastic real property transaction. Thirty thousand dollars would enable him in a very short time to buy and sell a farm with great profit. He, therefore, could give a bonus for a short term loan. Arvidson and Carroll, who knew the plaintiff Williams, a florist with some savings, induced Williams to loan the thirty thousand dollars for the real property transaction. There is evidence, both from testimony of Williams and in a deposition of Reed, indicating that in a conference with Reed, Arvidson and Carroll, Williams was given to understand that the profits of the real estate transaction would not go to Reed alone but also to the foundations to be formed for Arvidson and Carroll. The financial interest of Arvidson and Carroll, who were known to Williams, whereas Reed was not, played a part in Williams' decision to make the loan. The first payment (of $5,000) made by Williams was in a check to Arvidson. These circumstances justify under the law to be stated hereafter the finding that Arvidson and Carroll were not accommodation makers, who were lending their names only to Reed, but were themselves beneficially interested in the loan.

[2] However, there is no such evidence supporting the finding that Cairns was not an accommodation maker. The evidence shows that he had declared that he was unable to assist Reed in finding a lender, that he was not present when Reed made his representations to Williams, that he was only asked to sign by Williams and Arvidson because Williams thought the security of the other signatures and the chattel mortgage insufficient for a loan of $30,000, and that in their presence, Cairns before signing, asked Reed by telephone whether he could be sure that the note gave Reed time enough to pay back. Reed did not declare that he had promised Cairns any part of the profit on the real estate transaction for Cairns' foundation, as he had stated with respect to Arvidson and Carroll. The only interest which it is contended that Cairns may have had in the loan is, that the fact that Reed would be freed from his own financial difficulties would better enable him to work on the organization of Cairns' foundation and corporation. As the circumstances under which Cairns became a comaker of the notes are undisputed the question whether Cairns under these circumstances was an accommodation maker is one of law.

[3] The essential characteristic of accommodation is the loan of credit (name) to another person, who receives or has received the consideration and is to provide for the bill or note when it falls due. Civ. Code, sec. 3110; 11 C.J.S., Bills and Notes, §§ 737, 741, 742; Gardiner v. Holcomb, 82 Cal.App. 342, 353, 255 P. 523; Brown v. Volz, 90 Cal.App.2d 793, 799, 204 P.2d 110. There can be no doubt that Cairns' action conformed to said test. However, even when there is a loan of credit to another person, the one lending his name may have such an interest in the underlying transaction as to constitute consideration going to him personally and to prevent him from being an accommodation party. 11 C.J.S.,

Bills and Notes, § 742, p. 297; Gardiner v. Holcomb, supra; In re Estate of Chamberlain, 44 Cal.App2d 193, 201, 112 P.2d 53, 934. So it was held in Gardiner v. Holcomb, supra, that a director and large stockholder of a corporation who signed a renewal note for an obligation for which notes of the corporation endorsed by all its directors were collateral, was not an accommodation maker, but that the wife of another director and stockholder who with that director also signed the renewal note, but who did not own stock was an accommodation maker for the directors. In Re Estate of Chamberlain, supra, 44 Cal.App.2d at page 199 et seq., 112 P.2d at page 56, it was held, reversing the trial court, that a widow who together with her son signed a note to replace one given by her deceased husband and the son, for a loan taken up by the son, was not an accommodation maker, where mother and son were administrators and heirs of the estate of the father and the signing was part of an agreement with the son with respect to the estate favorable to the mother. In Warren Nat. Bank, Warren, Pa. v. Suerken, 45 Cal.App. 736, 188 P. 613, it was held in reversing the trial court that a daughter who was an heir at law of her deceased father and one of the organizers of the family corporation that was taking over his business was not an accommodation party to notes given to prevent the Bank from enforcing against the estate notes it held from the deceased. In Irwin v. Colburn, 56 Cal.App. 41, 204 P. 551 it was held that a canning company who endorsed notes for rent of one who was to raise tomatoes on the rented land and sell the tomatoes to the canning company was not an accommodation endorser. Many other examples are found in 11 C.J.S., Bills and Notes, § 742, p. 297. In none of the cases known to us in which it was held that the contended accommodation party had received consideration was his relation to the underlying transaction so indirect and remote as in this case. Cairns would not receive any advantage from the loan itself but only from the peace of mind of Reed which was expected to result from the loan. Not every motive for the loan of credit which is not purely altruistic can be considered consideration or value received from the transaction. The wife of the director in Gardiner v. Holcomb, supra, may well have had a selfish interest in the position of her husband but it was nevertheless held in reversing the court below that she was an accommodation party because she had no direct interest as stockholder or as signer of the collateral notes. We hold that the interest of Cairns was too indirect to justify the finding that Cairns was not an accommodation maker but received value.

[4, 5] With respect to Arvidson and Carroll, who were correctly found not to be accommodation makers, the prior opinion in this case clearly indicates that they were not released by the acts of Williams, even if these acts prevented further action on the notes against Reed himself. (It is now conceded that the agreement of October 12, 1950 did not constitute a novation but it is contended that the judgment obtained on said agreement, the issue of execution, and the recording constituted a binding election, as destructive of the cause of action on the original notes as a novation.) It was pointed out in said opinion, 113 Cal.App.2d at page 202, 248 P.2d at page 152 that even with respect to joint debtors, § 1543 of the Civil Code provides that the release of one "does not extinguish the obligations of any of the others, unless they are mere guarantors; nor does it affect their right to contribution from him." In Elizalde v. Murphy, 146 Cal. 168, 171, 79 P. 866, 867, it is said: "The provisions of this section are universal, and include all releases, whether resulting from operation of law, or by virtue of a statutory provision, or by the direct act of the party with whom or for whose benefit the obligation was entered into." See also section 3200 of the Civil Code which in its enumeration of manners in which a negotiable instrument is discharged does not mention any manner which could have caused discharge in the situation before us. As stated also in the prior opinion, citing Grundel v. Union Iron Works, 127 Cal. 438, 442, 59 P. 826, 47 L.R.A. 467, "‘Nothing short of satisfaction * * * constitutes a bar’" to an action against the remaining joint and several obligors (113 Cal.App.2d at page 204, 248 P.2d at page 154) and section 726 of the Code of Civil Procedure does not prevent the present action, as the prior action was not brought on the notes but on Reed's separate agreement of October 12, 1950 (113 Cal.App.2d at page 205, 248 P.2d at page 154). The liability of Arvidson and Carroll on the notes must be upheld.

[6,7] The liability of Cairns presents a more complicated problem if it is accepted that he was an accommodation maker. This problem was not considered in the prior opinion because there was in that respect a triable issue of fact (113 Cal.App.2d 200, note 1, 248 P.2d at page 151). An accommodation maker is on the face of the instrument a primary party, absolutely required to pay the same. Section 3266a, of the Civil Code; Schaeffle v. Nolan, 115 Cal. App.2d 651, 657, 252 P.2d 732, 35 A.L.R. 2d 1027. He is liable as such to a holder for value, notwithstanding such holder knew him to be an accommodation party, Section 3110 of the Civil Code, and is considered liable in that manner also as to the payee. California Nat. Bank of San Diego v. Ginty, 108 Cal. 148, 151, 41 P. 38; 8 Cal.Jur. 2d 423. However, in his relation to the accommodated party he is a surety and is entitled to reimbursement from him. This dual relation causes a problem when a payee or holder in due course with knowledge of the accommodation character of a primary party does acts which may prejudice said party and would constitute a defense if said party was simply a surety. This question, which has caused much disagreement among courts and legal writers, has been treated at length but not generally solved in Mortgage Guarantee Co. v. Chotiner, 8 Cal.2d 110, 64 P.2d 138, 108 A.

L.R. 1080. The court states that the majority of jurisdictions in which the question has been decided adheres to the rule that suretyship defenses cannot be set up by an accommodation maker of a negotiable note. Although our Supreme Court is critical of the majority reasoning, based on the absence of surety defenses from the enumeration of the manners in which a negotiable instrument and therefore, as urged, also the persons primarily liable on it can be discharged, Uniform Law, § 119, Section 3200 of the Civil Code, which restriction is said to show the actual intent to deprive any party primarily liable from the protection of said defenses, the court adopts said majority rule in the interest of uniformity insofar as the defense of the granting of a binding extension of time to the principal debtor without consent of the accommodation maker is concerned, which defense the court considers as a more technical one, not likely to result in real injury. The court, however, expressly limits its ruling to the defense of extension of time. It states that the jurisdictions which with respect to that specific defense follow the majority rule sometimes deviate when a less technical defense, like that of release of security is presented, but at the same time the court points out that the reasoning based on an express legislative intent to abrogate the surety defenses of accommodation parties does not leave much room for distinction. The law, as stated in the above case has not been further developed in California. However, as the Supreme Court in the principal case indicates that it does not consider the rule refusing surety defenses to an accommodation maker as intrinsically sound, but accepts it with respect to the one defense of extension of time only in the interest of uniformity, following the great weight of authority, the rule excluding such defenses should in this jurisdiction only be followed with respect to those specific defenses which are excluded by a clear weight of authority. In general, this is not the case with other defenses than the one of extension of time. Britton Bills and Notes, 1121 et seq.; See Annotation, 2 A.L.R.2d 260.

[8] The surety defenses proposed by appellant combine alteration of the original agreement without consent of the surety and discharge of the main creditor by election to pursue an inconsistent cause of action to judgment and execution. The first of these two contentions is not well taken. Appellant Cairns concedes that the agreement of October 12, 1950 did not constitute a novation but was a mere executory accord so that when Reed failed to live up to it, plaintiff could have brought action on the notes against all parties. Plaintiff does not contend that appellant Cairns became a surety on the accord agreement and brings his action against him solely on the note for $30,000. The only way in which the executory agreement affected the note was by an extension of time, which defense, as we have seen, is not available to an accommodation maker. It is, therefore, irrelevant whether Cairns consented to the agreement, which, if executed would have led to the discharge of the notes without any payment by himself, or not.

[9-12] However, there is merit in the contention that when plaintiff based his prior action against Reed on the accord and not on the notes and pursued said action to judgment, he made an election which prevented plaintiff from thereafter bringing action against Reed on the notes. Evidently, plaintiff was entitled to recover, either on the accord or on the original obligation, but not on both. (Restatement, Contracts, § 417; 6 Williston on Contracts, Revised Ed. 5207). The liability of the surety normally ceases with the liability of the principal, except where the liability of the principal ends because of his personal disability, § 2810 of the Civil Code; Anderson v. Shaffer, 98 Cal.App. 457, 460, 277 P. 185; See Restatement, Security, § 122. There is here no contention or evidence that Cairns consented to the institution of the prior action and agreed to remain liable as a surety notwithstanding the fact that Reed was released from his obligation on the notes. From the standpoint of suretyship the defense is good. The defense is technical and finds little support in equity considering that Reed defaulted and was held liable in the action on the note and Cairns was not actually prejudiced. However, sureties are favored and strictly protected in our law. 23 Cal.Jur. 1023; Suretyship, § 24. In section 2821 of the Civil Code it is expressly provided that if a surety is exonerated by an agreement altering the original obligation of the debtor or impairing the remedy of a creditor, the rescission of said agreement does not restore the liability of the surety. No more can it be said, that, if Cairns was exonerated by the judgment against Reed on the accord, the fact that Reed defaulted in the action on the note could reinstate Cairns as a surety. In contrast to the rule with respect to extension of time, the defense of release of the principal is as a rule considered available to an accommodation maker. 11 C.J.S., Bills and Notes, § 752, p. 323; Britton on Bills and Notes, p. 1123. It must also be noted that we are here concerned with the suretyship relation between the immediate parties to the instrument in which normally all defenses of the general law are available as if there were no negotiable instrument. (Brannan's Negotiable Instrument Law, 7th Ed. 1125). We are constrained to hold that Cairns was exonerated.

[13-14] We also agree with appellants in that the evidence shows without any possible doubt that the two notes of $30,000 and $10,000 were given as one transaction for the single consideration of a loan of $30,000. (The actual amount of the loan was $29,995, but the minimal difference of $5 can be disregarded.) Williams himself considered the note of $10,000 as a bonus for the loan. Reed thought that finder fee sounded better. The finding that there were two separate transactions is contrary to the evidence. There is no doubt that said transaction in its entirety violated paragraph 2 of the Usury Law, Deering's

Gen.Laws, Act 3757, West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1916-2 which prohibits the receipt in any form of any greater value for a loan than the rate of interest there provided for and in case of such violation declares void any agreement to pay interest in any sum. Williams' argument that the bonus note was voluntarily offered and that he dismissed the action on it cannot avail him. When the transaction clearly violates the above prohibition, the intent of both or either of the parties is immaterial, Martin v. Kuchler, 212 Cal. 536, 539, 299 P. 52 and so is the circumstance that not the lender but the borrower took the initiative to the transaction, Martin v. Ajax Construction Co., 124 Cal.App.2d 425, 431, 269 P.2d 132. It was error to provide for the payment of any interest.

With respect to defendant and appellant Cairns, the judgment is reversed with direction to the trial court to deny all recovery against him; with respect to defendants and appellants Arvidson and Carroll, the judgment is reversed insofar as it awards plaintiff recovery of interest with direction to the trial court to amend the judgment so as to exclude the recovery of any and all interest. In all other respects the judgment is affirmed, defendants and appellants Arvidson and Carroll to bear their own costs on appeal.

Appellant Cairns to recover his costs on appeal.

DEVINE, Justice pro tem.

I dissent.

I concur in affirming the judgment against defendants Arvidson and Carroll, and in the elimination of interest because of usury, but I dissent from the decision which releases defendant Cairns from the effect of his signing as comaker a promissory note for $30,000 on the proposition that he is an accommodation party, and that as such he is discharged by a suretyship defense.

In the first place, it does not seem to me that it should be held as a matter of law and contrary to the finding and conclusion of the trial court, that Cairns was an accommodation maker. In deciding the question whether or not one who signs a promissory note is an accommodation party, the test, according to section 3110 of the Civil Code, is whether or not he signed "without receiving value therefor, and for the purpose of lending his name to some other person." It is presumed that the payee became a party for value. Section 3105, Civil Code. Value in the negotiable instruments law is any consideration sufficient to support a simple contract. Section 3106, Civil Code. Therefore, the inquiry is pushed back to the query whether or not the evidence contrary to the presumption is so overwhelming as to make the trial court's conclusion an arbitrary one. I do not find the evidence to be so, but rather I regard it as supporting the presumption. Cairns did not lend his name to Reed primarily for Reed's benefit; he signed the note in anticipation of profit. The evidence to that effect is this: Reed, a confidence man who later was sentenced to prison, persuaded Cairns to sign the note by which Williams handed Cairns a check for $24,995 to Arvidson, upon the proposition that Cairns would form an agricultural foundation to revitalize soils, and that he, Reed, would assist and would obtain money for the foundation from philanthropic organizations with which he had contacts. Cairns testified that he expected to gain from the project by selling to growers chemicals with which to revitalize their soil. He testified that he hoped to sell an overhead irrigation system to Reed. Reed told Cairns that he needed $30,000 to cover personal expenses, and that he was not in any mental condition to contact the prospective benefactors of the Cairns Agricultural Foundation, which had been formed in anticipation of Reed's promised contacts with the great foundations, from the Rockefeller down, until his own pressing financial problems were solved. Cairns' hopes for profit (perhaps accompanied with a certain humanitarian desire with regard to the foundation but not with regard to Reed) were the reasons for his signing the note, and the fact that the whole plan appears chimerical in retrospect does not do away with the fact that the loan to Reed by Williams was desired by Cairns because of the latter's hopes for gain.

It is said in the majority opinion that the possible benefit to Cairns was too indirect to prevent him from being other than an accommodation party; but what principle of law distinguishes benefits sufficiently direct and those which are too indirect and does so with sufficient clarity and force as to overcome the presumption that value was given, and to overcome, as well, the inferences drawn by the trial court? It would seem that the statutory definition of value, as given above, should apply. In Gardiner v. Holcomb, 82 Cal. App. 342, 353, 255 P. 523, 528, it is said: "While a party's intent may be to aid a maker of a note by lending his credit, if he seeks to accomplish thereby legitimate objects of his own and not simply to aid the maker the act is not for accommodation." In that case, the stockholder and officer of a corporation who signed the company's note was held not to be an accommodation maker, while his wife, who held no stock or office, was held to be an accommodation party. Husband and wife were considered in accordance with the general laws relating to spouses, as separate parties in contracting. In the present case, an advantage to Cairns himself was his motive for signing.

Assuming Cairns to be an accommodation maker in relation to Reed, it does not follow that the holder of the note is affected by that relationship. An accommodation maker is liable to a holder in due course. Section 3110, Civil Code. Even the fact that the holder might have known a defendant to be a guarantor in his relation to other defendants would not make him a mere guarantor as to the payee, where it appears from the note that he is a maker.

Casner v. San Diego Trust & Savings Bank, 34 Cal.App.2d 524, 534, 94 P.2d 65.

Here, again, the case of Gardiner v. Holcomb, supra, is distinguishable. In that case, the holder of the note was not a party. It was a case in which contribution was sought. The case was described in Harris v. Holland, 107 Cal.App. 646, at page 654, 290 P. 903, at page 906, as holding only "that, where three persons sign a note for the purpose of raising funds for a corporation and two of them are both stockholders and directors of that corporation and the third has no interest in it, if either of the first two are compelled to pay the note, they have no right to contribution from the third."

To what extent the suretyship defenses other than that of extension of time apply to negotiable instruments in this state is a question left open to the Supreme Court in Mortgage Guarantee Co. v. Chotiner, 8 Cal.2d 110, 64 P.2d 138, 108 A.L.R. 1080.

In the present case, the defendants were comakers, who signed in the singular, and the presumption is that their liability was joint and several. Section 1660, Civil Code. It would seem that nothing short of satisfaction by Reed would constitute a bar to this proceeding. Williams v. Reed, 113 Cal.App.2d 195, 204, 248 P.2d 147. No satisfaction, of course, has been shown.

It is contended by appellant that he has been prejudiced by respondent's action in proceeding on the agreement in that the security has been lost, because by section 726 of the Code of Civil Procedure, there can be but one remedy on a debt secured by mortgage, and that by proceeding on the debt, the creditor waives the security. This argument, too, has been answered in the earlier decision 113 Cal.App.2d at page 205, 248 P.2d at page 154. Respondent, in proceeding originally on the agreement, did not lose his right to proceed on the notes, and, therefore, the mortgage security was not lost.

At the present stage of the cause, this is not merely legal reasoning. Actually, the chattel mortgage has been foreclosed in accordance with the complaint, which is one for foreclosure and deficiency judgment, and the property has been sold and the amount realized has been applied on the judgment, for the benefit of appellants as well as of the others. I do not see how appellant can be held to have been prejudiced by what he thinks might have happened in face of the fact that he actually received the benefit of the security.

If another reason is required on this point, it is this: the law is that a guarantor's liability (assuming Cairns to be a guarantor) may be enforced without first resorting to the mortgage security, Loeb v. Christie, 6 Cal.2d 416, 57 P.2d 1303, because the section is for the benefit of the mortgagor only. Martin v. Becker, 169 Cal. 301, 146 P. 665. Thus, if Cairns were a guarantor, he would have lost nothing that he was entitled to have. In fact, to avoid this, he argues towards the end of his brief that he was primarily liable, and that the rule of Loeb v. Christie, supra, which applies to guarantors, does not apply to him. Thus, he brings us back to the correct position, that he is not a mere guarantor at all.

The majority opinion states that Williams made an election which prevented him from bringing action against Reed on the notes. The fact is that he brought action against Reed on the notes and obtained judgment and brought action against Arvidson and Carroll on one of the notes and the majority opinion sustains the judgment (except as to interest) against the latter two against their appeal.

The majority opinion concedes that Cairns' defense finds little support in equity. I believe neither law nor equity compels the reversal of the judgment against Cairns, and that the judgment should be affirmed, modified, however, first, by elimination of interest and, second, by reduction of counsel fees to $6,000, which was the amount alleged to be the reasonable sum chargeable on the one valid note.

On plaintiff's appeal from order granting a new trial, order denying defendants' motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict may be reviewed.

2. Appeal and Error \S 1213

Where nonsuit has been reversed on appeal on basis that there was evidence which, if believed, would support a verdict for plaintiff, on retrial the case must be submitted to the jury.

3. Appeal and Error \S 1213

Neither trial court nor jury were required to believe plaintiff's witnesses, resolve conflicts in plaintiff's favor, or find for plaintiff on second trial after District Court of Appeal had reversed a nonsuit.

4. New Trial Ⓒ69, 72, 159

Trial judge, upon motion for new trial, must consider credibility of witnesses, weight of evidence, draw own inferences, and make independent conclusions.

5. Courts Ⓒ99(1)

Denial of defendants' motions for nonsuit, directed verdict, and judgment notwithstanding verdict did not preclude trial judge from granting defendants' motion for a new trial upon his own appraisal of the evidence.

6. Appeal and Error Ⓒ977(3)

An order granting a new trial will not be reversed on appeal unless an abuse of discretion of trial judge is affirmatively shown or manifestly appears.

7. Appeal and Error Ⓒ1213

In action for personal injuries sustained while working in a crew conducting a water shut-off test of an oil well, although judgment for defendants after nonsuit had been reversed on former appeal, granting defendants a new trial after verdict for plaintiff was not an abuse of discretion.

8. Appeal and Error Ⓒ1097(1)

In reviewing order denying defendants' motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, decision on former appeal reversing judgment for defendants after nonsuit was the law of the case.

9. Judgment Ⓒ199(3.5)

Judgment notwithstanding the verdict may be granted only where, viewing all the evidence most favorably to the plaintiff, with every legitimate inference drawn in his favor, and disregarding all conflicting evidence, the record is insufficient to support verdict for plaintiff.

10. Appeal and Error Ⓒ1213

Where all evidence which constituted prima facie case for plaintiff, under law of prior case, was again before the court on retrial after reversal of nonsuit, further evidence, either cumulative or conflicting, could not justify the granting of a judgment for defendants notwithstanding the verdict for plaintiff.

Russell H. Pray, William C. Price, Long Beach, for appellant.

Moss, Lyon & Dunn, Sidney A. Moss, Henry F. Walker, Los Angeles, for respondents Acme Tool & Tester Company, a corporation, and Hobart A. Vorhees.

Ball, Hunt & Hart, Clarence S. Hunt, Long Beach, for respondents Richfield Oil Corp., James R. Hale and Douglas A. Watson.

WHITE, Presiding Justice.

After the second trial of the instant action and verdict rendered for plaintiff for $50,000 for personal injuries suffered while working in the crew conducting a water shut-off test of an oil well, defendants moved for judgment notwithstanding the verdict. Those motions were denied. Defendants then moved for a new trial on all grounds applicable to jury trials and those motions were granted "on the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict".

[1] Plaintiff has appealed from the order granting the motions for a new trial, and, as contended by respondents, by reason of plaintiff's said appeal, the order denying defendants' motions for judgment notwithstanding the verdict may be reviewed on this appeal. C.C.P. § 629; In re Estate of Green, 25 Cal.2d 535, 545, 154 P.2d 692.

Appellant urges two grounds for reversal: (1) that the doctrine of the law of the case requires it; and (2) that the trial judge abused his discretion in granting the new trial.

After plaintiff's evidence had been introduced in the former trial, judgment for defendants followed the granting of their motions for nonsuit. That judgment was reversed by this court, Hargrave v. Acme Tool & Tester Co., 125 Cal.App.2d 34, 40, 269 P.2d 913, for the reason that the evidence was sufficient to raise a question of fact to be decided by the jury and that a motion for nonsuit should be granted only when there is no substantial evidence to support a verdict in favor of plaintiff.

Seneris v. Haas, 45 Cal.2d 811, 821, 291 P.2d 915. After the decision of this court upon said former appeal, hearing was denied by the Supreme Court.

All parties to the instant appeal agree that the entire summary of the evidence in the decision on the former appeal, Hargrave v. Acme Tool & Tester Co., supra, is a correct statement of some of the evidence at the second trial. The decision which we have reached makes it unnecessary to summarize the additional evidence introduced at the second trial.

[2,3] The law of the case, as determined by the decision of this court on the former appeal reversing the judgment rendered after nonsuit, is that there was some evidence, which, if believed, would support a verdict in favor of plaintiff. That decision on appeal required that the trial judge submit the case to the jury. Kramm v. Stockton Elec. R. Co., 10 Cal.App. 271, 280, 101 P. 914. That was done. After submission of the case to the jury in the second trial, neither the jury nor the trial judge was required to believe plaintiff's witnesses, resolve the conflicts in plaintiff's favor, or to find for plaintiff.

[4,5] After the jury's verdict for the plaintiff, the trial judge, as he is required to do upon a motion for a new trial, considered the credibility of the witnesses and the weight of the evidence, drew his own inferences, and made his independent conclusions therefrom. The fact that he considered the evidence sufficient to justify his denial of defendants' motions for nonsuit, for directed verdict and for judgment notwithstanding the verdict did not preclude the trial judge from granting defendants' motions for a new trial upon his own appraisal of the evidence. Woods v. Walker, 57 Cal.App.2d 968, 971, 136 P.2d 72; Kalfus v. Frazee, 136 Cal.App.2d 415, 430, 288 P.2d 967.

While appellant has urged the reversal on appeal on the ground that the trial court abused its discretion by granting the defendants' motions for new trial, he has failed to refer to any instance of such abuse in the record. Appellant cites and quotes from the decision in Perry v. Fowler, 102 Cal.App.2d 808, 229 P.2d 46. By that decision, however, an order granting a new trial after both the first and second trials had resulted in verdicts for defendants was affirmed.

[6,7] An order granting a new trial will not be reversed on appeal unless an abuse of discretion on the part of the trial judge is affirmatively shown or manifestly appears. Brooks v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co., 27 Cal.2d 305, 307, 163 P.2d 689. No such showing has been made in the instant action, and it would serve no useful purpose to discuss the many reasons shown by respondents why a new trial was properly granted.

[8,9] Reviewing the order denying defendants' motions for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, the decision on the former appeal reversing the judgment for defendants after nonsuit is the law of the case. The trial court is authorized to grant a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict only where, viewing all the evidence in the light most favorable to plaintiff, with every legitimate inference drawn in his favor, and disregarding all conflicting evidence, the record is insufficient to support the verdict for plaintiff. Rodabaugh v. Tekus, 39 Cal.2d 290, 291, 246 P.2d 663.

[10] Defendant Acme Tool & Tester Co. contends that, at the second trial there was evidence which, as a matter of law, absolved it and its employees from all responsibility for plaintiff's injury. That contention is untenable. Since all the evidence which constituted a prima facie case for plaintiff, under the law of the case, is again before the court, further evidence, either cumulative or conflicting, could not justify the granting of a judgment notwithstanding the verdict.

The orders denying motions for judgment notwithstanding the verdict and the orders granting a new trial are, and each of them is, affirmed.

Matter of the Application of Marla GROZE, a/k/a Marla Crose, for a Writ of Habeas Corpus.
Cr. 5778.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California.
Oct. 29, 1956.

Habeas corpus proceeding involving custody of child. The District Court of Appeal held that even though pleadings in Superior Court habeas corpus case, involving child custody, had presented issue as to whether petitioner had abandoned her child, Superior Court's findings, that petitioner had voluntarily delivered child to respondents and made only token effort to support or communicate with him, would not support its conclusion that there had been an abandonment; and held that therefore petitioner was not estopped from having that issue tried in the instant proceeding.

Order accordingly.

Nourse, J. pro tem., dissented.

1. Habeas Corpus ⇨120

Superior Court order denying writ of habeas corpus in child custody case is not res judicata in broad sense that it bars further proceedings for custody of child, but in very narrow sense that petitioner for writ of habeas corpus cannot, in District Court of Appeal, again litigate issues of fact decided in Superior Court unless, since hearing in Superior Court, there has been change of circumstances affecting right to custody.

2. Habeas Corpus ⇨119

Superior Court decision on question of law, in habeas corpus proceedings involving child custody, does not bar petitioner from presenting that same question of law to District Court of Appeal on application filed in that court.

3. Bastards ⇨15

Habeas Corpus ⇨25(2)

The mother of an illegitimate, unmarried minor is entitled to his custody, service and earnings, and she may enforce her right to custody by petition for writ of habeas corpus; but relief will be denied her if she has abandoned child or is unfit to have custody. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 200.

4. Habeas Corpus ⇨113(3)

Neither party to habeas corpus proceeding involving child custody has right to appeal from order made by Superior Court.

5. Parent and Child ⇨2(3.7)

Mother voluntarily delivering her child to third persons to be gratuitously cared for by them until such time as she might be in a position to properly care for child could not be held to have abandoned child, and to have thereby forfeited her right to custody of child. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 200.

6. Habeas Corpus ⇨112

Welfare and Institutions Code section, specifying minors within jurisdiction of Juvenile Court and subject to being declared free from custody and control of parents, had no applicability to habeas corpus proceeding involving child custody; and court in such proceeding had no power to declare minor free from custody and control of his mother, but could only deny her right to custody of her child. West's Ann.Welfare & Inst.Code, §§ 701(a), 720(b).

7. Habeas Corpus ⇨120

Even though pleadings, in Superior Court habeas corpus case involving child custody, had presented issue as to whether petitioner had abandoned her child, Superior Court's findings, that petitioner had voluntarily delivered child to respondents and made only token effort to support or communicate with him, would not support its conclusion that there had been an abandonment; and therefore petitioner was not estopped from having that issue tried in subsequent habeas corpus proceedings brought in District Court of Appeal.

Manuel Ruiz, Jr., Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Sanchez, Halpern & Knapp, Leopoldo G. Sanchez, Los Angeles, for respondents.

PER CURIAM.

Petitioner is the mother of a minor, and seeks by the proceeding herein to have the possession of this child delivered to her by the respondents.

By her petition she alleges that said child is of the age of three and one-half years and that heretofore she has been unable to properly care for said child by reason of economic factors beyond her control; that by reason thereof she delivered said child to the respondents Garcia to be gratuitously cared for by them until such time as petitioner would be in a position to properly care for such child; and that she has demanded possession of said child from respondents but they have refused to surrender him to her.

She further alleges that prior to filing her petition for writ of habeas corpus from this court she filed a like petition in the Superior Court of the County of Los Angeles; that her petition was, on the 18th of September, 1956, denied; and that, the superior court having failed to find that she is a person unfit to have the possession of said child, the order of the superior court denying her possession of the child is res judicata of the fact of her fitness.

The return to the petition here filed by the respondents Garcia alleges in substance that petitioner abandoned said minor to the respondents, that petitioner is and at all times since the birth of said child has been an unfit mother and that it is to the best interests of the child that respondents retain the custody and control of said minor. They further plead the order of the superior court denying a writ of habeas corpus to petitioner as res judicata, and allege that in the proceedings in the superior court that court found petitioner was an unfit mother, that petitioner abandoned the child to respondents, and that it is for the best interests of said child to remain with respondents.

By stipulation of the parties the record of the proceedings in the superior court has been lodged with this court.

Neither petitioner's contention that, the superior court having failed to make any finding upon the question of petitioner's fitness to have custody of the minor child, its order denying a coercive writ against respondents is res judicata of petitioner's fitness, nor respondents' contention that that order is res judicata of petitioner's right to the custody of the minor so as to preclude this court from granting a coercive writ against respondents, can be sustained.

[1,2] Where habeas corpus proceedings have been prosecuted in the superior court and that court has made findings of fact, its order is res judicata of the issues tendered, tried, and decided by the superior court; and the petitioner, if unsuccessful in the superior court, is estopped in the absence of a change in circumstances from again trying those issues upon a petition to the District Court of Appeal for a writ of habeas corpus. In re Holt, 34 Cal.App. 290, 167 P. 184; In re Gille, 65 Cal.App. 617, 224 P. 784; In re McDaniel, 90 Cal. App. 307, 265 P. 884; In re Gury, 103 Cal.App. 738, 284 P. 944; In re Martin, 79 Cal.App.2d 584, 586, 180 P.2d 383; In re Browning, 99 Cal.App.2d 337, 221 P.2d 736. The decisions just cited hold that the decision of the superior court is res judicata of the issues determined by the superior court, but it is apparent from them and from the decision of the Supreme Court in In re Bruegger, 204 Cal. 169, 267 P. 101, that the order denying the writ is not res judicata in the broad sense that it bars further proceedings for the custody of the child, but in the very narrow sense that a petitioner for a writ of habeas corpus cannot, in the District Court of Appeal, again litigate the issues of fact decided in the superior court unless after the hearing in the superior court there is a change of the circumstances which affect the right to custody; nor does a decision by the superior court, which constitutes merely a decision of a question of law rather than a fact, bar the petitioner from presenting that same question of law to the District Court of Appeal upon an application for a writ of habeas corpus filed in that court. In re White, 49 Cal.App.2d 160, 121 P.2d 100; In re Landry, 61 Cal.App.2d 230, 142 P.2d 432; In re Livingston, 108 Cal. App. 716, 718, 292 P. 285.

[3] The mother of an illegitimate, unmarried minor is entitled to his custody, service and earnings, Civ.Code, sec. 200. She may enforce her right to custody by a petition for a writ of habeas corpus. But the court, in such a proceeding, is not obligated to enforce this naked legal right by a coercive writ against the persons having custody of the minor, but may deny the writ if upon inquiry it finds as a fact that the mother has abandoned the child—that is to say, that she has knowingly and willfully deserted her child with the “intention to entirely sever, so far as it is possible to do so, the parental relation and throw off all obligations growing out of the same”, Guardianship of Snowball, 156 Cal. 240, 243, 104 P. 444, 446; or finds as a fact that the petitioner is a person morally or mentally incompetent to have the custody and control of her child—that is to say, that she is unfit to have such custody and control. If it finds either abandonment or unfitness, the mother may not again, in the absence of a change of circumstances affecting either the question of abandonment or the question of fitness, try those issues through the means of an application filed in the District Court of Appeal.

[4] As neither party has the right to appeal from the order made by the superior court either granting or denying the application to it for a writ of habeas corpus, In re Bruegger, supra, it must clearly appear to this court that the superior court did find facts constituting an abandonment by petitioner of her child or that the superior court tried and determined as a fact that the petitioner is mentally or morally unfit to have possession of her child, before this court will hold her estopped to apply to this court for relief.

Examination of the record of the proceedings in the superior court in the present matter demonstrates that the issue as to petitioner's fitness was neither tendered nor tried by the superior court, and that the court did not find any facts upon which its conclusion that petitioner had abandoned her child could be predicated.

The superior court did not make any written findings of fact or conclusions of law, although it would have been the better practice in a proceeding of this kind to have done so. It did, however, in the minute order by which it denied petitioner the custody of her child, state the findings and conclusions upon which it based its order. This minute order does not contain any findings as to whether petitioner was morally or mentally unfit to have possession of her child, nor did the petition filed in the superior court or the return filed there by respondents raise that issue.

The petition filed in the superior court and the return thereto did, however, present the issue as to whether petitioner had abandoned her child. If the superior court did determine that issue against the petitioner, we must deny her relief here, inasmuch as she is not entitled to relitigate it, and the determination of that issue adversely to her by the superior court is determinative of her present right to custody. We are convinced, however, that that issue was not determined as a matter of fact by the superior court and that petitioner is not estopped from trying it here.

By the petition filed in the superior court it was in substance alleged that by reason of economic factors beyond petitioner's control she had delivered her child to respondents to be gratuitously cared for by them until petitioner would be able to properly care for him; and that petitioner was then able to care for said child but that the respondents had refused to surrender him to her. By their return filed in the superior court respondents in substance alleged that in October of 1953 petitioner had intentionally abandoned her son to them, and had not, during the three years thereafter, maintained, provided for, or supported her son, although she had the ability so to do.

By its minute order the court did not make any finding as to the factors which caused petitioner to put the child in the possession of respondents or as to what her intent was in so doing, or as to whether or not she had had the ability to support him, but found as facts, only, that she acted voluntarily in delivering her child to respondents and that she thereafter had made only "token effort to support or communicate with said minor child." From these facts the court concluded that the child "has been abandoned under the provisions of Section 701(a), Welfare and Institutions Code, that petitioner has abandoned said minor child, and that petitioner has no legal right to the custody of said minor child."

[5] The only facts found by the court were that the child had been voluntarily delivered to respondents and that petitioner had made only a token effort to support or communicate with him. These facts fall far short of a finding that petitioner had actually deserted her child with the intention of entirely severing her parental relationship to him and with the intent to throw off all of the obligations growing out of that relationship; nor do they negative the allegations of the petitioner that she delivered the child to respondents due to economic factors beyond her control and with the intent to recaption him when she was in a situation to properly care for him. Unless these allegations were negated, abandonment could not be found. In re Green, 192 Cal. 714, 719-721, 221 P. 903; Roche v. Roche, 25 Cal.2d 141, 143, 152 P.2d 999.

[6] The balance of the minute order constitutes merely an erroneous conclusion of law drawn from those facts. The superior court apparently acted under the misapprehension that section 701(a) of the Welfare and Institutions Code was applicable. But it is not. That section has no applicability to proceedings of this nature. It merely defines minors who are within the jurisdiction of the juvenile court and as to whom a petition may be filed under section 720(b) of the Welfare and Institutions Code to have that person declared free from the custody and control of his parents. If such a petition had been filed and an order made thereon, the situation here would be different; but the court, in the present matter, was not sitting as a juvenile court and had no power to declare the minor here free from the custody and control of his mother, and could only deny the petitioner the right to the custody of her child if it found facts which would constitute an abandonment as we have heretofore defined that term.

[7] It follows that the findings made by the trial court do not support its conclusion, and that the issue of abandonment was not determined by the trial court and that therefore petitioner is not estopped from having that issue tried here.

The return to the writ here having tendered both the issue as to petitioner's fitness and the issue of abandonment, and neither of those issues having been determined as matters of fact in the proceedings in the superior court, it is necessary that we appoint a referee to find the facts as to said issues.

It is therefore ordered that the order heretofore made submitting this matter is hereby vacated, and A. Edward Nichols, Commissioner of the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the County of Los Angeles, is hereby appointed referee to take evidence and determine the facts as to whether the plaintiff is a fit person to have the custody of her child and the issue as to whether or not she has abandoned said child, and to report said facts and his findings and conclusions of law to this court within sixty days.

NOURSE, Justice pro tem.

I dissent. I cannot agree with the views expressed by the majority of this court or with their conclusions, because I believe that they have thereby set at naught the established rule that where habeas corpus is used not to determine whether a person is illegally confined or restrained but to determine who shall have the right to keep a minor in custody, a finding of fact upon an issue litigated in the superior court estops the parties from again litigating that fact upon an application for a writ of habeas corpus in the appellate court; and because the effect of the majority opinion is to turn the application for a writ of habeas corpus in this court into a writ of error with a trial de novo in this court, should error be found.

For nearly thirty years it has been the established rule that where a proceeding in the form of an application for a writ of habeas corpus has been had in the superior court to determine the rights of the parties to the custody of a minor and in that proceeding an issue of fact has been tendered and tried which, if determined adversely to the petitioner, would preclude the issuance by the superior court of a coercive order against the respondent in that proceeding and the superior court does deny the coercive writ, the petitioner may not, upon the same facts and without any change in the circumstances, again litigate that issue upon a petition for a writ of habeas corpus filed in the District Court of Appeal. In re Holt, 34 Cal.App. 290, 167 P. 184; In re Gille, 65 Cal.App. 617, 224 P.2d 784; In re McDaniel, 90 Cal.App. 307, 265 P.2d 884; In re Gury, 103 Cal. App. 738; In re Martin, 79 Cal.App.2d 584, 586, 180 P.2d 383; In re Browning, 99 Cal.App.2d 337, 221 P.2d 736. The effect of these decisions is not to make the order of the superior court discharging the writ a bar to the petitioner's again asserting her legal right to custody, but to estop her, until there is a change in facts and circumstances, from again litigating issues which have been determined against her and which preclude her from enforcing her bare legal right to custody.

As I have pointed out, the order of the superior court discharging a writ of habeas corpus and denying a petitioner custody of his or her child does not operate as res judicata in the sense that it is a judgment barring a further assertion of petitioner's right; and if in the superior court an issue of fact such as petitioner's abandonment of her child or her unfitness to have custody of the child is not tendered and tried but the order of the superior court merely holds as a matter of law that petitioner does not have a legal right to the custody of the child, then its order is not res judicata and the question may be relitigated upon a petition filed in the District Court of Appeal. In re White, 49 Cal.App.2d 160, 121 P.2d 100; In re Landry, 61 Cal.App.2d 230, 142 P.2d 432; In re Livingston, 108 Cal.App. 716, 718, 292 P. 285.

The majority opinion, while noting and acknowledging the first rule stated, seeks to support its conclusion that the issue of abandonment tendered to the superior court was not tried and determined by that court, by holding that the superior court merely made an erroneous decision upon a question of law. In order to arrive at this conclusion the majority holds that the minute order of the superior court constituted the findings of that court and that those findings were insufficient to uphold the conclusion that petitioner had abandoned her child, and that the superior court therefore decided only a question of law and that its order is therefore not res judicata.

To my mind this reasoning is not sound. The estoppel, arising under the doctrine of res judicata, against relitigating an issue is as applicable to an erroneous decision upon the issue litigated as it is to a correct determination of that issue. In the case here it is admitted that the issue as to whether petitioner had abandoned her child was tendered to the superior court, that it was tried there and determined adversely to petitioner; and there is no claim here that there has been any change in circumstances.

(Only twelve days elapsed between the entry of the order of the superior court and the filing of the petition here.)

Assuming, as the majority does, that the minute order of the court constituted findings of fact and conclusions of law and demonstrates that the superior court erroneously determined that the petitioner had abandoned her child, that does not detract from the fact that it did determine the issue of abandonment; and it is only by treating the petition for a writ of habeas corpus here as a petition for a writ of error, and then finding that there was error and granting a trial in this court, that the decision of the majority can be sustained. To so hold in effect abolishes the established rule that an issue litigated in the superior court cannot be relitigated here; for if this court can find error in that the findings do not support the judgment, it can find error because the evidence does not support the findings, thus in every case permitting this court to review the action of the superior court as a basis for this court trying the same issues as were tried in the superior court.

The decision of the majority does in the present case relieve petitioner from what is apparently—from the record before us we do not have any record of the oral proceedings—a miscarriage of justice. But in my opinion our decision should not be molded so as to meet the exigencies of the present case, but should follow the established principles of law even though the present petitioner may have suffered an injury.

The majority says that petitioner has no right to appeal from the judgment of the superior court. In this I think they are in error, for the judgment of that court is final as to her right to the custody of her child until there is a change of circumstances.

A writ of habeas corpus is an ancient prerogative writ by which, in its original form, one might seek immediate relief from an illegal imprisonment, and it is the privilege of the use of this writ which the Constitution of the United States, art. I, sec. 9, clause 2, and the Constitution of this state, art. 1, sec. 5, guarantee to the people. The courts of this state have inherent power to issue this writ irrespective of any statute, nor could the Legislature take away the power to issue this writ to protect the citizen from illegal imprisonment or restraint. Matter of Hughes, 159 Cal. 360, 366, 113 P. 684. I do not think, however, that it could be contended that the Legislature could not limit the procedure by which the parties could try their private rights to the custody of a child so as to preclude the trial of that issue by a writ of habeas corpus.

The writ was at common law, and in this state and, insofar as my research discloses, in all other states of the Union has been used for the purpose of litigating private rights as to the custody of a minor. When so used, it is a proceeding in rem, equitable in nature, in which the child is the res, and the right determined is that of petitioner to the custody of the minor, not the minor's right to be free from restraint. In re Frazier, 50 Cal.App. 45, 47, 194 P. 510; Ex parte Armstrong, 169 Or. 320, 128 P.2d 951, 953-954; Richards v. Collins, 45 N.J.Eq. 283, 17 A. 831; Ex parte Bush, 240 Mich. 376, 215 N.W. 367; Ex parte Turner, 86 Or. 590, 167 P. 1019, 169 P. 109; Green v. Campbell, 35 W.Va. 698, 14 S.E. 212; Ex parte Parker, 195 Okl. 224, 156 P.2d 584; Application of Habeck, 75 S.D. 535, 69 N.W.2d 353, 357; Ex parte Flynn, 87 N.J.Eq. 413, 100 A. 861, 862; 25 Am.Jur. 203, 205; 39 C.J.S., Habeas Corpus, § 41 note 93, page 569 and pocket part.

It is uniformly held that the judgment in such a proceeding is a final determination of the rights of the parties litigated therein until there has been a change in circumstances affecting the best interests of the minor or the rights of the parties, and the issues so determined are res judicata not only in a subsequent proceeding in habeas corpus but in any other proceeding in which the right to the custody of the minor is put in issue. In re Holt, 34 Cal.App. 290, 167 P. 184; In re Gille, 65 Cal.App. 617, 224 P. 784; In re McDaniel, 90 Cal. App. 307, 265 P. 884; In re Gury, 103 Cal. App. 738, 284 P. 944; In re Martin, 79 Cal.App.2d 584, 586, 180 P.2d 383; In re Browning, 99 Cal.App.2d 337, 221 P.2d 736; In re Clifford, 37 Wash. 460, 79 P. 1001; Freeman on Judgments, 5th ed. vol. 2, 1764-1766; 25 Am.Jur. 253; 17 Am.Jur. 514; Annotation, 110 A.L.R. 748.¹

In Freeman on Judgments, supra, the author says (p. 1766): "The principles of public policy requiring the application of the doctrines of estoppel to judicial proceedings, in order to secure the repose of society, are as imperatively demanded in the cases of private individuals contesting private rights under the form of proceedings in habeas corpus as if the litigation were conducted in any other form. * * * 'The question of the custody of a minor child, once properly and finally adjudicated, whether in a habeas corpus proceeding or otherwise, is settled for all time, unless there be an appeal, and the judgment rendered is impregnable as against a collateral assault.'"

The courts of a majority of the other states of the Union have held that where the writ is used to determine the rights of private parties to the custody of a child an appeal will lie, although an appeal will not lie where the writ is used for its original purpose of determining whether or not a person is illegally deprived of his liberty.

Inasmuch as the proceeding is equitable in nature and as the judgment is a final determination of the rights of the petitioner insofar as it determines any issue of fact, it would seem to necessarily follow that that order is appealable as a final order or judgment under the provisions of section 963 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

I am cognizant of the decision of our Supreme Court in the case of In re Bruegger, 204 Cal. 169, 267 P. 101, but I respectfully submit that the reasons given by the court there for its decision that an appeal would not lie from an order denying a parent the right to the custody of his child in a proceeding such as this are not valid and that the question should be reexamined by the Supreme Court and In re Bruegger overruled.

The first reason given by the court is that the adjudication is final and res judicata only so long as the facts are the same and the conditions affecting the child's welfare or the parent's right remain unchanged, and the order of the court is therefore but temporary and interlocutory.

But every order affecting the right to custody of a minor child is in the same sense temporary and interlocutory. Every such order is subject to modification or change when there is a change of circumstances affecting either the competency of the person originally awarded custody or the best interests of the child. An award of custody in an interlocutory decree of divorce is subject to modification at any time within the discretion of the court. 16 Cal.Jur.2d 557, and cases cited. The removal of a guardian and the appointment of another may be made within the discretion of the court upon the showing of a change of circumstances, 24 Cal.Jur.2d 336, 337; yet all such orders are appealable. An order removing one guardian and appointing another is expressly made ap-

1. I am not unmindful of the decision of the District Court of Appeal in Guardianship of De Brath, 18 Cal.App.2d 697, 64 P.2d 968, in which it was held that a determination of a question of fact in a habeas corpus proceeding was res judicata only in another habeas corpus proceeding. But this decision seems to me entirely unsound. The basis for the doctrine of res judicata is "the sound public policy of limiting litigation by preventing a party who has had one fair trial on an issue from again drawing it into controversy", Bernhard v. Bank of America, 19 Cal.2d 807, 811, 122 P.2d 892, 894, and I know of no rule which would make the rule applicable only if the issue were tendered in the same type of action or proceeding as that in which it was first decided.

pealable by statute; an order modifying a decree of custody so as to give custody to a person other than the one originally awarded custody is appealable as an order after final judgment; and an order made in a divorce proceeding awarding custody to one of the parties to the exclusion of the other is appealable as a final judgment. Yet these orders are no more final than the order made in this matter denying petitioner the right to the custody of her child.

The second ground stated is that the primary purpose of the writ of habeas corpus when used for the purpose of determining a right to the custody of a minor child is to provide a summary and speedy mode of determining that question; and the court concludes that if the right of appeal were granted, an order made would be suspended by appeal and the proceeding deprived of its efficacy. If this reason ever had validity, it was only in cases where the petition had been granted and the appeal was by the respondent; for if the writ were denied, the petitioning parent would have to await a change in circumstances in order to further assert any right, even though the superior court had erroneously determined that right.

Since the enactment in 1955 of section 949a of the Code of Civil Procedure, this second reason assigned by the court for its decision clearly loses all force, for under that section an appeal will not stay an order of the court granting a coercive writ to the parent which would give her custody of her child.

The court further states that it deems it to be definitely settled that in the absence of legislative action an appeal will not lie in matters of this kind. It cites as establishing this rule In the Matter of Perkins, 2 Cal. 424; Matter of Ring, 28 Cal. 247; Matter of Zany, 164 Cal. 724, 130 P. 710, and Matter of Hughes, supra. In all of these cases the superior court, in issuing the writ, was acting under its inherent powers which are confirmed by the Constitution. In none of them was the superior court exercising its equitable powers and trying private rights as to the custody of one not a party to the proceedings, and in none of them was the ruling of that court res judicata as to any issue, and in each of them the petitioner had the right to successive applications in the Appellate Courts. The case is far different where the judgment of the lower court is res judicata and precludes a retrial of the issues of fact upon an application to the Appellate Court.

I recognize that the Supreme Court has repeatedly, in keeping with its decisions that an appeal does not lie in habeas corpus proceedings, held that it does not have power to grant a hearing after a decision by the District Court of Appeal either granting or denying a writ of habeas corpus, but in each of the decisions in which it is so held the writ was sought solely to determine the right of the People to deprive a person of his liberty, and in none of them did the court have before it the question as to whether it might grant a hearing where the purpose of the writ was to try in the Appellate Court the private rights of the parties as to the custody of a child not a party to the proceedings.

I would discharge the writ.

The PEOPLE of the State of California,
Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Dorothy MILLER and Neal Collins,
Defendants,

Neal Collins, Defendant and Appellant.
Cr. 5639.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California.
Oct. 29, 1956.

Hearing Denied Nov. 28, 1956.

Defendant was convicted of contributing to delinquency of a minor. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Allen T. Lynch, J., imposed sentence and denied motion for new trial. Defendant appealed from judgment and order. The District Court of Appeal, White, P. J., held that in prosecution of defendant for contributing to delinquency of 12 year old girl who claimed to have witnessed him and her mother in act of sexual intercourse, evidence sustained finding that conduct of defendant was of such nature as to affect directly the welfare and morals of the girl, though she was not participant in act, and despite alleged inconsistencies and improbabilities in girl's testimony.

Judgment and order affirmed.

1. Infants \S 13

Minor need not be participant in act in question to sustain conviction of person of offense of contributing to delinquency of minor; statute is not to be construed as restricted to such acts or omissions as relate directly to minor. West's Ann. Welfare & Inst.Code, \S 700, 702.

2. Infants \S 13

The main purpose of statute punishing one who contributes to delinquency of minor is to remove minors from immoral and evil influences which would incline them toward state of delinquency; and this purpose is accomplished by making any act or omission which would tend to cause minor to become delinquent, a misdemeanor. West's Ann.Welfare & Inst.Code, \S 700 and subd. (k); \S 702.

3. Infants \S 13, 20

Under statute relating to offense of contributing to delinquency of minor, it is not required that effect of act complained of must have had absolutely certain and unmistakable tendency to cause minor to lead idle, dissolute, lewd or immoral life; and in determining whether act in question would reasonably so affect minor, jury may apply teachings of human experience. West's Ann.Welfare & Inst.Code, \S 700 and subd. (k); \S 702.

4. Infants \S 20

In prosecution of defendant for contributing to delinquency of 12 year old girl who claimed to have witnessed defendant and her mother in act of sexual intercourse, evidence sustained finding that conduct of defendant was of such nature as to affect directly welfare and morals of the girl, though she was not participant in act, and despite alleged inconsistencies and improbabilities in girl's testimony. U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14; West's Ann. Welfare & Inst.Code, \S 700 and subd. (k); \S 702; West's Ann.Pen.Code, \S 1237, subd. 1.

5. Infants \S 13

Fact that fornication is not crime would not preclude conviction of one whose alleged act of fornication with another was witnessed by 12 year old girl for offense of contributing to delinquency of minor. West's Ann.Welfare & Inst.Code, \S 700 and subd. (k); \S 702.

6. Criminal Law \S 1159(4)

Alleged inconsistencies and improbabilities in testimony of 12 year old girl who claimed to have witnessed act of sexual intercourse between girl's mother and defendant, charged with contributing to delinquency of minor, were not such as to require rejection of her entire testimony, nor reversal of conviction. West's Ann. Welfare & Inst.Code, \S 700 and subd. (k); \S 702.

7. Criminal Law \S 1159(2)

In view of rule that it is exclusive province of trier of fact to determine truth or falsity of facts upon which a determination depends, even testimony which is subject to justifiable suspicion does not warrant reversal of conviction. West's Ann. Welfare & Inst.Code, \S 700 and subd. (k); \S 702.

8. Infants \S 20

If court, in prosecution for contributing to delinquency of minor who claimed to have witnessed act of sexual intercourse between her mother and defendant, believed testimony of girl in the main, or if court believed only that portion of her testimony bearing on immediate circumstances of commission of act charged, it was within province of trial court to base its decision upon that particular portion of her testimony, though court might have regarded statements of girl on other points as of doubtful verity. West's Ann.Welfare & Inst.Code, \S 700 and subd. (k); \S 702.

9. Criminal Law \S 1159(4)

Where, in prosecution for contributing to delinquency of minor who claimed to have witnessed act of sexual intercourse between her mother and defendant, it was within trial court's province to base its decision upon that particular portion of testimony of girl deemed credible by court, though court might have regarded statements of minor on other points as of doubtful verity, decision would be conclusive on appeal. West's Ann.Welfare & Inst.Code, \S 700 and subd. (k); \S 702.

10. Criminal Law \S 742(1)

Fact that 12 year old girl who claimed, in prosecution for contributing to delinquency of minor, to have witnessed act of sexual intercourse between her mother and defendant, had been angry with her mother at time of defendant's arrest, and had had arguments with defendant concerning her association with an older man, was matter for trier of facts to consider in determining credibility of girl as witness. West's Ann.Welfare & Inst.Code, \S 700 and subd. (k); \S 702.

11. Criminal Law \S 260(11), 1159(4)

Matters relating to motives of witness in criminal case are to be dealt with and determined by jury, or by trial judge if trial is to the court; and on appeal, unless it is shown that testimony of witness is inherently improbable or impossible of belief, determination of duly constituted arbiter of facts will not be disturbed.

12. Criminal Law \S 1159(4)

Where testimony of 12 year old girl who claimed, in prosecution for contributing to delinquency of minor, to have witnessed act of sexual intercourse between her mother and defendant, was not inherently false, facts established by her testimony would be taken in support of decision on appeal from conviction. West's Ann.Welfare & Inst.Code, \S 700 and subd. (k); \S 702.

13. Infants \S 20

Evidence is admissible in prosecution for contributing to delinquency of minor to show any conduct on part of person toward minor named in information which causes or tends to cause minor to become delinquent, whether such conduct consists in the doing of one act or a series of acts. West's Ann.Welfare & Inst.Code, \S 700 and subd. (k); \S 702.

14. Infants \S 20

In prosecution for contributing to delinquency of minor who claimed to have witnessed act of sexual intercourse between her mother and defendant, questions asked by trial judge, in trial before court, of defendant concerning general nature of defendant's relationship with mother, and whether defendant had engaged in acts of sexual intercourse at times other than dates charged in information, were not irrelevant nor prejudicially improper. West's Ann. Welfare & Inst.Code, \S 700 and subd. (k); \S 702.

15. Criminal Law \S 1035(3)

Where defendant did not object to or move to strike allegedly improper questions asked him by court during trial, defendant could not initially on appeal assail such conduct of trial judge. West's Ann. Welfare & Inst.Code, § 700 and subd. (k); § 702.

16. Infants ⇐20

Testimony of prosecutrix, in prosecution for contributing to delinquency of minor, that she was 13 years of age was sufficient to establish that fact. West's Ann.Welfare & Inst.Code, § 700 and subd. (k); § 702.

Samuel C. McMorris, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Elizabeth Miller, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

WHITE, Presiding Justice.

In an information filed by the District Attorney of Los Angeles County, appellant was charged in Count I with the offense of contributing to the delinquency of a minor, a misdemeanor, Welfare and Institutions Code, sec. 702, committed on or about June 15, 1955, in that he used and occupied a bed with Dorothy Miller, not being married to her, in the presence of Peggy Dee Miller, a minor person of the age of 12 years, and committed acts which would tend to cause the minor to lead an idle, dissolute, lewd and immoral life, and which did cause and tend to cause the minor to become and to remain a person within the provisions of Section 700, Welfare and Institutions Code of the State of California. He was charged in Count II with the crime of contributing to the delinquency of a minor on or about July 10, 1955 in the same manner as in Count I. Appellant pleaded not guilty and trial by jury was duly waived. Pursuant to stipulation, the People's case was submitted on the transcript of the preliminary examination. The minor, Peggy Dee Miller, gave further testimony and appellant testified in his own behalf. The court adjudged him not guilty of the offense charged in Count I, and guilty as charged in Count II. Motion for a new trial was denied. Appellant was sentenced to serve a term of one year in the county jail. Execution of sentence was suspended and he was granted conditional probation. From the judgment, Penal Code, section 1237, subd. 1, and the order denying his motion for a new trial, appellant prosecutes this appeal.

With reference to the factual background surrounding this prosecution we regard the following as a fair epitome:

During the months of June and July, 1955, the prosecutrix, Peggy Dee Miller (aged 12), her mother, Dorothy Miller, and the appellant occupied a five-room apartment on Raymond Avenue in Los Angeles. Appellant and Mrs. Miller were not married to each other. The bedroom was connected to the living room by a very large door, one section of which was always open. There was a large bed in the bedroom and a couch in the living room. At least a portion of the couch was visible looking through the door from a vantage point on the bed. Sometimes Peggy slept on the couch and her mother and appellant in the bed, and other times she slept in the bed and they on the couch.

One night, around July 10, 1955, it was decided that Peggy could have the bed. It was late and she was tired so appellant and her mother told her that they would wake her and put her on the couch when they finished watching television. Some time later she awakened, heard a noise in the living room, sat up in bed, "scooted down in the bed", and peered into the living room. The room was illuminated by a small red light and she observed appellant and her mother engaged in an act of sexual intercourse. As a witness in his own behalf appellant testified he had known the prosecutrix and her mother for approximately four years; that during the aforesaid months of June and July he frequently stayed all night at the Miller abode. He testified that he would sleep on the couch on these occasions and that he never slept with Mrs. Miller. He denied having sexual relations with Mrs. Miller during this time. He admitted having had intercourse with her during the year prior to June at his establishment but denied ever having occupied a bed with her or having sexual relations with her in the presence of the latter's daughter.

According to appellant's description of the Miller apartment a person occupying the bed could not see the couch in the living room unless he "stood up and walked".

Appellant asserted that he had developed a paternal attitude towards Peggy and was concerned about the fact that she was keeping company with an older man. He had several "discussions" with Peggy on the subject and told her on one occasion that he might call the authorities if she did not discontinue the relationship and get back to school. Peggy denied that such a threat was made.

Appellant testified further that Peggy called him about two weeks before the trial to ask for some belongings. He asked her why she had made the accusation and she told him that Juvenile Officer Kay Sheldon was "responsible for all the activity".

As his first ground for reversal appellant attacks the constitutionality of Section 702 of the Welfare and Institutions Code, contending that the statute is too vague and consequently invalid under the due process clause of the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States. This contention is unavailing because it has heretofore been decided adversely to appellant by the courts of this state. People v. Deibert, 117 Cal.App.2d 410, 417-420, 256 P.2d 355.

[1] Appellant's next contention is that the facts alleged in the information and proved at the trial do not constitute a public offense. He insists that his conduct, as herein narrated, does not tend to corrupt the morals of a minor. That "under California law, the statute (Welfare and Institutions Code, Sec. 702) is to be construed as only such acts or omissions as relate directly to the minor." In other words, that the minor must be a participant in the act in question before it can be said that the latter is directly affected thereby. We are not in accord with appellant's reasoning in this regard. Section 702 of the Welfare and Institutions Code provides, in part, that "Any person who commits any act or omits the performance of any duty, which act or omission causes or tends to cause or encourage any person under the age of 21 years to come within the provisions of any of the subdivisions of Section 700 or which act or omission contributes thereto, or any person who, by any act or omission, or by threats, commands, or persuasion, induces or endeavors to induce any person or ward of the juvenile court under the age of 21 years to fail or refuse to conform to a lawful order of the juvenile court, or to do or to perform any act or to follow any course of conduct or to so live as would cause or manifestly tend to cause any such person to become or to remain a person within the provisions of any of the subdivisions of Section 700, is guilty of a misdemeanor * * *."

Among the persons under 21 years of age enumerated in Section 700 as being within the jurisdiction of the Juvenile Court is any person who is leading, or from any cause is in danger of leading, an idle, dissolute, lewd or immoral life. Sec. 700, Welfare and Institutions Code, subd. (k).

[2] The main purpose of Welfare and Institutions Code, Section 702, is to remove minors from immoral and evil influences which would incline them toward a state of delinquency. The purpose is accomplished by making any act or omission which would tend to cause a minor to become delinquent, a misdemeanor. People v. McDougal, 74 Cal.App. 666, 670, 241 P. 598; People v. Calkins, 48 Cal.App.2d 33, 36, 119 P.2d 142.

[3-5] We do not deem it proper to give to the foregoing provisions of the statute the narrow and restricted construction for which appellant herein contends. The evident object and main purpose of the statute is preventive, and as said in People v. DeLeon, 35 Cal.App. 467, 470, 170 P. 173, 175: "Its intent was to put a barrier across the threshold of those entrances to downward ways which are open before the feet of youth." It is not required that the effect of the act complained of must have an absolutely certain and unmistakable tendency to cause the minor to lead an idle, dissolute, lewd or immoral life, and in determining whether the act in question would reasonably so affect the minor, the jury may apply the teachings of human experience. The statute is not to be judged in the light of the suggestions of appellant's counsel as to its possible application to suppositious cases wherein acts innocent in themselves might be held criminal according to the whim or prejudice of some judge or jury. It is not by such extreme or fanciful standards that the application of the statute is to be determined, but rather by the reasonableness of its application to the facts of a particular case. In the case at bar we are unable to say that the finding of the judge that the conduct of appellant was of such a nature as to affect directly the welfare and morals of the minor was unreasonable and without the purview of the intent and purpose of the statute. What we have herein stated does not militate against the holding in People v. Bergotini, 172 Cal. 717, 158 P. 198, so heavily relied upon by appellant. It is readily distinguishable from the case at bar in that none of the acts therein alleged were in the presence or with the knowledge of the minors. We cannot agree with appellant that his conduct in the presence of the minor would not tend to cause the latter to become delinquent, because fornication is not a crime in California. It certainly falls within the category of immorality which has been defined as including shameless conduct showing among other things "moral indifference to the opinions of respectable members of the community, and as an inconsiderate attitude toward good order and the public welfare." Orloff v. L. A. Turf

Club, 36 Cal.2d 734, 740, 227 P.2d 449, 453. People v. Lamanuzzi, 77 Cal.App. 301, 303, 246 P. 557; People v. DeLeon, supra, 35 Cal.App. at page 471, 170 P. 173; People v. Baker, 38 Cal.App. 28, 34, 175 P. 88.

[6] Appellant's contention that the evidence is insufficient to sustain his conviction because of alleged inconsistencies and improbabilities contained in the evidence presented by the prosecution and the bias of the People's witness, cannot be sustained. Appellant's argument is mainly an attempt to show certain inconsistencies and contradictions in the testimony of the minor girl. As was said by our Supreme Court in People v. Huston, 21 Cal.2d 690, 693, 134 P.2d 758, 759:

[7-9] " * * * To warrant the rejection of the statements given by a witness who has been believed by a trial court, there must exist either a physical impossibility that they are true, or their falsity must be apparent without resorting to inferences or deductions." Even testimony which is subject to justifiable suspicion does not warrant a reversal of a judgment, for it is the exclusive province of the trier of fact to determine the truth or the falsity of the facts upon which a determination depends. People v. Huston, supra, 21 Cal.2d at page 693, 134 P.2d at page 759. While the alleged variances and inconsistencies in the minor's testimony may have afforded opportunity for an argument to the trial judge against the reliability of her testimony, we find nothing in them from which a reviewing court could justly conclude that her entire testimony is per se unbelievable and that it was therefore the court's duty not only to disregard it but to accept appellant's denial thereof. The gist of the prosecutrix' narrative was that appellant and the former's mother frequently slept together and that on one occasion the witness observed them in an act of sexual intercourse. We fail to see wherein this testimony can be strictured as physically impossible or even improbable in view of the admitted fact that appellant frequently spent the night at the Miller apartment and the admitted fact that appellant had, on at least one other occasion, had intimate relations with Mrs. Miller. The main inconsistencies alluded to by appellant relate to the exactness of the date of the act in question and to the exact position on the bed from which the witness observed the alleged act of sexual intercourse. These were matters, as above stated, for the trier of facts to consider, as was the ultimate question submitted for his decision, viz., whether or not appellant engaged in the act of sexual intercourse with the mother of the witness as alleged. If, therefore, the court, as manifestly it did, believed the testimony of the minor in the main, or if the court believed only that portion of the testimony bearing on the immediate circumstances of the commission of the act charged, and thus became satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt of appellant's guilt, it was of course within the trial court's province to base its decision upon that particular portion of her testimony, although the court might have regarded the statements of the minor on other points, as of doubtful verity. Consequently, the decision arrived at by the court against appellant is conclusive on appeal. People v. Voice, 68 Cal.App.2d 610, 614, 157 P.2d 436; People v. Carlson, 73 Cal.App.2d 933, 940, 167 P.2d 812; People v. Lewis, 18 Cal.App. 359, 364, 123 P. 232; People v. Schultz, 49 Cal.App.2d 38, 42, 120 P.2d 893.

[10-12] It is true, as appellant urges, that the prosecutrix admitted she was angry with her mother at the time of appellant's arrest and that she had had arguments with appellant concerning her association with an older man, but as has been repeatedly held, the matters relating to the motives of a witness are to be dealt with and determined by the jury, or in the instant case, by the trial judge; and, on appeal, unless it be shown that the testimony of the witness is inherently improbable or impossible of belief, the determination of the duly constituted arbiter of the facts will not be disturbed. People v. Fleming, 166 Cal. 357, 370, 136 P. 291, Ann.Cas.1915B, 881; People v. Tom Woo, 181 Cal. 315, 326, 184 P. 389. In the case now engaging our attention, by finding appellant guilty, the court evidently accepted the girl's testimony as being true, despite her motives, and there is nothing in the record upon which we can fairly base the conclusion that her testimony is inherently false; consequently, the facts established thereby must be taken in support of the decision.

[13-15] Appellant contends that the trial judge was guilty of prejudicial misconduct in asking appellant questions as to the general nature of the latter's relationship with the minor's mother and as to whether appellant had engaged in acts of sexual intercourse at times other than the date charged in the information. Since the trial was before the court, we perceive no prejudicial error in the questions propounded by the court. Under Section 700 of the Welfare and Institutions Code, evidence is admissible to show any conduct on the part of a person toward the minor named in the information which causes or tends to cause said minor to become a delinquent, whether such conduct consists in the doing of one act or a series of acts. The questions complained of were not irrelevant to the question of whether the minor was in danger of becoming a delinquent. People v. Lowell, 77 Cal.App.2d 341, 345, 175 P.2d 846. Furthermore, not having made objection to or motion to strike the questions of the court, appellant cannot now on appeal, for the first time, assail the conduct of the trial judge. People v. Deibert, supra, 117 Cal.App.2d at page 427, 256 P.2d at page 365.

[16] Finally, appellant contends that the testimony of the prosecutrix that she was 13 years of age was legally insufficient to establish that fact. A similar contention was rejected in the cases of People

v. Crownover, 34 Cal.App.2d 7, 9, 92 P.2d 929, and People v. Murray, 91 Cal.App.2d 253, 257, 204 P.2d 624.

For the foregoing reasons, the judgment and the order denying defendant's motion for a new trial are, and each is affirmed.

No. 8815.

District Court of Appeal, Third District,
California.

Oct. 30, 1956.

Action was brought to rescind a contract of sale of personalty to plaintiffs and a lease of realty, and to recover detriment suffered by reason of allegedly false and fraudulent representations made by defendants with respect to profits which plaintiffs could expect from operation of ice cream business. The Superior Court of Sacramento County, Malcolm C. Glenn, J., entered judgment for plaintiffs, and certain of the defendants appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Peek, J., held that evidence sustained finding of Superior Court that defendants, to induce plaintiffs to enter into contract, lease, and note, falsely and fraudulently made statements with respect to profits, knowing the statements to be false and that plaintiffs, believing the statements to be true, relied thereon.

Judgment affirmed.

In action to rescind a contract of sale of personalty to plaintiffs and a lease of realty to plaintiffs, and to recover detriment suffered by plaintiffs by reason of allegedly false and fraudulent representations made by defendants concerning profits which plaintiffs could expect to make in operation of ice cream business it was no defense that statement of one of defendants that out of every dollar taken in by plaintiffs in operation of ice cream business, 30¢ would be theirs, was inconsistent with the statement of that defendant as to specific net profits plaintiffs would receive from sales of $50 a day and that variance should have put plaintiffs on inquiry, where defendants admitted that both statements had been made to plaintiffs.

In action to rescind a contract of sale of personalty to plaintiffs and a lease of realty to plaintiffs, and to recover detriment suffered by plaintiffs by reason of allegedly false and fraudulent representations made by defendants concerning profits which plaintiffs could expect to make in operation of ice cream business, it was no defense that plaintiffs allegedly exhibited unbelievable ignorance in relying on absurd statements of one of the defendants.

Where plaintiffs commenced ice cream business on July 21, and gave notice to defendants on November 14 that they were rescinding contract for sale of personalty and lease of realty, on ground of allegedly false and fraudulent representations made by defendants with respect to profits plaintiffs would realize from ice cream business, plaintiffs did not unduly delay their notice of rescission. PEEK, Justice.

This is an appeal by defendants from an adverse judgment in an action brought by plaintiffs to rescind a contract of sale of personal property, a lease of real property, and to recover the detriment suffered by reason of the false and fraudulent representations made by defendants.

The record discloses that pursuant to a letter from plaintiffs seeking information pertaining to the ice cream business, the defendant Wilde, a salesman for the defendant corporation, replied in part as follows:

"* * *

"This means that we put you in the Icecream Business.

"We help you select the location you desire.

"We either build or arrange the lease of the bldg.

"We install the equipment and open your store for you.

"And arrange the financing for a low downpayment and very easy terms.

"All that is needed is for both of us to decide on a location, receive the nod of approval from you and we do the rest. When you step out of the service you will step into a going business and we stay with you until you are completely confident you are ready and able to conduct the business yourself.

[Following paragraph typed in red letters.]

"Special Note:

"1. You are in business for yourself.

"2. You pay no royalty or franchise.

"3. Every dollar you take in is yours.

"4. You buy your supplies from whomever you wish.

"a. We suggest but these suggestions are not mandatory.

"Profits: [The words "30¢ Net" also typed in red letters.]

"For Every Dollar You Take In 30¢ Net Is Yours.

"Operators Have Proven This And Are Proving This Fact Daily.

"You Can Interview These Operators Yourself Without Our Presence.

"This letter is Forceful we admit but the facts themselves hold up and give us the confidence to make these statements. * * *"

Several meetings were held between the plaintiffs and Wilde. At all times Wilde held himself out as an expert in regard to the ice cream business. Specifically he referred to an extensive trip which he had recently taken throughout the Northwest and into Canada in company with another expert, during which he studied the operations of 40 or 50 ice cream establishments. However, at the trial it developed that he had been gone from Sacramento for a total of only five days. It was further shown that his extensive experience in the installation of retail ice cream stores consisted in the establishment of one store. In addition to the letter previously set forth, Wilde also gave to plaintiffs a written memorandum wherein he showed them by his figures what their total expenses would be; that in the summer months most stores averaged $125 per day; that during the winter months sales would average $65 to $80 daily; but that on a basis of only $50 per day, they would have a monthly profit of approximately $600. Neither of the plaintiffs had any previous business experience. This fact was mentioned to Wilde and he was informed by them that they were therefore compelled to rely upon his judgment in all matters. At that time Black was 24 years of age, having gone directly from high school into the Air Force. Mrs. Black was 21. The negotiations were begun prior to Black's separation from the service in order that they might immediately go into a small business for themselves. The location selected was in a building owned by the defendants Newell R. Blair and his wife, Dorothy A. Blair. In the latter part of July, 1952, following certain renovations, the establishment was opened for business. To accomplish this it was necessary for plaintiffs to execute a lease of the premises with the Blairs, a contract for the purchase of equipment in the amount of $9,583.74, and an F.H.A. note in the sum of $1,516.58 for the remodeling of the premises. In the early part of November, 1952, plaintiffs realized that the business was not earning what they had been led to expect by Wilde, and on the 13th of that month they gave their notice of rescission.

Upon the evidence so presented, the court found that defendants, to induce plaintiffs to enter into said contract, lease and note, falsely and fraudulently made the statements heretofore summarized, knowing the same to be false, and that plaintiffs, believing the same to be true, relied thereon. Specifically the court found that such false and fraudulent representations were that if plaintiffs would purchase the ice cream freezing equipment, specified and enter into said lease, they would earn from said business an average gross income of $1,500 monthly from daily sales of $50; thus earning an average monthly profit of $633.84; and that from every dollar taken in by plaintiffs from the sale of ice cream, they would realize a net profit of 30 cents.

Defendants first contend that there was no justifiable reliance by plaintiffs in that the defendant Wilde was at most only negligent in not more fully explaining his memorandum to plaintiffs, or in not being sure that they fully understood it, and that plaintiffs were likewise negligent in relying on such absurd representations; secondly, that Wilde's statement that out of every dollar taken in, 30 cents would be theirs, was so completely inconsistent with his statement as to the specific net profits plaintiffs would receive from sales of $50 per day as to have put plaintiffs on inquiry; and, thirdly, that in any event plaintiffs failed to use due diligence in rescinding after discovery of the alleged misrepresentations.

In support of this contention, defendants argue that the alleged misrepresentations contained in Wilde's memorandum are entirely inconsistent with the statements contained in his letter, i. e., that plaintiffs would make a net profit of 30 cents out of each dollar taken in; that he did not intend to make any particular representations by the memorandum which he gave to plaintiffs; and that they by "their unbelievable ignorance" were confused as to what he meant. It is then argued that since what was set forth in his memorandum and what Wilde actually meant, was entirely different from what plaintiffs construed it to mean, at most he could only have been negligent in failing to explain more fully his meaning and in failing to be sure it was understood by plaintiffs, and that because the statements were so "absurd" plaintiffs were likewise negligent in relying on them.

[1,2] It would appear, however, that any variance between the actual figures as to net profit set forth in Wilde's memorandum and the 30-cent figure set forth in his original letter would be immaterial since the contents of both are admitted. It would further seem that any improper items of expense reflected by plaintiffs' books would likewise be immaterial since the items so charged did not exceed the items of expense set out by Wilde in his memorandum. The ultimate question presented, being one of fact, comes squarely within the rule of Seeger v. Odell, 18 Cal.2d 409, 115 P.2d 977, 136 A.L.R. 1291, and the rule therein enunciated must control.

[3,4] Paraphrasing the holding of the court in that case, the record before us amply sustains the findings of the trial court herein that the misrepresentations were made with the knowledge that they were or might be untrue; that plaintiffs were justified in acting in reliance thereon; that if it could be said that Wilde's statements were mere expressions of opinion, nevertheless such statements were made by one who held himself out as an expert in the field; that such facts were intentionally misrepresented and therefore the negligence, if it was such, on the part of plaintiffs was no excuse for Wilde's actions. Even assuming as defendants contend that the plaintiffs exhibited "unbelievable ignorance" or that Wilde's statements were "absurd" it is still the rule that,

"Exceptionally gullible or ignorant people have been permitted to recover from defendants who took advantage of them in circumstances where persons of normal intelligence would not have been misled. See cases cited in 6 Cal.Jur.Supp. 45 (note 13); Prosser, Torts, 749. 'No rogue should enjoy his ill-gotten plunder for the simple reason that his victim is by chance a fool.'" Seeger v. Odell, supra, 18 Cal.2d 409, 415, 115 P.2d 977, 981.

[5] Defendants' final contention is likewise without merit. We cannot say as a matter of law that plaintiffs unduly delayed their notice of rescission by their operation of the business for nearly four months. They commenced business on July 21 and gave notice on November 14. As defendants note in their brief, it would take some time for a new business to get started and prove itself. Plaintiffs could not tell what their true financial situation was until at least some of their original operating expenses began to catch up with them, and they were then able to more properly compare their costs with their sales. Under such facts and circumstances it cannot be said that plaintiffs failed to act promptly upon the discovery of the facts entitling them to rescission within the meaning of Civil Code, section 1691.

The judgment is affirmed.

The PEOPLE of the State of California,
Plaintiff and Respondent,
v.

Warren WERTZ, Defendant and Appellant.
Cr. 2687.

District Court of Appeal, Third District,
California.
Oct. 24, 1956.

Defendant was convicted of sex perversion. The Superior Court, Stanislaus County, Gregory P. Maushart, J., entered order denying motion for new trial and suspended pronouncing of judgment and placed defendant on probation. The defendant appealed from order denying motion for new trial and purportedly appealed from judgment and verdict of conviction. The District Court of Appeal, Schottky, J., held that evidence was sufficient to support conviction.

Purported appeal from judgment dismissed and order denying motion for new trial affirmed.

1. Criminal Law §742(2)

In sex perversion prosecution of defendant who purportedly committed the act with complaining witness' companion before committing the act with complaining witness in presence of companion, evidence raised question for jury as to whether companion was such an accomplice to defendant's act with complaining witness that companion's testimony could not be used to corroborate complaining witness' testimony. West's Ann.Pen.Code, §§ 288a, 1111.

2. Criminal Law §899

In prosecution for sex perversion, any objection to testimony of witness for prosecution as to a prior similar act of defendant was waived where defendant's counsel admitted during discussion of objection made to such testimony that testimony would be admissible if jury was told such evidence was not for corroboration but was wholly for purpose of showing a tendency or state of mind of defendant and jury was instructed to that effect. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 288a.

3. Criminal Law §372(1)

In sex perversion prosecution, testimony that on a prior occasion the witness observed the defendant commit the act with complaining witness was admissible. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 288a.

4. Criminal Law §935(1), 1156(2)

Trial judge has broad discretion in passing on motion for new trial on ground that verdict is contrary to evidence, and his action, whether in denying or particularly in granting the motion, will not be disturbed on appeal unless it clearly appears that he abused such broad discretion.

5. Sodomy §6

In prosecution for sex perversion, evidence was sufficient to support the conviction. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 288a.

Mark A. Joseph, Modesto, for appellant.
Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., by G. A. Strader, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

SCHOTTKY, Justice.

Appellant, a man of over 77 years of age, was charged by information with the crime of violating section 288a of the Penal Code, in two counts: Count I, charging that appellant committed the act denounced by said section with James Stinson, a boy of 15 years; and Count II, charging that appellant committed the act with Charles Hopkins, a boy of 16 years. Following appellant's plea of not guilty, the case was tried and at the conclusion of the evidence the court advised a verdict of not guilty as to Count I. The jury then found appellant not guilty as to Count I and guilty as to Count II. Thereafter, the court, after denying a motion to set aside the verdict and for a new trial, ordered that pronouncing of judgment be suspended and that appellant be placed on probation for a period of five years. Appellant has appealed, the notice of appeal stating that the appeal is "from the judgment and verdict of conviction as to Count Two of the Information herein, and also from the order of the Court denying defendant's Motion for a New Trial as to Count Two of said Information."

The factual situation as shown by the record may be briefly summarized as follows:

On the morning of January 6, 1956, two boys, James Stinson and Charles Hopkins, went together to the home of appellant Warren Wertz in the city of Modesto, Stanislaus County, California. Upon being admitted by appellant, they first went to the kitchen where the boys sat for a while, talked and flipped coins. James Stinson then went into the bedroom with appellant. At this time appellant was dressed only in a shirt and socks. Stinson and appellant undressed and while in the bedroom the appellant copulated the sexual organ of James Stinson with his (the appellant's) mouth. James then proceeded to dress and Charles Hopkins came into the bedroom. The appellant told Charles to take his clothes off, which he did, and appellant then committed the same act with Charles, while James Stinson, who testified to seeing the offense committed by appellant with Charles Hopkins, remained in the room.

Two police officers of the Modesto Police Department then arrived at appellant's residence and, after they knocked on the door for several minutes, the appellant appeared at the door clad only in a pair of pants. The appellant and the two youths were taken into custody.

[1] Appellant's first contention is that Charles Hopkins, the participant with appellant in the commission of the offense charged in Count II, was an accomplice and that his testimony is not corroborated as is required by section 1111 of the Penal Code. Appellant bases his argument upon the contention that James Stinson was an accomplice in the commission of the offense involving Charles Hopkins and that therefore the testimony of Stinson could not be used to corroborate the testimony of Hopkins, who testified to all the details of the offense charged in Count II.

Admittedly, if Stinson must be considered an accomplice in the act committed by appellant with Charles Hopkins, appellant's conviction on Count II could not be upheld. However, there is no evidence in the record that would support, much less compel, a finding that James Stinson aided, abetted or even encouraged the commission of the act of perversion by appellant and Hopkins. Furthermore, the court instructed the jury fully and correctly on the law as to accomplices and specifically instructed the jury that:

"An accomplice is one who is liable to prosecution for the identical offense charged against the defendant on trial. Whether or not any witness in this case was an accomplice as defined in these instructions is for the jury to determine from all the testimony and the circumstances as shown by the evidence.

"To render a person an accomplice, he or she must in some manner knowingly and with criminal intent aid, abet, assist, or participate in the criminal act. If you should find that any witness in this case so conducted himself in respect to any crime charged, you must find that he was an accomplice."

What was said in the case of People v. McMahon, 116 Cal.App.2d 883, at page 887, 254 P.2d 903, 905, is quite applicable to the instant case:

"Defendant's second contention is predicated upon the action of the trial court in denying his motion to dismiss Counts 3 and 4. His argument in support of this contention proceeds upon the theory that since both of the boys involved in these counts were over the age of 14 years they were therefore accomplices, and since their testimony was not corroborated it was error for the court to deny his motion. Our examination of the record does not sustain such a contention. While each of the boys was an accomplice with respect to the particular act in which he participated the evidence does not disclose as a matter of law that he was an accomplice with respect to the acts perpetrated by defendant on the other. Both of the complaining witnesses were present at the time and place; each was the recipient of the same offer and proposition and each identified the defendant as the one who had picked them up in his car and made the propositions to them. The mere fact that each was an accomplice of the defendant with respect to the particular act engaged in by each did not in and of itself render him an accomplice as a matter of law as to the act charged against defendant with the other complaining witness. This was a question of fact to be determined by the jury and the court properly left that to the jury for its determination. People v. Griffin, 98 Cal.App.2d 1, 219 P.2d 519."

Appellant next contends that the court erred in admitting the testimony of Raymond Schinn, a boy of 14 years of age, as to similar offenses committed by appellant with Charles Hopkins. This witness was called by the People and testified that he had known the appellant for approximately eight or nine months prior to the trial. About 3:30 o'clock one afternoon some eight or nine months before the trial, this witness visited the appellant at his home. The witness was accompanied by James Stinson, Leon Stinson and Charles Hopkins. After being invited in by the appellant and after some conversation of a general nature, the appellant "made an offer to James Stinson."

At this point in the proceedings, counsel for the appellant interposed an objection and a lengthy discussion occurred between counsel and the court out of the presence of the jury. During this discussion appellant's counsel stated that in his opinion evidence of prior similar acts of a defendant were admissible where such acts were with the same victim or co-participant. Later, during the discussion on the objection, counsel stated as follows:

"Mr. Joseph: I will have no objection, Your Honor, if the jury is properly told at this time when the evidence goes in, it is not to be construed as proof of the particular acts charged in the information. It's not for corroboration, it's solely for the purpose of showing a tendency or state of mind of the defendant."

Upon returning to the courtroom, the court stated to the jury with regard to the testimony of this witness, as follows:

"* * * the evidence is to be considered by you, not as corroboration of any specific act but is permitted merely to show scheme, plan and intent of the defendant on other occasions. It is not offered as proof or as corroboration of the specific acts of which the defendant is here accused."

The witness then testified that on the occasion referred to the appellant and Charles Hopkins went into the bedroom, that the witness went into the bedroom shortly thereafter for the purpose of telling Charles that the others were going outside, and while in the bedroom the witness observed the appellant in the act of copulating the sexual organ of Charles Hopkins with the appellant's mouth.

[2,3] Thus it would appear that appellant waived any objection to the introduction of this evidence, and appellant is hardly in a position to urge it upon appeal. However, we believe that the testimony was admissible under the decisions of our appellate courts.

Other similar acts of a defendant charged with a sex offense have been held to be admissible where such acts were committed with the same person involved in the charge for which the defendant is on trial. People v. Cox, 102 Cal.App.2d 285, 227 P.2d 290; People v. LaMantain, 89 Cal.App.2d 699, 201 P.2d 598; People v. Jewett, 84 Cal.App. 2d 276, 190 P.2d 330. Proof of such other acts was relevant in the present case to show a common plan, scheme or design. People v. Peete, 28 Cal.2d 306, 169 P.2d 924; Peo- ple v. Westek, 31 Cal.2d 469, 190 P.2d 9; People v. Sykes, 44 Cal.2d 166, 280 P.2d 769.

Appellant cites the recent case of People v. Buchel, 141 Cal.App.2d 91, 296 P.2d 113, in support of his contention, but that case is not in point for in that case the prosecution introduced evidence of other acts of the defendant committed with persons other than the boy with whom defendant was charged with having performed acts in violation of Penal Code section 288. The present case involves proof of other acts of appellant with Charles Hopkins, the participant in the crime charged in Count II of the information.

Appellant's final contention is that the court erred in denying appellant's motion for a new trial. He points to statements of the trial judge during the trial that he would not believe Stinson and Hopkins under oath as they were perverts themselves and could have "framed" appellant. Appellant argues that such being the state of mind of the trial judge, he was required by law to grant the motion for a new trial on grounds of insufficiency of the evidence, and his failure to do so constituted an abuse of discretion.

The record shows that at the time of denying appellant's motion for a new trial the court stated:

"I have listened to enough argument in this case, I know what I am going to do. I am satisfied that the offense was committed. I am satisfied that though the evidence was very, very slight, it may be sufficient to constitute corroboration."

[4] It is hardly necessary to cite authority for the well settled rule that the trial judge has broad discretion in passing on a motion for new trial on the ground that the verdict is contrary to the evidence, and his action, whether in denying or particularly in granting the motion, will not be disturbed on appeal unless it clearly appears that he abused such broad discretion. People v. Sarazzawski, 27 Cal.2d 7, 161 P.2d 934; People v. Richard, 101 Cal.App.2d 631, 225 P.2d 938; People v. Alexander, 41 Cal.App.2d 275, 106 P.2d 450, 916.

[5] The evidence amply supports the conviction of appellant and no prejudicial errors were committed.

Pronouncing of judgment having been suspended and no judgment having been entered, the purported appeal therefrom is dismissed. The order denying the motion for a new trial is affirmed.

An information was filed charging defendant with possession of heroin. The Superior Court, County of San Mateo, Edmund Scott, J., entered an order dismissing the information on ground of an unlawful search and seizure, and the People of the State of California appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Bray, J., held that where federal narcotics agent, who had a warrant to search laundry and proprietor for opium, went to laundry where he found proprietor, defendant, and another, and no public offense was committed in presence of agent, and there was nothing to indicate to officers that defendant was anything other than a casual visitor, and, while agent was engaged with defendant, who had aroused agent's suspicions because he was moving around and playing with a top, other officers found opium derivative, which proprietor admitted was his, and search of defendant's person disclosed bindles of heroin, search of defendant and seizure of heroin was illegal.

On the ground of an unlawful search and seizure under the rule of People v. Cahan, 44 Cal.2d 434, 282 P.2d 905, an information charging defendant with violation of section 11500, Health and Safety Code (possession of heroin), was dismissed. Plaintiff appealed.

Question Presented.

Under the circumstances here, did a search warrant authorizing search of described premises and of one Jack Yee authorize search of defendant (another person than Jack Yee) present there?

Record.

[1] Federal Narcotics Agent Prziborowski filed in a municipal court of San Mateo County an affidavit that he had reasonable cause to believe, and did believe that Jack Yee, who resided and maintained a business establishment at described premises known as Five Points Laundry, had in his possession or in or upon said premises opium, opium pipes and other paraphernalia used in the preparation, possession, use and sale of opium.¹ Armed with a search warrant issued upon said affidavit authorizing the search of the entire premises "and of every thing and place in or on said premises, and of the person of Jack Yee," Agent Prziborowski and four law enforcement officers entered the Five Points Laundry. The business establishment was divided into deem it unnecessary to detail the allegations of the affidavit.

two sections. The front section consisted of the business office with a cash register and business counter. The rear section consisted of a laundry workroom. Also located in the rear part of the building were a bedroom and a bathroom. On entering, the officers found no one in the front section. As they proceeded towards the rear they met a man at the swinging door between the sections who told them he was the operator of the laundry. (He was later identified as Gee Yee, also known as Jack Yee, the owner of the premises (apparently the man named in the warrant).) The officers proceeded into the rear section where there were two other Chinese, one being defendant. Prziborowski told all three that he had a search warrant to search the building and was looking for a man named Yee. All three said they were named Yee. The officer did not know nor ask which one was Jack Yee. Prziborowski noticed that defendant was "milling around playing with a top or a Yoyo after I said I had a search warrant so I became suspicious of him and I went to him and I asked him if his name was Yee and he said yes, his name was Yee." Prziborowski then searched defendant and found in his watch pocket a small bindle which defendant admitted was heroin. Prziborowski then placed defendant under arrest, and upon further search, found another bindle of heroin underneath the stocking on defendant's right leg. After the search defendant said his name was "Frank Yee." At no time did he say it was Jack Yee nor was he asked if he owned or rented the premises. He later gave his name as Kim Yut Yee and Yet Ning Yee. While Prziborowski was occupied with defendant other officers found on a table in the rear of the premises bottles which gave off the odor of and contained an opium derivative. Jack Yee admitted owning and using it. After being held to answer at the preliminary examination, defendant moved in the superior court under section 995, Penal Code, to dismiss the information.²

Was the Search and Seizure Illegal?

[2-4] We believe it was. In People v. Soto, 144 Cal.App.2d 294, 301 P.2d 45, 48, this court discussed the various cases applying the rule of People v. Cahan, supra, 44 Cal.2d 434, 282 P.2d 905, and pointed out: "The real criterion as to the reasonableness of a search is whether or not there has been the commission of a public offense in the presence of a police officer, or whether, under the facts, the police officer has reasonable grounds to believe that the defendant may have committed a felony." Here, there is no contention that prior to the search of defendant's person any public offense was committed in the presence of the officers.³ See People v. Brown, 45 Cal.2d 640, 642, 290 P.2d 528, supra. Therefore, we are confined to the question of whether, under the facts, the officers had reasonable grounds to believe that defendant may have committed a felony. "Reasonable or probable cause has been discussed in many cases. Generally speaking, it means "'such a state of facts as would lead a man of ordinary caution or prudence to believe, and conscientiously entertain a strong suspicion, that the person accused is guilty.'"" People v. Soto, supra, 144 Cal.App.2d at page 298, 301 P.2d at page 48.⁴ At the moment of search the only fact bearing on the question

2. A motion to set aside the information is the proper way to determine whether a commitment is based entirely upon incompetent evidence. Badillo v. Superior Court, 46 Cal.2d 269, 294 P.2d 23; Rogers v. Superior Court, 46 Cal.2d 3, 291 P.2d 929.

3. Also, in the absence of "reasonable cause," a search either before or after an arrest cannot be justified merely because it revealed that defendant was in fact guilty of a felony. People v. Simon, 45 Cal.2d 645, 648, 290 P.2d 531; People v. Brown, 45 Cal.2d 640, 290 P.2d 528.

4. As pointed out by plaintiff, Prziborowski was a federal agent and not a "peace officer" justified to make an arrest under section 836, Penal Code, as he is not included in the definition of "peace officer" in section 817. Section 836, subdivision 3, provides that a private person may make an arrest "When a felony has in fact been committed, and he has was that defendant was on premises which the officers had reason to believe contained opium. That fact alone would not justify either his arrest or a search of defendant's person. People v. Kitchens, 46 Cal.2d 260, 294 P.2d 17; People v. Soto, supra, 144 Cal. App.2d at page 299, 301 P.2d at page 49. There was nothing to indicate to the officers that defendant was anything other than a casual visitor to the room. As said in People v. Schraier, 141 Cal.App.2d 600, 297 P.2d 81, 83: "There was neither knowledge of appellant's having a criminal record, nor of his being addicted to the use of narcotics. That he actually did at the time have a narcotic cigarette in his pocket cannot justify the search by the officer. * * * [A] mere suspicion does not justify the arrest or search of a person present under such circumstances. He bore no evidences of a criminal character; he had committed no act that would reasonably indicate a readiness to violate any law; he had no criminal record; no reliable informant had reported a fact or such a suspicious circumstance as would reasonably have warranted action by the law-enforcing agencies."

Plaintiff contends that defendant's "furtive conduct" constituted reasonable cause for the search. The sole basis for this claim of furtive conduct is the following testimony by Prziborowski: "* * * I noticed the defendant Frank Yee milling around playing with a top or a Yoyo after I said I had a search warrant so I became suspicious of him and I went to him and I asked him if his name was Yee and he said yes * *." (Emphasis added.) Just what was meant by the phrase "milling around" is difficult to determine. Generally, the term is used with reference to a group or crowd. Presumably when applied to an individual it means he was moving rapidly around the room, in this case playing with a top or yoyo while doing so. The officer did not claim that such conduct might have been caused by the use of a narcotic or that it was in any way indicative of such use. We fail to see anything in defendant's action that would reasonably cause a person to suspect that he had narcotics in his possession.

In People v. Kitchens, supra, 46 Cal.2d 260, 294 P.2d 17, there is an intimation that where an officer in good faith mistakes another person for one whom the officer has reasonable grounds to believe is guilty of a felony, and searches the other person, finding on him evidence of the commission of a felony, the search and the consequent arrest is legal. Such rule, however, is not applicable here, as the officer does not claim he mistook defendant for the person named in the search warrant. There were three Yees present and the officer made no effort to find out which one was Jack, named in the warrant. Again, he knew, because he so stated in his affidavit for search warrant, that Jack was the owner of the laundry and the tenant of the premises. Moreover, he had already been told by the first person he encountered that he was the laundry owner. Thus he must have known that defendant was not the person mentioned in the search warrant.

Although the principles of People v. Soto, supra, 144 Cal.App.2d 294, 301 P.2d 45, apply here, the facts are different. There, before going to the room where the defendant was, the officer among other matters had reasonable grounds to believe that narcotics parties had been going on there for two weeks, and immediately before entering met a narcotic user coming therefrom who told him that he had just used narcotics therein. On entering the room the officer found the tenant asleep in bed and the defendant with his shoes off. Thus, the officer had reason to believe that the room was used for narcotics parties, that the use of narcotics therein had just taken place, and it was reasonable to assume that the only awake occupant in the room had some connection with that use, reasonable cause for believing the person arrested to have committed it." At least two of the men accompanying Prziborowski qualified as "peace officers" under that section. The question still remains whether any of the peace officers or Prziborowski as a private person had reasonable cause to believe defendant had committed or was committing a felony.

and was concerned in it. In our case, while the agent's affidavit stated that the room had opium in it, there was no statement nor information that the room was used for the use of narcotics nor for the sale thereof. There was nothing to justify the assumption that any one other than Jack Yee, who was alleged to be the possessor of any narcotics in the room, had any knowledge of their presence.

The most serious question in the case is whether the discovery of the opium derivative constituted probable cause which would have justified the officers in arresting and searching the three persons then on the premises, and if so, whether such fact would have eliminated the taint of illegality in the original search of defendant. On a table in the back of the laundry bottles were found. A jug was found in a shelf or compartment under the table. The bottles smelled of opium derivative. The jug was half full of a liquid which smelled similarly. Gee Yee (Jack Yee) admitted ownership of the bottles and said the "Yen Shee Shuey" was his. Two of the bottles and the jug contained considerable quantities of opium derivative. In the living quarters there was a smell of opium. (There was no evidence that defendant had been in the living quarters.) Prziborowski stated in the affidavit for search warrant that he had been advised by a reliable person that the latter had made purchases of opium from Jack Yee and that Jack kept and possessed opium at the laundry premises. Defendant was in the room where this contraband was, and his action "milling around" and playing with a yoyo or top, might justify a belief that his presence in the room had not been momentary but of some duration, and therefore might justify a reasonable suspicion that he had some connection with the contraband that was visible in his immediate presence. This might have justified an arrest of all three men, including defendant. Assuming that it would, such fact would not legalize the preceding illegal search. It has been held that where an arrest for a felony committed in the presence of an officer is lawful, a search incidental to such arrest is not unlawful merely because the search preceded rather than followed the arrest. People v. Boyles, 45 Cal.2d 652, 655, 290 P.2d 535; People v. Simon, supra, 45 Cal.2d 645, 649, 290 P.2d 531. However, that rule is based upon the requirement that "the officer had reasonable cause before the search to make an arrest and whether the search and any seizures incident thereto were or were not more extensive than would reasonably be justified as incident to an arrest. See, United States v. Rabinowitz, 339 U.S. 56, 60-64, 70 S.Ct. 430, 94 L.Ed. 653." People v. Simon, supra, 45 Cal.2d at page 648, 290 P.2d at page 533; emphasis added. As further said in the Simon case, 45 Cal.2d at page 648, 290 P.2d at page 533: "Thus, if the officer is entitled to make an arrest on the basis of information available to him before he searches, and as an incident to that arrest is entitled to make a reasonable search of the person arrested and the place where he is arrested, there is nothing unreasonable in his conduct if he makes the search before instead of after the arrest." (Emphasis added.)

[5] As we have pointed out hereinbefore, the officer did not have information before he searched defendant which would have justified an arrest. Thus, no evidence discovered after the search could make legal a search which was illegal. See People v. Brown, supra, 45 Cal.2d 640, 290 P.2d 528 and cases therein cited, to the effect that "a search, whether incident to an arrest or not, can not be justified by what it turns up", 45 Cal.2d at page 643, 290 P.2d at page 530, and "If, therefore, it is necessary to rely on the search to justify the arrest, the conclusion is inescapable that a search that cannot be justified by what it turns up cannot justify the arrest." 45 Cal.2d at page 644, 290 P.2d at page 530.

The order dismissing the information is affirmed.

Civ. 5255.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District,
California.

Oct. 29, 1956.

Rehearing Denied Nov. 20, 1956.

Hearing Denied Dec. 24, 1956.

Action wherein plaintiff attached certain aircraft on theory that it was property of defendant. Another filed third-party claim alleging that he owned chattel mortgage on airplane. Upon hearing, the Superior Court of Orange County, Robert Gardner, J., entered order finding that third-party claim was valid, and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Barnard, P. J., held that where chattel mortgage was stamped as received by Civil Aeronautics Administration on February 14, and as received by administration and records branch of C.A.A. on February 15, mortgage was, on February 15, filed for recordation, within federal statute putting others on notice of mortgage if filed for recordation, though, in response to request of mortgagee for return of mortgage for purposes of local recording, administrator returned original so that mortgagee could submit required certified copy in such case, and though mortgage was received second time on March 4 and recorded on March 9, after attachment of aircraft on March 2.

Order affirmed.

1. Aviation ⇨14

Where seller who obtained chattel mortgage on aircraft which he had sold requested that Civil Aeronautics Administrator, to whom instrument had been sent for recordation, return original "if possible" for local recording purposes, request was not condition to instrument's being filed for recordation, and did not constitute withdrawal of request for filing already made, and did not affect time at which mortgage had been filed for recordation, within federal recording statute affecting aircraft. Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938, § 503, 49 U.S.C.A. § 523; West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 2958a.

2. Aviation ⇨14

Chattel mortgage, which seller of aircraft sent to Civil Aeronautics Administrator for recordation, was filed for recordation, within federal statute relating to recording conveyances and mortgages of aircraft, when it was stamped as received by administration and records branch of Civil Aeronautics Administration. Chattel Mortgages ⇨150(1)

Where chattel mortgage was stamped as received by Civil Aeronautics Administration on February 14, and as received by administration and record branch of Civil Aeronautics Administration on February 15, mortgage was, on February 15, filed for recordation, within federal statute putting others on notice if mortgage is filed for recordation, though, in response to request of mortgagee for return of mortgage for purposes of local recordings, administrator returned original so that mortgagee could submit required certified copy, and though mortgage was received second time on March 4, and recorded on March 9, after attachment of aircraft by third person on March 2. Winthrop O. Gordon, Santa Ana, for appellant.

No appearance for respondent.

BARNARD, Presiding Justice.

This appeal is presented on a settled statement, the facts being undisputed. On March 2, 1955, the plaintiff brought this action and on the same day attached a certain Piper aircraft on the theory that it was the property of the defendant. Thereafter, Tom C. Benson filed a third-party claim alleging that he is the owner of a chattel mortgage on the airplane securing a note for $7,158, and asking for proper relief. A hearing to determine title was held, in accordance with Section 689 of the Code of Civil Procedure, at which certain letters and certified copies of certain documents material to the matter were received as exhibits. After argument the matter was submitted, and the court entered an order finding that Benson's third-party claim is valid. The plaintiff has appealed from that order.

On February 9, 1955, Benson sold this airplane to Colboch and executed a bill of sale which recited that it was subject to a chattel mortgage, dated February 8, 1955, for $7,158 in favor of Benson. On February 9, Colboch executed a chattel mortgage on this airplane in favor of Benson for $7,158. On February 9, Benson's attorneys mailed this bill of sale and chattel mortgage to the Civil Aeronautics Administration in Washington, D. C. with a letter stating that the certificate of registration should be returned to the new owner, and also stating "Please record the chattel mortgage as a lien against this air craft and return, if possible, the chattel mortgage so that it may be recorded in Pinal County, Arizona." The bill of sale is stamped by the Civil Aeronautics Administration as received on February 14, 1955, and as recorded on February 18, 1955 at 9:56 A.M. The chattel mortgage is stamped as received on February 14, 1955; as received by "Admin. & Records Branch" on February 15, 1955, at 8:45 A.M.; again as received by Admin. & Records Branch on March 4, 1955 at 2:41 P.M.; and as "recorded" on March 9, 1955, at 4:00 P.M. It was also recorded in Pinal County, Arizona on March 28, 1955.

The reason why this chattel mortgage was received by the Admin. & Records Branch of the C.A.A. on February 15 and again on March 4, is explained by a letter written by the chief of that branch to Benson's attorneys dated February 23, 1955. This letter admits the receipt of "documents covering Piper air craft" and check for filing fees, and states that this aircraft was registered in the name of Colboch on February 18, 1955, and certificate of registration forwarded to him on that date. The letter then goes on to reply to the request that the chattel mortgage itself be returned to the attorneys by stating that when the return of such a conveyance is desired a certified copy must accompany the original instrument; that "after recordation is completed" the certified copy will be retained in that office and the original returned; and that they are returning the original mortgage therewith in order that it might be resubmitted together with the certified copy.

Section 2958a of the Civil Code provides that the mortgage of any aircraft registered and licensed under Federal laws is void as against outside persons unless the mortgage is registered or recorded in accordance with the Federal laws. Section 523 of Title 49 of the U.S.Code Annotated, provides that the administrator shall maintain a system for recording any conveyance which affects the title to, or any interest in, any civil aircraft; that no conveyance the recording of which is thus required shall be valid as against outsiders until such conveyance "is filed for recordation in the office of the Administrator"; that each conveyance thus recorded "shall from the time of its filing for recordation be valid as to all persons without further or other recordation"; and that the administrator shall keep a record of the time and date of the filing of conveyances with him, and also of the time and date of recordation thereof. In Section 401 of Title 49, the definition of a conveyance includes a mortgage or other instrument affecting the title to or an interest in the property.

The appellant contends that when it attached this airplane on March 2, 1955, this chattel mortgage was not of record with the C.A.A. as required by law, and hence was void as to the rights of appellant and the third party claim was therefore invalid. It is argued that the requirement of the Federal statute that the conveyance be "filed for recordation" before it is valid should be construed not only as requiring that the instrument be received in the Federal office with the intent that it be recorded, but also that the instrument be permanently retained in that office as a public record; that in this case the mortgage was offered for filing only subject to the condition that the original could be returned after it was recorded; that since this could not be done, under the rules of the department, the mortgage was not "filed for recordation" but was returned in order that a proper request for filing could later be made; and that it follows that this mortgage is void as to appellant's rights, since it had not been filed for recordation when the airplane was attached on March 2. The appellant relies on such cases as Tregambo v. Comanche Mill & Mining Co., 57 Cal. 501; Leeper v. Ginsberg, 58 Cal.App.2d 591, 139 P.2d 859; In re Estate of Carroll, 190 Cal. 105, 210 P. 817, in which it has been stated that a paper is said to be filed when it is delivered to the proper official with the intention that it shall be retained in that office as a part of the official record.

The Federal statute contemplates a delay between filing such a document for recordation in the office of the administrator, and the actual recordation thereof. The exhibits here indicate that such a delay normally occurs in practice since the certificate of registration by which title to the airplane passed to Colboch is stamped as received on February 14 and as recorded on February 18; and the chattel mortgage was received the second time on March 4 and is stamped as recorded on March 9. Apparently it was because such a delay was to be expected, and to prevent that delay from affecting the time at which the conveyance or lien should take effect, that the statute specifically provided that the instrument should be valid from "the time of its filing for recordation".

[1-3] This mortgage was on February 9 sent to the department with the request that it be recorded as a lien against this aircraft, and it was received by the department on February 14 and by the Records Branch on February 15. The request that the instrument be returned to the attorneys after recordation "if possible" was not a condition to its being filed for recordation. It did not constitute a withdrawal of the request for filing already made, and it did not affect the time at which the mortgage had been "filed for recordation". The department recorded the bill of sale and five days later wrote the letter of February 23 stating that if the return of the original document was desired a certified copy must be sent, sending the original mortgage so that this could be done, and stating that they were retaining the filing fee pending the return to them of the mortgage with a certified copy. It rather clearly appears that the department had received and accepted the mortgage as being "filed for recordation", and that the original was returned merely to accommodate the mortgagee by enabling him to substitute a certified copy after the recordation should be completed, and not because the mortgage had not already been filed for recordation. The mortgage was sufficiently "filed for recordation" on February 15; under the terms of the statute it was valid from that time; and the evidence supports the court's finding and order to that effect.

[4] The appellant further argues that if it had examined the record in the office of the C.A.A. it would have found only the record of the bill of sale, which stated that the mortgage to Benson for $7,158 was dated February 8, 1955, and that it would have found no record of such a mortgage to Benson for $7,158 dated February 9, 1955. The mortgage in question having been filed for recordation at least on February 15, 1955, it must be presumed that a record thereof was kept since the statute requires the administrator to keep in his office a record not only of the time and date of recordation of an instrument but also the time and date of the filing of the same for recordation.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

Cr. 1213.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District,
California.

Oct. 24, 1956.

Defendant was convicted of armed robbery. The Superior Court of Fresno County, Edward L. Kellas, J., entered judgment and an order denying a new trial, and the defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Griffin, J., held that evidence that defendant entered liquor store with his hand in his jacket pocket and with the handle of a gun visible to attendant of liquor store, and that defendant demanded money and a loaded army automatic, which attendant had under the counter, and that defendant took the automatic and threatened to shoot the attendant if he moved, justified jury in finding that the robbery was committed by means of a deadly weapon and that the perpetrator intended to use it as a deadly weapon, if necessary.

Judgment affirmed.

5. Criminal Law §1170(2)

In prosecution for armed robbery of liquor store, it was not prejudicial error for the trial court to preclude the defense from showing the disposition of several prior arrests of defendant in connection with a prior robbery of the liquor store, where defendant later brought out by his testimony that he had previously been accused of robbery of the liquor store and that later someone else had been convicted of the crime.

George Albert Thomas, in pro. per.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., and Norman H. Sokolow, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

GRIFFIN, Justice.

Defendant and appellant was convicted by a jury of the crime of armed robbery (first degree) of one William Koussa on January 25, 1956. He admitted a prior conviction of robbery (first degree) on April 25, 1951, and service of a sentence in a State prison. On appeal, defendant argues insufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict of guilty of robbery in the first degree; error in instructions, and in not admitting certain evidence; and that the verdict was a miscarriage of justice.

A robbery took place at Dan's Liquor Store in Fresno, at 10:15 p. m. on Wednesday, January 25, 1956. Defendant was identified by an employee of the store from whom he took $100 in business money and $36 in personal money. He entered the liquor store with his hand in his jacket pocket. The handle of a gun was seen by the attendant. He demanded the money and a gun (45 caliber loaded army automatic) which the attendant had under the counter. He took it and ordered him to lie down on the floor, face up, and threatened to shoot him if he moved. Later, defendant left by the main door and was seen by another witness who was just coming into the store. This witness recognized defendant and followed him after being informed that he had just robbed the employee. He had seen him in his place of business just around the corner a few minutes before. His testimony was corroborated by another witness who also saw defendant between 9 and 10 o'clock that evening in the same place with a man named White. White testified he met defendant on the street that evening and drove him to the vicinity of that place of business and defendant later left him. Defendant was apprehended and was identified by two of these witnesses in a police lineup.

The gist of defendant's defense was an alibi claiming he caught a freight train in Fresno about noon on Wednesday, January 25th and went to Sacramento on personal business; that he arrived there about 7:30 p. m. and ate in the Bee Coffee Shop on Third Street that Wednesday evening and remained in Sacramento until the next morning; that he then caught a train to Stockton; that about 4 o'clock in the afternoon he rented a room in the Taft Hotel under the name of Richard Patterson and later visited some relatives; and that he then returned to Fresno to join his wife and children whom he left because of some argument.

His relatives testified to receiving a telephone call from defendant in Stockton on January 25th and the next day defendant visited them. On rebuttal the owner of the Bee Coffee Shop testified that her shop was always closed on Wednesdays and accordingly defendant could not have been eating there on that day. The landlady of the hotel testified defendant rented a room in Stockton on the morning of the 26th of January, at 8 a. m.

[1-3] Defendant related a story to the officers somewhat in conflict with his testimony given on the witness stand. He attacks the testimony of the various witnesses for the prosecution for certain claimed discrepancies pertaining to his weight, height, the clothing he was wearing, etc., but this went to the weight of their testimony and would not make their testimony, per se, unbelievable. People v. Garrow, 130 Cal.App.2d 75, 82, 278 P.2d 475. He also claims the victim voluntarily parted with the money and that the evidence did not show it was taken by means of force or fear. We see no merit to this argument. People v. Gardner, 128 Cal. App.2d 1, 274 P.2d 908. It is then contended that the evidence did not show defendant was armed with a deadly weapon nor that he intended to use one. In fact the evidence shows that he was possessed of one, the handle of which was seen by the complaining witness. He also had possession of the one taken from the complaining witness when he was told to lie down and if he moved defendant would shoot him. The jury was justified in finding that the robbery was committed by means of a deadly weapon and that the perpetrator intended to use it as a deadly weapon, if necessary. People v. McKinney, 111 Cal. App.2d 690, 693, 245 P.2d 24; People v. Wallace, 36 Cal.App.2d 1, 97 P.2d 256.

[4] The next argument is that the court instructed the jury, by intimation, that the degree of the crime was unquestionably of the first degree. This conclusion arose when the jury returned for clarification of an instruction given as to the duty of the jury to fix the degree of the crime. The court informed it that defendant was charged with "Armed robbery which in itself is robbery in the first degree. The information could have charged him with just robbery. But since he is charged with armed robbery, under the definition I gave you, that constitutes robbery in the first degree. However, the jury must fix the degree of the crime, and that is the reason the blank is left. I will read the definition." Then follows the definition of robbery as set forth in the Penal Code, §§ 211 and 211a. We perceive no justification for the claim. The court informed the jury that if defendant committed the offense as charged (armed robbery) it would be first degree, i. e., perpetrated with a dangerous or deadly weapon, and that all other kinds were of the second degree. It specifically stated that it was the duty of the jury to fix the degree. No possible prejudicial error resulted. People v. Collier, 113 Cal.App.2d 861, 869, 249 P.2d 72.

[5] Lastly, defendant contends that the court erred in refusing to admit certain evidence indicating that this charge stemmed from some past accusation. Defendant, on direct examination, testified to having been arrested on numerous occasions, including one in connection with an incident involving this same store. The defense was precluded, on objection by the people, from showing the disposition of these several arrests. Later, defendant brought out by his testimony that he was accused of robbery of this place once before and later someone else was convicted of that crime and he claimed that someone was "putting the finger" on him. We perceive no prejudicial error in this ruling. People v. Spreckels, 125 Cal.App.2d 507, 514, 270 P.2d 513. No miscarriage of justice resulted from the verdict. People v. Watson, 46 Cal.2d 818, 299 P.2d 243. The record discloses that no motion for new trial was made. The attempted appeal therefrom is dismissed.

Judgment affirmed.

AGEE, Justice pro tem.

Appellant Lillian R. Dandini is the sole stockholder of appellant Remillard Brick Company, a corporation, and the two are treated as one in this litigation. Respondent W. C. Thompson and his wife are the sole stockholders of respondent Concrete Materials Company, a corporation, and are likewise treated herein as one. The judgment appealed from is based upon findings and conclusions that appellants owe respondent Thompson $9,615 for certain paving, sewer and electrical work and that respondents owe appellants $4,528.72 for gravel wrongfully removed by respondents from property owned by appellant Remillard Brick Company, leaving a balance of $5,086.28 owing from appellants to respondent Thompson. The sole ground of appeal is that the offset allowed was not enough.

By written lease, Remillard Brick Company leased to Concrete Materials Company some 160 acres of land near Pleasanton for the purpose of removing gravel. The rental was based upon the amount of gravel removed, with a minimum rental of $300 a month.

Between the land leased and the county road running between Pleasanton and Livermore was a strip of land owned by Remillard Brick Company which was not included in the lease. Without permission or right, respondents removed or caused to be removed from this strip a quantity of gravel. The amount so removed is the sole question in dispute, both sides agreeing that the valuation of 25¢ per ton is fair.

The gravel was removed from two excavations, referred to as the East Pit and the West Pit. The West Pit was an excavation dug by Thompson. One end of it extended into the unleased strip. The East Pit was dug by one Armstrong and was entirely on the unleased strip. Armstrong removed gravel only from the East Pit, under an agreement with Thompson to pay him for it according to the tonnage removed. Armstrong testified that he removed approximately 18,000 tons from the East Pit. Two invoices from Thompson to Armstrong for 7,514.5 tons and 10,599.4 tons, respectively, were admitted in evidence and Armstrong testified that these covered all of the gravel removed by him from the unleased property. It was on this basis that the trial court, computing the offset at 25¢ per ton, reached the figure of $4,528.72, a mathematical error of 24 cents.

Armstrong was also questioned about two other invoices for 775.95 tons and 274.80 tons, respectively, but he stated that the gravel covered by these invoices was not taken from the unleased property. As against this, appellants produced a civil engineer who made certain calculations from the size of the two excavations and concluded that a much larger quantity of gravel must have been removed than that acknowledged by Armstrong and Thompson. However, this merely presented a question of fact to be determined by the trial judge, who quite evidently believed Thompson and Armstrong as to the amount removed by them from the East Pit.

[1,2] It must be kept in mind that appellants had the burden of proving their offset and that their case depended largely upon the testimony of the civil engineer, of whom the trial judge said: "I frankly can't give that young man's testimony much weight, because he was so indefinite."

Armstrong did not remove any gravel from the West Pit but it appears that Thompson did. However, the trial court made no allowance to appellants for this. Respondents assert that this was proper because any claim that appellants had was settled and satisfied by the deeding of a piece of land in Hillsborough to appellants. Respondent Thompson testified as follows: "I wasn't positive, but what my foreman might have encroached on her line a little but [bit], taken a little bit out of there, but I didn't go to the expense of having a survey made." Accordingly, he stated that he told appellant Dandini: "'Well, if you think for a minute that I have taken any gravel out of there, or I owe anything, I will be glad to donate this piece of property to you, in payment for anything you think I might have, might have taken,' because, I said, 'the property runs along Remillard Drive and is too small for a lot and too shallow.'" He testified further: "I gave it to her, and she accepted it, and I thought that was the end of it, and it was for quite a time afterwards." The property deeded was approximately 100 feet in length and adjoined other property owned by appellants. There was no testimony as to its value. Appellant Dandini did not deny that respondent Thompson made the offer of settlement and she admitted that she accepted the deed. Her version is somewhat equivocal, as will appear from the following:

"Mr. Kleefisch [counsel for respondents]: Isn't it a fact that Mr. Thompson, at about that time, had a conversation with you, and stated to you that, because you had some idea that he had taken some of your gravel, if you wouldn't consider accepting that piece of property and calling it quits between you?

"The Witness: Well, I never agreed to it. He might have offered it, but I never agreed to it. * * *

"Q. You recorded the deed? A. Because I really didn't care."

Under this state of the record, the trial court was justified in concluding that any claim as to the West Pit was settled and satisfied by the execution, delivery and acceptance of the deed.

The judgment is affirmed.

Division 3, California.

Rehearing Denied Nov. 14, 1956.

Hearing Denied Dec. 19, 1956.

Action to revoke probate of will. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Kurtz Kauffman, J., entered judgment revoking probate of will and proponent appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Shinn, P. J., held that where proponent's appeal from judgment revoking probate of will was based on claim that findings of undue influence were without substantial support in evidence and proponent's brief contained statements of evidence favorable to proponent and completely ignored evidence adverse to proponent, brief was flagrant violation of settled practice in reviewing courts.

Affirmed.

1. Appeal and Error §757(3)

On proponent's appeal from judgment revoking probate of will, in advancing contention that evidence and inferences most favorable to contestants did not furnish substantial support for findings of exercise of undue influence by proponent, it was incumbent upon proponent to point out claimed weakness of evidence which necessitated a fair statement of evidence either in brief or in a supplement.

2. Appeal and Error §757(3)

Where proponent's appeal from judgment revoking probate of will was based on claim that findings of exercise of undue influence were without substantial support in evidence and proponent's brief contained statements of evidence favorable to proponent and completely ignored evidence adverse to proponent, brief was flagrant violation of settled practice in reviewing courts.

3. Appeal and Error §1010(1)

A claim of insufficiency of evidence to justify findings, consisting of mere assertion without fair statement of evidence, is entitled to no consideration, when it is apparent that a substantial amount of evidence was received on behalf of respondents.

4. Appeal and Error §758(3)

An appellant is not permitted to evade or shift his responsibility by brief which is mere challenge to respondents to prove that court was right and which is an attempt to place upon reviewing court burden of discovering any weakness in argument of respondents.

5. Appeal and Error §757(3)

When an appellant makes an obviously one sided and unfair statement of evidence which he claims to be insufficient to support findings, court will not make an independent study of record.

6. Wills §166(1)

In action to revoke will, evidence was sufficient to justify a finding that proponent accomplished execution of will through and by means of exercise of undue influence.

7. Wills §314

Where contestants did not deny that they understood that depositions to be taken were those of husband and wife who were friends of testatrix and contestants did not assert that they were unaware of fact that wife was known by given name used by proponent in applying for commission and did not suggest that they were misled by use of wrong name, deposition of wife was improperly excluded on ground that it was not deposition of person named in commission.

8. Appeal and Error §1026

A litigant should not be penalized for mere error of procedure which misled or harmed no one.

9. Appeal and Error ⇨1039(13)

Variances between pleading and proof are to be disregarded unless they mislead adverse party to its prejudice. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 469.

10. Action ⇨66
Pleading ⇨400

Errors and defects in pleadings and proceedings which do not affect the substantial rights of parties must be disregarded in every stage of the action. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 475.

11. Wills ⇨400

Where deposition of husband in action to revoke will was far more comprehensive and explicit than was deposition of wife and deposition of wife was but a repetition of some statements of husband, error in excluding wife's deposition was not prejudicial. West's Ann.Code Civ. Proc., § 475.

SHINN, Presiding Justice.

Loreen E. Palmer was the surviving wife of Norman L. McBride. On or about November 16, 1947, she went to Yuma with Herbert A. Palmer where she was married to him. She died December 8, 1949, at the age of 58. On July 23, 1948, she executed a will in which she made certain bequests to her mother, Elizabeth Thornton Bernin, to Katharine Ann McBride, and to Hugh Kingsbury, and the remainder of her estate she left to trustees for the support and maintenance of her mother during her lifetime. Upon the death of the mother the trust was to terminate and the corpus remaining was to go to Katharine Ann McBride, Deanna McBride and Norman L. McBride, III (erroneously mentioned in the will as Norman L. McBride, Jr.), grandchildren of the deceased husband. There was also a bequest of $4,000 of the trust estate to be used upon certain conditions for the education of a nephew of the deceased husband of testatrix. Elizabeth Thornton Bernin predeceased testatrix and the three McBride children first named claim the interests which they were to receive under the will. The 1948 will recited: "Fourth: I am intentionally making no provision in this my Will for my husband Herbert A. Palmer, for the reason that all of the property comprising my estate is my separate property, the same having been acquired prior to my marriage to Herbert A. Palmer." Mrs. Palmer made another will September 30, 1949. It recited that she had no children of her own. She left three paintings to Hugh Kingsbury, another painting to Mrs. Oreena O'Neill, an emerald ring to Katharine Ann McBride and the remainder of her estate to her husband provided that if he failed to survive her by 180 days the same was to go to Katharine, Deanna and Norman McBride III; if Herbert A. Palmer and said children did not survive distribution, the estate was to go to the daughters of Herbert A. Palmer, residents of Pleasantville, New York. The will contained a clause disinheriting any beneficiary who might oppose the will. Herbert A. Palmer was named as executor to act without bond. Upon his petition the will was admitted to probate and he was appointed executor. Katharine, Deanna and Norman III filed a petition to revoke the will. They allege (1) nonexecution; (2) incompetency of testatrix; (3) the exercise of undue influence by Herbert A. Palmer through advantage taken of his confidential relationship toward decedent; (4) the actual exertion of undue influence upon testatrix by Herbert A. Palmer; (5) the making of false accusations and representations to testatrix by said Palmer concerning the contestants by which she was induced to execute a will in his favor to the exclusion of contestants. Herbert A. Palmer answered. The action was tried to the court; findings were against the contestants except as to the third and fourth grounds of contest. The court found that a confidential relationship existed between testatrix and Herbert A. Palmer; that he unduly profited by the will of September 30, 1949, was active in its preparation, that he solicited the execution of the document, took advantage of the illness from which his wife was suffering, dominated her mind and will so as to bring about its execution and that but for the conduct of said Herbert A. Palmer she would not have executed the will. Judgment was entered revoking probate of the will. Herbert A. Palmer appeals.

We shall discuss the grounds of appeal in order.

The first ground is "There is no evidence of undue influence at the time the will was executed"; the second ground "Circumstantial evidence which might raise a suspicion is insufficient to prove undue influence"; the third ground "Contestant's evidence establishes there was no confidential relationship between testatrix and proponent"; the fourth "The evidence does not support the finding that a confidential relationship existed between Herbert A. Palmer and Loreen E. Palmer" and the fifth "Appellant has exerted no pressure to overpower the will of testatrix." Other points will be discussed separately. The foregoing five grounds of appeal add up to a claim that the findings of the exercise of undue influence are without substantial support in the evidence.

[1-5] The opening brief of appellant contains what is captioned "Statement of Facts." It consists of nine pages devoted exclusively to a statement of the evidence that was favorable to appellant. It completely ignores the evidence that was adverse to him and favorable to the respondents. Ten witnesses testified on behalf of respondents. Their testimony covers some 360 pages or considerably more than half of the reporter's transcript. In advancing the contention that the evidence and the inferences most favorable to respondents did not furnish substantial support for the findings of the exercise of undue influence by appellant, it was incumbent upon appellant to point out the claimed weakness of the evidence which, of course, necessitated a fair statement of it either in the brief or in a supplement. Appellant has made no attempt to do this. He has done little more than relate the testimony of the attorneys who prepared the will and the circumstances of its execution, although he has incorporated statements laudatory of himself and assertions disparaging of contestants. In his reply brief we find the following statement: "Appellant has heretofore refrained from commenting on the unsubstantial character of the mass of respondents' hearsay and irrelevant testimony which is contrary to documentary evidence, and testimony which was introduced by means of eliciting affirmative answers to leading questions propounded by Respondent's attorney. The unsubstantial character of respondents' evidence; the theory urged and adopted by the trial court for its admission; its misuse by respondents, and errors committed by the trial court furnish separate and cumulative grounds for reversal of the judgment." The presentation made by appellant is in flagrant violation of settled practice in the reviewing courts. A claim of insufficiency of the evidence to justify findings, consisting of mere assertion without a fair statement of the evidence, is entitled to no consideration, when it is apparent, as it is here, that a substantial amount of evidence was received on behalf of the respondents. Instead of a fair and sincere effort to show that the trial court was wrong, appellant's brief is a mere challenge to respondents to prove that the court was right. And it is an attempt to place upon the court the burden of discovering without assistance from appellant any weakness in the arguments of the respondents. An appellant is not permitted to evade or shift his responsibility in this manner. We repeat a statement we made in Goldring v. Goldring, 94 Cal.App.2d 643, 645, 211 P.2d 342, 344: "* * * [w]e do now give notice that henceforth it will be the practice of this court to disregard claims of insufficiency of the evidence even though that be the only ground of appeal, where the appellant has failed to make a satisfactory statement in the opening brief, or a supplement thereto, of the evidence claimed to be insufficient, with transcript references. Counsel who ignore the rule may expect affirmation of the judgment or order appealed from in proper cases." We have not held appellants to strict account where there has been an attempt, even though a poor one, to make a fair statement of the evidence, with transcript references, but this is not such a case. Where there is a finding of the use of undue influence which is challenged for insufficiency it is necessary that each member of this court should have a thorough knowledge of the material evidence. In what may be a close case the question is not one to be answered without a careful study of the entire evidence. Briefs are not a substitute for such a study, but without proper briefs, with appropriate transcript references, the work of the court is made more difficult. Time is a constant factor in the court's work. It is of concern to all litigants who are awaiting a hearing. We therefore take time to reaffirm our statement in the Goldring case, which we are applying here. When an appellant makes an obviously one-sided and unfair statement of the evidence which he claims to be insufficient to support the findings we shall not feel that we have a duty to make an independent study of the record. We must either adopt that course or tolerate practices which are contrary to first principles of appellate procedure and which place undue burdens upon the court.

[6] The next points urged by appellant are four in number and read as follows: "VI. Beneficiary's presence while will is being executed is not evidence of undue activity"; "VII. No presumption of undue influence arises from the facts that the later will is at variance with a previously expressed testamentary intention"; "VIII. Appellant is the natural object of testatrix' bounty"; "IX. Appellant does not unduly profit by the will admitted to probate." The brief arguments made under these points contain only fragmentary references to the evidence touching a few isolated facts which it is argued were favorable to the appellant. None of these points is deserving of further attention. We therefore hold that the evidence was sufficient to justify the findings that appellant accomplished the execution of the will through and by means of the exercise of undue influence.

The next point, No. X, is that appellant's demurrer to the third cause of action of the contest should have been sustained for the reason that it did not contain sufficient facts to state a cause of action for undue influence. This demurrer was by motion to exclude evidence under the third cause of action. The third cause of action purported to allege the existence of a confidential relationship between testatrix and appellant, activity on the part of appellant in the preparation of the will and domination of testatrix in the procurement of its execution. It is unimportant whether the facts alleged were sufficient. The fourth cause of action elaborated upon the allegations of undue influence. Appellant evidently deemed them to be sufficient, since his demurrer was not addressed to that cause of action. His brief does not undertake to show insufficiency of the facts therein alleged.

[7-10] The final point is that the court committed error in excluding the deposition of Racheline Tolman taken on behalf of appellant. Mrs. Tolman and Norman Halstead Tolman were residing in Anchorage, Alaska. Under due proceedings had a commission issued to take the deposition of Norman Tolman and Helen Tolman upon oral interrogatories. The depositions were taken, the questions being propounded by appellant's attorney, no one appearing on behalf of respondents. When Mrs. Tolman was sworn she stated that her name was Racheline Tolman and that she was the wife of Norman H. Tolman. She also answered that she was the same person whose name was inadvertently written as Helen Tolman. Upon objection of respondents that the deposition was not that of Helen Tolman it was excluded. The circumstances indicated that Racheline was sometimes called Helen. It is evident that appellant knew her as Helen or he would not have made use of that name in applying for the commission. It appeared in the deposition of Mr. Tolman that for 18 months he and his wife had lived in a house in the rear of the Palmers' home. Respondents undoubtedly knew that it was appellant's intention to take the deposition of the Tolmans who had been tenants of Mrs. Palmer and that these were Norman Tolman and his wife who had moved to Anchorage and were living there. In his deposition Mr. Tolman made frequent references to his wife. Although the commission named Mrs. Tolman as Helen she appeared at the appointed time and gave her deposition. She evidently knew she was the person whose deposition was to be taken and that "Helen" was not some other person. So far as appears there was no other Helen Tolman. In urging their objections to the deposition respondents did not deny that they understood that the depositions were to be those of the Mr. and Mrs. Tolman who were friends of Mrs. Palmer. They did not assert that they were unaware of the fact that Mrs. Tolman was known as Helen and that she was the wife of Norman Tolman. Nor did they pretend that the person who gave the deposition was some one other than the person whose deposition they expected would be taken. They did not even suggest that they had been deceived or misled in any way. Under these circumstances the objection was without merit. It should have been overruled. In the law pertaining to court procedure, or in its traditional administration in our own jurisdiction, there is nothing to be found that would give authority to a court to penalize a litigant for a mere error of procedure which misled or harmed no one. Even variances between pleading and proof are to be disregarded unless they mislead the adverse party to his prejudice. Code Civ. Proc., § 469. Errors and defects in pleadings and proceedings which do not affect the substantial rights of the parties must be disregarded "in every stage of the action" Code Civ. Proc., § 475. Contrary to the uninformed assertions of some critics of current procedure, courts consistently place substance above form and are guided in their decisions by considerations of common sense, justice and fair play, uninfluenced by frivolous technicalities. The trial court based its ruling upon the case of Smith v. Westerfield, 88 Cal. 374, 26 P. 206. In material respects the case was factually different. The parties who successfully objected to a deposition of James M. Thompson taken under a commission to take the deposition of Jno. Thompson had no knowledge or information that they were one and the same person; the names indicated they were different persons; the objectors had no reason to believe their adversaries were taking the deposition of the person who actually gave it. To this extent they were deceived. The facts of the case at bar which we have related are the opposite of those of the cited case in these important particulars.

[11] The error in excluding the deposition was not prejudicial. The deposition of Mr. Tolman was read in evidence. It was far more comprehensive and explicit than was the deposition of Racheline. The latter touched upon the observations of the witness as to Mrs. Palmer's mental condition, statements that she intended to make another will in favor of appellant, that she was clear-headed and competent to make a will, that she was fond of children, and similar matters. Mr. Tolman's deposition comprises 22 pages of the reporter's transcript; that of Mrs. Tolman covers 6 pages. It was but a repetition of some of the statements of Mr. Tolman. The court believed that during the time she was under observation by the Tolmans, Mrs. Palmer was clear-headed, intelligent and competent. The court so stated during the reading of Mr. Tolman's deposition, but also stated that while the facts related by Mr. Tolman had a bearing upon the state of mind of testatrix they had only a remote, if any, bearing upon the question of undue influence. We are convinced that had the deposition of Mrs. Tolman been received in evidence the court's factual conclusions would have been the same.

The judgment is affirmed.

v.

Chris COSTA, a/k/a Chris Costo, Defendant and Appellant.

Cr. 2649.

District Court of Appeal, Third District,
 California.

Oct. 25, 1956.

Rehearing Denied Nov. 5, 1956.

Defendant was convicted of robbery in the second degree. The Superior Court, Madera County, Stanley Murray, J., entered an order denying motion for new trial and judgment on the verdict, and defendant appeals. The District Court of Appeal, Van Dyke, P. J., held, inter alia, that denial of request for a continuance made by defendant at outset of trial to enable him to make a substitution of attorneys was not reversible error, in absence of showing of prejudice.

Judgment and order affirmed.

1. Criminal Law ☞589(1)

The granting or refusal of request for a continuance made by defendant at outset of trial to enable him to make a substitution of attorneys rested within the discretion of trial court.

2. Criminal Law ☞1166(8)

Where defendant was represented by counsel whom he had selected and retained and had made one substitution of attorneys prior to trial, denial of request for a continuance made by defendant at outset of trial to enable him to make another substitution of attorneys was not reversible error, in absence of showing of prejudice.

3. Criminal Law ☞720(8)

In prosecution for robbery, district attorney was entitled to mention in argument to jury articles concerning the possession of which at time and scene of robbery witnesses had testified, though such articles had not been received in evidence.

4. Criminal Law ☞721(1)

Comment by district attorney in argument to jury upon failure of defendant to testify in prosecution for robbery was proper.

5. Criminal Law ☞1171(6)

In prosecution for robbery, reference to defendant in district attorney's argument to jury as a "raffish cur" with the "courage of a jackal" was improper but did not constitute prejudicial error, in view of the evidence of guilt.

6. Criminal Law ☞1120(1), 1122(1)

Record on appeal from conviction for second degree robbery did not disclose error in rulings on admissibility of evidence or in instructions given jury.

C. K. Curtright, Sacramento, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., by Doris H. Maier and J. M. Sanderson, Deputy Attys. Gen., for respondent.

VAN DYKE, Presiding Justice.

This is an appeal from an order denying a motion for a new trial and from a judgment entered upon the jury's verdict which found appellant guilty of robbery in the second degree.

After appellant filed his opening brief in propria persona, this court upon his application appointed an experienced and able member of the Bar to represent him on appeal. Counsel so appointed thereafter advised appellant and this court that a thorough examination of the record and a research of the law in relation to the facts disclosed no meritorious grounds of appeal. Upon appellant's request counsel so appointed was relieved of his assignment, and appellant was permitted to file a closing brief.

After reviewing the entire record and considering the contentions made by appellant, we are in complete agreement with counsel's conclusion that there is no meritorious ground of appeal in this case.

Appellant was arrested shortly after a passerby saw him fleeing from the scene of the robbery. At that time and at his trial he was positively identified by the victim as the person who forcibly took from his person a wallet which contained $16.44. The evidence need not be detailed, as appellant concedes that it is sufficient to support the jury's finding that he was guilty of the crime charged. His contentions are that he was denied his constitutional rights and deprived of a fair and impartial trial due to errors of the trial court and prejudicial misconduct of the district attorney. These contentions cannot be sustained.

[1,2] At all stages of the proceedings appellant was represented by counsel whom he had selected and retained. However, he claims that he was denied the right to counsel of his choice by reason of the fact that the trial court refused a request for a continuance to enable appellant to make a substitution of attorneys. The request was made at the outset of the trial, and the granting or denial thereof rested within the discretion of the trial court. In the absence of a showing of prejudice, and he makes none, the ruling complained of cannot serve as the basis for reversal of the judgment. People v. Shaw, 46 Cal.App.2d 768, 773-775, 117 P.2d 34. It appears that appellant prior to the time of trial had made one substitution of attorneys. In People v. Head, 9 Cal.App.2d 647, 650, 50 P.2d 832, 833, it was stated:

"* * * The right to change counsel at any time is a right that is to be reasonably exercised, and there is nothing in the record before us which shows any prejudice to the appellant by the refusal of the court to allow a substitution of attorneys, * * *."

[3-5] Appellant asserts that the district attorney was guilty of prejudicial misconduct in that during argument he mentioned articles which had not themselves been received in evidence. It appears that witnesses had testified to the possession of these same articles at the time and at the scene of the robbery. Therefore, the prosecuting attorney was entitled to mention them in argument. Appellant also assigns as misconduct the district attorney's commenting upon his failure to testify. Such comment was proper. People v. Sutic, 41 Cal.2d 483, 496-497, 261 P.2d 241. During argument the district attorney referred to the defendant as a "raffish cur" with the "courage of a jackal". Such argument indicates a lack of confidence in the strength of the cause being argued and in the intelligence of the jurors to whom the argument is addressed. We do not condone it, but we think that prejudice cannot be ascribed to the prosecuting attorney's misconduct, basing our ruling on the strength of the evidence of appellant's guilt and a higher respect for the intelligence of the jurors than the prosecuting attorney apparently had.

[6] Appellant assigns as error a number of rulings overruling objections to evidence and also claims misinstruction of the jury. It is unnecessary to discuss these assignments in detail. It is sufficient to say that they are not borne out by the record.

The judgment and the order appealed from are affirmed.

Frances HOLGUIN, Defendant and Appellant.

Cr. 5708.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California.

Oct. 30, 1956.

Rehearing Denied Nov. 9, 1956.

Hearing Denied Nov. 28, 1956.

Defendant was convicted of unlawful possession of heroin. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Louis H. Burke, J., entered judgment, and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Fourth, J., held that where police officers received information from one of their confidential

informers that there was a girl peddling heroin out of a certain cafe, that the girl was wearing a brown sweater and levis, that she had the appearance of a boy, and that she was called "Frankie," and officers went to the cafe where they found defendant dressed in a brown sweater and levis and otherwise fitting the description given by the informer, and defendant stated that she was called "Frankie", officers had reasonable cause for believing that defendant had committed a felony, and that therefore arrest, allegedly without a warrant, was valid.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Criminal Law ☞394

Defendant makes a prima facie case of unlawful arrest when he establishes that the arrest was made without a warrant, and burden then rests on the prosecution to show proper justification.

2. Criminal Law ☞1141(2)

Error will not be presumed on appeal.

3. Criminal Law ☞322

In absence of evidence to the contrary, it must be presumed that arresting officers regularly and lawfully performed their duties. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 1963, subds. 1, 15, 33.

4. Criminal Law ☞322

Where record of prosecution for unlawful possession of heroin did not disclose that officers, who arrested defendant, did so without a warrant, and defendant did not raise in the trial court the question whether the officers had a warrant for her arrest, the District Court of Appeal on appeal would presume that the arresting officers regularly and lawfully performed their duties. West's Ann.Health & Safety Code, § 11500.

5. Arrest ☞63(4)

Where police officers received information from one of their confidential informers that there was a girl peddling heroin out of a certain cafe, that the girl was wearing a brown sweater and levis, that she had the appearance of a boy, and that she was called "Frankie," and officers went to the cafe where they found defendant dressed in a brown sweater and levis and otherwise fitting the description given by the informer, and defendant stated that she was called "Frankie", officers had reasonable cause for believing that defendant had committed a felony, and therefore arrest, allegedly without a warrant, was valid. West's Ann.Health & Safety Code, § 11500; West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 836, subd. 3.

Gladys Towles Root, Eugene V. McPherson, Los Angeles, Joseph A. Armstrong, Bell Gardens, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Norman H. Sokolow, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

FOURT, Justice.

In an information defendant was charged with violation of section 11500 of the Health and Safety Code, a felony in that on or about October 26, 1955, in the County of Los Angeles, she unlawfully had heroin in her possession. Trial by jury was waived. The People offered oral and physical evidence. The defendant presented no witnesses. The court found the defendant guilty as charged and sentenced her to a term of imprisonment in the California Institution for Women. This appeal is from the judgment.

A resume of the facts is as follows: Before noon, on October 26, 1955, the officers of the Police Narcotics Division received information from one of their confidential informers that there was a girl peddling heroin by the capsule out of the Tip Top Cafe on south Main Street in Los Angeles. The informer said the girl was wearing a brown sweater and levis, that she had the appearance of a boy, and that they called her "Frankie". About noon, on October 26, 1955, acting on the information, Officers McDermott and Pilkington proceeded to the cafe where they saw the defendant dressed in a brown sweater and levis, and otherwise fitting the description which they had received. They asked her if she was called Frankie, and she stated she was. She was placed under arrest, put in a police car and driven to the parking lot of the Police Administration Building. While at the parking lot, the police asked her to empty her pockets. She thereupon reached into her right pocket and produced a capsule wrapped in cellophane. The next day a chemist analyzed the capsule and found that it contained heroin.

[1] Appellant contends that the arrest was unlawful and therefore, the search incident to the arrest was unlawful and unreasonable, and the evidence obtained therefrom should have been excluded. Appellant claims that since the People introduced evidence tending to show the reasonableness of the search and seizure, the officers are precluded from relying on the presumption that they acted legally. It is true, as stated in Badillo v. Superior Court, 46 Cal.2d 269, 294 P.2d 23, 25: “* * * the defendant makes a prima facie case when he establishes that an arrest was made without a warrant * * *, and the burden then rests on the prosecution to show proper justification.” However, in the case before us a reading of the record does not disclose that the officers made the arrest without a warrant. The question of whether the officers had a warrant was never asked, nor raised in the trial court. Appellant had ample opportunity to make the simple inquiry, but she apparently chose not to do so.

[2-4] As was said in People v. Farrara, 46 Cal.2d 265, 294 P.2d 21, 23, “to reverse the judgment it would be necessary to presume that the officers acted illegally and that the trial court erred in admitting the evidence so obtained. It is settled, however, that error will not be presumed on appeal [citing cases], and in the absence of evidence to the contrary it must also be presumed that the officers regularly and lawfully performed their duties. Code Civ. Proc. § 1963 (1, 15, 33); [citing cases].” And as stated in People v. Citrino, 46 Cal. 2d 284, 294 P.2d 32, 34, “The record, however, is silent as to whether the officers had a search warrant, and in the absence of any evidence showing the illegality of the search, we must presume that the officers regularly and lawfully performed their duties.” We believe that the presumptions above set forth apply under the facts of this particular case.

[5] The People contend that even if the appellant had made the necessary prima facie showing that the officers arrested her without a warrant, the officers had reasonable cause for believing that the appellant had committed a felony, and therefore the arrest was valid as being within the scope of Penal Code, section 836, subd. 3. The appearance of the appellant at the bar coincided exactly with the description given by the informer, and that, in and of itself, was some evidence of the reliability of the information provided by the informer. In Willson v. Superior Court, 46 Cal.2d 291, 294 P.2d 36, the identity of the informer was unknown, and the police had no previous experience with him to indicate that his information was reliable. The information given to the police was that a large book-making operation was in progress in a certain bar; that a certain waitress would be found standing near the telephone, and she took bets from customers. When the police arrived they found the circumstances to be precisely as the informer had described them. The waitress was standing by a pad and pencil and had slips of paper in her hand. When asked what was in her hand, she sought to conceal it. The court, in deciding the case, among other things, said, 46 Cal.2d at page 295, 294 P.2d at page 39:

“Although petitioner’s conduct observed by Officer Sunday in the bar would not of itself constitute reasonable cause to believe she was committing a felony, it was sufficient to justify Officer Sunday’s reliance on the information given her of petitioner’s book-making. Under these circumstances the evidence before the magistrate was sufficient to justify the conclusion * * * that Officer Sunday had reasonable cause before the search and seizure to believe that petitioner was guilty thereof, and that therefore the search, seizure, and arrest were lawful.”

In the case before us the informer was not an unknown or mere anonymous "tipster", but, as the officer testified, was a "confidential informer of ours (the police)".

The situation confronting the police reasonably appeared to be one which required immediate action. Appellant was apparently a visitor at a public bar, and the prospects of her not being there in a few hours, or when the police arrived, was great.

In our opinion the record justifies the presumption that the officers were acting lawfully in the performance of their duty, and in any event, there was reasonable cause for the officers to believe the appellant had committed a felony.

The judgment is affirmed.

Action upon open book account for cost of meat sold to a restaurant allegedly owned by defendant. The Superior Court, San Joaquin County, George F. Buck, J., entered judgment for sellers and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Peek, J., held that evidence, including testimony that a sales tax permit for restaurant, and an on-sale liquor license for an adjoining tavern were in defendant's name, was sufficient to support a finding that defendant was the principal and owner of the restaurant and had merely delegated duties of management and operation to an agent who had purchased the meat.

PEEK, Justice.

This is an appeal from a judgment in an action upon an open book account for the cost of meat sold by plaintiffs to defendant.

For many years the defendant Kiernan owned and operated a bar in Stockton called the Tavern. It was located in the same building and immediately adjoining a restaurant commonly known during the period here in question as the Tavern Waffle Shop. A doorway at the rear of the building connected the kitchen of the restaurant with the bar, through which food was served to both establishments. Kiernan had never personally operated the restaurant, but he did own the furniture and equipment. The state sales tax permit for the restaurant and bar was in his name, and the on-sale liquor license was also in his name. He was billed directly for the utilities for both businesses. In 1951 a Mr. Hemley took over the operation of the restaurant, paying the former operators for the merchandise and stock on hand and agreeing with defendant to pay him 5% of the gross receipts of the restaurant. In addition, Hemley agreed to pay Kiernan the sales tax and utility costs relating to the operation of the restaurant. Thereafter these amounts were computed monthly and paid to Kiernan, who in turn made payment to the State and to the concerns furnishing the utility services. One of plaintiffs' salesmen solicited and obtained the meat account of the Tavern Waffle Shop from Hemley. The defendant did not participate in this transaction and he was never billed nor did he ever pay for meat supplied to the restaurant. Hemley made all payments on the account from his own funds. In the early part of June, 1952, approximately one year after credit was first extended, the credit manager for plaintiffs investigated and ascertained that the sales tax permit for both the restaurant and bar, as well as the on-sale liquor license, stood in the name of defendant. At that time the balance of the account was in the sum of $2,189.22. Plaintiffs made no attempt to contact defendant in regard to the outstanding balance and continued to extend credit in excess of $10,000. In the latter part of 1954, Hemley vacated the restaurant premises on demand of defendant because of his failure to pay defendant the agreed 5% of the gross receipts of the restaurant. At the suggestion of Kiernan some creditors retook merchandise sold to Hemley and did not look to defendant for payment of the balance owing on the accounts carried in Hemley's name.

Thereafter plaintiffs brought action against defendant for the sum of $3,359.01, the balance then due on the account. The complaint alleged, and the trial court found, that the defendant was doing business under the fictitious firm name and style of Tavern Waffle Shop. The case was tried on that theory, and the court impliedly found that Hemley incurred the indebtedness to plaintiffs as the agent of defendant. It is defendant's contention that since he did not manage or supervise the operation of the restaurant, or hire, fire or pay its employees, and since he was not authorized to sign checks drawn on its commercial account, there was an insufficiency of evidence to support the implied finding of agency; and the fact that the sales tax permit and on-sale license were at all times in Kiernan's name was insufficient to support a finding that he was the principal and owner of the restaurant.

[1-3] We cannot agree with defendant's contention. The evidence introduced supports the implied finding of agency. It is true, as noted by defendant, "Agency is a fact, the burden of proving which rests upon the party affirming its existence." Ewing v. Hayward, 50 Cal.App. 708, 715, 195 P. 970, 974. But it is also true, as stated in Imperial Valley Box Co. v. Reese, 105 Cal.App.2d 401, 403, 233 P.2d 629, 630, "The general rule is well settled that where one deals with another whom he believes to be the principal, but subsequently learns that the other was an agent of an undisclosed principal, he may recover from either." Here the record amply supports the inference that Kiernan had delegated to Hemley the duties of management and operation of the restaurant. How those duties were to be carried out is wholly immaterial under the circumstances. Again, here as in the Ewing case there was no intervening circumstances such as was present in Rigney v. De La Salle Institute, 10 Cal.App.2d 492, 52 P.2d 579, which would warrant a conclusion by this court that credit had been extended exclusively to Hemley, and it is only by such a circumstance that the defendant can escape liability under the general rule previously set forth.

The judgment is affirmed.

Civ. 17215.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 2, California.

Oct. 25, 1956.

Action on a surety bond, filed by a real estate broker, to recover damages allegedly sustained by prospective buyer because of failure of broker to close the escrow with result that seller rescinded agreement. The Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, Frank T. Deasy, J., sustained demurrer to amended complaint and, on buyer's failure to amend, dismissed complaint and buyer appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Draper, J. pro tem., held that to charge the surety buyer must show that claims arose when the bond was in effect.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Appeal and Error ⇨854(3)

Where plaintiff declined to amend complaint, although granted leave to do so, he was required to stand upon his pleadings as against all grounds of demurrer and if complaint was vulnerable to any of grounds stated in demurrer, judgment based on order sustaining demurrer could not be disturbed.

2. Brokers ⇨4

To charge surety on broker's bond, it was essential for prospective buyer to show that claim based on broker's alleged failure to properly close escrow with result that seller rescinded agreement arose during time bond was in effect.

3. Brokers ⇨4

Where bond furnished by real estate broker was not retroactive by its terms, retroactive effect was not to be implied.

4. Brokers ⇨4

Where prospective buyer's complaint against surety on real estate broker's bond alleged that buyer had delivered $3,000 to broker as buyer's agent but did not allege purpose or on what conditions money was delivered to broker and alleged that by reason of the broker's failure to obey instructions to close escrow seller rescinded agreement but did not allege what acts if any the broker did during time bond was in force which resulted in any loss to buyer and did not allege whether the contract employing broker was oral or written, the complaint did not state a cause of action against surety. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 430, subd. 10.

5. Pleading ⇨34(4)

Plaintiff's failure to amend complaint compelled conclusion that allegations to eliminate uncertainties of his pleading would be adverse to him.

John E. Troxel, San Francisco, for appellant.

Thomas E. Davis, San Francisco, for respondent.

DRAPER, Justice pro tem.

Defendant United Pacific Insurance Company demurred generally and specially to the amended complaint. The demurrer was sustained with leave to amend. The order sustaining the demurrer did not specify the grounds upon which the court based its ruling. Plaintiff declined to amend and, after notice, judgment of dismissal was entered. Plaintiff appeals.

Respondent was the surety upon a bond filed by defendant Glissman, who is not a party to this appeal, as a real estate and business opportunity broker. This bond was not filed until March 7, 1955, although Glissman had acted as such a broker for some time before that date. It appears that the bond remained in effect about sixty days.

Appellant alleges that he employed Glissman in November of 1954 to locate and negotiate for the purchase of a bar and restaurant by appellant. On December 2 a seller had been found. Glissman prepared and appellant executed escrow instructions which provided that the escrow was to be closed and the purchase completed "after the issuance to plaintiff of an on-sale general liquor license." The signed instructions, with "several promissory notes in blank and various other documents" were delivered by appellant to a corporate escrow holder. "Plaintiff had, prior to * * * March 7, 1955, delivered the sum of Three thousand dollars ($3,000) to defendant Glissman * * * as plaintiff's agent."

The liquor license was issued to appellant "in February, 1955." It is then alleged that "on or about March 17, 1955" appellant instructed Glissman to deliver the $3,000 to the escrow holder and "to take the necessary steps to close the said escrow and complete the said purchase," and that Glissman "disobeyed" this instruction "and failed" to close the escrow or complete the sale. It is also alleged that "at a time unknown to plaintiff," but "subsequent to" an occurrence which apparently is the December 2 execution of the escrow instructions, Glissman "without authority" obtained from the escrow holder the "blank promissory notes" and "filled them in" for a "cumulative amount" of $11,500, $4,500 of which were made payable to the seller of the business and were delivered to the seller by Glissman "on or about March 10." Appellant further alleges that "by reason of" Glissman's failure to obey instructions to close the escrow, the seller rescinded the agreement of purchase and sale. Damages claimed are the $3,000 paid to Glissman, $4,000 in bills incurred by appellant while operating the bar pending completion of the sale, attorney's fees, and $200 which appellant "was required" to pay to the seller "on account of" the promissory notes "filled in" and delivered by Glissman.

The foregoing summary involves a considerable rearrangement and simplification of the complaint and, confusing as it may seem, is, we think, more understandable and more favorable to appellant than the pleading itself.

Defendant surety demurred. In addition to the general demurrer, grounds of uncertainty, ambiguity and unintelligibility were specified. Among the stated grounds were the failure of the complaint to state what acts, if any, Glissman did after March 7 which resulted in any loss to plaintiff; whether Glissman had any monies belonging to plaintiff when the bond became effective; or whether plaintiff's contract employing Glissman was oral or written.

[1] Appellant declined to amend, although granted leave to do so. He must, then, stand upon his pleading as against all the grounds of demurrer. If the complaint is vulnerable to any of the grounds stated in the demurrer, the judgment must be affirmed. Metzenbaum v. Metzenbaum, 86 Cal.App.2d 750, 195 P.2d 492; Evarts v. Jones, 104 Cal.App.2d 109, 231 P.2d 74; Hendricks v. Osman, 72 Cal.App.2d 465, 164 P.2d 545.

[2, 3] There is room for grave doubt as to the sufficiency of the allegations to constitute a cause of action against respondent. Of course, a cause of action is stated against Glissman. But to charge respondent, it is essential for appellant to show that the claims arose during the short period after March 7 when the bond was in effect. The bond, which is pleaded in the amended complaint, is not retrospective by its terms, and the law is clear that retrospective effect is not to be implied. Anaheim U. W. Co. v. Parker, 101 Cal. 483, 35 P. 1048; Palmer v. Continental Casualty Co., 205 Cal. 34, 269 P. 638.

[4] In any event, it is clear that the special demurrer is well taken. The allegations as to the $3,000 do not show for what purpose or on what conditions the money was delivered to Glissman or whether it was delivered to him in his capacity as a real estate or business opportunity broker. If the payment were made to Glissman for use in this purchase, there is no allegation as to when, either under plaintiff's contract with Glissman or under the escrow instructions, it was to be paid into the escrow or to the seller. In view of the brevity of the effective period of the bond, these uncertainties become substantial. They are aggravated by the fact that appellant refused to allege whether his agreement with Glissman, upon which this action against Glissman's surety is founded, was oral or written. Code Civ. Proc., § 430, subd. 10. There is no direct allegation that Glissman was obligated to pay the money to the seller. If this obligation be assumed, there is no allegation as to the date it was to be performed. The allegation of demand upon Glissman on March 17 is not helpful, since there is nothing to show that Glissman's duty to pay arose at the time of demand. In this respect, the case is clearly distinguishable from Coover v. Cox, 95 Cal.App. 1, 272 P. 343, where a deposit receipt required payment only on demand. For all that appears here, performance may very well have been due, and the obligation breached, long before the bond became effective. There is ample room to infer that this is the fact, for issuance of the liquor license, which was the condition precedent to the sale and purchase, is alleged to have occurred well before execution of the bond.

All that is said above applies equally to the alleged misappropriation of the notes. As to these, there is the further fact that they are alleged to have been delivered to a corporate escrow holder, and there is nothing to show that Glissman acted under or used his broker's license to misappropriate them from that holder. Also, it is affirmatively alleged that they were "obtained" from the escrow-holder at a time unknown to plaintiff. The claimed loss resulting from appellant's operation of the business is attributable to Glissman only by reason of the latter's failure to close the escrow by payment of the money and proper delivery of the notes. Thus this claim falls if the allegations as to the money and notes are vulnerable to demurrer.

Appellant argues at length that he need not establish conversion in order to recover upon the bond. In this he may well be correct. The bond is conditioned upon Glissman's compliance with all obligations assumed by him under his real estate and business opportunity licenses. But, however broad may be the obligation of the surety as to the nature of the breach protected against, it is abundantly clear that the time of coverage is strictly limited. It is incumbent upon appellant to bring his claim within the period of the bond.

[5] Here he was given full opportunity to clear up the obvious uncertainties of his pleading. Many, if not all, of the facts sought by the special demurrer were clearly within his knowledge. Nonetheless he refused to amend. In such circumstances, it is by no means unfair to apply the rule that "Doubtful language in a pleading * * * will be construed against the pleader." 41 Am.Jur. 335. Appellant's failure to amend compels the conclusion that allegations to eliminate the uncertainties of his pleading would be adverse to him. The rule would be much different if the demurrer had been sustained without leave to amend. But here appellant was given every opportunity to cure the defects, and he alone must accept the consequences of his failure to do so.

Rehearing Denied Nov. 8, 1956.

Hearing Denied Nov. 21, 1956.

Defendant was convicted of illegal possession of heroin. Thereafter the defendant made motions to vacate the judgment. The Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, Orla St. Clair, J., entered orders denying the motions, and the defendant appealed, and motion was made to dismiss the appeal. The District Court of Appeal, Fred B. Wood, J., held that where defendant on the 59th day after filing of information objected to a continuance beyond the 60th day, but he did not follow up with the objection after the lapse of 60 days, and he participated throughout the trial proceedings, neither voicing any objection nor interposing a motion to dismiss after the lapse of 60 days, he waived his right to have the prosecution dismissed after the lapse of 60 days.

Orders affirmed and motion to dismiss appeal denied.

1. Criminal Law §1111(1)

On appeal by defendant from order denying his motion to vacate judgment of conviction, on ground that he was denied a speedy trial, absence of an entry showing good cause for continuance of the prosecution after 60 days from date of filing of information did not demonstrate absence of good cause. 2. Criminal Law §615

Provision of the Penal Code that court shall enter in its minutes the facts proved which require continuance is directory and not mandatory. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 1050.

3. Criminal Law §576(5)

Right of defendant to dismissal of prosecution, where he is not brought to trial within 60 days after filing of information, and constitutional right to a speedy trial may be waived. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 1382.

4. Criminal Law §576(5)

Where defendant on the 59th day after filing of information objected to a continuance beyond the 60th day, but he did not follow up with the objection after the lapse of 60 days, and he participated throughout the trial proceedings, neither voicing any objection nor interposing a motion to dismiss after the lapse of 60 days, he waived his right to have the prosecution dismissed after the lapse of 60 days. West's Ann.Pen.Code, §§ 1050, 1382.

5. Criminal Law §641

Mere fact that public defender who represented defendant did not assign defendant the same deputy at every stage of the prosecution, so that one deputy represented defendant at preliminary examination and until commencement of trial, and another deputy during the trial, and a third deputy after entry of judgment, did not show ineffective aid of counsel.

6. Criminal Law §998

Allegation of defendant, on motion to vacate judgment of conviction, that officers violated defendant's constitutional rights when they broke into apartment without a search warrant, and secured evidence to secure a conviction, was not a sufficient allegation, since the search and seizure may have been legal without a search warrant.

Wilfred J. Harpham, Albany, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Clarence A. Linn, Asst. Atty. Gen., William M. Bennett, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

FRED B. WOOD, Justice.

On June 3, 1954, judgment was entered against defendant Joseph Martinez¹ for illegal possession of heroin. He did not appeal.

On May 25, 1955, he filed and on June 17 the court denied a motion to vacate the judgment for the alleged reason that his rights to a speedy trial and to be brought to trial within 60 days of the filing of the information had been violated. On July 12, 1955, the court permitted the filing of an amendment (and then denied the amended motion) which presented the additional grounds that defendant's "court appointed" counsel (the public defender and his deputies) rendered him "ineffective assistance" at the trial, also that the arresting officers illegally seized evidence which should not have been presented in support of the charge against him. Defendant has appealed from each of these two orders of denial. We treat each appeal as effective. Neither party has suggested that the order allowing the amendment operated to vacate the first denial.

Defendant claims his motion is sanctioned by section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure (authority of a court to "set aside any void judgment or order"); his right of appeal, by section 1237 of the Penal Code (an "order made after judgment, affecting the substantial rights of the party").

The record² upon this appeal furnishes us nothing by which to consider the two additional points posed by the amendment to the motion. Nor does it appear that the judge who heard and decided the motion (one who had not presided at the trial) had a reporter's transcript or other record by which to consider and determine those two additional points.

Normally, in the absence of some exceptional factor or circumstance, none of the three points here presented would be available for consideration in such a proceeding as this, for they could have been considered upon an appeal from the judgment, if such an appeal had been taken.

Defendant contends that each of these three points presents an issue concerning the infraction of a fundamental constitutional right, a point which can be presented in a collateral proceeding. Even if so, an appropriate record must be made available for judicial consideration.

The clerk's transcript of the trial does show that defendant was not brought to trial within 60 days of the filing of the information. Specifically, the court's minutes show: (1) defendant made a motion to dismiss (grounds not stated) on the 7th day after the filing of the information; heard and denied on the 9th day, whereupon defendant pleaded "not guilty" and the cause was continued to the 38th day "with consent of counsel"; (2) on the 38th day the cause was continued to the 59th day, the record being silent as to whether defendant was present and consenting; (3) on the 59th day (defendants and their counsel being present) the court with consent of the district attorney continued the cause for trial to the 75th day, "said continuance being ordered over the objections of both defendants," and not a word as to whether good cause therefor was shown or proof offered or made that the ends of justice required a continuance or that any such question was presented to or considered by the court (see Penal Code, §§ 1382, and 1050); (4) the trial commenced on the 74th day and proceeded through three consecutive days, with no entry concerning consent or objection by the defendant except that upon the return of the jury's verdict "the court discharged the jury and the court with consent of counsel, continued the cause for judgment to" the 77th day; (5) on the 77th day this defendant made a motion for new trial and the

1. There were two defendants. The other defendant is not a party to this appeal.

2. It consists of the clerk's and the reporter's transcript of the hearing of the motions to vacate, and the clerk's transcript of the trial, from the filing of the information to and including the rendition of the judgment. There is no reporter's transcript of the trial.

court continued the cause to the 83rd day for the hearing of the motion and to a later date for a presentence report on the other defendant "with the consent of respective counsel"; and (6) on the 83rd day defendant's motion for new trial was denied and "the court with consent of counsel, ordered the cause continued for pre-sentence report to June 3rd, 1954," the 97th day, on which day judgment was rendered.

[1,2] If we were to consider only the record of what transpired on the 59th and the 74th days, it would appear that defendant was not brought to trial within 60 days after the filing of the information, and that the pivotal postponement was not made upon his application, indeed was made over his objection; and we might infer or conclude that no good cause was shown for not bringing him to trial within the 60 days and no proof was offered or made that the ends of justice required this continuance.³

[3,4] In such a case the trial court "must order the action to be dismissed". Pen.Code, § 1382. But the right of dismissal thus accorded a defendant, and the constitutional right to a speedy trial, may be waived. People v. Tenedor, supra, 107 Cal.App.2d 581, 583, 237 P.2d 679. Here, defendant's objecting, on the 59th day, to a continuance beyond the 60th day was a proper method of making his position known. A motion for dismissal on the 59th day would have been premature. But he should have followed it up after the lapse of 60 days. He did not do so. Thereafter, he participated throughout the trial proceedings, neither voicing any objection nor interposing a motion to dismiss. It is not the policy of the law to permit a person thus to keep his silence, take his chance on getting a favorable verdict and, if he loses, at some later time (perhaps after the statute of limitations has run) come in and void the judgment by raising a point which if timely raised would have allowed the filing of a new information before the running of the statute and while the state's witnesses were still available.

If any authorities need be cited, the following should suffice: People v. Newell, 192 Cal. 659, 669, 221 P. 622, application for dismissal for failure to bring to trial

3. Such an inference or conclusion may not be permissible.

It is true that the first sentence of Rule 52 of the Rules on Appeal declares that if the record does not contain all of the papers, records and oral proceedings but is certified by the judge or clerk or stipulated to by the parties "it shall be presumed in the absence of proceedings for augmentation that it includes all matters material to a determination of the points on appeal."

However, this is an appeal from an order denying a motion, not from the judgment of conviction; hence, the "reporter's transcript of the oral proceedings incident to the order appealed from", not that of the oral proceedings at the trial, would be a normal part of the record. Rule 34(1) (e) and 34(2). The reporter's transcript of the oral proceedings at the trial could become a part of this record as an exhibit "admitted in evidence at the proceedings incident to the order", Rule 34(3), but no such exhibit was introduced or considered at the hearing of the motion here involved.

Nor does the second sentence of Rule 52 seem to be of avail. It says that on an appeal on the judgment roll alone, or on a partial or complete clerk's transcript, the above mentioned presumption does not apply "unless the error claimed by appellant appears on the face of the record." Appellant herein invokes the clause just quoted, upon the theory that the absence of an entry showing good cause for the continuance demonstrates the absence of good cause "upon the face of the record."

That is a nonsequitur for two reasons: (1) this is not a judgment roll or any appeal from the judgment of conviction; and (2) the requirement that "the court shall enter in its minutes the facts proved which require the continuance" is made by section 1050 of the Penal Code and is directory, not mandatory, Ray v. Superior Court, 208 Cal. 357, 359, 281 P. 391; Zamloch, For and on Behalf of Cowan v. Municipal Court, 106 Cal.App.2d 260, 263, 235 P.2d 25 and cases there cited; People v. Tenedor, 107 Cal.App.2d 581, 583, 237 P.2d 679, so that the absence of such an entry would not necessarily show "no good cause" upon the face of the record.

within 60 days must be made in the trial court and if not made before the trial begins the right to dismiss is waived; Ex parte Apakean, 63 Cal.App. 438, 440, 218 P. 767, the court is under no duty to dismiss unless the defendant demands it, a motion for dismissal after the jury has been impanelled and sworn comes too late.

Defendant argues that an objection to a belated trial date is sufficient; that he need not also move to dismiss, to preserve his right. We need not decide that question, because defendant herein neither objected nor moved to dismiss after the expiration of the 60 days.

[5] The burden of defendant's complaint that he lacked effective aid of counsel during the trial, seems to stem from the fact that he was represented by the public defender who did not assign him the same deputy at every stage of the proceeding, i. e., that one deputy represented him at the preliminary examination and until the commencement of the trial; another deputy, during the trial; and a third deputy after entry of judgment. That of itself does not spell ineffective aid of counsel, in the absence of a record of the oral proceedings at the trial. We note, also, that in his amended motion defendant narrates occurrences during the trial which allegedly disturbed him concerning the manner in which his counsel was conducting it but he does not state or suggest that he indicated to any of the deputies assigned him, or to the court, that he desired a different deputy or other counsel to represent him.

[6] As to the alleged illegal seizure of evidence used against him, his amended motion merely states that the officers violated his constitutional rights "when they broke into the apartment, without a search warrant, and secured evidence to secure a conviction." That is not a sufficient allegation. The search and seizure may have been legal without a search warrant. Moreover, we are dealing here with a rule of evidence which was changed after the judgment became final. Also, an error, if any, in the admission of evidence might render a judgment irregular and thus voidable upon appeal; not void and subject to collateral attack. We are mindful of the holding that the rule against the admissibility of evidence will not be reviewed in the absence of a proper objection in the trial court, is not applicable to appeals based on the admission of illegally obtained evidence in cases tried before the decision in the Cahan case, People v. Kitchens, 46 Cal.2d 260, 294 P.2d 17; People v. Maddox, 46 Cal.2d 301, 294 P. 2d 6. But those were "appeals," each from the judgment of conviction and from an order denying a new trial. We are unaware of any decision which extends and applies that doctrine to the case of a collateral attack made after the judgment has become final, especially one which became final before (in this case, ten months before) the rendition of the decision in People v. Cahan, 44 Cal.2d 434, 282 P.2d 905.

The attorney general interposed a motion to dismiss the appeal upon various grounds. In view of the conclusions we have reached upon the merits and perceiving no lack of jurisdiction of this appeal, there is no need to give further consideration to the motion except to deny it.

The orders are affirmed and the motion to dismiss is denied.

Theodore BRUNSON, Plaintiff-Respondent,
v.

Jerrell BABB, Executor of the Estate of David Brunson, Deceased, et al., Defendants-Appellants.

Civ. 21522.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California.

Oct. 22, 1956.

Rehearing Denied Nov. 19, 1956.

Hearing Denied Dec. 19, 1956.

Action by deceased's brother against executor under deceased's will and devisees and legatees under such will to impress a trust on deceased's property for the value of services rendered to deceased by brother. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, George A. Dockweiler, J., entered judgment for brother, and defendants appealed. The District Court of Appeal, White, P. J., held that under the circumstances any defects in the complaint were not prejudicial.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Pleading Ⓒ408, 428(4)

Failure to file a demurrer does not waive the right at a trial to challenge the sufficiency of a complaint to state a cause of action, but a motion to exclude evidence based on insufficiency of a complaint is in the nature of a general demurrer and may be sustained only if the allegations of the complaint, deemed true for such purpose, are totally insufficient to support a judgment for plaintiff. West's Ann.Code Civ. Proc., §§ 430, 434.

2. Pleading Ⓒ204(1)

A demurrer which attacks an entire pleading should be overruled if one of the counts therein is not vulnerable to the objection. West's Ann.Code Civ. Proc., § 430.

3. Pleading Ⓒ1

The office of pleadings is to outline the issues so that the parties may know what is involved in the litigation, and while they should be made as clear as possible, they are not intended to serve as a trap for the inexperienced or the unwary.

4. Appeal and Error Ⓒ1170(3)

Any defects in complaint to have a trust impressed on deceased's property for the value of services rendered to deceased, filed by deceased's brother who allegedly performed such services on deceased's promise to pay brother out of his property while living or out of the property of deceased at the time of his death, were not prejudicial, where no demurrer was interposed before trial and the cause was tried with full knowledge of the issues. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., §§ 430, 434; West's Ann.Const. art. 6, § 4½.

5. Executors and Administrators Ⓒ224

Witnesses Ⓒ133

Where one seeks to recover from the representative of an estate, specific property alleged to have been held in trust by the decedent at the time of his death, he is not seeking payment of a claim from the assets of the estate, and is not required to present a claim as a creditor, and his action is not founded upon a claim or demand against the estate, within meaning of statute rendering incompetent as witnesses, parties to an action against an executor upon a claim against the estate of a deceased person. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 1880, subd. 3.

6. Witnesses Ⓒ133

Where decedent's brother was not seeking to enforce a debt of the decedent against decedent's property, but to obtain from deceased's executor and beneficiaries of decedent's estate, money and property, upon the ground that it did not belong to the estate, but was in fact brother's own property, his action was not founded on a claim against the estate and brother was a competent witness under the dead man's statute to testify to matters or facts occurring prior to the demise of decedent. West's Ann. Code Civ.Proc., § 1880, subd. 3.

7. Frauds, Statute of Ⓒ144

The doctrine of estoppel to invoke the statute of frauds will be used to prevent fraud that would result from refusal, in certain circumstances, to enforce oral contracts. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1624.

8. Frauds, Statute of Ⓒ144

Where deceased's brother, in reliance upon deceased's promises to take care of him from his property either before or after his death, changed his position and if the oral contract between brother and deceased for payment for services rendered by brother were not enforced, brother would suffer unconscionable injury, while other beneficiaries of deceased's estate would be unjustly enriched should they escape the obligations of such contract made by decedent, beneficiaries of deceased's estate would be estopped from invoking the statute of frauds to prevent enforcement of such contract. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1624.

9. Executors and Administrators Ⓒ224

Where deceased's brother filed an action against executor under deceased's will and devisees and legatees under will to recover money or property allegedly held in trust by defendants, such action was not a claim or demand against deceased's estate, and therefore brother did not have an adequate remedy at law, and it was not necessary for brother to file a claim against the estate as a prerequisite to maintenance of such action. West's Ann.Prob.Code, § 707.

10. Liens Ⓒ7

Where deceased's brother brought an action seeking intervention of equity to prevent executor under deceased's will and beneficiaries of deceased's estate from retaining and enjoying benefits of property acquired by alleged fraudulent acts of decedent, court upon entering judgment declaring defendants trustees of the property in the amount of the judgment rendered, was justified in encumbering assets of deceased's estate with an equitable lien in brother's favor.

11. Liens Ⓒ7

Equity courts look with favor upon equitable liens when employed to do justice and equity.

12. Interest Ⓒ39(4)

In action by deceased's brother against executor under deceased's will and beneficiaries under such will to impress a trust on deceased's property for value of services rendered to deceased by brother on deceased's fraudulent promises to take care of brother out of deceased's property either during his lifetime or after his death, trial court did not abuse its discretion in allowing interest to accrue on the judgment from the date of deceased's death since the action was based on fraud within purview of statute providing for interest on damages awarded on noncontractual obligations. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 3288.

Jerrell Babb, Los Angeles, for appellants.

A. Marburg Yerkes, Belle Silverman, Beverly Hills, for respondent.

WHITE, Presiding Justice.

Plaintiff instituted this action against the above named Executor under the Last Will and Testament of David Brunson, and the other above named defendants, as devisees and legatees under the aforesaid will.

Plaintiff's complaint is entitled, "For Restitution—Constructive Fraud, Actual Fraud; To Impress a Trust; To Impose an Equitable Lien; To Quiet Title; For Money" and contains six causes of action. In the first cause of action it is alleged that during the lifetime of decedent there existed between him and plaintiff, "the most confidential relationship"; that plaintiff "reposed the greatest confidence and trust in the decedent David Brunson and advised with decedent with respect to his business affairs, and plaintiff believed that the decedent would deal justly and fairly with him in all things. That commencing in the year 1919 plaintiff was discharged from the armed forces of the United States and returned to the city of Los Angeles to live with decedent David Brunson at the family home and was told by the said decedent that the decedent owned the family home in the city of Los Angeles and that plaintiff had no right to any property or money in the estate of James Polk Brunson, the deceased father of plaintiff and of decedent, and that plaintiff had no right in the family residence in the city of Los Angeles; that plaintiff would have to seek a place to live elsewhere, but that decedent would take care of plaintiff. That on or about March 29, 1919 decedent employed plaintiff until about March 22, 1922, at the rate of $2.00 per day. That for this work and labor decedent owed plaintiff the sum of $1,860, but paid plaintiff only approximately $900. That from time to time plaintiff asked decedent for payment of the balance due and was assured that he "would be paid from the property then owned by decedent or thereafter to be acquired by decedent". That because he relied "upon such representations and promises, plaintiff did not assert any claim against David Brunson" during the lifetime of the latter. It is then alleged that from on or about February 1, 1937 to March 25, 1947 plaintiff "attempted to conduct a business and maintain employment in the city of Los Angeles and was repeatedly urged by decedent David Brunson to leave his business and abandon his employment to work from time to time for the decedent David Brunson at many types of manual labor as from time to time requested by decedent David Brunson: that decedent David Brunson repeatedly represented to Plaintiff that he would pay to Plaintiff the reasonable value of Plaintiff's services therefor out of decedent's own property or that if he did not do so he would see that Plaintiff was taken care of out of his property at the time of his death in that whatever property David Brunson owned at the time of his death would be left to Plaintiff in payment of the obligations then and there owing from decedent David Brunson to Plaintiff as hereinbefore alleged." That in reliance upon the aforesaid representations and promises of decedent, plaintiff engaged in work and labor for the former, all of which is specifically set forth in the complaint. That said services were of the reasonable value of $3,120, but that notwithstanding repeated promises to pay, decedent failed to compensate plaintiff. It is then alleged that from about October 1, 1943 to June 1, 1947 decedent owned a ranch in Riverside County; that plaintiff was induced by decedent "to leave his shoe shining shop for hours or days, as the case might be, and engage in work and labor for decedent on said ranch. That during said period Plaintiff did leave his shop and work for decedent". Then follows a detailed account of the services performed and the allegation that the reasonable value thereof was $3,594. It is then alleged that decedent "repeatedly assured plaintiff that plaintiff need have no concern or worry on the time and manner and mode of payment to him of sums due from decedent; that decedent would pay plaintiff out of his property during the decedent's lifetime or if not paid during the lifetime of decedent David Brunson, the Plaintiff would receive David Brunson's property at David Brunson's death." Then follows the allegation, "That during the period of time from 1918 to date Plaintiff has been partially disabled from physical injuries received in World War I in the armed services of the United States; that during the entire period of time from 1919 to date of this action Plaintiff has been a resident of the county of Los Angeles, state of California; that on numerous occasions during the period of time from 1919 to the date of the death of decedent David Brunson in 1953, decedent David Brunson assured Plaintiff that as Plaintiff's older brother he would take care of Plaintiff and requested Plaintiff to always consult decedent and accept decedent's advice on personal, business and family matters, and subsequent to Plaintiff's divorce, in the year 1936, decedent further represented to plaintiff that, if Plaintiff did not remarry, decedent would leave all his property Plaintiff in fulfillment of the obligations of decedent David Brunson to Plaintiff as hereinbefore alleged in this Complaint; that Plaintiff did not marry from 1936 to the present time and has continuously since said year 1936 remained unmarried." That because he relied implicitly upon the promises and representations of his deceased brother, "Plaintiff at no time required from the decedent David Brunson any writing, or security in writing, or evidence securing obligations of the decedent to Plaintiff, and relied upon the decedent David Brunson's oral promise to plaintiff that decedent would pay Plaintiff out of decedent's property or leave to Plaintiff all decedent's property at the time of decedent's death. That decedent David Brunson did not leave his property to Plaintiff at the time of his death, but that by the terms of the Last Will of David Brunson heretofore admitted to probate, as hereinabove alleged, Plaintiff does not receive any of decedent David Brunson's property."

In his second cause of action plaintiff incorporates the allegations contained in the first cause of action and then alleges the falsity of decedent's representations and the latter's knowledge of such falsity, and that decedent "had no intention of paying to Plaintiff any sums of money or property as payment to Plaintiff for monies owing from decedent or for services rendered to decedent David Brunson, or as payment to Plaintiff, for Plaintiff's change of position and rendition of service as from time to time requested by decedent David Brunson as hereinbefore alleged."

After alleging his reliance upon decedent's representations and promises, plaintiff avers that he refrained from enforcing any claim he had against decedent during decedent David Brunson's lifetime "for services rendered, for claim to decedent's property, for loss of profits, for loss of earnings, and did in fact repeatedly change his position, to his detriment as hereinbefore alleged." Then follows an allegation that in the will of decedent, "Plaintiff is given no interest whatsoever in the estate of the decedent and is not mentioned in said Will in any respect whatsoever so as to accomplish restitution for money, change of position, value or property heretofore parted with in reliance upon the decedent David Brunson's representations and conduct."

In his third cause of action, plaintiff alleges that defendants other than defendant Executor, have been unjustly enriched as successors in interest of decedent and that they hold the monies and property of the estate as trustees for plaintiff.

The fourth cause of action seeks to impress a lien upon the property of the estate as "security to plaintiff for restitution to plaintiff of the value of his claims."

The fifth cause of action alleges that plaintiff is the owner of three parcels of real property now held by defendant Executor, and that neither decedent's estate or any of the defendants have any right, title or interest in said properties.

The sixth and final cause of action alleges that upon the death of decedent the defendants, other than the defendant Executor, became indebted to plaintiff in the sum of $7,674 by reason of the foregoing services allegedly performed by plaintiff at the special instance and request of decedent; that such defendants "severally promised and agreed to deliver and pay to Plaintiff such money or property as they may have acquired by reason of the death of David Brunson, Deceased.", but have refused so to do.

The prayer is that it be adjudged that defendants have no right, title or interest whatever in the property owned by David Brunson prior to his death, and that plaintiff be adjudged the owner thereof, and that defendants be declared trustees for plaintiff of all property now owned or hereafter acquired pursuant to the decree of distribution in the estate of decedent; and that plaintiff "may have restitution by a judgment in his favor in the sum of Seven Thousand Six Hundred Seventy-Four Dollars ($7,674.00) jointly and severally against all defendants herein claiming any interest in the property of David Brunson, Deceased."

By their answers, defendants denied generally the allegations of plaintiff's complaint, and as separate defenses alleged that, (1) plaintiff's complaint in its entirety does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action; (2) that each count of plaintiff's complaint is barred by the provisions of Section 336; Subdivision (1) of subsection 2 of Section 337; Subdivision (2) of subsection 2 of Section 337 of the Code of Civil Procedure; Subdivision (3) of subsection 2 of Section 337; Subsection

4 of Section 338; Subsection 1 of Section 339; and Section 343 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It was further alleged that plaintiff's complaint and each count thereof was barred by the provisions of Section 1624, subsection 1 of the Civil Code in that the alleged agreement set forth in the complaint was not to be performed within a year from the making thereof; and finally, that because the agreement, by its terms, was not to be performed during the lifetime of the promissor, decedent herein, and allegedly devises or bequeaths property to plaintiff or makes provision for the latter by will, not being in writing, is barred by the provisions of subsection 6 of Section 1624 of the Civil Code.

The cause proceeded to trial before the court sitting without a jury, resulting in a judgment for plaintiff decreeing that defendant Jerrell Babb, as Executor of the Last Will of David Brunson, deceased, pay to the plaintiff the sum of $10,000 "with simple interest thereon from the 16th day of May, 1953, at the rate of 7% in the amount of $1,337.36". It was further adjudged that plaintiff has a lien upon all assets of the estate of decedent in the possession of said Executor, and a lien upon all right, title and interest of all defendants in and to the property of said decedent. That defendant Executor pay to plaintiff all sums set forth in the judgment in due course of administration. It was further ordered, "That upon non-payment to plaintiff by Jerrell Babb, Executor, of said sums in due course of administration, the plaintiff may foreclose the lien imposed herein according to law by public sale by the Sheriff of the County in which said assets are located and that the proceeds arising from the foreclosure sale be applied to the satisfaction of this Judgment by payment to plaintiff of the full sum then payable to him under this Judgment together with interest and costs accruing after Judgment." From such judgment all defendants prosecute this appeal.

The trial, which extended, with interruptions and continuances, over a period of several months, resulted in a Reporter's Transcript of more than 1,800 pages.

For the purpose of giving consideration to the issues raised on this appeal we deem it unnecessary to set forth a detailed narrative of the voluminous testimony received at the trial. On this appeal, defendants do not contend that the evidence, if legally admissible upon the trial, is insufficient to support the findings. They rely for a reversal upon the claimed erroneous rulings of the trial judge. An examination by us of the voluminous transcript impresses us that unless the rulings on questions of law arising during the trial were erroneous, the judgment must be affirmed because, while the testimony adduced is in conflict, there is contained therein evidence of sufficient substantiality to support the conclusions arrived at by the duly constituted arbiter of the facts. We shall therefore epitomize the findings of the court below, in which is to be found the factual background surrounding this litigation.

Insofar as here material and pertinent the court found in accordance with plaintiff's complaint, "That it is true that plaintiff, during the lifetime of the decedent David Brunson, was the younger brother of said decedent, and at all times prior to his death, commencing in childhood of plaintiff, the most confidential relationship existed between the plaintiff and the decedent David Brunson; and it is further true that plaintiff reposed the greatest confidence and trust in the decedent David Brunson and advised with decedent with respect to his business affairs, and further that plaintiff believed that the decedent would deal justly and fairly with him in all things. That it is true that commencing in the year 1919 plaintiff was discharged from the armed forces of the United States and returned to the City of Los Angeles to live with decedent David Brunson at the family home and was told by said decedent that decedent David Brunson owned the family home in the City of Los Angeles and that plaintiff had no right to any property or money in the estate of James Polk Brunson, the deceased father of plaintiff and of decedent, and that plaintiff had no right in the family residence in the City of Los Angeles; that plaintiff would have to seek a place to live elsewhere, but that decedent would take care of plaintiff * * *

"That it is true that from the period of time from on or about February 1, 1937 to on or about March 25, 1947, plaintiff resided with decedent David Brunson in the City of Los Angeles and paid board and room in full for said residential quarters during the entire period of time of said residence; that during the said full period of time from 1937 to 1947 plaintiff attempted to conduct a business and maintain employment in the City of Los Angeles and was repeatedly urged by decedent David Brunson to leave his business and abandon his employment to work from time to time for the decedent David Brunson at many types of manual labor as from time to time requested by decedent David Brunson; that David Brunson repeatedly represented to plaintiff that he would pay to plaintiff the reasonable value of plaintiff's services therefor out of David Brunson's property or that if he did not do so he would see that plaintiff was taken care of out of David Brunson's property at the time of David Brunson's death in that whatever property David Brunson owned at the time of his death would be left to plaintiff in payment of the obligations then and there owing from decedent David Brunson to plaintiff * * * That it is true that in reliance upon said representations and promises of decedent David Brunson, from the year 1937 to 1947, plaintiff engaged in the following work and labor for decedent David Brunson, to wit:

"During the period of time from on or about October 1, 1937, to on or about October 1, 1943, plaintiff, at the request of decedent David Brunson, did assist said decedent in decedent's business of hauling sand, gravel and related materials by loading and unloading said decedent's trucks and driving said trucks, and by assisting decedent in any other manner as requested by him and doing any work for decedent as requested by said decedent. It is true that during said period plaintiff was engaged in the shoe shining business in the City of Los Angeles, State of California, and that decedent did frequently request plaintiff to leave his said business to perform said work and labor for decedent and plaintiff did so leave his business and perform said work. It is true that said services of plaintiff were required by decedent during said period on an average of twenty hours a week and that plaintiff rendered to decedent David Brunson for said period services of a value of Three Thousand One Hundred Twenty Dollars ($3,120.00). It is true that David Brunson, deceased, at no time paid plaintiff for said services, and it is further true that decedent repeatedly assured plaintiff that he would be paid for his work and services rendered to decedent David Brunson.

"It is further true that during the period of time from on or about October 1, 1943, to on or about June, 1947, decedent David Brunson owned and operated a ranch located at Riverside County, State of California; and it is true that plaintiff was induced by decedent David Brunson to leave his shoe shining shop and engage in work and labor for decedent on said ranch. That during said period plaintiff did leave his shop and work for decedent; that said work included manual labor of an agricultural type, operating and maintaining farm implements and equipment, feeding livestock and cattle, harvesting of grain, gathering eggs and bringing them to Los Angeles for sale, of taking care of the chickens and diverse other tasks necessary to be done on said ranch; that said employment during the entire period of time from 1943 to 1947 required plaintiff's services on an average of 25 working hours per week throughout the calendar year, except that each year in said years, during the three months period of harvesting covering the months of July to October, plaintiff's services were required by decedent David Brunson to the extent of 45 hours a week; that in fact plaintiff did perform services totaling 45 hours a week during the three months harvesting season of each of said years 1943 to 1947, an average of 62 days during said season; that it is true that plaintiff performed all of said services and was assured by decedent his services were worth Six Dollars ($6.00) a day for each day he worked for decedent, that the full value of the services rendered to decedent David Brunson by plaintiff for said period was Three Thousand Five Hundred Ninety-Four Dollars. That it is true that decedent David Brunson at no time paid plaintiff for the services rendered by plaintiff for decedent between the years 1937 to 1947; and it is further true that decedent David Brunson repeatedly assured plaintiff that plaintiff need have no concern or worry on the time and manner and mode of payment to him of the sums due from decedent; that decedent would pay plaintiff out of his property during the decedent's lifetime, or, if not paid during the lifetime of decedent David Brunson, the plaintiff would receive David Brunson's property at David Brunson's death.

"That it is true that during the period of time from 1918 to date plaintiff has been partially disabled from physical injuries received in World War I in the armed services of the United States; that during the entire period of time from 1919 to the date of this action plaintiff has been a resident of the County of Los Angeles, State of California; that on numerous occasions during the period of time from 1919 to the date of the death of decedent David Brunson in 1953, decedent David Brunson did assure plaintiff that as plaintiff's older brother he would take care of plaintiff and decedent requested plaintiff to always consult him and accept decedent's advice on personal, business and family matters, and subsequent to the year 1936, decedent further represented to plaintiff that, if plaintiff did not remarry, decedent would leave all his property to plaintiff in fulfillment of the obligations of decedent David Brunson to plaintiff as hereinbefore alleged in this Complaint; that in reliance upon said promise plaintiff did not marry from 1936 to the present time and has continuously since said year 1936 remained unmarried.

"That it is true that during all the period of time hereinbefore alleged, from 1919 to 1953, plaintiff repeatedly at the instance and request of decedent, his brother, David Brunson, relinquished employment elsewhere, relinquished the opportunity to maintain his business, and the opportunity to go into other businesses including the hotel and rooming house business, and relinquished enforcement of any and all claims plaintiff had against decedent, in reliance upon the conduct and representations of decedent David Brunson to plaintiff herein set forth, and because of the confidential relationship existing as aforesaid plaintiff relied solely upon decedent David Brunson's declarations, promises, and representations to him hereinabove mentioned, and believed that the decedent's representations were made in truth and in sincerity and that the decedent David Brunson would conscientiously abide thereby; and it is true that plaintiff at no time required from the decedent David Brunson any writing or security in writing, or evidence securing obligations of the decedent to plaintiff, and relied upon the decedent David Brunson's oral promise to plaintiff that decedent would pay plaintiff out of decedent's property or leave to plaintiff all decedent's property at the time of decedent's death. That it is true that decedent David Brunson did not leave his property to plaintiff at the time of his death, but that by the terms of the Last Will of David Brunson heretofore admitted to probate, plaintiff does not receive any of decedent David Brunson's property."

The court further found that by reason of the "happenings, occurrences, events * * * and the oral representations" of the decedent, that plaintiff would own all of the decedent's property upon the death of the latter, and that by reason of his conduct as aforesaid decedent during his lifetime was unjustly enriched. That the defendants other than defendant Executor, as successors in interest of decedent, have been unjustly enriched in money and property, which they will receive under the provisions of decedent's last will; "in that said defendants have not * * * paid any consideration to decedent or to plaintiff for any interest they may receive or be entitled to receive under the last will of David Brunson, Deceased, and defendants and each of them, have been unjustly enriched by properties owned by David Brunson at the time of his death, which, in fairness, justice and equity are owned by plaintiff, and that defendants and each of them hold said monies and properties as Trustees for plaintiff.

"That the allegations of Paragraph II of plaintiff's Fourth Cause of Action are true; that repeatedly and continuously during the period of time from 1919 to the date of his death, decedent David Brunson did orally promise to plaintiff that the value of all services performed by Plaintiff for decedent David Brunson would be secured by payment to Plaintiff of the value thereof out of decedent David Brunson's property at the time of the death of decedent; that defendants who claim any interest in the property of David Brunson, whether by Will or succession, or who may acquire any property of the decedent, whether by Will or by succession, acquire the same subject to plaintiff's prior lien in the sum of Ten Thousand Dollars ($10,000), including interest at the rate of 7% per annum from May 16, 1953, to secure restitution to Plaintiff out of said money or property." The court also found that plaintiff was not the owner of any of the real property held by decedent at the time of his death, but that the defendant's interest in said real property is "subject to plaintiff's Superior Lien thereon in the sum of $10,000.00."

The court further found "That all the allegations and denials of each of the defendants contained in the answers are untrue and it is not true that the plaintiff is barred by the provisions of: Section 336, Subdivision (1) of Subsection 2 of Section 337, Subdivision (3) of Subsection 2 of Section 337, Subsection 4, of Section 338, Subsection 1 of Section 339, or by Section 343, of the Code of Civil Procedure of the State of California; or any of the said Sections.

"And further, it is not true that plaintiff is barred by the provisions of Subsection 1 of Section 1624 of the Civil Code of the State of California; and it is not true that plaintiff is barred by the provisions of Subsection 6 of Section 1624 of said Civil Code; and it is not true that plaintiff is barred by the provisions of Section 1880(3) of the Code of Civil Procedure."

Appellants' first ground for reversal of the judgment is that the court erred in overruling their objection to the introduction of any evidence on the ground that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. In that regard the record reflects that at the commencement of the trial defendant Executor was called as a witness under Section 2055 of the Code of Civil Procedure. After affirmatively answering a question as to whether he was the duly qualified Executor under the last will of decedent, and when the next question was asked, objection was made to the same "on the ground that it is irrelevant, incompetent and immaterial and on the further ground that the pleadings do not state—that all the pleadings, including all the counts, do not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action in this case * * * And I want to add to that objection: I object to the introduction of any evidence in this case on the same grounds."

Without citation of any supporting authorities appellants urge that "The entire theme of the complaint is that plaintiff performed services for the deceased, and that he was not paid therefor, and then pleads the reasonable value of the services, and the whole complaint amounts to nothing more than a breach of contract and a case in law seeking to recover the reasonable value of services rendered to deceased during his lifetime.

[1-3] "The complaint wholly fails to state a cause in equity, in that the allegations therein pertaining to equity are mere conclusions, and the complaint shows on its face that it is nothing more than a breach of contract, that plaintiff has an adequate remedy at law, and furthermore, the complaint nowhere alleges or attempts to allege the acts and conduct on the part of David Brunson, deceased, towards his brother, Theodore Brunson, were unconscionable, it being necessary that the acts and conduct of the deceased be unconscionable before a case in equity would arise." Much of appellants' argument on this point is directed to claimed uncertainty as to the meaning of many allegations in plaintiff's complaint and the charge that other allegations amounted only to conclusions. All these contentions furnished grounds for a special demurrer and not having availed themselves of this remedy, Code Civ.Proc., Sec. 430, such objections will be deemed to have been waived, Code Civ.Proc., Sec. 434. Failure to file a demurrer does not of course waive the right at the trial to challenge the sufficiency of the complaint to state a cause of action, but a motion to exclude evidence based on insufficiency of the complaint is in the nature of a general demurrer and may be sustained only if the allegations of the complaint, deemed true for this purpose, are totally insufficient to support a judgment for plaintiff. And, a demurrer which attacks an entire pleading should be overruled if one of the counts therein is not vulnerable to the objection, Lord v. Garland, 27 Cal.2d 840, 850, 168 P.2d 5. We have examined the complaint, the substantial allegations of which are hereinbefore set forth, and are persuaded that since no demurrer was interposed before trial, and the cause was tried with full knowledge of the issues, any defects in the complaint were not prejudicial. As was said in Horton v. Horton, 115 Cal.App.2d 360, 367, 252 P.2d 397, 401: "The office of pleadings is to outline the issues so that the parties may know what is involved in the litigation. They should, of course, be made as clear as possible, but are not intended to serve as a trap for the inexperienced or the unwary."

[4] We have come to the conclusion that to reverse the judgment herein on the ground of insufficiency of the complaint to state a cause of action would unreasonably subordinate substance to form and would challenge the plain and meaningful words of Section 4½ of Article VI of our state Constitution. Weighed in the crucible of both law and reason the ruling of the trial court was correct.

[5, 6] Appellants' second ground for reversal is that the court erred in overruling their objections to testimony pertaining to matters and things happening prior to the death of decedent. This claim is based on contentions that the alleged agreements between decedent and plaintiff were all oral and therefore in violation of the statutes pertaining to wills, the Statute of Frauds and the so-called "Dead Man's Statute", Code Civ.Proc., Sec. 1880, subd. 3. In the instant proceeding the court found that appellants were holding certain monies and property as trustees for respondent. As was said in Estate of Dutard, 147 Cal. 253, 256, 81 P. 519, 520, "It is well settled that one who claims as his own, adversely to an estate, specific property held and claimed by the estate, cannot be called a creditor of the estate, within the meaning of the probate law. The decisions are clear and conclusive upon the proposition that, where one seeks to recover from the representatives of an estate specific property alleged to have been held in trust by the decedent at the time of his death, he is not seeking payment of a claim from the assets of the estate, is not required to present a claim as a creditor, and is not a 'creditor of the estate.' His action is not founded upon a claim or demand against the estate. [Citing cases.]" See also Holland v. Bank of Italy, 115 Cal.App. 472, 484, 1 P.2d 1031; Porter v. Van Denburgh, 15 Cal.2d 173, 176, 99 P.2d 265. Since respondent herein was not seeking to enforce a debt of the decedent against his property but to obtain from the Executor and beneficiaries of the estate money and property, upon the ground that it did not belong to the estate, but was in fact his own property, respondent was a competent witness to testify to matters or facts occurring prior to the demise of decedent. Furthermore, the record is replete with testimony of disinterested witnesses establishing a confidential relationship upon which respondent's restitutionary rights were predicated. We perceive no prejudicial error in the ruling of the trial court.

[7, 8] As to appellants' reliance upon the statute of frauds, we are satisfied that they are estopped from relying thereon. The courts have consistently applied the doctrine of estoppel to invoke the statute of frauds to prevent fraud that would result from refusal, in certain circumstances, to enforce oral contracts. The instant case is replete with testimony that respondent changed his position in reliance upon, or in performance of, the contract, that if the contract were not enforced respondent would suffer unconscionable injury, while appellants would be unjustly enriched should they escape the obligations of such contract made by decedent. The case at bar is strikingly similar to the factual situation present in Monarco v. Greco, 35 Cal.2d 621, at pages 623, 624, 625, 220 P.2d 737, and the holding therein strongly impresses us that the trial court was correct in concluding that appellants were foreclosed from seeking refuge by resort to the statute of frauds. Civil Code, Sec. 1624; Code Civ.Proc., Sec. 1973. See also Potter v. Bland, 136 Cal.App.2d 125, 132, 133, 288 P.2d 569; Wilk v. Vencill, 30 Cal.2d 104, 107, 180 P.2d 351.

[9] Appellants' next assignment of error is that the court erred in refusing to grant their motion for non-suit on the grounds that the alleged agreements were in violation of the statute of frauds. This contention we have herein decided adversely to appellant, as we have also done with regard to appellants' claim with regard to the applicability of Section 1880, subd. 3, of the Code of Civil Procedure. With reference to appellants' contention that respondent failed to invoke an adequate remedy at law by filing a proper claim against the estate, we are satisfied it was not necessary for respondent to first file a claim against the estate of decedent as a prerequisite to maintaining this action. Being an equitable action to recover money or property allegedly held in trust by appellants, it is not a claim or demand against an estate and, accordingly, it is not necessary to file the claim required by Section 707, Probate Code. Back v. Farnsworth, 25 Cal.App.2d 212, 220, 77 P.2d 295; Potter v. Bland, supra, 136 Cal.App.2d at page 134, 288 P.2d 569. Appellants' contention that the motion for a non-suit should have been granted because of the insufficiency of the complaint is hereinbefore answered by the conclusion we have arrived at as to the correctness of the action of the court in overruling appellants' objection to the introduction of any evidence. As to the sufficiency of the evidence to justify a denial of appellants' motion for a non-suit there can be no question. In re Estate of Flood, 217 Cal. 763, 768, 21 P.2d 579.

[10, 11] Appellants next urge that the court erred in encumbering the assets of the estate with an equitable lien. Appellants misconceive the theory of respondent's action. The latter is not asserting a claim against the decedent's estate, but claimed an interest in decedent's property by reason of the promises and representations made by the latter to respondent. This is an action whereby respondent sought the intervention of equity to prevent appellants from retaining and enjoying the benefits of property acquired by alleged fraudulent or other wrongful acts of decedent, by declaring appellants trustees of the property, in the amount of the judgment rendered, for the benefit of respondent who, according to the judgment, would be entitled to it. Tested by the standard that equity courts look with favor upon equitable liens when employed to do justice and equity, and to prevent unfair results, we are satisfied that, under the facts and circumstances present in the case at bar, the court was justified in finding that an equitable lien was created, West v. Stainback, 108 Cal.App.2d 806, 816, 817, 240 P.2d 366; In re Estate of Henshaw, 68 Cal.App.2d 627, 636, 157 P.2d 390; Wagner v. Sariotti, 56 Cal.App.2d 693, 698, 133 P.2d 430.

What we have hereinbefore stated furnishes sufficient answer to appellants' claim that the court erred in its findings of fact and conclusions of law and judgment, in that (a) the pleadings do not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action; (b) the plaintiff proved no case in law or in equity, or otherwise; and (c) the evidence is insufficient to support the findings of fact, conclusions of law and judgment.

[12] Appellants' final contention is that the court erred in allowing interest to accrue on the judgment from the date of decedent's death. It is appellants' contention that the only interest that can be legally charged in the instant action is that accruing from the date of the judgment. We have concluded that this case comes within the purview of Civil Code, Section 3288. The court found that appellants were trustees for respondent and that decedent received from respondent the benefit of money and labor contributed by the latter in reliance upon the promises of decedent that he "would deal justly and fairly with him (respondent) in all things"; that decedent represented to respondent that he (decedent) "would pay to plaintiff the reasonable value of plaintiff's services therefor out of David Brunson's property or that if he did not do so he would see that plaintiff was taken care of out of David Brunson's property at the time of David Brunson's death in that whatever property David Brunson owned at the time of his death would be left to plaintiff in payment of the obligations then and there owing from decedent David Brunson to plaintiff * * *". We are persuaded that under all the circumstances present in the case at bar, it cannot be said, as a matter of law, that the court abused its discretion in awarding interest from the date of decedent's death. West v. Stainback, supra, 108 Cal.App.2d at page 819, 240 P.2d 366. The question presented to the trial court for determination was whether decedent would be held to his promises and pledges made to respondent that the former was holding the latter's property as trustee, or whether the decedent would be held to his alleged promise to leave all his property to respondent upon the former's death. The trial court adopted the first above-mentioned theory, and we are satisfied its determination is supported by substantial evidence.

The judgment is affirmed.

The PEOPLE of the State of California,
Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Manuel Lee GUY, Defendant and Appellant.
Cr. 5650.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California.
Oct. 29, 1956.

Defendant was convicted of unlawful possession of heroin. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, H. Burton Noble, J., entered judgment, and the defendant appealed from the judgment and from the sentence. The District Court of Appeal, White, P. J., held that where police officer had been receiving information from time to time that defendant and her male companion were involved in the sale of narcotics, and about one hour prior to arrest of defendant and her male companion, the officer received information from a confidential informant that defendant was in possession of a quantity of narcotics and that she would either have it in her possession or it would be in her bedroom, and officer went to defendant's home without a search warrant and found heroin in defendant's bedroom, the search was lawful, contemporaneous with, and incidental to, lawful arrest.

Attempted appeal from sentence dismissed, and judgment affirmed.

1. Arrest ◊63(4)

Reasonable cause to justify an arrest under section of the Penal Code providing that a peace officer may, without a warrant, arrest a person when a felony has in fact been committed, and he has reasonable cause for believing the person arrested to have committed it, may consist of information obtained from others, and is not limited to evidence that would necessarily be admitted at the trial on the issue of guilt. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 836.

2. Arrest ◊63(4)

The term "reasonable cause" within meaning of section of the Penal Code providing that a peace officer may, without a warrant, arrest a person when a felony has in fact been committed, and he has "reasonable cause" for believing the person arrested to have committed it, means such a state of facts as would lead a man of ordinary caution or prudence to believe, and conscientiously entertain a strong suspicion, that the person accused is guilty. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 836.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Reasonable Cause".

3. Criminal Law ◊394

In prosecution for possession of a preparation of heroin, wherein defendant made a motion to suppress the evidence because arresting officers did not have a search warrant, burden was on defendant to raise question of legality of search and seizure in the trial court either by establishing that arrest of defendant was made without a warrant, or that private premises were entered or a search thereof was made without a search warrant. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 836; West's Ann.Health and Safety Code, § 11500.

4. Criminal Law ◊322, 1144(12)

On appeal from judgment of conviction for possession of a preparation of heroin, it would not be presumed by the District Court of Appeals on appeal that arresting officers acted illegally and that trial court erred in admitting evidence obtained by arresting officers, and, in absence of evidence to the contrary, it was required to be presumed that the officers regularly and lawfully performed their duties. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 836; West's Ann.Health and Safety Code, § 11500; West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 1963, subds. 1, 15, 33.

5. Criminal Law ◊394

In prosecution for possession of a preparation of heroin, wherein defendant made a motion to suppress the evidence because arresting officers did not have a search warrant, fact that no attempt was made to show the reliability of informant, on whose information the arresting officers acted without a search warrant, might go to the weight to be given the testimony but it would not entirely destroy the evidentiary value thereof. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 836; West's Ann.Health and Safety Code, § 11500.

6. Arrest ◊63(4), 71

Where police officer had been receiving information from time to time that defendant and her male companion were involved in the sale of narcotics, and about one hour prior to arrest of defendant and her male companion, the officer received information from a confidential informant that defendant was in possession of a quantity of narcotics and that she would either have it in her possession or it would be in her bedroom, and officer went to defendant's home without a search warrant and found heroin in defendant's bedroom, the search was lawful, contemporaneous with, and incidental to, lawful arrest. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 836; West's Ann.Health and Safety Code, § 11500.

7. Searches and Seizures \hookrightarrow 7(1)

The searches prohibited by the Fourth Amendment of the federal constitution are unreasonable searches. U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 4.

8. Arrest \hookrightarrow 63(4), 71

Where belief of officer that defendant is guilty is based on reasonable cause, and a felony has been in fact committed, not only are the requirements of the provisions of the Penal Code dealing with an arrest by a peace officer without a warrant when a felony has been committed, satisfied, but search incident to an arrest thereunder is reasonable. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 836, subd. 3.

9. Criminal Law \hookrightarrow 1158(4)

In prosecution for possession of a preparation of heroin, wherein defendant made a motion to suppress the evidence because arresting officers did not have a search warrant, wherein arresting officer testified that he asked defendant if it was all right to search her bedroom and that she stated that it was all right, and wherein defendant denied that she gave permission for the search without a search warrant, there was a conflict in the evidence for the trial court to resolve. West's Ann.Pen. Code, § 836; West's Ann.Health and Safety Code, § 11500.

10. Criminal Law \hookrightarrow 1166½(12)

Where there was evidence, in prosecution for unlawful possession of a preparation of heroin, that defendant had 47 capsules of heroin in her possession when arrested, statements made by trial court when sentence was pronounced that he was not inclined to place the defendant on probation because he thought she had been trafficking in heroin, and that any one who has 47 capsules of heroin, does not have them for her own personal use, did not show prejudice against defendant on part of trial court.

11. Criminal Law \hookrightarrow 1030(1)

Objections not presented at the trial cannot be raised for the first time on appeal.

12. Criminal Law \hookrightarrow 419(3)

In prosecution for possession of a preparation of heroin, wherein defendant made a motion to suppress the evidence because arresting officers did not have a search warrant, hearsay rule was not applicable to testimony of arresting officer that he had been informed that defendant was trafficking in narcotics before officer went to defendant's home without a search warrant. West's Ann.Health and Safety Code, § 11500; West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 836.

Appeal does not lie from sentence.

Matthews & Hill, John J. Hamilton, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Robert S. Rose, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

WHITE, Presiding Justice.

In an information filed by the District Attorney of Los Angeles County, defendant was accused of a violation of Section 11500 of the Health and Safety Code in that on or about July 5, 1955, she unlawfully had in her possession a preparation of heroin. Defendant entered a plea of not guilty, a trial by jury was duly waived and, pursuant to stipulation, the People's case was submitted on the transcript of the testimony adduced at the preliminary examination, both sides reserving the right to offer additional evidence. When the cause was called for trial the court announced that he observed in the preliminary examination transcript that "there was a motion made to suppress the evidence here", and inquired of defendant's counsel whether he intended to "object to the evidence or make a motion to suppress it". Upon receiving an affirmative reply, the court stated, "All right. Before I rule on that motion, I will hear this testimony." Officer Gutierrez then testified concerning the arrest of defendant. Defendant's motion to suppress the evidence was denied, and following testimony offered on behalf of defendant, the court adjudged her guilty as charged and sentenced her to imprisonment in the California Institute for Women for the term prescribed by law. Defendant filed notice of appeal "From the decision and judgment * * * and from the order of sentence * * *".

We regard the following as a fair epitome of the factual background surrounding this prosecution. On behalf of the People, Officer Gutierrez, attached to the Narcotic Detail of the Los Angeles County Sheriff's Office, testified that on July 5, 1955, at about 1:30 p. m., he received information that defendant was in possession of a quantity of narcotics. He had received similar information concerning the defendant on several previous occasions. The gist of "the information was to the effect that the defendant was involved in the trafficking of narcotics, that she was a source of supply." He was also informed of the defendant's name and address. That he also received information concerning a male companion of the defendant. This information was to the effect that "he was involved in the sale of narcotics also in combination with the defendant." Gutierrez had also received previous information concerning the defendant's male companion.

At approximately 2:30 p. m. on July 5, Officer Gutierrez, in company with Officers Ruskin, Fletcher and Stameison, drove to the defendant's residence at 12206 Alvera Street, Los Angeles.

Upon arriving at the defendant's residence Deputy Ruskin walked to the rear of the abode and Officer Gutierrez went to the front door. On receiving no response, Gutierrez walked along the side of the driveway and through an open gate into the back yard. The defendant's male companion, Mr. Matistick, was painting the garage. The defendant was reclining on a lawn swing, approximately thirty feet away. The officers first arrested Matistick, who was known to Officer Gutierrez. The latter then approached the defendant and informed her that she was under arrest on a narcotics charge. She requested that they enter the house because she was quite upset and had to go to the bathroom. At that time Officer Gutierrez, Deputy Ruskin and the defendant entered the house. Gutierrez told the defendant that a matron was en route and that she would have to wait for the matron to arrive before she could enter the bathroom. He then asked the defendant "if it was all right to search her bedroom and she stated it was all right, and we proceeded to search the bedroom."

A search of the bedroom was effected in the presence of the defendant and revealed a green bottle containing forty-seven capsules which contained a brownish powder. The capsules were subsequently analyzed by Martin Klein, a chemist of the Sheriff's Crime Laboratory. In Klein's opinion, the powdery substance contained heroin.

Officer Gutierrez further testified that he displayed the green bottle containing the forty-seven capsules to the defendant, who stated that the capsules were hers; "that she had purchased them approximately four days prior to her arrest; that she had purchased at that time five grams; that this was the remainder of the five grams that she had purchased; that she purchased them for her own personal use." She also stated that her male companion, Mr. Matistick, "knew nothing about the narcotics and that they were only for her use." Gutierrez then looked at the defendant's arms. He observed thirteen puncture wounds along the radial vein of the left arm. He also observed eight puncture wounds along the radial vein of the right arm.

As a witness in her own behalf defendant testified that she was the owner and occupant of the premises at 12206 Alvera Street, in the city of Los Angeles. In answer to a question to "describe the premises as to whether or not it was enclosed on that day", defendant testified, "There is a fence around the back starting from the kitchen wall. There is a fence starting from the driveway side about six and a half feet that continues back to the end of the lot. My lot is 150 by 50 or 50 by 150, something like that. It is deeper than it is wide." That "There is a fence across the driveway which takes in all the back yard and clear around to the other side * * * the back yard is enclosed * * *. The front yard is not enclosed; a portion of the driveway is enclosed. The back yard is enclosed * * *. The gate is attached to the house." As to the immediate circumstances surrounding her arrest defendant testified as follows: "Around 2:30, about that time, I was lying in the swing in the back yard and Stanley was painting the garage with his back to the gate, and all of sudden an officer—not this officer that testified—another officer ran up the drive. "When I knew anything, he was running up the gate, up the fence, and had landed down on his feet. He jumps up with a pistol in his hand and his badge and he says, 'Stanley, you are under arrest.'

"At that moment he hollered for help and this officer shows up. He tries to make the fence, the gate once, but he can't, so he goes back down again. He puts a pistol through the fence and he says to me, 'You over there, don't move.'

"Then he comes over the fence with another try. Another officer—there were four of them—another officer points his gun through the gate and says to me, 'Don't move over there.' while he is making himself come over, you know, while he is coming over there.

"Then the first officer that came over takes the piece of iron that closes the gate down like this, the two gates. There are two gates there and they close by a piece of iron and a chain and a lock. He takes the pistol and breaks the little lock, which doesn't take very much. We only had it there because we had a dog and we tried to keep him in the back yard because he knows nothing about cars. So he breaks the lock and lets the third officer in.

"The third officer goes through my back door and the fourth officer the front door. This officer says to me, 'You are under arrest.'

"And I said, 'How can you fellows break in my property without a warrant?'

"The first officer said, 'We don't need a warrant.' Then he says, 'Come on, let's go in the house.'

"He started searching my robe and I said, 'I have nothing on but the robe and you can't search me.'

"So he continues to go in my pockets anyway. Then noticing that I didn't have anything in the robe by pulling the robe apart, he said, 'Let's go in the house.'

"In the meantime the first officer had handcuffed the male fellow who was there. He brought him in behind me. I went in at this officer's request with a pistol, and then Stanley came in behind me.

"In the meantime, my mother was there. My mother had come to the back because she heard the racket. My mother was there already. She had been there the night before.

"So we all got inside. Then I asked to go to the bathroom because I had had dysentery for two years. He says to me, 'You can't go to the bathroom.'

"I says, 'You can't search me.'

"I asked again and I asked the first officer that came in, who is a little younger man, 'What about your warrant?'

"He says, 'We don't need one.'

* * * * *

"Q. Did the officer use any physical force at all? A. My arms. He took hold of my arms and the other officer handcuffed Stanley and brought him in handcuffed. This officer held onto my arms. Then he sent someone out to call the lady. The lady was not on arrival. I didn't have a phone. They sent someone to call the lady, and in the meantime they held me prisoner in my bedroom.

"Q. Did you have a gun on you all this time? A. There was one man that stood in the room while the rest of them gone by themselves, you know, about the house, and he had a gun on his person, yes.

"Q. Did you ever tell the officers to go ahead and search the house, the room? A. No, I didn't. They said they were going to search it and they started with my bedroom and took me and Stanley into the bedroom.

"Q. Did you have any fear of the officers or the use of violence when you were taken into the house by the officers? A. I sure did. That was my first time to ever be pushed around by them.

"Q. Did you ever say, 'I give you permission to enter the house,' or words to that effect? A. I never asked him to come in; he told me I had to go in."

Mrs. Florence Thomas, mother of defendant, testified that she was sleeping on the premises, was awakened by "the noise, hollering". That "I saw an officer in the kitchen, the first thing I saw. I made for the back and they had this male character, searching him, I think, and then the next thing I remember seeing was the officer with my daughter coming into the house. That is all I know."

In urging a reversal appellant first contends that the search of her bedroom and the seizure of the forty-seven capsules of heroin were unlawful and that the court erred in refusing to grant her motion to suppress the allegedly illegally obtained evidence, obtained, it is asserted, by an unwarranted and illegal search of appellant's premises. The latter argues that the arresting officers effected the search without a valid warrant of arrest and without probable cause.

Penal Code, § 836, provides in part, as follows:

"A peace officer may make an arrest in obedience to a warrant delivered to him, or may, without a warrant, arrest a person:

* * * * *

"3. When a felony has in fact been committed, and he has reasonable cause for believing the person arrested to have committed it. * * *

[1] That reasonable cause to justify an arrest may consist of information obtained from others, and is not limited to evidence that would necessarily be admitted at the trial on the issue of guilt is now well settled. Trowbridge v. Superior Court, 144 Cal.App.2d 13, 300 P.2d 222, and cases therein cited.

[2] "The term, reasonable or probable cause, has been defined: 'By "reasonable or probable cause" is meant such a state of facts as would lead a man of ordinary caution or prudence to believe, and conscientiously entertain a strong suspicion, that the person accused is guilty.' In re McCarty, 140 Cal.App. 473, 474, 35 P.2d 568.

"The term, 'probable,' has been defined as meaning 'having more evidence for than against; supported by evidence which inclines the mind to believe, but leaves some room for doubt.' Ex parte Heacock, 8 Cal. App. 420, 421, 97 P. 77." People v. Novell, 54 Cal.App.2d 621, 623-624, 129 P.2d 453, 454.

With the foregoing rules in mind we find that the record discloses that Officer Gutierrez, approximately two weeks prior to the arrest, received information to the effect that the appellant was involved in the trafficking of narcotics, "that she was a source of supply." From the time of receiving this information until the time of the arrest, Gutierrez had received similar information concerning the appellant on several occasions. Gutierrez had also received information that the appellant's male companion was "involved in the sale of narcotics * * * in combination with the defendant." Three or four days prior to the arrest Gutierrez had received information "to the effect that the defendant as well as another person (Mr. Matistick) was a source of supply, that either one of the two could arrange a sale of narcotics." The information concerning the appellant also included her name and address.

Approximately one hour prior to the arrest of the appellant and her male companion (Mr. Matistick), Gutierrez received information from a confidential informant that the appellant at that time was in possession of a quantity of narcotics. The confidential informant told Officer Gutierrez "that she would have it in her possession or that it would be in her bedroom."

It is also in evidence that the purpose of going to appellant's residence was to arrest her and her male companion. Upon entering the premises, appellant's companion, Mr. Matistick, was placed under arrest. Officer Gutierrez then walked some thirty feet to where appellant was reclining in a lawn swing and informed her she was "under arrest on a charge of narcotics".

[3, 4] While the record discloses that the officers did not have a search warrant, it is however, silent as to whether or not the officers were possessed of a valid warrant for the arrest of appellant. The burden rests upon an accused to raise the question of the legality of the search and seizure in the trial court. This he may do by establishing (1) that the arrest was made without a warrant, or (2) that private premises were entered or a search thereof made without a search warrant. As to the latter question appellant met the issue by establishing the fact that the officers did not have a search warrant. However, as to the first question there was no showing whatever. In Badillo v. Superior Court, 46 Cal.2d 269, 294 P.2d 23, 25, our Supreme Court said, "the defendant makes a prima facie case when he establishes that an arrest was made without a warrant or that private premises were entered or a search made without a search warrant, and the burden then rests on the prosecution to show proper justification [citations]." In the case at bar, as in the case of People v. Farrara, 46 Cal.2d 265, 294 P.2d 21, there is no such evidence concerning the possession of a warrant of arrest by the officers and, as stated in the case just cited, 46 Cal.2d at page 268, 294 P.2d at page 23, " * * * to reverse the judgment it would be necessary to presume that the officers acted illegally and that the trial court erred in admitting the evidence so obtained. It is settled, however, that error will not be presumed on appeal, Vaughn v. Jonas, 31 Cal.2d 586, 601, 191 P.2d 432; People v. Gutierrez, 35 Cal.2d 721, 727, 221 P.2d 22; Lynch v. Birdwell, 44 Cal.2d 839, 846-847, 285 P.2d 919; People v. McManis, 122 Cal.App.2d 891, 899, 266 P.

2d 134, and in the absence of evidence to the contrary it must also be presumed that the officers regularly and lawfully performed their duties. Code Civ.Proc. § 1963 (1, 15, 33); People v. Serrano, 123 Cal.App. 339, 341, 11 P.2d 81; see also Vaughn v. Jonas, supra, 31 Cal.2d 586, 601, 191 P.2d 432."

Appellant earnestly contends that "no attempt was made to show the reliability, if such there was, which should be attached to the hearsay testimony of the informant".

[5] We are satisfied that while this might go to the weight to be given the testimony it does not entirely destroy the evidentiary value thereof when it is remembered that the information received by the officers was not mere surmise or a bare suspicion that appellant possessed narcotics. The information was that appellant would have the contraband on her person or in her bedroom and the informant also supplied the officers with the name of appellant and her address. Furthermore, no inquiry was made at the trial by appellant in cross-examination of the officer as to the "reliability" of his informant.

[6] Since the recurring questions of the reasonableness of the officer's conclusion that a felony had been committed and the belief upon his part that appellant had committed it must find resolution in the facts and circumstances of each case, we are persuaded that, if it be conceded, in the case now engaging our attention, that the officers did not have a warrant of arrest, nevertheless, they were justified, under the facts herein narrated, in taking appellant into custody. Therefore, the search was lawful, contemporaneous with and incident to the lawful arrest.

[7] As was said in United States v. Rabinowitz, 339 U.S. 56, 70 S.Ct. 430, 432, 94 L.Ed. 653, 657-660:

"It is unreasonable searches that are prohibited by the Fourth Amendment. Carroll v. United States, 267 U.S. 132, 147, 45 S.Ct. 280, 283, 69 L.Ed. 543, 39 A.L.R. 790. It was recognized by the framers of the Constitution that there were reasonable searches for which no warrant was required. The right of the 'people to be secure in their persons' was certainly of as much concern to the framers of the Constitution as the property of the person. Yet no one questions the right, without a search warrant, to search the person after a valid arrest. The right to search the person incident to arrest always has been recognized in this country and in England. Weeks v. United States, 232 U.S. 383, 392, 34 S.Ct. 341, 344, 58 L.Ed. 652, L.R.A. 1915B, 834, * * *. Where one had been placed in the custody of the law by valid action of officers, it was not unreasonable to search him.

* * * * *

"Decisions of this Court have often recognized that there is a permissible area of search beyond the person proper. Thus in Agnello v. United States, 269 U.S. 20, 30, 46 S.Ct. 4, 5, 70 L.Ed. 145 [51 A.L.R. 409] this Court stated:

"The right without a search warrant contemporaneously to search persons lawfully arrested while committing crime and to search the place where the arrest is made in order to find and seize things connected with the crime as its fruits or as the means by which it was committed, as well as weapons and other things to effect an escape from custody is not to be doubted."

"The right 'to search the place where the arrest is made in order to find and seize things connected with the crime as its fruits or as the means by which it was committed' seems to have stemmed not only from the acknowledged authority to search the person, but also from the longstanding practice of searching for other proofs of guilt within the control of the accused found upon arrest. Weeks v. United States, 232 U.S. 383, 392, 34 S.Ct. 341, 344, 58 L.Ed. 652, L.R.A.1915B, 834 * *. It became accepted that the premises where the arrest was made, which premises were under the control of the person arrested and where the crime was being committed, were subject to search without a search warrant. Such a search was not 'unreasonable.' [Citing cases.]" (See also People v. Winston, 46 Cal.2d 151, 293 P.2d 40; People v. Dixon, 46 Cal.2d 456, 296 P.2d 557; United States v. Pisano, 7 Cir., 193 F.2d 361, 363.)

[8] When, as in the instant case, the officer's belief of appellant's guilt is based on reasonable cause, and a felony has in fact been committed, not only are the requirements of Subdivision 3 of Penal Code Section 836 satisfied, but a search incident to an arrest thereunder is reasonable.

[9] Although we have concluded that under the facts of this case the consent of appellant to the search was not necessary, there is present the issue of whether the search of appellant's bedroom was with her consent. Officer Gutierrez testified that he "asked her (appellant) if it was all right to search her bedroom and she stated it was all right, and we proceeded to search the bedroom." As a witness in her own behalf, appellant denied that she gave permission for the search. This created a conflict in the evidence, which was for the trial court in the first instance, to resolve. People v. Gorg, 45 Cal.2d 776, 782, 291 P.2d 469. While it may be said that it is doubtful whether the People sustained their burden of proving that appellant freely consented to the search of her bedroom, we cannot hold as a matter of law that the trial judge, under the circumstances here present abused the discretion vested in him in holding that the search was not in response to an unlawful assertion of authority but was undertaken pursuant to appellant's consent and therefore, was not unreasonable. However, as stated above, in the instant case, that issue was not crucial. For the reasons advanced above, it must be held that appellant's second and third contentions that the decision and judgment of the court are contrary to law and contrary to the evidence cannot be sustained.

Finally, appellant urges that the court admitted testimony of unrelated matters and considered such matters, resulting in the violation of appellant's substantive rights. Claimed prejudice on the part of the trial court is premised upon statements made by the court when sentence was pronounced. In that regard the record reflects the following:

"The Court: I am not inclined to place this defendant on probation. I think she is trafficking in heroin. Anybody who has 47 capsules of heroin, has them for some purpose other than her own. There isn't any question about that * * * "I don't listen to any explanations of people that sell heroin * * *. I am satisfied, however, that she was selling it * *. There is no necessity to sell heroin so far as this Court is concerned."

Appellant argues that the foregoing expressions by the court were based on what she characterizes as the "hearsay" testimony of Officer Gutierrez who related the information relayed to him by his informant that appellant was "a source of supply" and was "trafficking in narcotics".

[10-12] It is argued that "Such hearsay testimony * * * should be * * * judged with extreme scrutiny, as it appears to be a matter of common knowledge that the stool pigeon very often is a nefarious and reprehensible character * * *". Appellant's contention lacks substance here. In the first place, no objection was made to the foregoing testimony of the officer when the same was offered. It is well settled that objections not presented at the trial cannot be raised for the first time on appeal. People v. Rocha, 130 Cal.App.2d 656, 663, 279 P.2d 836. Secondly, the challenged statements referred to were not offered in evidence to prove the truth of the matter asserted, but solely to establish that the officer had reasonable or probable cause to make the arrest and consequent search and seizure. The truth of the information given to Officer Gutierrez was not in issue, nor was it offered to prove any element of the offense charged against appellant. Viewed in the light of the limited purposes for which the statements in question were admitted in evidence, the hearsay rule does not apply. People v. King, 140 Cal.App. 2d 1, 294 P.2d 972. And lastly, the statements made by the court were not uttered during the trial nor at the time the court rendered its decision finding appellant guilty. The remarks were made after the finding of guilt and when the court was considering appellant's application for probation and had before it the report of the probation officer, the contents of which are not before us. From a reading of the statements made by the court it is at once apparent that they were prompted by testimony that appellant had in her possession 47 capsules of heroin from which the trial judge concluded, as he said, that "she has them for some purpose other than her own".

[13] The attempted appeal from the sentence is dismissed. People v. Millum, 42 Cal.2d 524, 525, 267 P.2d 1039. The judgment is affirmed.

Benjamin N. WYATT and Christine M. Wyatt, Plaintiffs and Appellants,

v.

CADILLAC MOTOR CAR DIVISION, General Motors Corp., Los Angeles Branch, et al., Defendants, General Motors Corporation, a corporation, Defendant and Respondent.

Civ. 21645.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Oct. 25, 1956.

Rehearing Denied Nov. 9, 1956.

Buyers' action predicated upon (1) negligence in manufacture and assembly of automobile, (2) breach of warranty, and (3) rescission for breach of warranty. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Bayard Rhone, J., rendered judgment of dismissal after sustaining a demurrer, and plaintiffs appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Fox, J., held that there could be no recovery on negligence count and that the causes of action for breach of warranty and return of purchase price were time-barred.

Affirmed.

1. Automobiles ⚡16

Automobile manufacturer's duty was confined to exercise of reasonable care to see that automobile was so manufactured and assembled as to be free from defects which might be reasonably expected to produce bodily injury or damage to other property, and there could be no recovery by buyers for damage allegedly resulting to vehicle from negligent assembly thereof.

2. Action ⚡27(2)

Cause of action for breach of express or implied warranty sounds in contract. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1735.

3. Pleading ⚡37

Plaintiffs' failure to allege whether express warranty was oral or written entitled trial court to presume, for purpose of testing complaint against demurrer, that warranty was not founded upon an instrument in writing. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1735.

4. Limitation of Actions ⚡95(1)

Two year statute of limitations against cause of action for breach of warranty started to run when buyers of vehicle became aware of its unsatisfactory performance. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1735; West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 339, subd. 1.

5. Sales ⚡392

Buyer's right to return of purchase price after breach of seller's warranty is conditioned upon buyer's demand therefor made upon seller within a reasonable time after the breach.

6. Sales ⚡391(8)

Buyer's right to recover purchase price after breach of seller's warranty is based on theory of implied assumpsit, thereby constituting an obligation not founded upon an instrument in writing, regardless of whether warranty was written or oral.

7. Sales ⚡392

Where buyers' demand for return of purchase price was not made until two and three-quarter years after their alleged right to rescind arose, any cause of action for return of purchase money was barred. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 339, subd. 1.

8. Limitation of Actions ⚡37(2)

Three year statute was not applicable to buyers' action for return of purchase price after breach of warranty. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 338, subd. 4.

9. Appeal and Error ⚡102

Order sustaining demurrer to complaint without leave to amend was nonappealable.

Lloyd C. Griffith, Los Angeles, for appellants.

Lawler, Felix & Hall, J. Phillip Nevins, Los Angeles, for respondent.

FOX, Justice.

The demurrer of defendant General Motors Corporation to plaintiffs' fourth amended complaint was sustained without leave to amend. Plaintiffs appeal from the judgment of dismissal.

Plaintiffs purchased a Cadillac from defendant on December 7, 1951, for $4,850.52. This action grows out of its unsatisfactory performance, which developed immediately following delivery.

Plaintiffs' first cause of action is on the theory of negligence. They allege that in the manufacture and assembly of the automobile defendant's employees, through mistake and negligence, caused a piece of brown industrial wrapping paper to be sealed in what is known as the breather pipe, thereby internally sealing this pipe and preventing adequate motor ventilation; that as a result thereof the car did not operate "up to the standard of performance of a Cadillac" but "operated in an unsatisfactory, substandard and mechanically inefficient manner at all times since the date of sale"; that commencing with the day following the delivery of the automobile, plaintiffs began a series of returns to the service department in an effort to get it put into proper operating condition; that they thus expended $735.12 for parts and mechanical repairs; that defendant's efforts were unfruitful until April 5, 1954, when a service mechanic discovered and removed the paper from the breather pipe; that as a result of defendant's negligence and mistake in assembling the car and its failure to promptly discover the trouble, the car was completely ruined. They further allege demand that defendant put the automobile in condition to operate in accordance with established standards for Cadillac cars and that defendant refused to so repair and condition the vehicle.

For their second cause of action plaintiffs allege defendant warranted that the automobile was manufactured and assembled to perform according to established standards of Cadillac performance. This asserted warranty is not alleged to have been in writing. Plaintiffs also allege they relied upon the implied warranty of quality. They then allege the unfitness of the car by reason of the breather pipe being plugged by wrapping paper, and thus charge a breach of warranty.

For their third cause of action plaintiffs allege that after the refusal to repair and recondition the car they served a written notice of rescission of the contract of purchase and sale on defendant; offered to return the automobile, and demanded the return of the purchase price but that defendant rejected their notice of rescission. Attached to the complaint is a purported copy of this notice. It is dated in August, 1954.

It is thus apparent that plaintiffs have attempted to state a cause of action on the theory of (1) negligence in the manufacture and assembly of the automobile; (2) breach of warranty, and (3) for restoration of the purchase price.

Defendant demurred, inter alia, on general grounds and that each cause of action was barred by section 339, subdivision 1, Code of Civil Procedure, that is, by the two year statute of limitations. As previously noted, the court sustained the demurrer without leave to amend. We have concluded the ruling was correct.

First Cause of Action.

[1] Defendant's manufacture and assembly of the automobile manifestly preceded plaintiffs' ownership of it or any privity of contract between them. Under such circumstances defendant's duty was confined to the exercise of reasonable care to see that the car was so manufactured and assembled as to be free from defects which might be reasonably expected to produce bodily injury or damage to other property. Nebelung v. Norman, 14 Cal.2d 647, 654, 96 P.2d 327; Kalash v. Los Angeles Ladder Co., 1 Cal.2d 229, 34 P.2d 481. The complaint alleges no breach of such duty, nor any injury or damage within the categories last mentioned. It is therefore plain that plaintiffs fail to state a cause of action on the theory of negligence on the part of the manufacturer.

Second Cause of Action.

[2-4] In this cause of action plaintiffs appear to be relying on both an express warranty and an implied warranty under Civil Code section 1735. In either case, of course, this cause of action is based upon an alleged breach of warranty and necessarily sounds in contract. L. B. Laboratories, Inc., v. Mitchel, 39 Cal.2d 56, 62, 244 P.2d 385; Tremeroli v. Austin, etc., 102 Cal.App.2d 464, 475, 227 P.2d 923.

Plaintiffs' failure to allege whether the express warranty was oral or written entitled the trial court to presume, for the purpose of testing the complaint against defendant's demurrer, that the warranty was not founded upon an instrument in writing. Bates v. Daley's, Inc., 5 Cal.App. 2d 95, 100, 42 P.2d 706.

According to the complaint, the alleged warranty was breached immediately after delivery, since it did not "perform according to recognized and established standards" of Cadillac cars. Plaintiffs were at once aware of the car's unsatisfactory performance and thus the breach of the asserted warranty for they returned it the next day to be put in proper condition. The two year statute of limitations, Code Civ.Proc., sec. 339(1), then started to run. Crawford v. Duncan, 61 Cal.App. 647, 650-651, 215 P. 573; Firth v. Richter, 49 Cal. App. 545, 549-550, 196 P. 277. This action was not filed until August, 1954, approximately two years and nine months after the car was purchased and its unsatisfactory performance known to plaintiffs. The cause of action was therefore barred by the provisions of section 339, subdivision 1, Code of Civil Procedure.

Third Cause of Action.

[5-8] The buyer's right to return of the purchase price after breach of the seller's warranty is conditioned upon the buyer's demand therefor made upon the seller within a reasonable time after the breach. The buyer's right to recover the purchase price is based on the theory of implied assumpsit thereby constituting an obligation not founded upon an instrument in writing, regardless of whether the warranty was written or oral. Thomas v. Pacific Beach Co., 115 Cal. 136, 141, 46 P. 899; d'Artenay v. Hansen, 138 Cal.App. 39, 45, 31 P.2d 460.

What is deemed a reasonable time within which the buyer must make such demand has been uniformly held to be a period coincidental with that provided in the statute of limitations barring an action for enforcement of the demand which is the two year period imposed by subdivision 1 of section 339, Code of Civil Procedure. Thomas v. Pacific Beach Co., supra, 115 Cal. at page 143, 46 P. at page 901.

Plaintiffs' demand not having been made until August, 1954, or approximately two and three-quarter years after their alleged right to rescind arose, any cause of action for return of the purchase money was barred. Code Civ.Proc., sec. 339(1).

From what has been said, it is clear there is no merit in plaintiffs' contention that the three year statute of limitations, Code Civ.Proc., sec. 338(4), is here applicable.

[9] In addition to plaintiffs' appeal from the judgment of dismissal, they have also attempted to appeal from the order sustaining defendant's demurrer without leave to amend to their fourth amended complaint. This order is nonappealable. The purported appeal from said order is therefore dismissed.

The judgment is affirmed.

Oct. 24, 1956.

Action against mortgagees to recover real and personal property sold under deed of trust and chattel mortgage thereon or reasonable value of plaintiff's interest therein wherein trustee in bankruptcy of estate of co-owner of mortgaged property filed a complaint in intervention. The Superior Court, Santa Clara County, John D. Foley,

J., rendered judgment adverse to plaintiff, and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Peters, P. J., held that order made on March 26, continuing in effect to April 2d order issued on March 18, requiring defendants to show cause why a preliminary injunction should not be granted prohibiting sale of mortgaged realty pending trial did not continue in effect after March 26, temporary restraining order issued on March 18, prohibiting sale of the realty and that such restraining order was dissolved by operation of law and was not in effect at time of foreclosure sale of realty under deed of trust on March 31.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Evidence Ⓒ383(7)

In action against mortgagees to recover real and personal property or reasonable value of mortgagor's interest therein, findings that foreclosure sale of realty by trustee under deed of trust thereon was properly carried out was supported by recitals contained in trustee's deed.

PETERS, Presiding Justice.

Vera M. Sharpe appeals from a judgment adverse to her. The facts appear to be as follows: When the original complaint was filed on March 18, 1954, Vera M. Sharpe and her husband were co-owners of the property here involved, but the complaint was filed in the name of the wife alone. Later the trustee in bankruptcy of the estate of the husband came into the action by way of a complaint in intervention. On the date of the filing of the original complaint in Mendocino County the court issued a temporary restraining order preventing defendants from selling the property and ordering them to show cause on March 26, 1954, why they should not be so enjoined pending suit. It also appears that defendants' motion for a change of venue to Santa Clara County was granted on April 5, 1954.

The record shows that the Brotzmans filed a cross-complaint, but no recovery was granted to them based on its allegations, and no appeal has been taken from such denial. During trial, by consent of the parties, defendants Sleveland and Cagle were dismissed as parties.

The case went to trial on the issues joined as to the first count of the second amended complaint, the other count of such pleading not being now involved. This first count alleged that plaintiff was the owner of an undivided one-half interest in a certain sawmill and its equipment; that on February 18, 1952, plaintiff and her husband and one Kirkwood (the latter having purchased the property with the two Sharpes, but later having conveyed his interest to the Brotzmans) executed and delivered to the Brotzmans a promissory note for $34,369.42 secured by a deed of trust on the realty and a chattel mortgage on the personalty. It is then alleged that "on or about the 11th day of April, 1953, defendants Ira Brotzman and Antoine Brotzman wrongfully and without cause and without any authority or permission from plaintiff or said Milton Sharpe, took possession of all of the said real property and the said personal property hereinabove described, that on said 11th day of April, 1953, the said defendants Ira Brotzman and Antoine Brotzman had no legal title to either said real property or said personal property and plaintiff and the said Milton Sharpe at said time were each the owners of an undivided one-half interest in the said real and personal property; that thereafter defendants, Ira Brotzman and Antoine Brotzman without any authority or permission from plaintiff or Milton Sharpe placed defendants, James Cagle and Arnold Sleveland, in possession of the said real and personal property." It is then alleged that defendants in this fashion thus deprived plaintiff of the use of her property, and that she is entitled either to its return or the reasonable value of her interest therein in the amount of $35,000.

To this complaint the defendants answered, denying its major allegations, and filed a cross-complaint. The defendants Cagle and Sleveland also answered, but they were later dismissed. On the issues thus formed the cause proceeded to trial.

The facts developed at the trial were that the sawmill and its appurtenances were sold by the Brotzmans to the Sharpes and Kirkwood in October of 1951 for $40,000. Prior to February 18, 1952, the purchasers paid over $6,000 on the purchase price. On this last date the purchasers executed and delivered to the Brotzmans a promissory note for $34,369.42 for the balance of the purchase price, plus a few other uncontested charges. The note was secured by a deed of trust and chattel mortgage. The note provided for interest at 4 per cent payable monthly, and also required monthly accountings by the purchasers of the number of board feet cut at the mill, and required the purchasers to pay the Brotzmans $4 per 1,000 feet cut. The payments were to be applied first to interest, then to principal, with not less than $6,000 to be paid by September 1, 1952, with the entire balance due by August 13, 1954.

In July of 1952 the Brotzmans sent the purchasers a notice of default. This led to certain negotiations between the parties whereby Mr. Sharpe transferred his interest in a certain gasoline station to the Brotzmans for a $12,000 credit on the mill obligation. In exchange for this equity in the gasoline station the Brotzmans waived all payments except interest from August, 1952, through June of 1953, if the monthly cuttings did not exceed 400,000 board feet a month, but, if they did, the Brotzmans were to be paid $4 per thousand feet on the excess. For the months of July, August and September, 1953, the rate of payment was reduced to $2.50 per thousand feet. An addendum to the written agreement provided that "All payments for balance of 1952 on cutout is hereby waived."

This written agreement was signed by Brotzman and Sharpe on September 4, 1952, at which time Brotzman also gave Sharpe a bill of sale to a certain piece of sawmill equipment covered by the chattel mortgage.

The purchasers operated the sawmill until January 10, 1953, when they entered into a lease-purchase agreement with Davis and Sanderson, who operated the mill until April 10, 1953, when they were ousted from possession by the Brotzmans. During the period they were operating the mill Davis and Sanderson paid the Sharpes a $1,000 down payment and about $2,000 on the lumber cut by them.

After the gasoline station settlement was executed in September of 1952, Brotzman testified that he made no further demands on the Sharpes until January of 1953, at which time he demanded certain interest payments and certain taxes that he had paid. Sharpe then paid Brotzman $434.56 for interest and taxes. About April 8, 1953, when the Sharpes were again delinquent on certain payments, Brotzman visited the sawmill. He discovered that conditions were bad and he so notified the Sharpes. Among other things, there were attachments and tax liens levied against the property, insurance in a large amount was about to expire, and the equipment of the mill was in poor repair and working badly.

Under these circumstances, the Brotzmans foreclosed on the chattel mortgage and bid in the personal property for $3,500. About this same time the Brotzmans took over possession of the sawmill and on April 21, 1953, the Brotzmans put Cagle and Sleveland into possession. These tenants paid the Brotzmans $100 a month rent, and later bought the mill for $5,000.

The original complaint in the present action was filed March 18, 1954. On March 31, 1954, the Brotzmans had the trustee under the deed of trust sell the mill property, Brotzman buying it for $3,450. The Brotzmans are still in possession of the property and collecting the rent therefrom.

On this evidence the trial court found that on April 10, 1953, and thereafter, the Sharpes were in default; that the Brotzmans then foreclosed the chattel mortgage and bought in the personal property at the sale; that this terminated the Sharpes' interest in the personalty; that subsequently the trustee under the deed of trust conducted a valid sale of the realty, which was bought by the Brotzmans; that this terminated the Sharpes' interest in the realty. Based on these findings judgment was awarded defendants on the first cause of action of the second amended complaint. Mrs. Sharpe appeals.

[1] It is somewhat difficult to ascertain appellant's precise theory on this appeal. She does challenge the sufficiency of the evidence to support the finding that the real property was sold under the terms of the deed of trust or in accordance with law. It is urged that there is no evidence of the recording of the notice of default, of posting, of publishing, or notice of intention to sell, etc. Apparently, the trustee's deed was not introduced into evidence. This court, upon motion duly made, permitted the respondents to produce the deed as additional evidence. That deed, now part of the record, contains full and proper recitals that support the finding that the sale under the deed of trust was properly carried out.

Appellant also contends that the trustee's sale was in violation of the terms of the restraining order issued by the trial court. This presents the only really debatable issue on this appeal. The trial court, when the original complaint was filed in Mendocino County on March 18, 1954, issued its order to defendants to show cause on March 26, 1954, why a preliminary injunction should not be granted prohibiting any sale of the realty pending trial, and also issued an ex parte order restraining the sale of the property until that date. On March 26, 1954, the return date of the order to show cause, the Mendocino court made the following minute order: "The court does hereby make an order that the order to show cause why an injunction pendente lite should not be granted pursuant to the order to show cause issued out of this court on the 18th day of March, 1954 and filed herein on the 25th day of March, 1954, be and the same is hereby continued to April 2, 1954, at two P.M. No order is made respecting the temporary restraining order."

What effect, if any, did this order have on the restraining order? Did it amount to a dismissal of the restraining order, or did it continue it in effect? The answers to these questions are important because the trustee's sale of the realty occurred shortly after March 26, 1954. If the restraining order was still in effect, the validity of that sale would be open to serious question.

[2-4] The record does not show who appeared in court on March 26th, or who requested the continuance. All we have is the order above quoted. While it is possible that the trial court intended by that order to continue the restraining order in effect, this is not the most reasonable interpretation of the order. Of course, under section 527 of the Code of Civil Procedure such a temporary restraining order is terminated automatically at the end of 10 days unless a subsequent order is made continuing it in force. Moreover, it is the law that the burden was on the appellant to prove that the restraining order was in effect at the time of the foreclosure sale, Agricultural Prorate Comm. v. Superior Court, 30 Cal. App.2d 154, 85 P.2d 898; Palm Springs, etc., Co. v. Kieberk Corp., 37 Cal.App.2d 642, 100 P.2d 346. It is of some significance that the original order is in two parts, an order to show cause and a restraining order. On March 26, 1954, the trial court saw fit to continue the order to show cause in effect by the use of express language, and then used no such language in respect to the restraining order. It is also significant that, although the burden was on appellant to show that the restraining order was still in effect at the time of the sale, she made no mention at all of the point in the trial court. Under these circumstances, the proper interpretation of the quoted order is that it did not continue the restraining order in effect after the 26th. Therefore, it was dissolved by operation of law, and not in effect at the time of the trustee's sale.

Appellant also argues that the finding that the purchasers were in default on April 10, 1953, is not supported. Appellant contends that the record shows that at the time of the foreclosure of the chattel mortgage the purchasers were only in default in the amount of $434; that at the foreclosure sale Brotzman bid $3,500 which was credited to the purchasers' account so as to wipe out the default. The answer to these contentions is obvious. The purchasers were admittedly in default when the chattel mortgage was foreclosed. The promissory note, the chattel mortgage and the deed of trust all contained provisions that in the event of default the Brotzmans had the right to declare the full amount of the note immediately due. The record shows that attached to the formal notice of the foreclosure sale under the chattel mortgage was a statement which reads:

"Operators fighting—Joe's truck and car attached—their credit broke down to where the log supply was shut off—wage checks bouncing—mill attached for unemployment insurance department. Machinery going to hell—I took over—have control now and aim to keep same until the sale.

"I herewith demand of you all the unpaid balance plus taxes plus the percentages allowed me under the mortgage as foreclosure costs. I understand same may be paid any time before the sale.

"I am very sorry—this deal has been a torture mentally every [sic] since we went into it. I wouldn't be protected in taking it back—so had to foreclose."

[5, 6] The italicized portion was clearly an exercise of the option given under all the instruments to declare all payments due upon a default, and was notice to the purchasers of the exercise of that option. The trial court found that on the "10th day of April, 1953, and at all times subsequent thereto, the complainant Vera M. Sharpe and Milton Sharpe, her husband, were in default under the terms and provisions of said promissory note, deed of trust, and chattel mortgage"; that the chattel mortgage was then properly foreclosed and Brotzman bought the personal property in for $3,500, and thus terminated the interest of the purchasers in the personal property. Later it is found that the trustee caused the real property to be sold in accordance with the terms of the deed of trust and with the law; that Brotzman purchased at the sale; that this terminated the purchasers' interest in the realty. While the finding in reference to the sale of the realty does not expressly state the default upon which it is based, it necessarily refers back to the default upon which the foreclosure of the chattel mortgage was based. Moreover, the trustee's deed recites that the defaults leading to the sale of the realty were the failure to restore a destroyed building, the failure to deliver to the Brotzmans fire policies on many of the buildings on the property, the failure to pay past due taxes and the failure to pay past due interest on the note. Thus, the evidence shows that the purchasers were not only in default by failing to pay past due taxes and interest, but were not properly maintaining the machinery and mill, were not paying required insurance, had suffered attachments against the property, etc. Thus, the challenged finding is abundantly supported.

[7] The last major contention of appellant is that, as a matter of law, the testimony of Ira Brotzman is unworthy of belief. It is argued that he made inconsistent and contradictory statements; that he juggled the books; that he added or subtracted incorrectly and made double entries so as to benefit himself, and that, in fact, there was nothing due from the purchasers at the time of foreclosure. The point is without merit.

Inconsistencies in Brotzman's testimony were for the trial court to weigh and consider. Brotzman was closely cross-examined by counsel for appellant as to his entries in the payment book kept by him. It is true that on several minor matters he was crossed up, but these matters did not affect, substantially, the accuracy of the record book kept by him.

[8, 9] The contention that Brotzman did not give the purchasers full credit for the gasoline station when it was turned over to the sellers is without merit. While it is true that Brotzman testified that he thought the $12,000 credit on the gasoline station deal resulted in an overpayment of past-due obligations of about $2,100, and that the evidence shows that such overpayment was in fact more than $2,100, the record of payments shows conclusively that this error as to the amount of the overpayment did not affect the account between the parties. This is so because the payment book demonstrates that the purchasers were given full credit for the entire $12,000 regardless of how much this overpaid past-due obligations. No substantial inaccuracies in the payment record were shown to have occurred, and Brotzman's testimony was not impeached, as a matter of law. There is abundant evidence that the purchasers were in default in April of 1954, and that they had been and remained unable to perform their contract obligations. Thus, respondents were justified in taking possession and selling the chattels and the real property.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

v.

The STONESTOWN CORPORATION, a corporation, Ira H. Larson Company, a corporation, Associated Plastering & Lathing Company, a corporation, City and County of San Francisco, a municipal corporation, et al., Defendants and Respondents.

Civ. 16900.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 1, California.

Oct. 25, 1956.

Rehearing Denied Nov. 23, 1956.

Hearing Denied Dec. 19, 1956.

Nine year old child by her guardian ad litem brought action against owner of apartment building, general contractor, sub-contractor, and the City and County of San Francisco for injuries sustained by the child in fall from ramp, which sub-contractor had constructed without permission over area, which was used by children as a playground at rear of apartment building. The Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, H. A. van der Zee, J., entered judgments of nonsuit as to all of the defendants and the child appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Bray, J., held that the City and County of San Francisco was not liable for alleged negligence of sub-contractor, but that questions of liability of other defendants were for jury.

Judgment in favor of the City and County of San Francisco affirmed and judgments in favor of the other defendants reversed.

1. Appeal and Error ⇐866(1)

Appeal by plaintiffs, after motion for new trial denied, from judgments of nonsuit entered in favor of all defendants, raised question whether there was any evidence, which would have supported a verdict in favor of plaintiffs against any one or all of the defendants, had the case gone to the jury. See also People v. [illegible]

2. Appeal and Error ⇐927(3)

On appeal by plaintiffs from judgments of nonsuit entered in favor of all defendants, the District Court of Appeal was required to consider the facts and reasonable inferences therefrom most strongly in favor of the plaintiffs.

3. Master and Servant ⇐315

The mere relationship of owner and independent contractor does not make the owner liable to a third party for the independent contractor's negligent acts in performing the details of the work contracted for.

4. Counties ⇐146

Municipal Corporations ⇐751(1)

Where the City and County of San Francisco contracted with contractor for construction of a fire house, and during construction of the fire house a child was injured as result of alleged negligence of subcontractor, the City and County of San Francisco was not liable for the child's injuries.

5. Landlord and Tenant ⇨169(11)

Where owner of apartment building maintained in the rear of the building an area, which was commonly used as a play area by children living in the building, and subcontractor, which was doing the plastering work on building on adjoining lot, without permission but with knowledge of owner of apartment building built ramp above a portion of the area behind the apartment building, and child, who lived in apartment building, was hurt as result of fall from ramp, question whether owner of apartment building was negligent, so as to be liable for injuries sustained by child, was for jury in action by child for injuries.

6. Landlord and Tenant ⇨164(1)

Where owner of apartment building maintained in the rear of the building an area, which was commonly used as a play area by children living in the apartment building, and subcontractor, which was doing the plastering work on building on adjoining lot, without permission but with knowledge of owner of apartment building built ramp above a portion of the area behind the apartment building, owner of apartment building was under a duty to see that ramp was reasonably safe as to children who played in the area behind the apartment building.

7. Negligence ⇨136(18)

Where subcontractor, which was engaged in doing plastering work on fire house, constructed a ramp which extended over and above area where children played behind apartment building, and subcontractor knew or should have known that children in the apartment building played in the area, and child was injured while playing on ramp, question whether subcontractor was liable for child's injuries was for jury.

8. Negligence ⇨33(3)

Where subcontractor, which was engaged in doing plastering work on fire house, constructed a ramp which extended over and above area where children played behind apartment building, and subcontractor knew or should have known that children in the apartment building played in the area, fact that subcontractor constructed the ramp without permission of the owner of the apartment building and was therefore a trespasser, did not make child, who played on the ramp and who was injured, a trespasser, and did not prevent her from maintaining an action against the subcontractor for her injuries.

9. Negligence ⇨50

Where subcontractor, which was engaged in doing plastering work on fire house, constructed a ramp which extended over and above area where children played behind apartment building, and subcontractor knew or should have known that children in the apartment building played in the area, subcontractor had duty to protect from injury children, who customarily used the area behind the apartment building as a playground, and who might go on the ramp to play.

10. Master and Servant ⇨315

Generally, the rule of respondeat superior does not apply to cases in which injury results from the negligent acts of an independent contractor.

11. Master and Servant ⇨323

An independent general contractor, who is present and sees and realizes that a subcontractor is doing his work in an unlawful and dangerous manner, may be liable for an injury resulting directly to a third person from such unlawful and negligent conduct.

12. Master and Servant ⇨332(3)

Where a reasonable inference could be drawn that both foreman and watchman of general contractor had seen ramp constructed by a subcontractor and knew or must have known of its negligent construction, whether general contractor was liable for injuries sustained by child while playing on ramp was for jury.

13. Master and Servant Ⓒ320

If mode and manner which constitute defect, which is created by subcontractor, and by which injuries of third person are occasioned, are inherent in the plan of the general contractor, then liability may attach to the general contractor.

14. Master and Servant Ⓒ332(3)

Where contractor had right and responsibility of notifying subcontractor when plastering work of subcontractor should and could be done, and there was evidence that when general contractor notified subcontractor to proceed with plastering work, other work was going on inside building, so as to prevent subcontractor from moving materials through the building, and required construction of a ramp over adjoining property, question whether general contractor was liable for injuries sustained by child in fall while playing on ramp was for jury.

15. Negligence Ⓒ136(29)

In action by nine year old child when she fell from ramp, which had been constructed by subcontractor over area used by children as playground in rear of apartment building, question whether child, who had been warned by her mother not to go onto the ramp, was contributorily negligent was for jury.

[1] Plaintiffs' appeal, after motion for new trial denied, from judgments of nonsuit entered in favor of all defendants, raises the question of whether there was any evidence which would have supported a verdict in plaintiffs' favor against any one or all of the defendants, had the case gone to the jury.

General Facts.

[2] The facts referring to the negligence of the particular defendants will be discussed later. As we are required to do in nonsuits, the facts and the reasonable inferences therefrom most strongly in favor of plaintiffs will be given.

Plaintiff Gail, 9 years of age, lived with her mother in an apartment leased from defendant Stonestown Corporation (hereafter referred to as "Stonestown"). Adjacent to the property upon which the Stonestown apartment building sat is a lot owned by the defendant City and County of San Francisco (hereafter referred to as "San Francisco"). San Francisco had entered into a contract with defendant Ira H. Larson Company (hereafter referred to as "contractor") by which the latter was to construct a fire house on San Francisco's lot. Contractor had sublet to Associated Plastering & Lathing Company (hereafter referred to as "plasterer") the plastering work on the fire house. During the construction of the fire house contractor had built a wall 3 feet 6 inches high, along and one inch from the line dividing the fire house property from the Stonestown property. Separating this wall from the apartment building was an area 25 feet in width and consisting of lawn and a cement apron which led to the back door of the apartment building. This area was owned and maintained by Stonestown and was commonly used as a play area by the children living in the apartment building. When the fire house was substantially constructed contractor called on plasterer to perform its contract. This required plastering work to be done both inside and outside the fire house. Because water was available only at the front of the building, the plaster was mixed there and trundled in wheelbarrows to the point of application. The plastering on all of the exterior except the rear wall was completed without difficulty. However, to plaster that wall it became necessary to build a ramp over the above mentioned line wall for the wheelbarrows to run over. This ramp was built by plasterer and was about 25 feet long, rising from ground level to a height of approximately $4\frac{1}{2}$ feet at the upper end. It was made of 4" x 4" wooden uprights with crossbars nailed across them supporting three 2" x 8" planks abreast. The planks were lying loose on the crossbars. The tops of the upright stakes were rough and jagged as if driven into the ground by the blunt end of an ax. The planks which formed the walkway of the ramp were of rough lumber, and were grooved so as to present an irregular surface. They were covered with plaster and paint. The low end of the ramp started at or on the cement apron which extended out from the apartment house toward the wall, and ran almost parallel to the wall toward the fire house patio at the rear of the building. At the top of the wall there was a platform about the same size as the ramp.

On March 15, 1953, Gail, her sister, and another child were playing mud pies near the ramp. There were some other children on top of the ramp fighting over a wire. Gail went up the ramp, took the wire from them and threw it on the ground. As she walked back down the ramp she got her foot caught in the space between the planks and fell. She may have been walking backwards down the ramp. Gail did not remember what happened next, but her mother heard her screams and took her in the apartment where she wiped off the blood and noticed that six permanent teeth had been knocked out. Gail had several bruises on her body, and her face was discolored and bruised around her mouth. Apparently, when Gail fell, she had struck her mouth on one of the 4" x 4" uprights of the ramp. The ramp was constructed on Stonestown property without permission of Stonestown.

The court granted nonsuits as to all defendants.

San Francisco.

[3,4] We fail to find any evidence that would support a verdict of liability on the part of San Francisco. Plaintiffs do not point to any evidence of negligence on its part, and at argument practically conceded that they had failed to make out a case against San Francisco. The mere relationship of owner and independent contractor does not make the owner liable for the independent contractor's negligent acts in performing the details of the work contracted for. McDonald v. Shell Oil Co., 44 Cal.2d 785, 788, 285 P.2d 902; Barrabee v. Crescenta Mutual Water Co., 88 Cal.App. 2d 192, 196, 198 P.2d 558.

Stonestown.

[5] As before stated, the area upon which the ramp was constructed was commonly used by the apartment building children for play, a fact well known to Stonestown employees. There was testimony that during the 5 days to a week that the ramp was there before the accident, its presence and the children playing in the area was observed by Stonestown employees. One Suojanen, a Stonestown tenant, complained on one occasion to Stonestown about the ramp and about children taking boards from it and an employee came to look at it. Thus, there was evidence from which the jury could have found that Stonestown, from the time of its construction, knew of the presence of the ramp in the area where it permitted children to play, even though it had not formally consented to its construction. Moreover, the jury could have found that Stonestown knew or should have known of the character of the ramp's construction and that children would and did play upon it. Such findings would be sufficient to place liability upon Stonestown for the accident, upon the principle that the children were, in effect, invitees of Stonestown on the play area, and therefore Stonestown was required to use ordinary care for their safety. Such care would not be met by permitting in the area a ramp which would attract children and which ramp was unsafe for them. Permitting a ramp with loose boards where it was reasonable to assume that children would go could be held to be lack of ordinary care. We are not dealing with the "attractive nuisance" principle. All the parties agree that that principle is not applicable here. The principle applicable here is that set forth in Roberts v. Del Monte Properties Co., 111 Cal.App. 2d 69, 74, 243 P.2d 914. There a minor, living with his parents in the defendant's hotel, saw a pile of mattresses on the floor in the hall. While playing on the top mattress he accidentally tumbled backwards towards an open window behind the pile. The window screen gave way and the child fell down into a patio, receiving injuries. As does Stonestown here concerning Gail's going on the ramp,¹ the defendant contended that the minor when playing on the mattress pile was using it for an unintended and unpermitted purpose, and therefore became a trespasser or licensee to whom the defendant owed no duty except to refrain from overt or intentional acts. The reviewing court said, 111 Cal.App.2d at page 73, 243 P.2d at page 916: "This rule has expressly been held inapplicable to infant invitees attracted by dangerous objects in Crane v. Smith, 23 Cal.2d 288, 300, 144 P.2d 356, 363." It then said that to say that a child attracted by a dangerous object in a place where it was an invitee became a trespasser as to such object " * * * would be to extend the doctrine of the cases denying compensation to one who has exceeded the scope of his invitation beyond their logical scope. Moreover, such reasoning would nullify the land occupier's duty to keep his premises free of natural or artificial conditions which involve an unreasonable danger to his business visitors when he has reason to believe that they will not realize the risk involved in the condition. Certainly, evidence shown by the present record justifies a finding that the child's act was one which a reasonably prudent person should have anticipated and guarded against.' And further, 23 Cal.2d on page 301, 144 P.2d on page 364: 'The childish propensity to intermeddle was the characteristic which the appellant should have taken reasonable precautions to guard against.'" Pages 73-74, 243 P.2d at page 916, quoting from Crane v. Smith, 23 Cal.2d 288, 144 P.2d 356. The court said also that decisions providing liability in such situations "are based on the general principle that the person in possession of premises must take such precautions for the safety of his business invitees as are reasonable under all the circumstances, considering their relation, the burden of the interference with his own affairs and the danger to the invitees to be anticipated, and that special caution is required in behalf of invitees of immature age whose inability to appreciate and propensity to ignore certain dangers he ought to consider. * * *

In each case the reasonableness of the conduct under all the circumstances is for the jury and accordingly it was also in this case correctly left to the jury." 111 Cal.App.2d at page 74, 243 P.2d at page 917.

In our case no contention is made that apart from the use of the ramp Gail was not a business invitee of Stonestown on the premises. In Crane v. Smith, supra, 23 Cal.2d 288, 144 P.2d 356, where a minor accompanied her mother into the defendant's store and was injured while meddling with a coffee mill, the court, although holding that the mill was attractive to the child, pointed out that recovery was not had under the attractive nuisance doctrine, but on the theory that the child was an invitee to whom the store owner owed the duty of ordinary care, and that indulging in the childish propensity to intermeddle is a characteristic which the store owner should have taken reasonable precautions to guard against. So here, Gail was an invitee of Stonestown to the premises upon which it knew the ramp existed. The defendant should have known also of the childish propensity to climb upon a ramp and should have taken reasonable precautions to guard against Gail's injury therefrom, even though the ramp was constructed by another than Stonestown.

[6] Stonestown contends that there is no evidence that it had notice of the dangerous condition of the ramp nor of how long that condition existed. The evidence shows that the ramp was built with loose flooring. Gail's injury was caused by her getting her foot caught between two loose boards. While it is possible that the cracks between the loose boards may have varied in size from time to time, there is no contention that the boards were ever nailed. Thus, a reasonable inference is that the dangerous condition existed for the 5 days to a week that the ramp was there. Stonestown, knowing of the presence of the ramp in an area where it knew that children played, was under a duty to see that the ramp was reasonably safe, as it is presumed to know that children would play there. "A possessor of land, who leases a part thereof and retains in his own possession any other part which the lessee is entitled to use as appurtenant to the part leased to him, is subject to liability to his lessee and others lawfully upon the land with the consent of the lessee or a sub-lessee for bodily harm caused to them by a dangerous condition upon that part of the land retained in the lessor's control, if the lessor by the exercise of reasonable care could have discovered the condition and the unreasonable risk involved therein and could have made the condition safe." Restatement, Torts, § 360.

Plasterer.

[7-9] What we have said concerning the liability of Stonestown applies likewise to plasterer who constructed the ramp on premises where Gail was entitled to be. The jury could have found from the evidence that plasterer knew or should have known that the children were playing in the area where it built the ramp. The fact that plasterer, having constructed the ramp without permission, was a trespasser upon those premises, did not make Gail in using the ramp a trespasser. Plasterer, in placing an attractively dangerous object on the place where Gail had a right to be, was required to use ordinary care to protect the child from injury from the object with which plasterer reasonably should have known Gail would meddle.

Contractor.

[10] As early as Boswell v. Laird, 8 Cal. 469, it was held that, generally speaking, the rule of respondeat superior does not apply to cases in which injury results from the negligent acts of an independent contractor. This rule has continued. See Luce v. Holloway, 156 Cal. 162, 163, 103 P. 886; George v. Trinity Church, 176 Cal. 553, 556, 169 P. 69 (injury due to negligence of cement and stone subcontractor. The court held that the general contractor has no duty to inspect a scaffold built by the subcontractor.); Green v. Soule, 145 Cal. 96, 98-100, 78 P. 337 (negligence of plastering subcontractor); Hard v. Hollywood Turf Club, 112 Cal.App.2d 263, 274-275, 246 P.2d 716 (negligence of painting subcontractor); Slyter v. Clinton Const. Co., 107 Cal.App. 348, 353, 290 P. 643 (negligence of plastering subcontractor).

[11,12] Plaintiffs contend that the following evidence takes the case out of the rule. Contractor's foreman testified: "My job for the general contractor is to see that everything is kept clear around that building as far as possible, and see that the work that is done right. So naturally I would be all around the building." He also testified that he saw the ramp immediately after it was constructed but did not go on it, and that almost every night for five nights during the time the ramp was there, he stayed on the job until about 9 o'clock p. m. to keep children from tracking on fresh cement. Gail testified that before the accident she had seen a one-armed colored man walk up and down the ramp. Contractor's foreman testified that he employed a one-armed watchman but not until after the accident. The jury, of course, could have resolved this conflict. Thus, a reasonable inference could be drawn that both the foreman and the watchman having seen the ramp, knew or must have known of its negligent construction. From all this evidence, a jury could, although not required so to do, have found that contractor knew of the danger to the children playing, and who had a right to play in the ramp area. Such a finding would bring the case within the exception to the general rule, namely, "An independent general contractor, who is present and sees and realizes that a subcontractor is doing his work in an unlawful and dangerous manner, may be liable for an injury resulting directly to a third person from such unlawful and negligent conduct." Rosenberg v. Schwartz, 1932, 260 N.Y. 162, 183 N.E. 282, 283. In that case the general contractor engaged in building a church sublet the brick work to brick masons. The latter built a scaffold on the outside of the wall on one side of the church, which scaffold extended 25 feet above and 4 or 5 feet beyond the lot line between the church and property upon which the plaintiff, 12 years of age, lived. The plaintiff and another boy were standing on this property under the scaffold watching the work going on in and about the church building. Because of lack of suitable rails or screens on the scaffold, a brick fell or was knocked off the scaffold, injuring the plaintiff. As in our case the general contractor contended that he was under no duty to guard the scaffold and hence should not be held liable. The reviewing court reversed a judgment of nonsuit, pointing out, in effect, that it was a question for the jury whether the quoted exception to the general rule of lack of liability applied. The above quotation was quoted with approval in Schwartz v. Merola Bros. Construction Corporation, 1943, 290 N.Y. 145, 48 N.E.2d 299, 302.

While we have been unable to find in California a case applying the above mentioned exception to the general rule, there are cases here holding that such exception applies where the acts of the subcontractor create a public nuisance and are known to the general contractor. See MacLean v. City & County of San Francisco, 127 Cal.App.2d 263, 273 P.2d 698. Logically there is no difference between a situation created by a subcontractor known to the general contractor and dangerous to third persons, which amounts to a public nuisance, and a similar situation which, while dangerous to third persons, does not amount to a public nuisance.

[13] There is another exception to the general rule which the evidence might have justified the jury in applying. This exception is expressed in Williams v. Fresno C. & I. Co., 96 Cal. 14, 16, 30 P. 961, quoting from Boswell v. Laird, supra, 8 Cal. 469: "If the mode and manner which constituted the defect by which the injuries complained of were occasioned had been inherent in the plan, and this plan had been devised by Laird and Chambers, which the contractors were engaged to carry out, then liability would attach to Laird and Chambers."

[14] In our case the contractor had the right and the responsibility of notifying the subcontractor when the latter's work should and could be done. There was evidence that at the time contractor notified plasterer to proceed, certain work was going on inside the fire house building which prevented plasterer from moving materials through the building and required the construction of the ramp upon the adjoining property. Thus, by requiring plasterer to proceed at that time, contractor, in effect, was requiring plasterer to use the adjoining property and thus was dealing with the mode and manner of subcontractor doing the work. Such fact would bring contractor within the exception above mentioned.

Gail's Status.

Stonestown says that, while it probably invited Gail to play in the area, it did not invite her to use the ramp. Contractor and plasterer say, nor did we invite her to use the ramp. However, as pointed out in Crane v. Smith, supra, 23 Cal.2d 288, 144 P.2d 356, and Roberts v. Del Monte Properties Co., supra, 111 Cal.App.2d 69, 243 P.2d 914, 916, Stonestown in permitting to be placed in the area to which they had invited Gail, a ramp which was reasonably inviting to children, cannot now claim that it was not required to use reasonable precautions to guard against a child's "'propensity to intermeddle'". As to the other defendants, in placing and maintaining a structure inviting to children in their play area. they, too, would be responsible for not taking reasonable precautions to protect her.

[15-17] Both Gail and her mother testified that she was told not to go on the ramp. At the time of the accident there were two children on the ramp fighting over a wire. Gail went on the ramp to take the wire away from them to stop the fighting. It was as she was returning from doing this that she caught her foot between the loose boards and was injured. We cannot say as a matter of law that the warning changed her status. It was for the jury to determine as a matter of fact the effect of the warning. A 9 year old child cannot be held to the same standards of conduct as an adult. Nor is the rule stated in Nagle v. City of Long Beach, 113 Cal.App.2d 669, 672, 248 P.2d 799, and Allen v. Jim Ruby Const. Co., 138 Cal. App.2d. 428, 291 P.2d 991, cited by Stonestown, concerning obvious dangers, necessarily applicable to a child. It was for the jury to determine whether a child would realize the danger of walking on loose boards. As said in Roberts v. Del Monte Properties Co., supra, 111 Cal.App.2d 69,

74, 243 P.2d 914, 917: "In each case the reasonableness of the conduct under all the circumstances is for the jury and accordingly it was also in this case correctly left to the jury."

Judgment in favor of City and County of San Francisco affirmed. Judgments in favor of Ira H. Larson Co., Associated Plastering and Lathing Co., and The Stonestown Corporation, reversed.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 3, California.

Oct. 25, 1956.

Rehearing Denied Nov. 9, 1956.

Hearing Granted Nov. 21, 1956.

Prosecution for robbery. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Thomas L. Ambrose, J., entered judgment of conviction of violation of statute providing that any person who drives or takes a vehicle not his own without consent of owner and with intent to deprive owner of title or possession whether with or without intent to steal is guilty of a felony, and defendant appealed from nonexistent verdict and judgment. The District Court of Appeal, Vallée, J., held that where violation of such statute was not charged in information which charged robbery, court acted in excess of its jurisdiction in entering judgment of conviction for violation of statute, and that where defendant appealed from non-existent verdict, appeal would be dismissed.

Appeal from nonexistent verdict dismissed and judgment reversed.

1. Indictment and Information ⇨189(1)

Test of whether an offense is included in another is whether greater offense cannot be committed without necessarily committing lesser offense. West's Ann.Pen. Code, § 1159.

2. Indictment and Information ⇨191(9)

Violation of statute providing that any person who drives or takes a vehicle not his own, without consent of owner, and with intent to either permanently or temporarily deprive owner of his title to or possession of such vehicle, whether with or without intent, to steal, is guilty of a felony, is not necessarily included in robbery, and robbery can be committed without necessarily violating that statute. West's Ann.Pen. Code, § 211; West's Ann.Vehicle Code, § 503.

3. Indictment and Information ⇨191(9)

Where violation of statute providing that any person who drives or takes a vehicle not his own without consent of owner, and with intent to either permanently or temporarily deprive owner of title or possession of vehicle, whether with or without intent to steal same, is guilty of a felony was not charged in information which charged robbery, court acted in excess of its jurisdiction in entering judgment of conviction of violating statute. West's Ann.Vehicle Code, § 503.

4. Criminal Law ⇨113(4)

Where jury trial in prosecution for robbery was waived and defendant appealed from nonexistent verdict, appeal would be dismissed.

VALLÉE, Justice.

By information defendant was charged with robbery, Pen.Code, § 211, in that on October 3, 1955 he "did wilfully, unlawfully, feloniously and forcibly take from the person and immediate presence of Jack J. Martens, the following described personal property, to wit, Seventy Dollars ($70.00) in money, lawful money of the United States, and an automobile of the value of Eight Hundred Dollars ($800.00), lawful money of the United States, all of the value of Eight Hundred Seventy Dollars ($870.00), lawful money of the United States, in the possession of Jack J. Martens, which said taking was then and there without the consent and against the will of the said Jack J. Martens, and was then and there accomplished as aforesaid by the defendant by means of force used by said defendant upon and against the said Jack J. Martens, and by said defendant then and there putting the said Jack J. Martens in fear."

Defendant was convicted by the court, sitting without a jury, of a violation of section 503 of the Vehicle Code on the theory that the offense denounced by that section is an offense necessarily included in the crime of robbery.

Defendant's only assignment of error is that a violation of section 503 of the Vehicle Code is not an offense necessarily included in the crime of robbery.

On October 3, 1955, about 2:30 a. m., defendant and Jack Martens drove to a motel in Martens' automobile. They pulled up in front of the manager's office. As Martens was about to get out of the car defendant struck him on the top of the head from behind. There was no one else in the car or in the motel yard at the time. Martens was unconscious for a few seconds. When he revived, defendant had gotten out of the car and was pulling at his clothes. Martens reached for him and held onto his clothes. Defendant started pounding Martens on the back of his head, his back, and his neck. Martens called for help. The proprietor of the motel heard him and ran to the door of his apartment. Defendant broke loose from Martens' grasp, jumped in his (Martens') car, turned on the ignition, and drove away. Seventy dollars was missing from Martens' pocket. The police apprehended defendant driving the car a short time later. The $70 was not found on him.

Penal Code, section 211, reads:

"Robbery is the felonious taking of personal property in the possession of another, from his person or immediate presence, and against his will, accomplished by means of force or fear."

Vehicle Code, section 503, so far as relevant, reads:

"Any person who drives or takes a vehicle not his own, without the consent of the owner thereof, and with intent to either permanently or temporarily deprive the owner thereof of his title to or possession of such vehicle, whether with or without intent to steal the same, * * * is guilty of a felony * * *."

Penal Code, section 1159, reads:

"The jury, or the judge if a jury trial is waived, may find the defendant guilty of any offense, the commission of which is necessarily included in that with which he is charged, or of an attempt to commit the offense."

The positions of the respective parties are these: defendant argues that a necessarily included offense is one that of necessity "in every case and always, must be truly a part of the offense charged"; and since a violation of section 503 is not always a part of robbery, but may be committed separate and apart from robbery, it is not necessarily included in robbery. The People argue that although a violation of section 503 may not be necessarily included in every robbery, since it may be a part of some robberies it is a necessarily included offense.

[1] The test for determining whether one offense is necessarily included in another was restated by the Supreme Court in the recent case of In re Hess, 45 Cal.2d 171, 288 P.2d 5. The court said, 45 Cal.2d at page 174, 288 P.2d at page 7:

"The test in this state of a necessarily included offense is simply that where an offense cannot be committed without necessarily committing another offense, the latter is a necessarily included offense." People v. Greer, 30 Cal.2d 589, 596, 184 P.2d 512, 516; see also People v. Kehoe, 33 Cal.2d 711, 713, 204 P.2d 321."

In People v. Greer, 30 Cal.2d 589, 184 P.2d 512, the defendant was charged with statutory rape, Pen.Code, § 261(1), and lewd and lascivious conduct, Pen.Code, § 288, arising out of the same act. In a previous trial he was charged not only with these identical offenses but also with contributing to the delinquency of a minor, the same person on whom the rape and lewd and lascivious conduct were alleged to have been committed. Welf. & Inst.Code, § 702. In that trial he was found guilty of violating section 702, but the jury disagreed as to the counts of statutory rape and lewd and lascivious conduct. In the second trial he pleaded double jeopardy and offered to prove the conviction under section 702. The offer was refused. On review he contended the refusal constituted reversible error. After stating the test of a necessarily included offense, as repeated in In re Hess, supra, 45 Cal.2d 171, 288 P.2d 5, the court stated, 30 Cal.2d at page 597, 184 P.2d at page 517:

"In the light of this rule, ['A conviction of the lesser is held to be a bar to [the] prosecution for the greater on the theory that to convict of the greater would be to convict twice of the lesser.'] the error of the trial court in this case is apparent. Statutory rape (section 261(1)) and lewd and lascivious conduct (section 288) are offenses against minors under 18 and 14 years of age respectively, whereas section 702 protects minors under 21. Consequently, the age groups covered by sections 261(1) and 288 of the Penal Code are necessarily included within the age group covered by section 702 of the Welfare and Institutions Code. It is inconceivable that the acts described in sections 261(1) and 288 would not contribute to the delinquency of a minor. [Citations.] Since every violation of sections 261(1) and 288 is also a violation of section 702, the offense defined in the latter is an offense necessarily included in the offenses defined in sections 261(1) and 288. [Citation.]

"Respondent contends, however, that all three of the offenses involved herein contain different elements. It is true, that each offense is stated differently in the codes and that defendant could have contributed to the delinquency of a minor without committing statutory rape or a lewd and lascivious act. [Citation.] Nevertheless, the converse is not true. We are holding, not that these offenses are identical, but that every violation of sections 261(1) and 288 necessarily constitutes a violation of section 702 and that therefore the offense defined in section 702 is an offense necessarily included in the offenses defined in sections 261(1) and 288."

In People v. Cuevas, 18 Cal.App.2d 151, 63 P.2d 311, it was held that a violation of section 503 may be a distinct offense from theft of the vehicle, Pen.Code, § 484; that where it appears the crime of larceny had been fully completed, the subsequent act in driving the vehicle without the consent of the owner was entirely separate and disconnected from the original theft of it. Also see People v. Jeffries, 47 Cal.App.2d 801, 807, 119 P.2d 190; In re Connell, 68 Cal.App.2d 360, 364, 156 P.2d 483. People v. Crawford, 115 Cal.App.2d 838, at page 841, 252 P.2d 963, says that grand theft of an automobile, which requires an intent to steal, includes a violation of section 503 which may or may not be with an intent to steal.

People v. Pearson, 41 Cal.App.2d 614, at page 618, 107 P.2d 463, at page 465, held that, "The crime of violating section 503 of the Vehicle Code is not included in the crime of robbery or attempted robbery, the elements necessary to be proved being different in each offense." At the time Pearson was decided, section 503 read: "Any person who drives or takes a vehicle not his own, without the consent of the owner thereof and in the absence of the owner," etc. In 1947 the words "and in the absence of the owner" were deleted.

[2] Consideration of the foregoing points to the conclusion that a violation of section 503 of the Vehicle Code is not necessarily included in the crime of robbery. The reasoning of People v. Greer, supra, 30 Cal.2d 589, 184 P.2d 512, and In re Hess, supra, 45 Cal.2d 171, 288 P.2d 5, is that every robbery must necessarily constitute a violation of section 503 in order that the latter be included in the former.

Every violation of section 211 of the Penal Code is not also a violation of section 503 of the Vehicle Code. Robbery can be committed without necessarily violating section 503. A person may drive or take a vehicle not his own, without the consent of the owner, without doing so from his immediate presence and without doing so by means of force or fear.

[3] Since defendant was not charged in the information with a violation of section 503 of the Vehicle Code and since it is not necessarily included in the offense charged, the court acted in excess of its jurisdiction in entering a judgment of conviction of that offense against him. In re Hess, supra, 45 Cal.2d 171, 175, 288 P.2d 5.

[4] Defendant also appealed from a nonexistent verdict. Since trial by jury was waived, there was no verdict.

The appeal from the nonexistent verdict is dismissed. The judgment is reversed.

Hearing Denied Dec. 27, 1956.

Action by taxpayers of an irrigation district against the district, its directors, and an irrigation pipe supplier to enjoin issuance of warrants by the district in payment of a debt for pipe purchased by the district from supplier. The Superior Court, Sacramento County, Malcolm C. Glenn, J., entered judgment for taxpayers and defendants appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Van Dyke, P. J., held that where Districts Securities Commission approved issuance of warrants for payment of irrigation district's debt to pipe supplier, it impliedly approved the contractual arrangement between the district and pipe supplier giving rise to such debt, and statute requiring approval of such contract by the Commission in order to validate the contract was sufficiently complied with by such action of the Commission, and the contractual relations were validated notwithstanding fact that Commission did not act until after the contract had been executed.

Judgment reversed with directions.

VAN DYKE, Presiding Justice.

This is an appeal by the defendants from a judgment which enjoined the Fair Oaks Irrigation District and its directors from paying any part of an indebtedness allegedly due Armco Drainage and Metal Products, Inc., and ordering the district to restore to Armco certain irrigation pipe and accessories which the district claimed to have purchased from Armco but which had not been used.

In the spring of 1951 the district found that there was an urgent need for extensive replacement of sections of its irrigation system. At that time the sale of steel pipe and accessories was regulated by the federal government. Suppliers of such material could not sell freely and could not commit themselves to fill orders. Prices were controlled and vendors could not contract for prices on future deliveries. The district itself was subject to contractual limitations by certain provisions of the Water Code. The directors of the district conferred with representatives of Armco about the purchase of pipe. Each side was aware of the difficulties facing the other. There is no substantial variance in the testimony of the men present at the conference as to what was discussed and as to what arrangements were made. It was understood that Armco could make no definite commitments to furnish any pipe and could not undertake affirmatively to fill any orders that might be placed in the future. But, Armco did agree to furnish pipe to the district as and when they could at prices to be fixed when deliveries were made, and it was agreed that the usual credit arrangements prevailing in the area would be followed, that is, two per cent discount if paid within ten days, net thirty days, and four per cent interest on any balance which was not paid in thirty days. The directors told Armco that they had a five-year plan for the replacement of pipe which was no longer serviceable. The district intended to do the work through their own maintenance crews and told Armco that orders would be placed as the directors should decide. All concerned knew of the limitations placed upon the district in making purchase contracts, particularly the provisions of Sections 24250 through 24253 of the Water Code. It was the consensus that the district would have to make payments when, as one witness said, "it legally could". No further discussions were held, but commencing in August of 1951 and terminating in January of 1952 the district placed twenty-one orders with Armco which were filled. Each shipment was separately billed. The total purchases amounted to $43,007.40. Up to the time judgment was entered herein no payments had been made nor had Armco made a demand for payment. Some $24,000 worth of the materials delivered to the district had been used and the balance remained stockpiled in the district's yards.

In June of 1952 the respondents, as residents of, and taxpayers in the district, brought this action. They alleged that the district and Armco had purportedly entered into a contract, under the terms of which Armco was demanding $43,007.40; that when the contract was made the district did not have appropriate funds sufficient to meet the payments thereunder; that no assessment had been authorized; and that the contract had not been approved by the Districts Securities Commission. Respondents asked the court to declare the contract illegal and to restrain the issuance of warrants in payment of the purported debt.

After the suit was filed, the district initiated proceedings before the Districts Securities Commission in accordance with the provisions of Section 24253 of the Water Code. This section provides that:

"If the largest payment to be made under any one lease or contract for any property exceeds in any year an amount equal to one-fourth of 1 percent of the total valuation of the land in the district according to the assessment next equalized before the making of the lease or contract, the lease or contract shall not be valid unless either:

"1. The district has appropriate funds on hand at the time the lease or contract is made, sufficient to meet all payments to be made thereunder and in excess of the district's normal requirements for the period in which the payments are to be made; or,

"2. Unless a particular purpose or emergency assessment sufficient to meet all of the principal payments to become due under the lease or contract is authorized; or,

"3. The lease or contract is approved by the Districts Securities Commission." (Italics added.)

During the period which is material here the assessed valuation of land in the district was $400,000, and therefore any contract or lease which called for a payment in any one year in excess of $1,000 would be invalid unless it was validated under one of the provisions of the section referred to.

It is patent that if, as the trial court found, the entire amount of the indebtedness arose out of a contract which was made during the conference previously referred to, such a contract was invalid unless section 24253 was complied with. It is equally patent from the findings as to the amounts of the various orders which were filled that if they be considered as separate contracts many would be within the requirements of the section. It is conceded that if the contract or contracts are valid they can only be so because the commission approved them since neither of the other alternatives was followed.

[1] The legislation under review possesses certain characteristics that are important. Unlike many constitutional and statutory limitations placed upon the incurring of debts by various public agencies, this legislation does not purport to limit the total debt which an irrigation district may incur. The legislation has to do only with contracts concerning the acquisition or the leasing of property for district uses. The right to contract or lease is given expressly. No total limitation of district debts so to be incurred is provided. By the plain wording of section 24253 the district, in the discretion of its board of directors, is free to pledge its credit to any total amount, for any period of time, so long as payments to be made in any one year do not exceed the designated amount. The section does not limit the number of contracts which may be so made. So far as validation by approval of the commission be concerned, the legislation contemplates that such approval may be asked as to a contract in question after the parties have executed it. In such a case, the approval of the commission, if obtained, has the effect of validating a contract already made, but which, for its effectiveness, requires such approval. The legislation does not specify the time within which such approval may be applied for and accorded.

After the suit was filed, on November 15, 1952, the district filed an application for approval with the commission which recited that the district was indebted to Armco in the amount of $43,007 and to the Sacramento Pipe Company for $13,000 for pipe which had been purchased for the purpose of making necessary replacements in the irrigation system. It was stated that a taxpayer's suit had been filed in connection with the Armco obligation and all orders of the court made in that action were referred to. The application asked for permission to enter into new contracts with Armco and Sacramento Pipe Company covering the indebtedness. The application asked also for permission to issue warrants partly for the purpose of satisfying the outstanding indebtedness and partly for the purpose of finishing the replacement program. After a thorough investigation the commission authorized the issuance of warrants in the amount of $100,000 for the payment of the debts and for the completion of the replacement project.

By appropriate pleadings the action of the commission was brought to the attention of the court before the court proceedings were concluded. Appellants herein then contended that any invalidity in the contractual relations between Armco and the district was obviated by the action of the commission, with the legal result that the court could not restrain the payment of the indebtedness to Armco. However, the trial court refused to stay its hand and entered judgment against the district.

[2] We are of the opinion that the trial court erred. It is apparent that the commission, by approving the payment of the debt to Armco, impliedly approved the prior contractual arrangement between the district and Armco out of which that debt arose. It is this court's opinion that the statute requiring approval of contracts such as here involved was sufficiently complied with whether the Armco-district transaction resulted in one or twenty-one contracts, and that between the beginning of this action and the rendition of the judgment appealed from the affair had been cleared up, the contractual relations validated, and the payment of the debt provided for. As a result, the situation had reached a stage whereby the court should have stayed its hand and dismissed the action as having become moot. In our view, it was error to enter any judgment other than one of dismissal.

Accordingly, the judgment appealed from is reversed, with directions to the trial court to enter a dismissal of the cause.

PER CURIAM.

Plaintiffs brought this action to enjoin defendant city, its mayor and the members of its Civil Service Commission from "permitting, requiring or allowing" employees of the city's street repair and street cleaning departments to sign waivers of premium pay for work done before 8 o'clock a.m. After trial, judgment was entered in favor of defendants. Plaintiffs appeal.

Section 151.3 of the charter of the City and County of San Francisco provides that when "any groups or crafts" established a rate of pay in private employment through collective bargaining agreements with employers, and such rates prevail generally in private employment in San Francisco, the supervisors shall fix such rate of pay as the compensation for such groups or crafts in the employ of the city and county.

For some years before filing of this action, the collective bargaining agreement between General Laborers Union No. 261 and private employers had provided that work performed before 8 o'clock a.m. be paid for at one and one-half times the regular hourly rate. Pursuant to the charter, these provisions had been carried into the ordinance fixing wages for city employees. Another section of this same ordinance provided "The working conditions established herein in accordance with the provisions of collective bargaining agreements shall be maintained in the City service except when a provision is specifically waived by the employee concerned." Such waiver shall be in writing and filed with the Civil Service Commission."

The agreement for private employment provides that "where * * * existing traffic conditions, job conditions, or weather conditions render it desirable to start the day shift at an earlier hour, such starting time may, with the mutual consent of the individual employer and local union * * * be made earlier." The city's wage ordinance contains the same provision, except that the phrase "with the mutual consent of the individual employer and local union" is omitted.

For more than 20 years most of the employees in the street cleaning and street repair bureaus had commenced work before 8 a.m. and worked an eight-hour day with time off for lunch. The same practice continued until 1954, and no demand for premium pay for work before 8 a.m. was made until that year. Then the union demanded premium pay for such employees. At that time, defendant city announced its plan to start its street crews at 8 a.m. It circulated waiver forms among employees in the laborers classification of the street department, announcing that those who did sign would start work at the long-established hour, while those who did not sign would start work at 8. These forms were signed by a great majority of the employees in both branches of the street department. Each recites that the employee waives those provisions of the specified collective bargaining agreement for private employment which require premium pay for work performed before 8 a.m., and recites the signer's agreement to accept pay at straight time for such work, and further provides "This waiver of premium compensation for work performed before 8:00 a.m. and not before 7:00 a.m. is made for the purpose of inducing the City and County of San Francisco to reestablish the 7:00 a.m. or 7:30 a.m. beginning time of the work day because such earlier beginning time is more convenient on account of existing traffic conditions, job conditions, or weather conditions."

[1, 2] There is testimony that the large number of trucks dispatched from the city yard would create severe traffic congestion at the yard if all employees began work at the same hour. The evidence also shows that traffic congestion on the city streets is greatest from 8 to 9 a.m. Defendants offered testimony that no coercion was used by it to secure signature of the waivers. There was some evidence from which a contrary inference could be drawn, but the trial court found that "each employee who signed such written waiver did so freely and voluntarily." This finding upon conflicting evidence is not to be disturbed on appeal. Memorial Hosp. Ass'n v. Pacific Grape Products Co., 45 Cal.2d 634, 290 P.2d 481.

Appellants contend, however, that the waivers are void and unenforceable. They cite authorities from other jurisdictions for the rule that "a contract whereby a public employee agrees to perform services required of him by law for less compensation than that fixed by law is contrary to public policy and void." 160 A.L.R. 491. But the California rule appears to be to the contrary, Scott v. City of Los Angeles, 85 Cal.App.2d 327, 193 P.2d 25; Gamble v. City of Sacramento, 43 Cal.App.2d 200, 110 P.2d 530; Huntsman v. Board of State Harbor Com'rs, 17 Cal.App.2d 749, 62 P.2d 771 [hearing denied by Supreme Court in each of these three cases]; Myers v. City of Calipatria, 140 Cal.App. 295, 35 P.2d 377; Coyne v. Rennie, 97 Cal. 590, 32 P. 578, where the waiver is free and voluntary.

[3] Even if the rule of other jurisdictions were followed in California, it would not aid appellants here. The rule is based upon the acceptance by the employee of "less compensation than that fixed by law." But here the very ordinance fixing the compensation contains specific provisions for an earlier starting time and for written waiver by the employee. Many of the decisions from other jurisdictions relied upon by appellants are based upon the reasoning that an employing member of the executive branch cannot undo the legislative act of fixing the compensation of the employee. See Glavey v. United States, 182 U.S. 595, 21 S.Ct. 891, 45 L.Ed. 1247. But such reasoning also is without application to the case at bar, for here the legislative body has itself made provision for the waiver.

[4] Appellants also argue that the city's acceptance of waivers constitutes a violation of Sections 222 and 223 of the Labor Code. This contention is not renewed in the closing brief and may have been abandoned. In any event, the rule seems clear that a chartered city is not subject to general law as to municipal matters covered by the charter. City of Pasadena v. Charle- ville, 215 Cal. 384, 10 P.2d 745. It is doubtful that the Labor Code applies to employees under a comprehensive municipal civil service system. Nutter v. City of Santa Monica, 74 Cal.App.2d 292, 168 P.2d 741 [hearing denied by Supreme Court].

The judgment is affirmed.

Civ. 21923.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 2, California.

Oct. 26, 1956.

Rehearing Denied Nov. 19, 1956.

Hearing Granted Dec. 19, 1956.

Stockholder's derivative action. From a judgment for defendants, entered by the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Philbrick McCoy and Aubrey N. Irwin, JJ., plaintiff appealed. On defendants' motion to dismiss the appeal, the District Court of Appeal, Ashburn, J., held that corporation, whose corporate powers had been suspended for non-payment of its franchise tax, could not have maintained action for misappropriation of corporate funds and property, and that stockholder had no greater rights than corporation.

Motion granted.

tors or managers in office at time that corporation forfeited its charter for non-payment of license tax and penalties imposed by the original corporation license tax act, which was repealed in 1913, is of narrow application, being limited to suspensions occurring while such license tax act was in effect. 3. Corporations \Rightarrow 630(1)

Corporation, whose corporate powers had been suspended for non-payment of its franchise tax, could not have maintained action for misappropriation of corporate funds and property. West's Ann.Corporations Code, § 834; West's Ann.Rev. & Tax.Code, §§ 23301, 23303.

Hy Schwartz, Beverly Drive, for appellant.

Raymond R. Roberts, Van Nuys, for respondents.

ASHBURN, Justice.

Respondents Norman and Haskins move to dismiss plaintiff's appeal upon this ground: That the complaint asserts an alleged cause of action belonging to defendant Norman Decorating Co., Inc., a domestic corporation, and plaintiff's action, brought by him as a stockholder, is derivative in nature; that the corporate right to do business has been suspended for non-payment of its franchise tax; that there has been no reinstatement or revivor of that right, and hence the corporation cannot prosecute or defend any suit; that, as the cause of action belongs to the corporation, a stockholder cannot maintain a derivative suit to recover for the benefit of the corporation.

Defendants' objection to introduction of evidence under the amended complaint and supplemental complaint was sustained in the trial court upon the ground that the action is derivative in nature and the pleading fails to comply with the requirements of § 834, Corporations Code. Judgment having been entered in favor of defendants, plaintiff appeals therefrom. He also purports to appeal from an order taxing costs and denying motion to strike the costs, but there is no motion for such an order and no such order in the record at bar.

If this is a derivative action and if the corporate franchise has been suspended pursuant to § 23301, Revenue and Taxation Code and not revived, as contended by respondents, the motion to dismiss must be granted. That section of the code provides for suspension of the corporate powers of a domestic corporation for nonpayment of its franchise tax, "[e]xcept for the purpose of amending the articles of incorporation to set forth a new name". Section 23303 makes it a misdemeanor to exercise or purport to exercise any corporate powers of the suspended corporation "except as hereinabove permitted," referring obviously to § 23301. The suspension becomes effective upon transmittal of the information from the Franchise Tax Board to the Secretary of State, § 23302. Section 23305 affords a right to relief from the suspension upon making proper application and payment of all delinquent taxes, interest and penalties due under that part of the code. This right is given to any stockholder or creditor or a majority of the surviving trustees or directors of the corporation.

During such suspension the corporate disability extends to the defense of an action and the right of appeal from an adverse judgment. Boyle v. Lakeview Creamery Co., 9 Cal.2d 16, 19-20, 68 P.2d 968; Fidelity Metals Corp. v. Risley, 77 Cal.App.2d 377, 383, 175 P.2d 592. As the cause of action belongs to the corporation, Melancon v. Superior Court, 42 Cal.2d 698, 708, 268 P.2d 1050, the stockholder who sues in its right is subject to the same limitations as the corporation would be if suing in its own name; his status is that of trustee and any judgment recovered inures to the benefit of the corporation (12 Cal.Jur.2d, § 221, p. 775); it follows that if the corporation cannot maintain the action or appeal the stockholder may not do so; he cannot accomplish by indirection the thing that the statute prohibits when done directly. See Smith v. Lewis, 211 Cal. 294, 298, 295 P. 37; Ransome-Crummey Co. v. Superior Court, 188 Cal. 393, 397, 205 P. 446; Grace-land v. Peebler, 50 Cal.App.2d 545, 123 P.2d 527.

The amended complaint in the instant case presented a dual aspect. It complained of defendant Norman's interference with plaintiff's exercise of his rights as an officer and as holder of a majority of the stock of the corporation, a personal wrong to him; it also alleged numerous misappropriations of corporate funds and property, constituting wrongs to the corporation. "Under proper circumstances a stockholder may bring a representative action or derivative action on behalf of the corporation. [Citations.] But 'If the injury is one to the plaintiff as a stockholder and to him individually, and not to the corporation, as where the action is based on a contract to which he is a party, or on a right belonging severally to him, or on a fraud affecting him directly, it is an individual action. * * * The action is derivative, i. e., in the corporate right, if the gravamen of the complaint is injury to the corporation, or to the whole body of its stock or property without any severance or distribution among individual holders, or if it seeks to recover assets for the corporation or to prevent the dissipation of its assets.' [Citations.] And a stockholder may sue as an individual where he is directly and individually injured although the corporation may also have a cause of action for the same wrong." Sutter v. General Petroleum Corp., 28 Cal.2d 525, 530, 170 P.2d 898, 901, 167 A.L.R. 271. One of the cases cited in support of the last stated proposition is Witherbee v. Bowles, 201 N.Y. 427, 95 N.E. 27, which holds that an interference with a shareholder's right to exercise a majority stockholder's control of the corporation is a wrong inflicted upon him individually. 95 N.E. at page 28. In effect it also holds that he may elect to sue in his own right or on behalf of the corporation, or both, where the facts give rise to a cause of action in favor of each. Ham- mer v. Werner, 239 App.Div. 38, 265 N.Y.S. 172, 179, says: "The fact that a particular act of directors may constitute a wrong to the corporation which may be righted ordinarily on behalf of the corporation does not bar a stockholder from having redress if that act effects a separate and distinct wrong to him independently of the wrong to the corporation. Redress of this latter wrong is available to him personally despite the right of a present stockholder to redress the wrong in a derivative action so far as it relates to the corporation." See also, 18 C.J.S., Corporations, § 559, p. 1275.

During the argument upon the objection to introduction of evidence in support of the amended and supplemental complaints (which had been filed on May 9, 1950 and May 31, 1951, respectively), counsel for plaintiff conceded that those aspects of the pleading which asserted a wrong personal to his client had been eliminated by the ruling and the sequelae of the ruling in Reed v. Norman, 41 Cal.2d 17, 256 P.2d 930, wherein it was held that 105 shares of defendant Norman's stock were void for non-compliance with the cash requirement of the corporation's permit to sell stock, and hence that the election of directors at which he voted these shares was illegal. This holding reduced Norman's ownership to 150 shares and left plaintiff the owner of 245 shares, thus being the controlling stockholder. The court also remarked, 41 Cal.2d on page 22, 256 P.2d on page 933: "It seems appropriate, however, to call attention to the fact that Reed's rights with respect to the accounting may be derivative in nature and that the record indicates that he has not met the requirements of section 834 of the Corporations Code." That decision was rendered in superior court case No. 573,954, which is a companion to the case at bar. But an appeal in the case now before us (superior court No. 572,897) was decided at the same time and upon the same principles, it being held that "that decision is controlling herein." Reed v. Norman, 41 Cal.2d 901, 256 P.2d 933. These rulings were made on May 12, 1953, and were followed by entry of judgment in case

No. 573,954 to the effect that 105 shares of the stock issued to Norman were void and the election of Norman and Haskins to the board of directors on April 27, 1950, was illegal.

[1] As above indicated, when the trial of the instant case started on April 21, 1955, counsel for plaintiff conceded, under quizzing by the court, that the allegations relative to plaintiff's personal right of action had been disposed of through the ruling of the Supreme Court and the judgment entered pursuant thereto. The argument thenceforth proceeded upon the assumption that the action is derivative and the matter was decided on that basis. Plaintiff tendered a second amended complaint which alleged the fact of the Supreme Court holding that 105 shares of Norman's stock were void, set forth numerous misappropriations of corporate funds and property, asked no relief in favor of plaintiff personally, but prayed for an accounting in favor of the corporation. The arguments set forth in the opening brief in this court are made upon the assumption that the action is by nature derivative. The motion papers assert that to be a fact and appellant's counsel has not denied it. We hold therefore that the instant action is a derivative one and cannot be maintained if the corporation itself could not do so.

Opposing counsel rely upon different statutes in discussing the effect of the suspension of the corporate franchise. Plaintiff says that § 5904, Corporations Code is controlling. So far as pertinent, it says: "The directors or managers in office at the time that any corporation, domestic or foreign, forfeited its charter or right to do business in this State for nonpayment of the license tax and penalties imposed by Chapter 386, Statutes of 1905, are trustees of the corporation and its shareholders or members. Such trustees have full power to settle the affairs of the corporation and to maintain or defend any action or proceeding then pending in behalf of or against it or to take such legal proceedings as may be necessary to fully settle its affairs. Such trustees may be sued in any of the courts of this State by any person having a claim against the corporation." Respondents rely on § 23301, Revenue and Taxation Code, which says: "Except for the purpose of amending the articles of incorporation to set forth a new name, the corporate powers, rights and privileges of a domestic taxpayer shall be suspended, and the exercise of the corporate powers, rights and privileges of a foreign taxpayer in this State shall be forfeited if any of the following conditions occur: * * *." Here follow specifications of defaults in the payment of franchise taxes. Section 23303, as above pointed out, makes it a misdemeanor, to attempt or purport to exercise any of the corporate powers "except as hereinabove permitted". The certificate of the Secretary of State evidencing the fact of suspension refers specifically to § 23302 of the same code, leaving no doubt that the suspension occurred under § 23301.

[2] Section 5904, Corporations Code, is carefully limited to corporations whose right to do business was forfeited "for nonpayment of the license tax and penalties imposed by Chapter 386, Statutes of 1905". That was the original Corporation License Tax Act. It was repealed in 1913, Stats. 1913, Ch. 336, p. 680. The result is that § 5904 and related sections, though still on the books, are of narrow application, being limited to suspensions occurring while a former statute was in effect.

[3] Section 23301, Revenue and Taxation Code, permits the exercise of corporate powers after suspension only for the purpose of amending the articles to set forth a new name, and declares it a misdemeanor to attempt or purport to exercise such powers for any other purpose. This language (quoted above) is substantially the same as that of the Act which was under consideration in Boyle v. Lakeview Creamery Co., 9 Cal.2d 16, 68 P.2d 968. Though the phrasing is slightly different the meaning is the same. The court said in that case, 9 Cal.2d at page 19, 68 P.2d at page 969: "From a consideration of these statutes, the policy is clearly to prohibit the delinquent corporation from enjoying the ordinary privileges of a going concern, in order that some pressure will be brought to bear to force the payment of taxes. Under the Political Code, § 3669c, which covers certain state taxes other than those specified by the Franchise Tax Act, the penalty is not made too drastic; the corporation may not sue, but it may defend. * * * But the exception covering the defense of actions is omitted from Franchise Tax Act, which prescribes the entire procedure of levy and collection of the taxes imposed thereunder, as well as the penalties for delinquency. The omission seems deliberate, and indicates the legislative intention that such corporations shall be deprived of the power to defend suits. The statute expressly deprives the corporation of all 'corporate powers, rights and privileges,' subject to one exception, which is specifically set forth, the right to amend the articles to change the name. As the court declared in Ransome-Crummey Co. v. Superior Court, supra, 188 Cal. 393, 397, 205 P. 446, 448: 'During the time its taxes were unpaid, petitioner was shorn of all rights save those expressly reserved by the statutes.' The conclusion which we are forced to draw is that the appellant corporation has lost the right to defend the suit in question, and since it has no right to defend, it has no right to appeal from an adverse decision. See, also, 6A Cal.Jur. § 864, p. 1469." That case is controlling here. There is no right to maintain this action.

Any seeming hardship in this ruling appears to have been invited by appellant. The notice of motion to dismiss was served on August 27, 1956; the suspension point was there made and certificate of the Secretary of State attached thereto; both refer to the applicable statute. A stockholder may effect such a revivor, § 23305, Rev. & Tax.Code; appellant has done nothing to that end but has mistakenly stood upon Corporations Code, § 5904.

The motion to dismiss this appeal is granted.

Angelus A. ALLEGRETTI, Plaintiff and Appellant,

v.

The BOARD OF OSTEOPATHIC EXAMINERS OF STATE OF CALIFORNIA, Glen D. Cayler, D.O., Vincent Carroll, D.O., Charles C. Atkins, D.O., Eugene C. Darnall, D.O., Russell M. Husted, D.O., members of said Board, Philip C. Farman, Hearing Officer of said Board, Defendants and Respondents.

Civ. 21493.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

Oct. 25, 1956.

Osteopath brought mandamus proceeding against the Board of Osteopathic Examiners to annul action of board in finding osteopath guilty of violating the Business and Professions Code because telephone company erroneously listed osteopath as an "M.D." in the classified section of its telephone directory. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, William J. Palmer, J., entered a judgment adverse to the osteopath, and he appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Shinn, P. J., held that evidence before Superior Court did not establish as a matter of law either that osteopath acted innocently in permitting his name to be accidentally carried under an improper classification in the directory or with ulterior motive.

Judgment reversed.

Vallée, J., dissented.

1. Physicians and Surgeons ☞11(2)

Where telephone company, because of its mistake, listed osteopath as an "M.D." in classified section of telephone directory, and Board of Osteopathic Examiners charged osteopath with improperly listing himself as an "M.D.", question was not merely whether osteopath had actual knowledge of erroneous listing, but was whether he had reasonable cause to believe that his name was incorrectly listed and refrained from making inquiry with intention of taking advantage of company's mistake, and, if his omission to make inquiry was willful rather than innocent, his lack of knowledge would be no defense. West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, § 2396.

2. Physicians and Surgeons \Rightarrow 11(2)

Where telephone company, because of its mistake, listed osteopath as an "M.D." in classified section of telephone directory, and Board of Osteopathic Examiners charged osteopath with improperly listing himself as an "M.D.", osteopath was guilty of the charge, if he had actual knowledge of the improper listing of his name or he had reason to believe that it might be improperly listed and willfully with dishonest motive refrained from making any inquiry. West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, § 2396.

3. Physicians and Surgeons \Rightarrow 11(2)

Where telephone company, because of its mistake, listed osteopath as an "M.D." in classified section of telephone directory, and Board of Osteopathic Examiners charged osteopath with improperly listing himself as an "M.D.", osteopath would not be guilty of the charge if he was merely guilty of inaction in suffering his name to be accidentally carried under an improper classification in the telephone directory, and if his only fault was his failure to discover the mistake. West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, § 2396.

4. Mandamus \Rightarrow 168(4)

In mandamus proceeding by osteopath against Board of Osteopathic Examiners to annul action of board in finding osteopath guilty of violating the Business and Professions Code because telephone company erroneously listed osteopath as an "M.D." in the classified section of telephone directory, evidence before Superior Court did not establish as a matter of law either that osteopath acted innocently in permitting his name to be accidentally carried under an improper classification in the directory or with ulterior motive. J. Robert Meserve, Los Angeles, for respondents.

SHINN, Presiding Justice.

We have for consideration an appeal of Angelus A. Allegretti from a judgment denying a writ of mandate annulling the action of The Board of Osteopathic Examiners of the State of California adjudging appellant guilty of violations of certain sections of the Business and Professions Code and suspending his license for the period of one year, also, suspending execution of said order for all but 60 days of said one year period and placing him on probation for a period of two years upon certain specified conditions.

The charges were filed by an inspector of the board. The accusations were made on information and belief and were of a serious nature. It was charged (1) that during the years 1952 and 1953 petitioner carried a professional advertisement using the suffix "M.D." in the classified section of a Los Angeles telephone directory; (2) that between October 3, 1951 and September 29, 1952, he used the same term in contracts, correspondence, conversations, representations and business dealings with the West Valley Telephone Exchange and Secretarial Service, Reseda, California; (3) that for approximately one and a half years prior to January 1954 he used the suffix "M.D." in contracts, correspondence, conversations, representations and business dealings with the manager, officers and staff of the Magnolia Park Hospital, Burbank, California, and (4) that for approximately two and a half years prior to March 1, 1954, he practiced his profession without having first registered his certificate with the County Clerk of Los Angeles County.

In the course of the proceedings before the board and the court there was a failure to substantiate any of the charges except the first one which related to the improper listing of petitioner's name in the 1952 and 1953 directories. The other charges were dismissed. In the final hearing before the board petitioner was found guilty of the improper listing of his name as an "M.D." in the Los Angeles telephone directories in violation of section 2396 of the Business and Professions Code,¹ and the charge of failing to register his certificate with the county clerk, § 2340, was disregarded, in accordance with findings the court had made in ordering a reconsideration by the board.

Allegretti petitioned for a writ of mandate, seeking to set aside and vacate the order of suspension after his petition for reconsideration was denied by the board, an alternative writ of mandate was issued, respondent made its return thereto and the matter was heard and submitted. The court concluded that petitioner was guilty of "a technical violation" of Charge (1) (using M.D.), and that he was not guilty of Charge (4) (failing to register his certificate). Judgment pursuant to such conclusions was made and entered, granting a peremptory writ of mandate ordering the board to vacate and set aside its decision and also requiring it to reconsider the matter of "penalty and disciplinary action against petitioner in the light of the court's findings of fact, conclusions of law and judgment" and to make a return thereon. Respondents' first return to the peremptory writ was ruled a nullity since petitioner had not received notice of the hearing at which the penalty and disciplinary action were reconsidered, and the matter was sent back to the respondent board for reconsideration. Respondents' second return to the writ alleged that notice was given petitioner, that the matter was fully argued by both sides, that after argument the board fully considered the findings of fact, conclusions of law and judgments of the superior court; that Charge (4) (failing to file his certificate) was wholly excluded from consideration, and thereafter made its findings which again found appellant to be guilty of Charge (1) and ordered his suspension in accordance with its first order. Petitioner objected to said return. The court on October 28, 1955, filed its "Comment and Orders after Return of Respondent to Writ of Mandate" in which it found that respondents had complied with its orders in regard to said writ of mandate and discharged them from further duties in regard to said writ. Thereupon petitioner gave notice of appeal from said judgment and order of October 28, 1955.

Findings of the court were made January 19, 1955. So far as material to the points to be considered on the present appeal the findings of the court were as follows:

"1. That Petitioner did not cause his name to be listed as an M.D. physician and surgeon in the classified section of the Contra Costa County Telephone Directory of June 1945.

"2. That the listing of the Petitioner as an M.D. physician and surgeon in the classified section of the Contra Costa County Telephone Directory of June 1945 was an error on the part of the telephone company, which petitioner corrected as promptly as practicable. [Findings 1 and 2 refer only to an item of evidence that was before the board, and not to the charges.]

"3. That the Petitioner did not sign an application for directory advertising as an M.D. physician and surgeon in the professional classified section of any telephone directory issued and distributed in the Los Angeles area by the Pacific Telephone and Telegraph Company during the years 1952 and 1953.

"4. That the listing of the Petitioner as an M.D. physician and surgeon in the professional advertising classified section of the telephone di-

1. "Unless the holder of any certificate provided for in this chapter or any preceding medical practice act has been granted the degree of doctor of medicine after the completion of a full course of study as prescribed by an approved medical school in accordance with the provisions of this chapter, or any preceding medical practice act, the use of the term or suffix 'M.D.' constitutes unprofessional conduct within the meaning of this chapter."

rectory issued and distributed in the Los Angeles area by the Pacific Telephone and Telegraph Company during the years 1952 and 1953, as referred to in paragraph III of the Accusation here in question, was a mistake on the part of said telephone company.

"5. That the Petitioner in each of seventeen months prior to August 25, 1953 received a bill from the telephone company showing that he was charged a fee for 'directory advertising' and that he did not do anything to verify the charge or the listing or to cause the listing to be discontinued.

"6. That on August 25, 1953, about the time when petitioner learned of the listing of his name as M.D. physician and surgeon in the classified telephone directory, he gave his cancellation order by telephone to the telephone company, requiring the discontinuance of such listing."

The only relevant conclusion of law was the following:

"1. That Petitioner was negligent in not verifying and learning what directory advertising he was billed for in any of the 17 monthly billings mentioned in paragraph 5 of the Findings of Fact, and for which advertising he paid, and the union of the original mistake of the telephone company and the continuing negligence of Petitioner caused him to be guilty of at least a technical violation of the law as charged in Subdivision 1 of Paragraph III of the Accusation."

The court's "Comment and Orders after Return of Respondents to Writ of Mandate" stated that in the court's opinion the penalty imposed was far too severe "in the light of the facts found", but it also stated that "the Respondent Board and members thereof have complied at least technically with the orders of the court, and ought to be, and now are, discharged from any further duty in the matter." No other order or judgment was entered. By this order the court did not expressly affirm or annul the final order of the board. It merely allowed it to stand.

The final order of the court is deemed by the parties to be the final judgment. We think it should be so regarded. It was entered after the final decision of the board. The judgment first entered vacated the first order of the board. The peremptory writ required the board to make a return and it was contemplated that further judicial action would be taken. "The general rule applicable in determining whether a judgment is final or merely interlocutory, as deducible from the authorities, is that if anything further in the nature of judicial action on the part of the court is essential to the final determination of the rights of the parties the judgment is interlocutory." 28 Cal.Jur.2d 625. The judgment which ordered issuance of a peremptory writ has been properly regarded by the parties as an interlocutory judgment.

Necessarily, the final order of the court must have findings on which to rest. The only findings were those we have mentioned and they form the basis for the final judgment. These must be examined in order to determine whether they are sufficient to dispose of the material issues in the trial to the court and whether they are sufficient to justify a judgment affirming the order of the board.

Before entering upon a discussion of the findings and the evidence we should state what we believe to be the determinative factual issue. There is no doubt that petitioner was improperly listed in the telephone directory as an "M.D." as found by the court. There was ample evidence to support the finding that the erroneous listing was the result of a mistake on the part of the telephone company. There was also evidence which the court could properly have believed that petitioner caused a cancellation of the listing on August 25, 1953, "about the time when petitioner learned of the listing of his name as an M.D. physician and surgeon." Petitioner paid an extra charge of 50 cents per month for directory advertising for a period of 17 months. The court found that he was negligent in not finding out what the charges were for or how his name was listed. This finding, as we shall see, was inconclusive. Petitioner could have been negligent in these respects and yet innocent of any wrongful intention. Upon the other hand the finding that he was negligent does not acquit him of having acted in bad faith and with ulterior motives.

[1] The question is not merely whether petitioner had actual knowledge of the erroneous listing. It is rather the question whether he had reasonable cause to believe that his name was or might be incorrectly listed and refrained from making inquiry with the intention of taking advantage of the telephone company's mistake, if a mistake were being made. If his omission to make inquiry was wilful rather than innocent his lack of knowledge would be no defense to a charge that he made use of the suffix "M.D." The basic question, therefore, was whether his professed ignorance was the result of carelessness or culpability.

The court's finding No. 1 was as to an evidentiary matter. Petitioner was listed as an "M.D." in the Contra Costa directory in 1945. There was conflicting evidence as to whether he was responsible for the error. The court found that he was not. No doubt the purpose of the finding was to direct the board to disregard the Contra Costa incident in further consideration of the charges; otherwise the finding was of no significance.

Findings Nos. 2, 3 and 4 have support in the evidence. In the March 1952 telephone directory there appeared in the classified section under the heading "Physicians and Surgeons, M. D. Allegretti, A. 18121 Ventura, Tarzana, Dickens 3-8103—if no answer call Dickens 3-1901." In the white section appeared the following: "Allegretti, A.A., Doctor, 4737 Havenhurst, Encino, State 4-7306." Immediately above there appeared "Allegretti, A. Doctor, M.D. 18121 Ventura, Tarzana, Dickens 3-8103." The same entries appeared in the March, 1953 directory. Petitioner first applied for the telephone service in question January 12, 1951. The application which he signed at that time was in evidence. At the time he signed it it read in part as follows: "Allegretti, A. Dr.—No Des.—18221 Ventura Blvd. Tarz." The entry "No Des." indicated that there was no entry to be made under any heading in the classified section of the directory. There was evidence that a clerk of the telephone company entered on the application under the heading "Classified Heading and Code" the following "Physicians & Surgeons M.D. (771)", the figures indicating the described classification. This entry by the clerk was in conflict with the entry "No Des." and the mistake admittedly was that of the telephone company. Although there was a renewal for the listings for the year 1953 it was in evidence that the direction for renewal was received by telephone in response to inquiry by the company and that it was given by Mrs. Allegretti. There was no evidence of any record of the telephone company that had come to the attention of petitioner which stated that he was listed in the directory under an "M.D." classification. Finding No. 5 is likewise supported by the evidence. With respect to finding No. 6 it was undisputed that about August 25, 1953, petitioner became advised as to the manner in which his name was listed and that he then caused the same to be discontinued. The implication of this finding is that petitioner had not learned of the erroneous listing until on or about August 25, 1953. There was sufficient evidence to warrant this implication.

[2] From the penalty that was imposed it should be assumed that the board determined either that petitioner had actual knowledge of the improper listing of his name or that he had reason to believe that it might be improperly listed and wilfully and with dishonest motive refrained from making any inquiry. A decision adverse to petitioner on either of these alternatives would have been sufficient to warrant the finding of guilt and the imposition of a penalty. The court in effect found that petitioner had no actual knowledge but, as we have said, did not make a finding as to the alternative fact which could have been found adversely to petitioner if the court had concluded that he had reasonable grounds for believing that his name might be improperly listed. The necessity for such a finding results from the fact that upon the evidence and the reasonable inferences this critical issue could have been decided in favor of petitioner or adversely to him.

[3] It is not contended by respondent that a physician and surgeon can be subject to discipline for mere negligence. As applicable to physicians and surgeons there are in the Business and Professions Code some 26 specifications of acts which constitute unprofessional conduct. By their very nature they relate to acts intentionally performed and which would not be the consequence of mere negligence. We do not believe that the legislature would denounce as unprofessional conduct the mere inaction of a physician and surgeon in suffering his name to be accidentally carried under an improper classification in the telephone directory when his only fault was the failure to discover a mistake on the part of the company. And we think it is beyond question that the members of the board found that petitioner's conduct was tainted with bad faith and that he was not merely careless. The findings of the court do not conform to the implied findings of the board, which latter would furnish the only basis for adjudication of petitioner's guilt and the imposition of a penalty.

[4] We have discussed the evidence only to the extent thought necessary for a proper understanding of the findings from which the court concluded that petitioner was guilty of "at least a technical violation of the law * * *." We are not concerned with the question whether the findings of the board were in accordance with the weight of the evidence. We do hold that the evidence before the court does not establish as a matter of law either that petitioner acted innocently or with ulterior motives. That is an issue that can only be determined from the evidence adduced upon a retrial and it will be the sole question for decision. If the finding is favorable to petitioner the judgment should be that the order of the board be annulled and the charges dismissed. If the finding is adverse to him the order should be affirmed.

The judgment is reversed.

Clara HESSE, Plaintiff and Appellant,

v.

N. F. VINATIERI et al., Defendants and Respondents.

Civ. 21916.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 2, California.

Oct. 26, 1956.

Rehearing Denied Nov. 19, 1956.

Hearing Denied Dec. 19, 1956.

Pedestrian, who was struck by first automobile, brought action against driver and owner of second automobile, on ground that driver of second automobile negligently caused driver of first automobile to run on sidewalk and strike pedestrian. The pedestrian sought to avoid the bar of the statute of limitations on ground of concealment by driver of second automobile of alleged cause of action against him when he made his report of the accident to the police. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Aubrey N. Irwin, J., entered judgment of dismissal, and the pedestrian appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Ashburn, J., held that complaint, which did not allege that driver of second automobile, at time of making his report to police, knew that his statement was untrue, or that he did not believe it to be true, or that statement was not warranted by the information he had, did not charge a fraud or fraudulent concealment and did not avoid bar of the statute of limitations, and that the report to the police was of such a nature that pedestrian had no right to rely on it, and that therefore it could not be used to avoid the bar of the statute of limitations.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Limitation of Actions ⇨179(2)

In action by pedestrian, who was struck by first automobile, against driver and owner of second automobile, on ground that driver of second automobile negligently caused driver of first automobile to run on sidewalk and strike pedestrian, wherein pedestrian sought to avoid bar of statute of limitations on ground of concealment by driver of second automobile of pedestrian's cause of action against him when he made his report of accident to police, petition which did not allege that driver of second automobile, at time of making report to police, knew that his statement was untrue, or that he did not believe it to be true, or that statement was not warranted by information he had, did not charge fraud or fraudulent concealment which would avoid bar of statute of limitations. West's Ann. Code Civ.Proc., §§ 340, subd. 3, 581, subd. 3; West's Ann.Vehicle Code, § 484; West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1572.

2. Limitation of Actions ⇨104(2)

Mere non-disclosure by defendant to plaintiff of plaintiff's alleged cause of action against defendant is not concealment of the cause of action and will not avoid the bar of the statute of limitations, in absence of a fiduciary relationship. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 340, subd. 3.

3. Limitation of Actions ⇨104(2)

In order to avoid the bar of the statute of limitations, on ground that defendant concealed plaintiff's cause of action, there must be some affirmative act of defendant calculated to obscure the existence of a cause of action, and such affirmative act must be factually alleged. West's Ann. Code Civ.Proc., § 340, subd. 3.

4. Limitation of Actions ⇨104(2)

In action by pedestrian, who was struck by first automobile, against driver and owner of second automobile, on ground that driver of second automobile negligently caused driver of first automobile to run on sidewalk and strike pedestrian, wherein pedestrian sought to avoid bar of statute of limitations on ground of concealment by driver of second automobile of pedestrian's cause of action against him when he made his report of accident to police, pedestrian had no right to rely on report made to police. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., §§ 340, subd. 3, 581, subd. 3; West's Ann.Vehicle Code, § 484.

5. Fraud ⇨17, 20

The existence of a duty on the part of defendant to tell truth to plaintiff is an essential basic element of any valid claim of fraud and deceit, and, unless it is intended that plaintiff rely and act on representation by defendant, or unless plaintiff belongs to a class to whom representation is made, no cause of action can arise therefrom. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1711.

6. Limitation of Actions ⇨104(2)

In action by pedestrian, who was struck by first automobile, against driver and owner of second automobile, on ground that driver of second automobile negligently caused driver of first automobile to run on sidewalk and strike pedestrian, wherein pedestrian sought to avoid bar of statute of limitations on ground of concealment by driver of second automobile of pedestrian's cause of action against him when he made his report of accident to police, report to police was not of such a nature that pedestrian had a right to rely on it, and therefore it did not avoid bar of the statute of limitations. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., §§ 340, subd. 3, 581, subd. 3; West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1572; West's Ann.Vehicle Code, §§ 484, 484(a), 488, 488.5.

7. Pleading ⇨34(4)

Even though a pleading is liberally construed in accordance with Code of Civil Procedure, no intendment can be indulged in that pleader has not stated his case as strongly as it was possible to do so. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 452.

8. Pleading ⇨34(4)

Rule that no intendment can be indulged in that pleader has not stated his case as strongly as it was possible to do so was peculiarly applicable where plaintiff declined to amend after leave granted, and in such posture of the case all ambiguities were resolved against the plaintiff.

9. Appeal and Error ⇨916(1)

On appeal from judgment rendered after refusal to amend a complaint to which a demurrer has been sustained, it must be presumed that the pleader has stated his case as strongly as it can be stated in his favor and all ambiguities and uncertainties must be resolved against him.

10. Limitation of Actions ⇨104(2)

In action by pedestrian, who was struck by first automobile, against driver and owner of second automobile, on ground that driver of second automobile negligently caused driver of first automobile to run on sidewalk and strike pedestrian, wherein pedestrian sought to avoid bar of statute of limitations on ground of concealment by driver of second automobile of pedestrian's cause of action against him when he made his report of accident to police, alleged fact that report to police was not in writing and signed by driver of second automobile would not strengthen pedestrian's case, since report, if not written and signed, would not be one required by law, and pedestrian would have no right to rely on it. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., §§ 340, subd. 3, 581, subd. 3; West's Ann. Civ.Code, § 1572; West's Ann.Vehicle Code, §§ 484, 484(a), 488, 488.5.

David I. Lippert, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Parker, Stanbury, Reese & McGee, Los Angeles, for respondents.

ASHBURN, Justice.

Plaintiff, having been injured on September 11, 1951, sued defendants Vinatieri and Ducommun Metals and Supply Co. on November 7, 1955. She attempted to excuse the delay and the bar of the statute of limitations, Code Civ.Proc., § 340, subd. 3, upon the ground of fraudulent concealment by Vinatieri of the existence of a cause of action against him. Demurrer to her second amended complaint was sustained with leave to amend within ten days. Plaintiff elected to stand upon her complaint. Judgment of dismissal was entered pursuant to Code of Civil Procedure, § 581, subdivision 3, and plaintiff appeals therefrom.

The complaint alleges that plaintiff was standing on the southwest corner of Eighth and Alameda Streets in the city of Los Angeles; that defendant Vinatieri, who was driving a car owned by Ducommun Metals and Supply Co., as its agent, so negligently drove same as to cause one Seemann "to depart from the roadway and run upon the sidewalk where plaintiff was standing and to strike plaintiff with great force and violence." By way of excuse for delay in suing Vinatieri plaintiff alleges that she brought action against Seemann alone, that the case came on for trial, after certain excusable delays, on September 28, 1955, and resulted in a verdict for defendant Seemann. She alleges that Vinatieri was a witness at that trial and she then learned for the first time of the fraud he had perpetrated upon her; that had she known the true facts she would have sued him, as well as Seemann, on August 6, 1952.

In her effort to charge fraud to Vinatieri she alleges that "said N. F. Vinatieri and Ulrich Max Seemann had a legal duty to report the facts of the said accident to the Los Angeles Police Department under the provisions of Section 484 of the California Vehicle Code and did so report at the time of the said accident." She relied on said reports "as made to the Los Angeles Police Department" by Vinatieri and Seemann and concluded that the accident was solely due to the negligence of Seemann, as the police themselves had done. Vinatieri's report to the police is alleged to have said that he was northbound on Alameda and making a left turn to go west on Eighth Street; that the signal was green for him and the southbound traffic had stopped to yield the right of way; that after he had crossed two southbound lanes he saw a southbound car next to the curb on Alameda about 50 feet north of the intersection which was going about 30 miles an hour, that he saw it was not going to stop so he stopped and the other car swerved to the right, struck the curb and stop sign and a woman standing on the southwest corner. "That plaintiff believed and relied upon the said statements of defendant, N. F. Vinatieri, as to the cause of the accident and particularly upon his statement that other south bound traffic had stopped to yield to him." The complaint further alleges that at the trial one of the principal issues was whether traffic had stopped to yield the right of way to said Vinatieri; that he then testified that he could not remember whether opposing traffic had stopped or was in motion, could not say whether southbound cars passed through the intersection prior to the time he started his left turn, and further stated that such southbound cars may have been rolling slowly. This testimony, according to plaintiff, "established the negligence of N. F. Vinatieri." It is further alleged: "That the said N. F. Vinatieri falsely stated the facts to the Police Department, as aforesaid, and concealed from it and plaintiff the facts thereafter stated in his said testimony in said trial. That such false statement and concealment were made and effected with intent to exonerate himself and his co-defendants from any charge of negligence as joint tort-feasors with said Ulrich Max Seemann or otherwise and plaintiff was thereby misled and deceived by the said statement of defendant, N. F. Vinatieri."

[1-3] This does not charge a fraud or a fraudulent concealment. Primarily this is so because it does not allege that defendant, at the time of making his report to the police, knew that his statement that southbound cars had stopped for him was untrue, or that he did not believe it to be true, or that the statement was not warranted by the information he had. See Civ.Code, § 1572; 23 Cal.Jur.2d § 11, p. 27. The variation between the statements to the police and the trial testimony did not show falsity of the original statements, for the testimony amounted only to an admission of possible mistake in what the witness had originally reported. A bare charge of falsity is not enough. Harding v. Robinson, 175 Cal. 534, 539, 166 P. 808; Morrell v. Clark, 106 Cal.App.2d 198, 201, 234 P.2d 774. Nor is the bald assertion of concealment of a cause of action sufficient. Mere non-disclosure is not concealment in the absence of a fiduciary relationship, Simons v. Edouarde, 98 Cal.App.2d 826, 829, 221 P.2d 203; there must be some affirmative act calculated to obscure the existence of a cause of action and it must be factually alleged. 54 C.J.S., Limitations of Actions, §§ 206, 377, pp. 226-227, 514; 2 Witkin on California Procedure, p. 1334, § 356; Bank of America National Trust & Savings Ass'n v. Williams, 89 Cal.App.2d 21, 25, 200 P.2d 151. So far as intent is concerned it is not alleged that defendant expected or intended that plaintiff should refrain from suing him. His original statement merely amounted to an assertion that he had a defense to any charge of negligence, criminal or civil.

[4] The report made to the police by defendant was not one upon which plaintiff had a right to rely. Her counsel invokes § 484(a), Vehicle Code, which provides: "The driver of a vehicle, other than a common carrier vehicle, involved in any accident resulting in injuries to or death of any person shall within twenty-four hours after such accident make or cause to be made a written report of such accident to the California Highway Patrol, except when such accident occurs within a city such report shall be made within said twenty-four hours to the police department of such city." The report, it will be noted, must be in writing. Section 488 of the same code provides that all required accident reports and supplemental reports shall be without prejudice to the individual so reporting and shall be for the confidential use of the Department of Motor Vehicles and the California Highway Patrol, except that certain facts, such as names and addresses, parties and witnesses, registration numbers and descriptions of vehicles, etc., may be disclosed to any person having a proper interest therein. It further provides: "No such report shall be used as evidence in any trial, civil or criminal, arising out of an accident". Section 488.5 contains this paragraph: "Upon the termination of any criminal proceedings arising out of a traffic accident, or upon the determination by the proper authorities not to file any criminal charges as a result of such accident, but in all cases upon the termination of a period of six months after the date of the accident, all of the factual data gathered by the officers, together with the signed statements of all witnesses, except the reports signed by the drivers involved in the accident, shall be made available upon request to the interested parties named in Section 488."

[5] Appellant relies upon cases such as Pashley v. Pacific Elec. Ry. Co., 25 Cal.2d 226, 153 P.2d 325, and Kimball v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co., 220 Cal. 203, 30 P.2d 39, but they are not apposite, for they involve instances in which defendant was under a duty to inform plaintiff of certain facts, or had voluntarily undertaken so to do, in either of which cases he has the further obligation to speak truly. The existence of a duty to tell the truth to a plaintiff is an essential basic element of any valid claim of fraud and deceit; unless it is intended that plaintiff rely and act upon a representation made by a defendant, or unless plaintiff belongs to a class to whom the representation is made, no cause of action can arise therefrom. In Cohen v. Citizens Nat. Trust etc. Bank, 143 Cal.App.2d 480, 300 P.2d 14, 16, this court said: "A person uttering misrepresentations is liable only to those in whom he intended to induce reliance and who do rely in the manner intended. [Citations.] Even though the misrepresentation has been made directly to the plaintiff, if the facts clearly indicate that the defendant when making such misstatements had no intention of inducing reliance by his listener, there is no actionable fraud even though the hearer in fact relies to his detriment. * * *" Referring to Civil Code, § 1711¹ it is said, 143 Cal.App.2d at page 486, 300 P.2d at page 18: "Any contention that every misrepresentation is a fraud upon the 'public' and thus the misrepresenter is 'deemed to have intended to defraud' the public is unavailing. If the code section were interpreted so broadly, it would wholly destroy the element of actionable deceit that the defendant must have intended to defraud the plaintiff. Such contention is utterly without support in the law. [Citations.]"

[6] Defendant's report to the police was of such a nature that plaintiff had no right to access to it and hence no right of reliance upon it. Section 484(a) requires a driver's statement to be in writing, which of itself implies a signature; it is to be delivered to the police department when an accident occurs within a city. Section 488 declares it to be for confidential use of the Department of Motor Vehicles and the California Highway Patrol, except for certain limited disclosures to interested parties. It specifically provides that no such report shall be used as evidence in any trial. After six months such signed statements of all witnesses "except the reports signed by the drivers involved in the accident" shall be made available upon request to interested persons.

[7-9] Counsel for appellant would remove his case from the scope of these limitations upon two grounds. First, he says Vinatieri was a witness rather than a driver, which argument is fatuous. Secondly, he says it does not appear that the report alleged in the complaint was in writing or that it was signed. The statute specifically exacts a written report and impliedly requires that it be signed. The pleader's failure to allege non-compliance with those requirements cannot help him. He relies upon a report made pursuant to

1. Civ.Code, § 1711: "One who practices a deceit with intent to defraud the public, or a particular class of persons, is deemed to have intended to defraud every individual in that class, who is actually misled by the deceit."

"a legal duty to report the facts of the said accident to the Los Angeles Police Department under the provisions of Section 484 of the California Vehicle Code." The following averment that defendant "did so report at the time of the said accident" implies that he performed his statutory duty and filed a written and signed statement. The later allegation that the police findings and recommendations were "appended to said reports" of Vinatieri and Seemann, spells the same thing,—written reports. This is a situation to which the rule stated in Faulkner v. California Toll Bridge Authority, 40 Cal.2d 317, 328, 253 P.2d 659, 666, applies: "It is, of course, the rule that 'Since the enactment of section 452 of the Code of Civil Procedure * * * it has been generally recognized that in the construction of a pleading for the purpose of determining its effect "its allegations must be liberally construed, with a view to substantial justice between the parties"' (Mix v. Yoakum (1927), 200 Cal. 681, 687, 254 P. 557) but it is also the law that even while giving to a pleading 'the most liberal construction permitted by section 452 of the Code of Civil Procedure no intendment can be indulged in that the pleader has not stated his case as strongly as it was possible so to do' (Haas v. Greenwald (1925), 196 Cal. 236, 243, 237 P. 38, 59 A.L.R. 1493; Higgins v. Security Trust & Sav. Bank (1928), 203 Cal. 398, 401, 264 P. 744)." Accord: La Com v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co., 132 Cal.App.2d 114, 116, 281 P.2d 894, 48 A.L.R.2d 1455; Melikian v. Truck Ins. Exchange, 133 Cal.App.2d 113, 115, 283 P.2d 269. The rule is peculiarly applicable here because plaintiff declined to amend after leave granted and in such a posture of the case all ambiguities are resolved against her. As Mr. Justice Vallée said in Wilson v. Loew's, Inc., 142 Cal.App.2d 183, 298 P.2d 152, 161: "We must assume that plaintiffs have stated their cases as strongly as it was possible for them to do. Faulkner v. California Toll Bridge Authority, 40 Cal.2d 317, 328, 253 P.2d 659. Having declined to avail themselves of leave to amend in the particular which defendants specifically pointed out to them, plaintiffs must 'stand upon their pleading as against all grounds and if the complaint is objectionable upon any ground the judgment of dismissal must be affirmed. [Citations.] Upon appeal from a judgment rendered after refusal to amend a complaint to which a demurrer has been sustained, it must be presumed that the pleader has stated his case as strongly as it can be stated in his favor and all ambiguities and uncertainties must be resolved against him.' Metzenbaum v. Metzenbaum, 86 Cal.App.2d 750, 752, 195 P.2d 492, 493." If defendant's statement to the police was not written or not signed, it was incumbent upon plaintiff to so allege, and to also show by what process it becomes available to her as a basis for reliance.

[10] However, such an allegation, if made, would not strengthen her case. The report would then be one not required by law, also one not intended for plaintiff, and it would fall within the purview of the Cohen case, supra.

The judgment is affirmed.

Emma M. STEEVE, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Lillian E. YAEGER, Defendant and Appellant (two cases).

Civ. 4775, 5279.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Oct. 26, 1956.

Rehearing Denied Nov. 20, 1956.

Hearing Denied Dec. 19, 1956.

Action for declaratory relief and an accounting. The Superior Court, Orange County, Franklin G. West, J., entered judgments adverse to defendant and she appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Barnard, P. J., held that where plaintiff prayed for a declaratory judgment determining her rights and interest in certain property under a partnership dissolution agreement, trial court was justified in declaring that plaintiff had an undivided one-half interest in property concerned in the agreement rather than a life interest in the income from such property, notwithstanding fact that plaintiff in her reformation cause of action might not have clearly sought such relief, since in the declaratory judgment action court was justified in construing rights and duties of parties under such agreement in accordance with the evidence and intent of the parties.

Judgments affirmed.

1. Courts ⚖99(1)

Where evidence received during trial was sufficient to sustain a finding that none of plaintiff's causes of action were barred by statute of limitations, trial court did not err in so finding even though it made a ruling just before the trial proceeded on the merits that one of plaintiff's causes of action was barred by such statute.

2. Life Estates ⚖3

No specific words are necessary to create a life estate in realty.

3. Gifts ⚖28(1)

An unqualified gift of rents, issues, and profits of a fund or property, real or personal, amounts to a gift of the fund or property itself.

4. Declaratory Judgment ⚖385

In an action for a declaratory judgment determining rights and interest of plaintiff in certain property under a partnership dissolution agreement, in granting declaratory relief, it was the right and duty of the court to declare the meaning of the agreement and to construe the language used in accordance with the intent of the parties as disclosed by the evidence.

5. Partnership ⚖311(1)

Where an agreement for dissolution of a partnership was prepared by defendant's counsel without notice to or consultation with plaintiff, any uncertainty or ambiguity therein would be resolved in plaintiff's favor, and if different constructions would be equally proper the one most favorable to plaintiff would be adopted.

6. Declaratory Judgment ⚖366

Where plaintiff prayed for a declaratory judgment determining her rights and interest in certain property under a partnership dissolution agreement, trial court was justified in declaring that plaintiff had an undivided one-half interest in the property concerned in the agreement rather than a life interest in the income from such property, notwithstanding fact that plaintiff in her reformation cause of action might not have clearly sought such relief, since in the declaratory judgment action court was justified in construing rights and duties of parties under their agreement in accordance with the evidence and intent of the parties.

7. Declaratory Judgment ⚖386

Where plaintiff brought an action for declaratory judgment and an accounting and prayed for determination of rights and interest in certain property under a partnership dissolution agreement, court had jurisdiction to grant plaintiff a lien to secure payment of sum due plaintiff which had been misapplied by defendant, since the matter was sufficiently within the issues raised by the pleadings, and no specific pleading, under such circumstances, was necessary.

8. Life Estates ⚖15(1)

Where plaintiff prayed for a declaratory judgment determining her rights and interest in certain property under a partnership dissolution agreement, and court determined plaintiff had a life estate in one-half of the realty formerly held by the partnership, it properly excluded depreciation in determining the net income from the property for which defendant had to account to plaintiff.

9. Tenancy in Common ⚖31

A cotenant is not ordinarily entitled to compensation for services in managing or taking care of common property, in the absence of an express agreement or a mutual understanding that such services should be paid for.

10. Tenancy In Common Ⓒ31

Where plaintiff, in an action for a declaratory judgment determining her rights and interest in certain property under a partnership dissolution agreement, was determined to be a cotenant for life in realty formerly held by the partnership, and no agreement had been entered into between plaintiff and defendant that defendant's services in managing such realty would be paid for, trial court was justified in refusing to allow defendant to charge for managerial services in accounting for income from realty in question.

11. Partnership Ⓒ297

Where there was a confidential relationship between plaintiff and defendant as to certain realty formerly held by them as partners, and records as to the realty were kept by defendant both before and after dissolution of the partnership, and statements as to share of the income the plaintiff was to receive after dissolution as provided for in the dissolution agreement were not furnished to plaintiff, an accounting was essential to enable the court to determine respective rights of the parties.

12. Account Ⓒ20

In an action for an accounting, when the trial court deems it necessary to have an accounting to determine the rights of the parties, it has the power to order a general accounting or, in its discretion, a limited accounting only.

BARNARD, Presiding Justice.

This is an appeal from judgments granting declaratory relief and ordering and approving an accounting.

The plaintiff was a nurse and the defendant was a real estate broker. They were friends and lived together for some years. In 1939, they entered into a written partnership agreement as equal partners. The partnership acquired two parcels of valuable income real property in Fullerton, referred to as "Parcels One and Two," the legal title being held for them by a third party. So far as material here, it also acquired five other parcels of real property, title to four of them being in plaintiff's name and title to one being in defendant's name. On August 10, 1944, the defendant took the plaintiff to the office of defendant's attorney where a contract and deeds terminating the partnership and conveying the property had already been prepared. The plaintiff was surprised and hurt because the defendant was dissolving the partnership without taking it up with her beforehand, but after certain arguments and representations were made she signed the papers.

This contract described the property owned by the partnership, and provided that the partnership agreement should no longer apply and that the parties desired and agreed thereby to partition and divide said properties as set forth therein. It was then agreed that:

Parcels One and Two "shall be conveyed in fee to (the defendant) but reserving a life estate in and to one half of the rents, issues and profits to (the plaintiff) for and during the period of her natural life";

That the four parcels standing in the name of the plaintiff shall be conveyed in fee to the defendant but reserving a life estate to the plaintiff, in the same language just above quoted;

That with respect to the parcel standing in defendant's name, "there shall be conveyed to (the plaintiff) a life estate consisting of one half of the rents, issues and profits, for and during the period of her natural life, and the fee title, subject to said life estate, shall remain in (the defendant)";

That the parties agree to dispose of all the property except Parcels One and Two, and apply the proceeds upon "the present indebtedness on Parcels One and Two, to the end that said properties may be freed from indebtedness and improved, so as to obtain the maximum rental income for the benefit of the parties hereto";

That each party shall be entitled to $100 a month from the properties to be charged against the net income to which each party may be entitled;

That the rental of a house in the rear of Parcel Two shall be $50 per month and shall be paid by the one occupying the same from and after September 1, 1944;

That if one half of the net income from the properties should be insufficient to care for either of the parties, by reason of illness, then as much of the principal or corpus of the properties as necessary shall be used for that purpose;

That except for necessary operating expenses no indebtedness shall be contracted without the concurrence of both parties; and that each party will sign any papers necessary to renew the existing indebtedness when it became due;

That true books of account should be kept, and on December 31 of each year the books should be audited and closed and an accurate statement delivered to each party, with both parties entitled to withdraw the balance of her share of the net profits, if any.

The deeds were recorded, in accordance with the contract, and the defendant continued to collect the rents and pay the bills as she had done during the previous years. The plaintiff went to Los Angeles to work and the defendant continued to live in the house referred to in the agreement. The defendant paid the plaintiff $100 a month for a time. During a period when the plaintiff was in a hospital with a nervous breakdown, the defendant also paid bills for her amounting to about $1100, there being then no net income available for that purpose. The plaintiff married in 1947, and the defendant stopped paying $100 a month to the plaintiff on January 1, 1948. It was stipulated that since that date defendant has taken out $200 a month, or $2400 a year, charging it as a manager's salary. The defendant had an opportunity to sell one of the parcels other than Parcels One and Two for $20,000, which was $5000 more than it cost, but refused to do so. This was a citrus orchard which was operated at a loss through these years. In July, 1949, the defendant asked the plaintiff to execute a note and trust deed for $35,000, which she declined to do. She consulted attorneys, and this suit was filed on August 4, 1949.

The complaint, as amended, set up separate causes of action for rescission of the agreement, for reformation, for declaratory relief, and for quiet title. The answer of the defendant also asked for declaratory relief and, as special defenses, pleaded the statute of limitation and laches. At the trial, it was stipulated that certain issues be tried first and practically all of the evidence, except that of the actual accounting, was then received. After oral argument a minute order was entered reciting that the court finds certain things. Some time later the court's findings of fact and conclusions of law were filed.

The court found, among other things, that when the agreement and deeds were executed on August 10, 1944, the plaintiff was not represented by counsel, legal or otherwise; that they were read to her by defendant's counsel; that at that time the plaintiff was ill, nervous, upset and confused, and did not understand the meaning and effect of the legal language used; that she signed the contract believing the representations then made to her; that both parties then believed that her interest in the property was thus converted into that of a life tenant as to an undivided one half interest in the property; that the defendant has at all times managed and controlled the property, collecting the rents and paying the taxes and expense; that in January, 1949, the plaintiff for the first time sought legal counsel pertaining to her rights under said agreement, and for the first time questioned the representation made to her by the defendant that she had been overpaid; that in July, 1949, the plaintiff notified defendant that she was rescinding said agreement; that the plaintiff executed the agreement of August 10, 1944, relying on the representation then made to her that the defendant would sell said property, except Parcels One and Two, and would apply the proceeds to discharge the encumbrances on Parcels One and Two, so that each of them would have an unencumbered one half of the income from Parcels One and Two for the remainder of her life; that numerous controversies exist between the parties as to their respective rights under the agreement and deeds; that the defendant had only partially accounted to the plaintiff as to the income from these properties and the expenses in connection therewith; that it is not true that the defendant provided plaintiff with annual accounts involving these properties; that on March 3, 1949, the plaintiff demanded of defendant a detailed accounting; that the plaintiff is vested with a life estate in and to an undivided one half interest in said property for and during her life; that the defendant owns all of the remainder subject to said life estate; that a confidential relationship existed between these parties from 1928 to and including January, 1949; that none of plaintiff's causes of action are barred by the statute of limitations, and plaintiff has not been guilty of laches; that the defendant has not paid to plaintiff her full share of the income from said property; that defendant has not sold all of the property agreed to be sold for the purpose of paying off the encumbrances on Parcels One and Two; that the defendant has performed services and devoted time in the management of these properties; that plaintiff did not discover that the orange orchard was not sold until in July, 1949, when the defendant requested her to sign a note and trust deed for $35,000; that plaintiff then demanded that the defendant sell the orange orchard, pursuant to the agreement, and use the proceeds toward the discharge of encumbrances on the properties; that defendant refused and still refuses to sell that property for that purpose; and that defendant has failed and refused to pay the plaintiff any sum whatever from the income of said property since April, 1948, although demand has been made therefor.

As conclusions of law the court found, among other things, that a declaratory judgment was necessary, and that an accounting was necessary. An interlocutory judgment was entered granting the plaintiff declaratory relief and construing the terms of the 1944 agreement; ordering an accounting and appointing a certified public accountant as referee to make an accounting and report; ordering that a final judgment be entered upon the approval of the report of the referee; and reserving jurisdiction over the issues tendered for final determination in the final decree. The defendant made a motion for a new trial which was denied and she then appealed from the interlocutory judgment.

The referee filed a report and after the matter was again argued the court made supplemental findings of fact and conclusions of law, approving the report and account of the referee, and finding in accordance therewith that the defendant had collected during the period in question as rents and income from the property the total sum of $167,998.18; that she had expended $101,926.50 for maintenance of the property, leaving a net income of $66,071.68, of which the plaintiff was entitled to one half or $33,035.84; and that the defendant had paid the plaintiff only $5,942.39, leaving a balance of $27,093.45 owing to her. It was also found that when the sum of $1136.48 was paid for necessary medical care for the plaintiff no net income was available for that purpose, and that under the contract that amount was not chargeable against plaintiff's share of the net income. The court also adopted its previous findings and, as supplemental conclusions of law, found that of the amount due the plaintiff she was entitled to a personal judgment for $9,852.69; and as to the remaining $17,240.76 she was entitled to a judgment in rem with a lien on the property, since that amount of the rents had been used to reduce existing liens; and that if this amount was not paid within a reasonable time the plaintiff might foreclose this lien, the orange orchard to be first sold and the proceeds applied thereon. A final judgment was entered in accordance with the original and supplemental findings, and another motion for a new trial was made by the defendant and denied. The defendant then appealed from the final judgment, and that appeal has been consolidated with the appeal from the interlocutory judgment.

[1] The appellant first contends that the court erred in finding that none of respondent's causes of action are barred by the statute of limitations, since the court had earlier ruled that her cause of action for reformation was so barred. The earlier ruling was made just before the trial proceeded on the merits. The evidence later received was sufficient to have justified a change in that ruling. The matter is immaterial, however, since the court did not grant relief on the reformation cause of action.

It is next contended that the court erred in reforming the agreement and deeds to provide that respondent owned a life estate with respect to an undivided half interest in the property itself, whereas the agreement gave her only the right to share equally in the net income during her life. It is argued that the court in effect reformed and modified the agreement under the guise of granting declaratory relief; and that the court should have declared only that the language of the agreement and deeds meant exactly what the respondent had indicated they meant in pleading her reformation cause of action.

[2-6] The court did not reform or modify this agreement. As the court said in Putnam v. Putnam, 51 Cal.App.2d 696, 125 P.2d 525, 526: "A declaration of the rights and obligations under a contract which results in a reformation is but a determination of the intention of the parties and of the legal effect of the contract, not a modification of its terms." In her reformation cause of action the respondent alleged that the attorney for the defendant, who prepared the papers, intended to use language therein that would create in respondent a life estate in and to an undivided one half interest in said real property; that it was intended by both parties that language having that effect would be used, and that both parties signed the papers believing that words and language were used which conveyed or reserved such a life estate to the plaintiff. In the declaratory relief cause of action it was alleged that upon reading the agreement to them defendant's attorney represented to them both that the effect of the papers was to change plaintiff's interest in the property to a life estate in and to an undivided one half interest in the partnership property for and during her life, and that among other things she would be entitled to one half of the income from the whole of the property during her lifetime. It was conceded by both parties in the pleadings and at the trial that the respondent was entitled to one half of the net rents during her lifetime. While the respondent may not have understood the technical meaning and effect of some of the language used in the agreement the evidence, with the reasonable inferences therefrom, fully supports the finding and conclusion that she was told and understood that she was to have a life interest in one half of the property which would entitle her to one half of the net income, and that both parties intended at that time that the agreement and deeds should accomplish that purpose. That intention not only appears from the evidence but is somewhat confirmed by the agreement itself, which provides that no indebtedness shall be contracted without the concurrence of both parties; that each party is to sign any necessary renewal of the existing indebtedness; that the parties, and not the appellant alone, shall dispose of all of the property except Parcels One and Two, and use the proceeds to clear the debt on Parcels One and Two; and that in the event of illness, where the income is not sufficient, each party may invade the corpus. No specific words are necessary to create a life estate and as said in Re Estate of Franck, 190 Cal. 28, 210 P. 417, 418, "It is also equally well settled that the unqualified gift of the rents, issues, and profits of a fund or property, real or personal, amounts to a gift of the fund or property itself." While this was a division of property rather than a gift, there was here a provision reserving and giving to the respondent an unqualified right to receive one half of the net proceeds during her lifetime, and the same principle should be here applied. In granting declaratory relief it was the right and duty of the court to declare the meaning of the contract, and to construe the language used, in accordance with the intent of the parties as disclosed by the evidence. These papers were prepared by appellant's counsel without notice to or consultation with the respondent. Under settled rules any uncertainty or ambiguity therein should be resolved in respondent's favor; and if different constructions would be equally proper the one most favorable to her should be adopted. While some inconsistencies appear in the complaint, as between the various causes of action, the respondent's contentions clearly appear throughout her pleading and, in this equitable action, the court was justified in construing the rights and duties of the parties in accordance with the evidence and the clear intent of the parties.

[7] It is next contended that the court erred in giving the respondent a lien to secure the payment of that part of the amount due her which represented one half of the amount paid by the appellant, from the income, to reduce the principal sum of the encumbrance on the main property. It is argued that the granting of such a lien was not within the issues presented; that if this had been pleaded appellant might have shown that it was contrary to the agreement of the parties; and that the court had previously found that she was entitled to charge for "debt reduction." The matter was sufficiently within the issues raised by the pleadings and, in any event, no specific pleading was necessary under the circumstances. Garcia v. Venegas, 106 Cal.App.2d 364, 235 P.2d 89; Dool v. First National Bank, 207 Cal. 347, 278 P. 233. It clearly appeared that the appellant had used a large part of the income to reduce the trust deed indebtedness on Parcels One and Two, although the agreement specifically provided that other proceeds should be used for that purpose. While a minute order had previously stated a finding that she was entitled to charge "debt reduction and interest," that was an error which the court could correct, and its final finding and judgment are controlling. If the appellant was entitled to use the income to pay off existing liens, thus increasing her own interest, the clearly expressed purpose of the contract would be largely defeated. The court was correct in disallowing this charge, and in doing equity could give the respondent a similar lien, by way of subrogation, in place of the lien which had been wrongfully discharged.

[8] It is next contended that the court erred in finding that the appellant was not entitled to deduct amounts for "depreciation" in arriving at the amount of net income. It is admitted that the contract made no specific reference to depreciation, and that the appellant had charged on her books $10,370.75 for such depreciation. It is argued that the accountant who prepared statements for the appellant set up an allowance for depreciation, and that for about ten years, including the prior partnership, the parties abided by his judgment and acquiesced in this charge. There was evidence that the respondent was not given copies of the statements prepared by that accountant, and she had not consented to such a charge. Depreciation is a mere accounting charge and does not represent the actual expenditure of money. No mere question of bookkeeping, or of income taxes, is involved in this connection, and no good reason appears why a life tenant should be charged with depreciation in determining the net income from property.

[9,10] It is next contended that the court erred in not permitting the appellant to deduct from the gross income the amount she charged as a manager's salary. It is argued that many years before the parties had told each other that they never intended to marry; that while they lived together the respondent did her part of the housework; that after respondent's marriage in 1947 the appellant had to do all of the work which the respondent had previously done; that beginning in 1948 the appellant paid herself $200 a month to compensate herself for the additional work she was doing; and that it was only fair that she should receive the amount which the respondent had previously been receiving. The $100 a month previously paid to both was a partial division of income, and was clearly not intended as compensation. A cotenant is not ordinarily entitled to compensation for services in managing or taking care of common property, in the absence of an express agreement or a mutual understanding that such services should be paid for. Combs v. Ritter, 100 Cal.App.2d 315, 223 P.2d 505. The appellant had collected the rents, paid the expenses and managed these properties for several years before 1944 and continued to do the same thereafter. The respondent ceased living with the appellant in September, 1944, and no claim for compensation was made by the appellant until 1948, when it was admittedly taken without consultation with the respondent. The respondent was a cotenant to the extent of her life tenancy and, under established rules, the court was justified in refusing to allow that charge in view of the evidence presented.

It is next contended that the court erred in finding that the respondent was entitled to have certain of her medical expenses paid out of the "corpus", instead of regarding this amount as advances made by the appellant. This finding was in accordance with the contract provision, and is amply supported by the evidence that no net income was then available for that purpose.

[11,12] It is further contended that the evidence was insufficient to justify the finding that the respondent was entitled to an accounting. It is argued that the books and records which "were kept in a filing cabinet" in appellant's home were available to the respondent at all times; that had the respondent sent someone to examine those books and records such person could have obtained the same information which the referee later obtained; and that it is unjust to allow the respondent to have an investigation and audit made partially at the expense of the appellant. It is difficult to understand this contention. The evidence shows that there was a confidential relationship between these parties; that the records were kept by the appellant, and the statements provided for in the contract were not furnished to the respondent; that the appellant had paid some personal expenses from the income received, and had commingled some of her personal funds with the rents and income she had collected from the property; and that she had made some improper charges. Under the circumstances shown an accounting was absolutely essential in order to enable the court to determine the respective rights of the parties. While an accounting was prayed for, some contention is made that a limited accounting only, rather than a general accounting was asked for. An analysis of the pleadings does not support this contention and, moreover, in such an action as this when the court deems it necessary to have an accounting to determine the rights of the parties it has the power to so order. Braden v. Lewis, 119 Cal. App.2d 84, 259 P.2d 16.

The findings are sufficiently supported by the evidence, with the reasonable inferences therefrom; the court's construction of the meaning of the contract as intended by the parties is a reasonable one; and the record strongly indicates that the judgment entered is a just one.

The judgments are affirmed.

In re Paul R. BAILLEAUX, on habeas corpus.
Cr. 5808.

Supreme Court of California.
In Bank.
Oct. 31, 1956.

Rehearing Denied Nov. 28, 1956.

Habeas corpus proceeding. The Supreme Court, Shenk, J., held that where State had attempted to extradite prisoner from sister state for parole violation and federal court had granted writ of habeas corpus and had held that prisoner had been released from obligation to State and was no longer subject to terms and conditions of parole, judgment of federal court issuing writ of habeas corpus was res judicata and reimprisonment was unlawful and prisoner was entitled to be released.

Petitioner discharged.

1. Judgment ⇨829(3)

Full faith and credit must be accorded a judgment of federal court.

2. Judgment ⇨829(3)

Judgment of federal court has same effect in courts of state as it would have in a federal court.

3. Judgment ⇨540

In federal jurisdiction as in state courts, doctrine of "res judicata" prevents relitigation of issues determined by final judgment in prior action between same parties.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Res Judicata".

4. Judgment ⇨518

State's contention, in proceeding on prisoner's petition for writ of habeas corpus, that, in prior proceeding on petition for writ of habeas corpus before federal court, federal court erred in holding that prisoner was no longer subject to terms and conditions of parole was a collateral attack on final judgment.

5. Judgment ⇨489

A collateral attack on final judgment is permitted only under limited circumstances, and one such circumstance is where court entering judgment is without jurisdiction.

6. Courts ⇨97(5)

Where State asserted, in proceeding on prisoner's petition for writ of habeas corpus, that federal court was without jurisdiction to discharge prisoner on his prior petition to federal court for writ of habeas corpus, question would be determined in accordance with federal law.

7. Judgment ⇨498

In federal courts a collateral attack on ground of lack of jurisdiction will not be permitted unless attacking party makes an affirmative showing that issue of jurisdiction was not litigated in court entering judgment under attack, and, if issue of jurisdiction was litigated in first court, determination thereon is final as against collateral attack.

8. Judgment ⇨498

If party attacking final judgment fails to show that issue of jurisdiction was not litigated in court, which entered judgment federal courts will assume that this issue was litigated.

9. Habeas Corpus ⇨117(2)

Where State had attempted to extradite prisoner from sister state for parole violation and federal court had granted writ of habeas corpus and had held that prisoner had been released from obligation to State and was no longer subject to terms and conditions of parole, judgment of federal court issuing writ of habeas corpus was res judicata and reimprisonment was unlawful and prisoner was entitled to be released.

Paul R. Bailleaux, in pro. per., and Robert H. Kroninger, Oakland, for petitioner.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., and Clarence A. Linn, Asst. Atty. Gen., for respondent.

SHENK, Justice.

By this petition for the writ of habeas corpus, Paul R. Bailleaux seeks his release from Folsom prison. The warden as respondent has filed a return. Issues of fact were raised which would ordinarily require a reference. In order to obviate the necessity for such a proceeding counsel for the petitioner and the respondent filed certain documents and have joined in a stipulation of facts in which it is agreed that the documents and the stipulation disclose all of the material facts and that matter may be disposed of on the record thus presented.

In September, 1939, the petitioner was convicted of robbery in the first degree and sentenced to San Quentin Prison for the term prescribed by law. In 1942 he was released from San Quentin on parole, subject to the terms and conditions set forth in the "ticket of leave" given him. On October 5, 1943, the Chief Parole Officer of the State of California submitted a report to the Board of Prison Terms and Paroles (the predecessor of the Adult Authority), charging that the petitioner had violated his parole by committing an armed robbery in the State of Washington. The report described the circumstances of the robbery and recommended that the petitioner's parole be revoked and that he be returned to San Quentin "at such time as he will be eligible for release or discharge from the Washington State Penitentiary." In November, 1943, the Board suspended the petitioner's parole pending investigation of the parole officer's charges and ordered that he be retaken and returned to custody to abide the further order of the Board.

When the petitioner was released from the Washington prison California attempted to extradite him. He was taken into custody pursuant to a warrant of extradition issued by the Governor of Washington. He then applied to the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Washington, Southern Division, hereinafter called the Federal Court, for a writ of habeas corpus. On January 17, 1949, that court entered an order granting the application and directing the agent of the California Adult Authority to release the petitioner. Pursuant to this order he was released from custody.

Subsequently the petitioner went to the State of Oregon. In May, 1954, he was returned from Oregon to San Quentin. The Adult Authority held a hearing on charges of parole violation, and on August 6, 1954, the petitioner's parole was revoked.

The petitioner's primary contention is that the order of the Federal Court issuing a writ of habeas corpus and discharging him is res judicata of the issue of the right of California to reimprison him.

[1-3] Full faith and credit must be accorded a judgment of the federal court. Stoll v. Gottlieb, 305 U.S. 165, 170, 59 S.Ct. 134, 83 L.Ed. 104; Hancock National Bank v. Farnum, 176 U.S. 640, 641-642, 20 S.Ct. 506, 44 L.Ed. 619; Mueller v. Elba Oil Co., 21 Cal.2d 188, 205, 130 P.2d 961; Code Civ.Proc., § 1908. Such a judgment has the same effect in the courts of this state as it would in a federal court. Bank of America Nat. Trust & Savings Ass'n v. McLaughlin Land & Livestock Co., 40 Cal. App.2d 620, 626-627, 105 P.2d 607; 29 Cal. Jur.2d § 303, pp. 288-289. In the federal jurisdiction, as in the courts of California, the doctrine of res judicata prevents the relitigation of issues determined by a final judgment in a prior action between the same parties. United States v. Munsingwear, Inc., 340 U.S. 36, 71 S.Ct. 104, 95 L.Ed. 36; Southern Pacific Railroad Co. v. United States, 168 U.S. 1, 18 S.Ct. 18, 42 L.Ed. 355, and cases cited therein; Norris v. San Mateo County Title Co., 37 Cal.2d 269, 273, 231 P.2d 493; Bernhard v. Bank of America, 19 Cal.2d 807, 813, 122 P.2d 892; Code Civ.Proc., § 1908. This doctrine is applicable to the petitioner's case. United States v. Chung Shee, 9 Cir., 76

F. 951; Montgomery v. Eldson, D.C., 123 F.Supp. 292; Ex parte Gagliardi, D.C., 284 F. 190; 2 Freeman, Judgments, 5th ed. 1925, pp. 1761-1763; see In re Begerow, 136 Cal. 293, 297-298, 68 P. 773, 56 L.R.A. 528. In the present proceeding a hearing was held in the Federal Court and its judgment became final. The judgment reads in material parts as follows:

"The above entitled cause coming on for hearing before the Court on this 17th day of January, 1949, the petitioner appearing in person and by his attorney, W. A. Toner, and the respondent, Vard Ryan Massey, appearing by Jane Dowdle, Assistant Attorney General of the State of Washington, and the Court having heard the testimony of the petitioner and being fully advised in the matter, now finds that the said petitioner is being detained by the respondent as agent of the California Adult Authority in violation of his constitutional rights and that he is not a fugitive from justice of the State of California but has been duly discharged and released by the respondents and should be freed from the custody of the agents of said authority.

"Now Therefore It Is Considered, Ordered, Adjudged and Decreed: That the said petition for habeas corpus be and the same hereby is allowed and granted, and it is further ordered that the respondent release the said petitioner forthwith."

The parties to the Washington proceeding were essentially the same as those now before this court—the petitioner and the State of California. The Federal Court held that the petitioner had been released by California from his obligations to the state and was no longer subject to the terms and conditions of his parole. If that judgment is res judicata, the 1954 order of the Adult Authority revoking the petitioner's parole was of no avail.

[4-6] The respondent contends that the Federal Court erred in holding that the petitioner was no longer subject to the terms and conditions of his parole from the California court. This is a collateral attack on a final judgment, and such an attack is permitted only under limited circumstances. One circumstance is where the court entering the judgment was without jurisdiction. Williams v. State of North Carolina, 325 U.S. 226, 65 S.Ct. 1092, 89 L.Ed. 1577; Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U.S. 714, 24 L.Ed. 565; Thompson v. Whitman, 18 Wall. 457, 21 L.Ed. 897; Gagnon Co., Inc. v. Nevada Desert Inn, Inc., 45 Cal.2d 448, 289 P.2d 466; Code Civ.Proc., § 1916. Accordingly the respondent asserts that the Federal Court was without jurisdiction to discharge the petitioner. This question is to be determined in accordance with federal law. Sherrer v. Sherrer, 334 U.S. 343, 68 S.Ct. 1087, 1097, 92 L.Ed. 1429; Adam v. Saenger, 303 U.S. 59, 58 S.Ct. 454, 82 L.Ed. 649; Gagnon Co., Inc. v. Nevada Desert Inn, Inc., supra, 45 Cal.2d 448, 289 P.2d 466; Cellulose Package Mfg. Co. v. Calhoun, 166 Cal. 513, 137 P. 238.

[7,8] In the federal courts a collateral attack on the ground of lack of jurisdiction will not be permitted unless the attacking party makes an affirmative showing that the issue of jurisdiction was not litigated in the court entering the judgment under attack. If the issue of jurisdiction was litigated in the first court, the determination thereon is final as against a collateral attack. Davis v. Davis, 305 U.S. 32, 59 S.Ct. 3, 83 L.Ed. 26; Baldwin v. Iowa State Traveling Men's Association, 283 U.S. 522, 51 S.Ct. 517, 75 L.Ed. 1244; Mueller v. Elba Oil Co., supra, 21 Cal.2d 188, 130 P.2d 961. If the attacking party fails to show that the issue of jurisdiction was not litigated in the first court, the federal courts will assume that this issue was litigated. Cook v. Cook, 342 U.S. 126, 72 S.Ct. 157, 96 L.Ed. 146; Bostwick v. Baldwin Drainage Dist., 5 Cir., 133 F.2d 1, certiorari denied, 319 U.S. 742, 63 S.Ct. 1030, 87 L.Ed. 1699; In re Eichhoff's Estate, 101 Cal. 600, 36 P. 11; 29 Cal.Jur. 2d § 201, pp. 155-156. There is no showing in this record to indicate that the issue of jurisdiction was not litigated in the Federal Court.

[9] The respondent relies on In re Kimler, 37 Cal.2d 568, 233 P.2d 902. That case is not controlling. Here we are concerned with the effect of a prior judgment of a federal court in which that court had determined the precise question which the respondent now seeks to relitigate, namely, whether the custody of the petitioner was lawful. In the Kimler case this court said 37 Cal.2d at page 570, 233 P.2d at page 904 that the "Missouri court did not purport to determine the effect of Kimler's release by the prison authorities of" California, and that by "the clear language of the Missouri judgment, the only fact determined was that the 'facts and circumstances are not sufficient to justify' extradition." Here the federal court determined the effect of the release of the petitioner by the California authorities. It had jurisdiction to do so and its judgment should be respected.

We conclude that the judgment of the Federal Court is res judicata; that the reimprisonment of the petitioner was unlawful, and that he is entitled to be released from custody.

The petitioner is discharged.

CARTER, Justice.

I concur in the result reached in the majority opinion inasmuch as it is directly in line with my dissent in In re Kimler, 1951, 37 Cal.2d 568, 575, 233 P.2d 902, 904.

In the Kimler case a judgment of a Missouri court was involved. Kimler was released on habeas corpus by the Missouri court and a majority of this court there said: "The judgment [of habeas corpus] declared that ' * * * no sufficient cause for the detention of said petitioner appearing, it is ordered * * * that the Writ of Habeas Corpus be sustained and made permanent, and that the petitioner * * * be * * * discharged from imprisonment and detention for the cause aforesaid.' (Italics added.)" A majority of this court specifically there held that Kimler's "discharge in habeas corpus in Missouri is not res judicata in the present proceeding." In the Kimler case a majority of this court relied upon State ex rel. Cooney v. Hoffmeister, 336 Mo. 682, 80 S.W.2d 195,¹ in holding that the Missouri discharge of Kimler was not res judicata. The holding in the Hoffmeister case was that the asylum state could not inquire into the guilt or innocence of the accused; that the question presented was for the determination of the demanding state. In the Kimler case it was held that the prisoner was entitled to release because no sufficient cause for his detention appeared. But a majority of this court held that the Missouri judgment was not entitled to full faith and credit even though the Missouri court in the Kimler case must have been well aware of its holding in the Hoffmeister case together with the facts and circumstances involved therein. In other words this court knew better what the Supreme Court of Missouri held than the Supreme Court of Missouri did! See, also, Ex parte Messina, 233 Mo.App. 1234, 128 S.W.2d 1082.

I said in my dissent to the Kimler case, 37 Cal.2d at page 579, 233 P.2d at page 909: "The discharge of Kimler in Missouri must be treated as res judicata on the issue above mentioned, that is, that there is no longer any basis for California to imprison Kimler arising from his conviction here, and therefore he is entitled to a discharge in this proceeding." v.

SUPERIOR COURT of the State of California, In and for the COUNTY OF LOS ANGELES, Respondent.

Civ. 22022.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California.

Nov. 2, 1956.

majority thereof, held, however, in the Kimler case that Kimler's discharge on habeas corpus by the Missouri court was not res judicata. This despite the fact that the opinion in that case shows, without a shadow of a doubt, that the merits were adjudicated by the Missouri court. In its holding the majority blithely ignored the full faith and credit clause of both the federal and state Constitutions. Here, however, the majority has, apparently, had a change of heart because we are told that full faith and credit must be accorded a judgment of the federal court; that the doctrine of res judicata prevents the relitigation of issues determined by a final judgment in a prior action between the same parties. In other words—once is enough. With this I wholeheartedly agree. However, this case and the Kimler case were both previously adjudicated on the merits with diametrically opposite results reached by a majority of this court. The only dissimilarity between the two is that here a prior judgment of a federal court is concerned; in the Kimler case a prior judgment of a sister state was concerned. Otherwise there is no difference. The Missouri court in the Kimler case specifically noted that the "facts and circumstances are not sufficient to justify the surrender and extradition of the petitioner to the State of California"; the federal court in the case at bar specifically found that the petitioner was not a "fugitive from justice of the State of California but has been duly discharged and released by the respondents and should be freed from the custody of the agents of said authority." It is difficult to see how two cases could be more similar inasmuch as this court must give full faith and credit to the judgments of the courts of both sister states and the federal government.

Even though I am of the opinion that the conclusion reached here is in conflict with that reached in the Kimler case, I am happy to concur in the result reached herein because it is sound law.

Rehearing denied; TRAYNOR, SCHAUER and SPENCE, JJ., dissenting.

Proceeding on a writ of certiorari to review two orders of Superior Court adjudging petitioner to be in contempt of support orders of that court issued in connection with an annulment action brought by petitioner's wife. The District Court of Appeal held that where Superior Court adjudged petitioner to be in contempt without affidavits upon which orders to show cause why he should not be held in contempt were issued having been offered in evidence, and without petitioner having had a right to challenge the relevancy or the competency of the matter set forth in the affidavits, even though the court could take judicial notice of the orders it had made, it could not take judicial notice of and assume as true the facts stated in the affidavits until petitioner had an opportunity to challenge those facts as evidence, and when it did so, it deprived petitioner of due process, and its judgments of contempt would be annulled.

Judgment annulled.

1. Contempt Ⓒ40

2. Constitutional Law Ⓒ273 Contempt Ⓒ54(4)

In order that the court may have jurisdiction to try one charged with contempt, the affidavit which initiates the proceeding must state facts constituting the offense and must affirmatively show that the person charged with the contempt had knowledge of the order he is charged with violating, and the hearing had in the proceeding must be such as to constitute procedural due process.

Due process is absent if a party is denied the right to have his cause tried and determined in accordance with the procedures that are applied in other cases of like character.

4. Constitutional Law ⇨311

"Due process" implies the right not to be deprived of one's property or liberty without evidence having been offered against him in accordance with established rules, and an opportunity to cross-examine those whose evidence is given against him, and an opportunity to present evidence in his own behalf.

A party who is present at a hearing before a court commissioner is not charged with knowledge of an order thereafter made by the court, and cannot be held in contempt of court for failure to abide by such court order based on a showing of presence at hearing before commissioner.

Herbert W. Simmons, Jr., Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Harold W. Kennedy, County Counsel, Thomas H. Carver, Deputy County Counsel, Los Angeles, for respondent.

PER CURIAM.

This matter is before us on a writ of certiorari to review two orders of the respondent court, by each of which petitioner is adjudged to be in contempt of an order of that court, and on each of which he has been sentenced to five days in the county jail. We have reached the conclusion that neither order can be sustained and that each must be annulled.

Petitioner is the defendant in an action brought by one Bettye Lois Collins seeking a divorce from him or, in the alternative, an annulment of her marriage to him. Contemporaneously with the commencement of the action Bettye caused petitioner to be cited before the respondent court to show cause why he should not be ordered to pay to her reasonable sums for attorney's fees, court costs, alimony, and for the support of the minor child of the parties. Hearing was had upon the order to show cause on October 25, 1955, before a commissioner of the court, and on that day the commissioner in the presence of petitioner made a finding that petitioner had the ability to pay $80 per month for the support of the minor child of the parties. Under that same date he made written findings and recommendations to the court recommending that petitioner be ordered to pay through the court trustee the sum of $80 per month for the support of the minor child of the parties, payable at the rate of $20 per week on the first four Fridays of each month, the defendant to be credited upon such payments for payments made for the support of petitioner through the city attorney (order apparently had been made for the payment of $32 per month in a failure-to-provide proceeding before the city attorney); and that he be ordered to pay to counsel for Bettye the sum of $175, payable at the rate of $15 per month.

On October 31 the court approved these findings and recommendations and made its order accordingly. This order was not made in the presence of petitioner, nor was it served upon him.

On April 4, 1956, the action was tried as a default in the absence of petitioner; and on April 5, 1956, a decree annulling the marriage of Bettye and petitioner, and ordering petitioner to pay Bettye the sum of $80 per month for the support of the minor child of the parties at the rate of $20 per week, payable on the first four Fridays of each month was filed; and on the 9th of April, 1956, this decree was entered. On July 2, 1956, petitioner filed in the respondent court an affidavit alleging that on April 4, 1956, the respondent court made an order that petitioner pay to the plaintiff for the support of the minor child the sum of $80 per month, payable at the rate of $20 per week on the first four Fridays of each month, and alleging that since the making of the said order the conditions and circumstances surrounding said parties had materially changed, and setting forth that petitioner had a net income of $260 per month and obligations of over $300 per month, and praying that the order of April 4 be modified so as to reduce the amount which the petitioner would be required to pay for the support of his child.

Upon this affidavit an order was issued and served upon Bettye requiring her to show cause why the decree, insofar as it provided for payment by petitioner for the support of his child, should not be modified. On July 31, 1956, an order to show cause was issued by the respondent court directed to petitioner requiring him to show cause why he should not be adjudged guilty of contempt of court for willfully disobeying "the Order heretofore made on the 4th day of April 1956" as more particularly described in the affidavit of the plaintiff, which was annexed.

The affidavit of the plaintiff, which was the basis for the order to show cause, alleged in substance that on the 4th of April, 1956, the court had made the order which we have hereinbefore set forth as having been contained in the decree of annulment, that the petitioner had only made certain payments, which are set forth in detail in the affidavit and which totaled the sum of $79, and was delinquent in the sum of $253. It alleged that the defendant had the ability to make the payments in which he was delinquent but had willfully failed and refused so to do. It alleged that petitioner was not present when the order was made, and that the order was not pronounced in his presence; but in answer to the question set forth in the affidavit, "What other knowledge of the Order has the adverse party received?", stated, "Through his atty, and O.S.C. re modification filed by defendant herein shows actual notice." It further stated that petitioner had sufficient income to comply with the order and that that income was in the sum of $260 per month net.

On the same day an order to show cause issued requiring petitioner to show cause why he should not be adjudged guilty of contempt for willfully disobeying the "Order heretofore made on the 25th day of October 1955." The affidavit filed by Bettye which was the basis for this order to show cause alleged that on the 25th of October, 1956,¹ the court had ordered petitioner to pay to plaintiff for the support of the minor child of the parties $80 per month payable on the first four Fridays of each month; that payments totaling $440 had accrued under said order; that there had been paid on account thereof the sum of $155 only; and that petitioner was delinquent in the sum of $285. The affidavit alleged that the order of October 25 was audibly pronounced in the presence of petitioner; and in answer to the question, "What other knowledge of the Order has the adverse party received?", stated, "Through his attorney." It made the same allegations as to the ability of petitioner to support his minor child as were set forth in the affidavit heretofore mentioned.

1. This is the date given in the affidavit, but all parties apparently understood it to refer to October 25, 1955.

All orders to show cause were made returnable on August 21, 1956, and on that day the court apparently received some evidence upon the issues tendered by the order requiring Bettye to show cause why the order as to child support of April 4, 1956, should not be modified. After this evidence was taken, the court proceeded to determine the issues of contempt presented by the order to show cause directed to petitioner. At the opening of this proceeding, the following occurred:

"The Court: Number 5, Collins, and you may proceed with the contempt.

"Mr. Stephenson: We arrived at a stipulation which we feel will dispose of the matter of the contempt.

"We offer to stipulate that the amounts set forth as the arrearage in each fourth of the contempt affidavits be found by the Court to be the amount in arrears as of July 31, 1956 on each order.

"The Court: July 31st?

"Mr. Stephenson: Yes, and in other words, there would be then an arrearage of $285.00 on the order of October 25th, 1955, and an arrearage of $253.00 on the order of April 4th, 1956 for child support, and an arrearage of $135.00 as of that July 31st on the order for attorney's fees which was made on October 25, 1955.

"We further offer to stipulate that the Court need not find the defendant in contempt on these orders, but in lieu thereof the Court make an order now for the payment of these arrearages and whatever amount per month the Court feels is reasonable that the defendant should pay.

"Mr. Simmons: We are willing to stipulate, your Honor. We would like to ask the Court to make note of the fact that the defendant has during this period of time in question paid either eight, seven or eight, and in a few instances $10.00 a week except for a few weeks.

"Mr. Stephenson: I have the list here of payments that were made and they were fairly regular, your Honor.

"The Court: Do you wish to offer that list, Mr. Simmons?

"Mr. Stephenson: I have no objection if you feel you'd like to offer it.

"Mr. Simmons: It might be well to have it in the file.

"The Court: You are offering it, Mr. Simmons. It will be received."

The court then orally announced its decision modifying the decree of annulment insofar as it provided for the support of the minor child of the parties; and immediately, without taking any further evidence and without the affidavits of Bettye having been offered or received in evidence, without any opportunity on the part of petitioner to cross-examine the affiant or to refute the statements made in the affidavits or to offer evidence to excuse his delinquency, proceeded to pronounce judgments finding petitioner in contempt of both orders, despite the objections of petitioner's counsel that he had understood that the charge of the contempt had been withdrawn by stipulation and despite counsel's statement that he was taken by surprise and that he desired to reopen the matter in order to show that his client was not actually working during a certain period of time due to illness. At one stage in the proceedings when counsel attempted to point out to the court that there had not been any sufficient showing of the order of April 4 and that therefore the court should not proceed, the court peremptorily told him that he was interrupting and that if he didn't like the order that the court was making he could take an appeal. The court, as heretofore stated, found petitioner in contempt of both orders and sentenced him to the county jail for five days, the sentences to run consecutively.

[1] Proceedings such as this to have a person adjudged guilty of an indirect contempt because of a violation of an order of the court, although ancillary to the action in which the order which it is alleged the defendant has violated was made, are nevertheless quasi-criminal in character. Ex parte Ah Men, 77 Cal. 198, 200, 19 P. 380; Mitchell v. Superior Court, 163 Cal. 423, 125 P. 1061; Ex parte Gould, 99 Cal. 360, 33 P. 1112, 21 L.R.A. 751; Phillips v. Superior Court, 22 Cal.2d 256, 257, 137 P.2d 838.

[2] In order that the court may have jurisdiction to try one charged with contempt, the affidavit which initiates the proceeding must state the facts constituting the offense and must affirmatively show that the person charged with the contempt had knowledge of the order he is charged with violating, Phillips v. Superior Court, supra, 22 Cal.2d at page 258, 137 P.2d 838; Warner v. Superior Court, 126 Cal.App.2d 821, 273 P.2d 89, and the hearing had in the proceeding must be such as to constitute procedural due process, Warner v. Superior Court, supra.

[3,4] While no exact definition of due process may be formulated, it is established that due process is absent if a party is denied the right to have his cause tried and determined in accordance with the procedures that are applied in other cases of like character. San Jose Ranch Co. v. San Jose, etc., Co., 126 Cal. 322, 326, 58 P. 824; Gray v. Hall, 203 Cal. 306, 317, 265 P. 246. It implies the right not to be deprived of one's property or liberty without evidence having been offered against him in accordance with the established rules, and an opportunity to cross-examine those whose evidence is given against him, and the opportunity to present evidence in his own behalf. McClatchy v. Superior Court, 119 Cal. 413, 420, 51 P. 696, 39 L.R.A. 691; Matter of Lambert, 134 Cal. 626, 633, 66 P. 851, 55 L.R.A. 856; Langendorf United Bakeries v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 87 Cal.App.2d 103, 104, 195 P.2d 887, and cases cited.

[5] In the case at bar no evidence was offered against petitioner. The affidavits upon which the orders to show cause were issued served as the complaint charging the contempt. They might also serve as evidence at the hearing but they did not constitute such evidence until offered and received by the court, and upon their being offered petitioner would have the right to object to any matter stated therein upon any proper legal ground as to its relevancy or competency. In the proceedings here he would also have the right, if the evidence was offered and received, to cross-examine the affiant, Langendorf United Bakeries v. Industrial Acc. Comm., supra; 16A. C.J.S., Constitutional Law, § 624, p. 834. Without the affidavits having been offered and without the petitioner having had a right to challenge the relevancy or the competency of the matter set forth in the affidavits, he was deprived of a trial of the issues tendered by the affidavits according to the rules and principles which have been established in our system of jurisprudence for the enforcement and protection of private rights. It is true that the proceeding in contempt being ancillary to the annulment action, the court might take judicial notice of the orders it had made; but it could not take judicial notice of and assume as true the facts stated in the affidavits until the defendant had had the opportunity to challenge those facts as evidence, and when it did so it deprived petitioner of due process, Moore v. California Minerals, etc., Corp., 115 Cal. App.2d 834, 837, 252 P.2d 1005. Procedural due process being lacking, the judgments of contempt must each be annulled.

[6] As to the judgment finding petitioner in contempt of the order denominated as one of October 25, 1955, is concerned, the facts disclosed by the file of the respondent court in the annulment action negative the truth of the finding made in the judgment of contempt that the defendant had knowledge of that order; for while the affidavit which is the foundation for the order to show cause in that contempt proceeding states that the order was audibly pronounced in the presence of petitioner, the proceedings had in that matter and of which the court was charged with judicial notice show that the only proceeding had on October 25 was a hearing before the commissioner who had no power to make any order, and that the actual order of the court was not made until October 31, 1955, and then was made in chambers by the approval of the recommendations of the commissioner. We advert to this phase of the matter not because it could in any wise affect the decision which we have necessarily come to, as heretofore announced, but because it has apparently been common practice to assume, contrary to the facts, that a party who is present at the hearing before the commissioner is charged with knowledge of an order thereafter made by the court. That this is not true follows not only from the fact that the commissioner has no power to order a party to do anything, but also from the fact that the court is not bound to make an order in accordance with the commissioner's findings or his recommendations.

The judgments holding the petitioner in contempt are, and each of them is, annulled.

v.

Herman Robert HAYMAN, Defendant and Appellant.

Cr. 5684.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 2, California.

Nov. 2, 1956.

Hearing Denied Nov. 30, 1956.

Defendant filed a petition for a writ of error coram nobis to review a judgment sentencing him to imprisonment after revocation of probation granted him after he pleaded guilty of forgery of endorsement on a bank check. From an order of the Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Charles W. Fricke, J., denying the petition, defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Moore P. J., held that there was no legal basis for petition, which stated no facts which petitioner did not know when he pleaded guilty or could not have discovered by exercising reasonable diligence long before applying for writ and did not declare any probative facts as basis of his claim, nor when or how they were discovered, so that court might determine whether defendant proceeded with due diligence.

Order affirmed.

1. Criminal Law ☞997(6)

The office of "writ of error coram nobis" to review judgment against defendant in criminal case is to bring trial court's attention to facts existing at time of trial which would have constituted valid defense, but were not presented because of duress, fraud or excusable mistake, without negligence of defendant, and which, not appearing on face of record, would have effected acquittal of defendant or at least caused entry of more favorable judgment against him.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Writ of Error Coram Nobis".

2. Criminal Law ☞997(2)

The writ of error coram nobis is not properly used to correct errors of law or redress irregularities which could have been corrected on motion for new trial or by appeal.

3. Criminal Law ☞997(6)

The scope of writ of error coram nobis is extremely narrow and must be confined to inquiry into facts which might have been properly defensive matter at trial of petitioner therefor but for interposition of some agency other than petitioner's negligence.

4. Criminal Law ☞997(2)

The writ of error coram nobis cannot be used for purpose of appeal from judgment in criminal case because such remedy was lost through failure to invoke it in time without petitioner's fault.

5. Criminal Law ☞997(11)

A petition for writ of error coram nobis to review judgment sentencing petitioner to imprisonment after revocation of probation granted him when he pleaded guilty of forgery of endorsement on bank check was without legal basis, where it stated no facts which petitioner did not know at time of such plea or could not have discovered by exercising reasonable diligence long before applying for writ and did not declare any probative facts as basis of his claim or when or how they were discovered so that court might have determined whether he proceeded with due diligence.

Herman Robert Hayman in pro. per.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., William E. James, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

MOORE, Presiding Justice.

December 23, 1943, Hayman was accused by information (1) of having defrauded Eugene Williams and others October 22, 1943, by forging the name of J. R. Love on the back of a check drawn on the Union Bank & Trust Company in the amount of $49; (2) of having forged the name of Elmo Griffin on the back of a check on the Union Bank and Trust Company in the sum of $13.22; (3) of having forged the name of George Jones on the back of a check October 22, 1943, drawn on the Union Bank and Trust Company in the sum of $68.31. On December 27, 1943, he regularly entered his plea of not guilty as charged in all counts of the information. On February 1, 1944, he withdrew his plea of not guilty and regularly entered his plea of guilty as charged in Count I and filed an application for probation. On February 24 the other counts of the information were dismissed and the court granted him probation for a period of five years on condition that he serve the first six months of his probationary period in the county jail, make reimbursement for all checks he had forged, have no checks or checking account, report regularly to the Probation Department and obey all laws.

On March 11, 1948, the same court entered the following judgment: "Whereas the said defendant, having duly pleaded guilty in this Court of the crime of forgery of endorsement, a felony, as charged in Count 1 of the information, other counts having been dismissed, and having been granted probation, and said defendant having violated the terms of his probation, probation heretofore granted is revoked and

"It is Therefore Ordered, Adjudged and Decreed that the said defendant be punished by imprisonment in the State Prison for the term prescribed by law which sentence is ordered to run consecutively with sentence imposed by the United States Court.

"It is further Ordered that the defendant be remanded to the custody of the Sheriff of the County of Los Angeles, to be by him delivered into the custody of the Director of Corrections at the California State Prison at San Quentin when released by the United States Authorities.

"Done in open Court this 11th day of March, 1948."

At the time of sentence the court remarked: "In this case the defendant was charged with a number of forgeries, pleaded guilty to one count and was placed on probation.

"It now appears that this same defendant appeared before the United States District Court for the Southern District of California, in January of this year, and for the offense of impersonation of the holder of Government obligations, forging a number of Government checks and conspiracy, was given a number of sentences to the Federal penitentiary. Violation is so perfectly obvious there isn't any doubt about the situation at all.

"It appears that this defendant is not within the jurisdiction and is not available for sentence at this time.

"There being no legal cause why sentence should not now be pronounced, it is therefore the order of this court that probation heretofore granted be vacated and set aside, and it is the sentence of this court the defendant be imprisoned in the State Prison of the State of California for the term prescribed by law.

"The Sheriff is directed to carry this sentence into execution by transferring the defendant to the State Prison at San Quentin and turning him over to the custody of the Director of Corrections of that Institution, upon release of the defendant from the Federal Penitentiary. This sentence to run consecutively with the sentence imposed by the United States Government, of course."

April 11, 1956, appellant filed in the superior court his "Petition for Writ of Error Coram Nobis" whereby he contended (1) that the superior court knew where he could be located and could by reasonable diligence have cited him to appear at the time of passing sentence; (2) that it was prejudicial error for the court to impose a secret sentence after the prisoner was out of the jurisdiction, Pen.Code, § 1193; (3) that petitioner had a right to be present at the imposition of his sentence; (4) that the Probation Department declined to cite petitioner for violating his probation; (5) that petitioner has been in continuous confinement since 1946 and will be eligible for release in 1960.

From the order denying the petition, petitioner has appealed.

[1-3] There is no legal basis for the petition for a writ of error coram nobis. The office of that writ is to bring the attention of the court to such facts as existed at the time of the trial that would have constituted a valid defense, but which, without negligence on the part of the defendant, were not presented, either through duress, fraud or excusable mistake and which, not appearing on the face of the record, would have effected an acquittal of the petitioner or, at least, have caused a more favorable judgment to be entered against him. People v. Tuthill, 32 Cal.2d 819, 821, 198 P.2d 505; People v. Reid, 195 Cal. 249, 255, 232 P. 457, 36 A.L.R. 1435. It is not a writ whereby convicts may attack or relitigate just any judgment on a criminal charge merely because the unfortunate person may become displeased with his confinement or with any other result of the judgment under attack. People v. Martinez, 88 Cal.App.2d 767, 771, 199 P.2d 375. It is not properly used to correct errors of law or to redress irregularities at the trial that could have been corrected on motion for new trial or by appeal. People v. Martinez, supra. On the contrary, it is a process whose scope is extremely narrow and must be confined to an inquiry into those facts which might have been properly defensive matter at the trial but for the interposition of some agency other than the negligence of the petitioner. People v. Darcy, 79 Cal.App.2d 683, 693, 180 P.2d 752.

[4,5] Neither may the writ of error coram nobis be used for the purposes of appeal because that remedy was lost through failure to invoke it in time without fault on the part of the petitioner. People v. Mooney, 178 Cal. 525, 529, 174 P. 325; People v. Pryor, 87 Cal.App.2d 352, 353, 196 P.2d 948. There is nothing in the petition that should have required the trial court to reassert jurisdiction of the action with a view to inquiring whether judgment should be vacated. It states no facts upon which petitioner relies which he did not know at the time he pled guilty or which he could not by the exercise of reasonable diligence have discovered long prior to his application for the writ. People v. Adamson, 34 Cal.2d 320, 326, 210 P.2d 13. Neither does the petition declare probative facts as the basis of his claim nor the time and occasion when or how they were discovered, whereby the court might have determined whether he proceeded with due diligence. His only attempt to meet that requirement was by alleging that he was not notified of his sentence to San Quentin "until long after the time within which to appeal had expired." His long delay was deadly poison to any probative facts that might otherwise have been grounds for the writ.

Denial of petition affirmed.

Robert GIANI, also known as Robert Rafael Giani, Defendant and Respondent.

Cr. 3233.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 1, California.

Oct. 31, 1956.

Rehearing Denied Nov. 15, 1956.

Hearing Denied Nov. 28, 1956.

Prosecution for violation of section 288a of Penal Code against defendant who was awarded new trial when District Attorney was allowed, over objection, to ask defendant on cross-examination whether on date of alleged occurrence he was a homosexual, to which answer was "yes". The Superior Court, County of Marin, Carlos R. Freitas, J., entered order, and the State appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Fred B. Wood, J., held that question was improper, in absence of sound basis for entertaining presumption or inference that every homosexual is "psycho-biologically" predisposed to perform acts proscribed by statute, and, under circumstances, admission of evidence over objection was prejudicial error.

Order affirmed.

1. Criminal Law ☞1144(12)

In prosecution for violation of section 288a of Penal Code against defendant who was awarded new trial when District Attorney was allowed, over objection, to ask defendant on cross-examination whether on date of alleged occurrence he was a homosexual, to which answer was "yes", record afforded no sound basis for entertaining presumption or inference that every homosexual is "psycho-biologically" predisposed to perform acts proscribed by statute. West's Ann.Pen.Code, §§ 288a, 1181, subd. 5, 1238, subd. 3, 1323.

2. Witnesses ☞305(2)

Even if fact designed to be proved by expected answer to question "were you a homosexual" were relevant to issue of predisposition of such a person to violate section 288a, Penal Code, fact that question was asked by prosecution, and not offered in proof by defendant, would preclude contention that defendant, by testifying, had waived protection of any exclusionary rule of law which may have been imposed for his benefit. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 288a.

3. Sodomy ☞1

No particular purpose, motive, or intent is a necessary element of crime described by section 288a of the Penal Code. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 288a.

4. Criminal Law ☞371(1)

Evidence of other similar crimes is not ordinarily admissible to prove specific intent unless the intent accompanying the act is equivocal, or where it is claimed by defendant that act was result of mistake, accident, or inadvertence, or where intent is otherwise denied. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 288a.

5. Criminal Law ☞1170½(5)

Witnesses ☞277(2)

Question, upon cross-examination of defendant accused of violation of section 288a of Penal Code upon person of 15 year old boy, whether defendant was a homosexual, to which answer was "yes", was improper, in absence of sound basis for entertaining presumption or inference that every homosexual is "psycho-biologically" predisposed to perform acts proscribed by statute, and, under circumstances, admission of evidence over objection was prejudicial error. West's Ann.Pen.Code, §§ 261, 288a, 1181, subd. 5, 1238, subd. 3, 1323; West's Ann.Welfare & Inst.Code, §§ 5500, 5650-5653.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Clarence A. Linn, Asst. Atty. Gen., Raymond M. Momboisse, Deputy Atty. Gen., for appellant.

Paul I. Archbold, San Francisco, for respondent.

FRED B. WOOD, Justice.

Charged with the violation of section 288a of the Penal Code, upon the person of a fifteen year old boy, defendant took the witness stand and denied the charge. Upon cross-examination the district attorney was allowed, over objection, to ask, "On May 23d of this year [the date of the alleged occurrence] were you a homosexual?" The answer was, "Yes." Assigning this as prejudicial error defendant made and the trial court granted a motion for a new trial, predicated upon Penal Code, section 1181, subdivision 5. The state has appealed under sanction of section 1238, subdivision 3. The order must be affirmed.

Appellant invokes the principle that, although a defendant in a criminal action cannot be compelled to be a witness against himself, "if he offers himself as a witness, he may be cross-examined by the counsel for the people as to all matters about which he was examined in chief." Pen.Code, § 1323. This defendant was not examined in chief as to his sexual make-up, whether homosexual or heterosexual. True, says the appellant, but this "does not mean that the cross-examination must be confined to a mere categorical review of the matters, dates or times mentioned in the direct examination" and that a defendant "can be cross-examined with respect to facts or denials which are necessarily implied from the testimony-in-chief, as well as with respect to facts which he expressly states." People v. Zerillo, 36 Cal.2d 222, 228 and 229, 223 P.2d 223, 227 and 228.

It is difficult to see the relation between defendant's affirmations and denials on the witness stand and the information which the question "were you a homosexual" might elicit. Appellant speaks of homosexuality as "a psycho-biological condition which predisposes, indeed compels, a party to commit an abnormal sexual offense," such as the offense proscribed by section 288a. Appellant has not cited any expert medical testimony to that effect. It has suggested that we refresh the judicial recollection by reading one or more of a series of Sexual Deviation Research Reports of studies officially conducted by the State Department of Mental Hygiene acting through the Superintendent (Karl M. Bowman, M. D.) of the Langley Porter Clinic.¹

1. The California Sexual Deviation Research project came about as the result of certain studies conducted by the Subcommittee on Sex Crimes of the Assembly Interim Committee on Judicial System and Judicial Process. The sub-committee issued three significant reports: One in March, 1950, another in January, 1951, and the third in August, 1952.

The sub-committee's preliminary report appears in the Assembly Journal for the 1950 First Ext. Session at pp. 29-299. It was also printed as a separate document. It was followed by a final report printed in the Assembly Journal for the 1951 Regular Session at pp. 2799-2866, as a part of the report of the main committee which appears in the 1951 Journal at pp. 2701-2866. The main committee's 1951 report was also printed as a separate document; the sub-committee report appearing at pp. 103-170 thereof. The August, 1952 report of the sub-committee (newly created but virtually a continuation of the original sub-committee) appears in the Assembly

Journal for the 1952 Second Ext. Session at pp. 135-193.

The statute which sanctioned and directed the conduct of this research work was Chapter 35 of the Statutes for the 1950 First Extra Session, p. 477; codified in 1953 as sections 5650-5653 of the Welfare and Institutions Code. Stats. 1953, ch. 153, p. 1028.

The following reports have been filed by the State Department of Mental Hygiene acting through the Langley Porter Clinic, Karl M. Bowman, M.D., Medical Superintendent:

Preliminary report stating the problem and describing the proposed project (55 pages mimeographed) was received by the Assembly on March 12, 1951. (Assembly Journal for the 1951 Regular Session, p. 1461.)

Sexual Deviation Research Report by Karl M. Bowman, March 1952, was printed as a separate document and in the Assembly Journal for the 1952 First Ext. Session at pp. 37-113.

California Sexual Deviation Research Report, dated January, 1953, was re-

We have perused those reports but find nothing therein which seems to support counsel's broad claim that every homosexual is predisposed to commit crimes, sexual crimes, crimes of the nature of the crime defined and proscribed by section 288a. Instead, we find such statements as these: "The facts are that the majority of homosexuals are no particular menace to society. A small number of them, like those who are heterosexual, will attempt to seduce or sexually assault others or try to initiate sex relations with small children." (1951 Report; mimeographed, p. 7.) "[M]ost exhibitionists, homosexuals and peepers may fit into the class of psychopaths and yet be socially harmless individuals." (January, 1953, Report, p. 109.) Evidence does not "exist for the popular idea 'that homosexuals are in general antisocial individuals.'" (January, 1953, Report, p. 117.)

Moreover, it is not required that the defendant, in support of his objection to the challenged question, demonstrate that not every homosexual is psycho-biologically predisposed, indeed compelled to commit the act here charged. It is for the cross-examiner to show a sound basis for his assumption that homosexuals are so predisposed. The probable lack of a scientific basis for any such assumption seems indicated by the following statement made at the conclusion of the state's four-year sexual deviation study: "Up to now much research in sexual deviation has been theoretic and speculative rather than empiric, and most of the empiric research has been clinical and descriptive rather than experimental. It is suggested that an important task is that of developing and applying reliable scientific procedures in the effort to discover basic principles in the area of human sexuality. This difficult task involves searching systematically and empirically for the components of personality, of culture, of interpersonal relationships, of heredity, and constitution that contribute to sexual deviation and to sexual conformity." (March, 1954, Report, p. 157.)

[1] In this state of the record we perceive no sound basis for entertaining a presumption or an inference that every homosexual is "psycho-biologically" predisposed to perform the acts proscribed by section 288a of the Penal Code.

We are mindful of Edmund Burke's classic utterance in his Second Speech on Conciliation with America: "I do not know the method of drawing up an indictment against a whole people." The Works of the Right Honorable Edmund Burke, Vol. II, p. 136, 3rd Edition, Boston: Little, Brown & Company, 1869. Equally true, we think, would be the statement "You can not indict an entire segment of the population." Yet, that, it would seem, is precisely what the challenged question does. Perhaps we could express it more clearly were we to assume the charge to be that of rape, "accomplished with a female not the wife of the perpetrator," Pen.Code, § 261, and that the prosecutor asked the defendant upon cross-examination "Are you a heterosexual?", the contention being that every heterosexual is of a "psycho-biological" make-up which "predisposes, indeed compels," him to commit rape.²

Appellant's counsel frankly states he has found no case law precisely in point supporting appellant's claim. He does invoke the well-established principle that "All ceived by the Assembly on February 24, 1953 (Assembly Journal for the 1953 Reg.Sess., p. 1156) and was ordered printed as a separate document (Same, p. 1197).

California Sexual Deviation Research Report, dated March, 1954, was printed as a separate document. It was received by the Assembly on March 2 and on March 3, 1954, was ordered printed.

(Assembly Journal, 1954 Reg.Sess., pp. 64 and 74.)

2. We note in passing that the acts proscribed by § 228a are equally condemned whether committed by persons of the same sex or of opposite sexes. People v. Coleman, 53 Cal.App.2d 18, 26-27, 127 P. 2d 309, and cases there cited.

Appellant's argument, pressed to a logical conclusion, would seem to tend to facts having rational probative value are admissible, unless some specific rule forbids.' * * * The general test of relevancy of indirect evidence is whether it tends logically, naturally, and by reasonable inference to prove or disprove a material issue", People v. Jones, 42 Cal.2d 219, 222, 266 P.2d 38, 41, and the application of that principle to the facts in the Jones case (prosecution of a charge of violating section 288 of the Penal Code). An order denying defendant's motion for a new trial was reversed, for error in holding inadmissible the testimony of a psychiatrist that he had examined the defendant and concluded he "is not a sexual deviate and * * * is incapable of having the necessary intent to be lustive, either for himself or to satisfy the lusts of a child of nine and a half years of age." At page 222 of 42 Cal.2d, at page 41 of 266 P.2d. His "sole purpose in offering in evidence the doctor's opinion * * * was to prove that he did not engage in the acts for which he was on trial", not to disprove the existence of the required specific intent. 42 Cal.2d at page 223, 266 P.2d at page 42. The reviewing court then adverted to the use of evidence of good character tending to rebut testimony of an incriminating character, showing defendant's general reputation in the community, creating a reasonable doubt of guilt. Next, reference was made to the statutes dealing with the sexual psychopath, indicating a legislative determination that a person who commits sex offenses "is more likely to violate section 288 than one who has no such propensity; to some extent there is a cause and effect relationship. Evidence that a person has no such disposition is analogous to that in regard to character, for it bears upon the probability of the innocence of the accused. From evidence which tends to prove that a person is not a sexual psychopath, an inference reasonably may be drawn that he did not commit the act denounced by section 288. See Code Civ.Proc., § 1960. The competency of expert opinion in this field of evidence is established by the statutory procedure for the determination of sexual psychopathy, Welf. & Inst. Code, §§ 5504-5506. Accordingly, the evidence here excluded was relevant to the general issue before the jury and should have been admitted." 42 Cal.2d at pages 224-225, 266 P.2d at page 42.

Quite significant, we think, is the fact that the court was there speaking of an offer to prove by expert testimony that a particular individual had no disposition to commit the offense charged, not merely that he was a member of a large class of persons as a basis for a layman's inference (not a medical expert's opinion) that all members of that class were predisposed to commit the act charged. Also, insofar as the court did refer to a class it was a conceivably narrower class (sexual psychopaths) than the one to which appellant herein refers (homosexuals). The Legislature has not, in so many words at least, declared that every homosexual is a sexual psychopath. Instead, it was defined the latter term as meaning a person "who is affected, in a form predisposing to the commission of sexual offenses, and in a degree constituting him a menace to the health or safety of others, with any of the following conditions: (a) Mental disease or disorder. (b) Psychopathic personality. (c) Marked departures from normal mentality." Welf. & Inst.Code, § 5500. (Emphasis added.) Conceivably a person might be affected by one or another of the conditions described in clauses (a), (b) and (c) but not "in a form" predisposing him to commit sexual offenses, nor "in a degree" constituting him a menace to the health or safety of others. In the absence of expert medical testimony on ward the view that if the information herein charged defendant with violating § 288a in participation with a person of the opposite sex (adult or minor, consenting or nonconsenting) it would be proper for the cross-examiner to ask "Are you a heterosexual" upon the theory that such a person is predisposed to commit such an act.

the subject we hesitate to equate the word "homosexual" with the term "sexual psychopath."

We note the court's criticism (in the Jones case) of the holding in People v. Sellers, 103 Cal.App.2d 830, 230 P.2d 398, the rejection of a defendant's offer of the opinion of a medical expert, who had examined him, whether the defendant was to any extent a homosexual. Concerning that, the court in the Jones case observed in part, that "a showing of sexual normality * * * has relevancy to the non-performance of homosexual acts." At page 225 of 42 Cal.2d, at page 43 of 266 P.2d. That statement, viewed in its context, was made concerning an offer by the defendant to show indisposition to commit the offense, by proving he was not a homosexual (conceivably viewed as a large group which includes a smaller group defined as sexual psychopaths). If so, the relevancy of the offer was obvious. The converse is not necessarily true; i. e., the concept that if a man merely belongs to the larger group (homosexual) he is predisposed to commit the particular offense.

[2] It seems pertinent also to observe that even if the fact designed to be proved by the expected answer to the question "were you a homosexual" were equally relevant to an issue herein as was the proffered testimony in the Jones and Sellers cases relevant to issues in those cases, respectively, there is this significant difference: In the Jones case and in the Sellers case the defendant was making the offer. He thereby waived the protection of any exclusionary rule the law may have imposed for his benefit. Here, in contrast, the prosecution made the offer and the defendant objected.

In view of the conclusion we have reached, it is unnecessary to enter upon an extended discussion of the exclusionary rules of evidence and the exceptions thereto. We do note that the challenged question is not designed or adapted to elicit proof of "similar acts" committed upon the person of the prosecuting witness or any one else, whether to show propensity, a behavior pattern or a modus operandi.

[3,4] We observe, also, that "'no particular purpose, motive, or intent is a necessary element of the crime described'" by section 288a of the Penal Code, People v. Avanzi, 25 Cal.App.2d 301, 302, 77 P.2d 237, 238, quoted with approval in People v. Coleman, 53 Cal.App.2d 18, 27, 127 P.2d 309, 315. Evidence of other similar crimes is not ordinarily admissible to prove specific intent unless "the intent accompanying the act is equivocal, or where it is claimed by the defendant that the act was the result of mistake, accident, or inadvertence, or where intent is otherwise denied." People v. Channell, 136 Cal.App.2d 99, 112, 288 P.2d 326, 335. No greater should be the reason for receiving evidence of a personality trait or quality that might predispose a person to commit the proscribed act. That seems to have been the view of the court in People v. Musumeci, 133 Cal.App. 2d 354, at page 360, 284 P.2d 168 at page 172, where (in a prosecution under section 288 of the Penal Code) it was held prejudicial error to allow (upon cross-examination of the defendant) the question "You are a sex pervert, aren't you?" The discussion in 133 Cal.App.2d at pages 361 to 366, 284 P.2d 168, Presiding Justice White speaking for the court, is cogently persuasive.

[5] We entertain no doubt that the error herein was prejudicial. "In a case such as this where the crime charged is of itself sufficient to inflame the mind of the average person [a prosecution for violations of § 288 and § 288a, Pen.Code], it is required that there be rigorous insistence upon observance of the rules of the admission of evidence and conduct of the trial". People v. Evans, 39 Cal.2d 242, 251, 246 P.2d 636, 642.

The order is affirmed.

v.

Russell MUNRO, Director, and Phillip S. Davis, Area Administrator, Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control, The Alcoholic Beverage Control Appeals Board, Defendants and Respondents.

Civ. 21760.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 2, California.

Nov. 2, 1956.

Hearing Denied Dec. 24, 1956.

Mandamus proceeding brought to have liquor license revocation order set aside. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Arnold Praeger, J., denied the petition, and an appeal was taken. The District Court of Appeal, Moore, P. J., held that plaintiff could not successfully complain that he had been denied due process in revocation proceeding by reason of his being in jail at time of hearing, since he had been represented at such hearing by counsel who had made no motion for continuance to enable licensee to be present in person.

Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control must be sustained, in license revocation case, provided it has committed no error of law, if evidence is sufficient to support its finding of fact. West's Ann. Const. art. 20, § 22.

2. Intoxicating Liquors ⇨108(10)

All substantial conflicts in evidence must be resolved in favor of findings of Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control in license revocation case. West's Ann. Const. art. 20, § 22.

3. Intoxicating Liquors ⇨108(5)

In proceedings culminating in revocation of off-sale retail liquor license, evidence sustained finding that licensee had abused his license by sale of beer to a minor. West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, § 25658(a).

4. Intoxicating Liquors ⇨108(1)

To prevail under Business and Professions Code section providing a defense when motor vehicle operator's license had been exhibited, liquor licensee must have demanded documentary proof of customer's majority before furnishing any alcoholic beverage to minor. West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, § 25660.

David C. Marcus, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Edward M. Belasco, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondents.

MOORE, Presiding Justice.

Appellant, a liquor licensee, was charged by the Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control with selling beer to a minor, one Gilbert Monson. Bus. & Prof.Code, § 25658(a). He had previously been convicted of that offense in the municipal court. Following an administrative hearing on the accusation pursuant to the decision proposed by the hearing officer, the Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control made its order revoking appellant's license. On appeal, the Alcoholic Beverage Control Appeals Board (hereinafter called "the Board") duly affirmed the Department's order. Appellant then petitioned the superior court for a writ of mandate directing the Department to set aside its order of revocation, in reply to which, respondent Board filed its opposition to the issuance of the writ along with a copy of its own decision. Having duly considered the pleadings and the administrative proceedings, the court denied the petition for the writ of mandate. This appeal followed.

The Facts

As an off-sale, retail liquor licensee, appellant operated a store adjacent to a public street in Los Angeles. Gilbert Monson, a minor of fifteen years, entered the store and purchased three one-quart bottles of beer from appellant. On former occasions, Gilbert had purchased cigarettes from appellant but had never been asked to exhibit a driver's license or other evidence of his majority. Acting upon complaints about appellant's liquor sales to minors, the Los Angeles Police Department stationed two officers in waiting when Gilbert called at appellant's store August 6, 1954, to make such a purchase. The merchant was then charged with a sale of alcoholic beverage to a minor in violation of the Alcoholic Beverage Control Act. Bus. & Prof. Code, § 23000 et seq.

He was convicted by the municipal court and sentenced to serve 60 days in the county jail. There he lingered when the hearing before the administrative board proceeded to investigate the abuse of his license by the sale of beer to the youth. Although appellant was in jail at the time of the hearing, he was represented by his counsel. No motion for a continuance was made in order that appellant might be present at the trial, but his lawyer "in lieu of appellant's testimony" introduced the reporter's transcript of appellant's trial in the municipal court for the sale of the three quarts of beer to Monson for the "court to see what the defendant's version of the case is."

Statutes Involved

The law applicable to the conduct of a liquor dealer in selling beer to a minor is found in certain decisions hereinafter cited, and in the Constitution and in certain statutes, section of the Business and Professions Code printed for the sake of brevity on the margin below.¹

1. Business and Professions Code sections as they read in 1954 when appellant sold the beer:

§ 25658. "(a) Every person who sells, furnishes, gives, or causes to be sold, furnished, or given away, any alcoholic beverage to any person under the age of 21 years is guilty of a misdemeanor."

§ 25660. "In any criminal prosecution or proceeding for the suspension or revocation of any license based upon violation of Section 25658, proof that the defendant licensee, or his agent or employee, demanded and was shown, before furnishing any alcoholic beverage to a minor, a motor vehicle operator's license or a registration certificate issued under the Federal Selective Service Act or other bona fide documentary evidence of majority and identity of the person, is a defense to the prosecution or proceeding for the suspension or revocation of any license."

§ 24200. "The following are the grounds which constitute a basis for the suspension or the revocation of licenses: * * *

"(b) Except as limited by Chapters 11 and 12 of this division, the violation or the causing or the permitting of a violation by a licensee of this division, any rules of the board adopted pursuant to Part 14 of Division 2 of the Revenue and Taxation Code or any rules of the department adopted pursuant to the provisions of this division, or any other penal provisions of law of this State prohibiting or regulating the sale, exposing for sale, use, possession, giving away, adulteration, dilution, misbranding, or mislabeling of alcoholic beverages or intoxicating liquors."

California Constitution, Article XX, section 22, fourth paragraph:

"* * * * The department shall have the power, in its discretion, to deny,

The Contentions

[1, 2] Appellant contends that the findings do not support the order. The Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control is an agency of the State created by the Constitution for the very purpose of investigating charges of misconduct brought against licensees under the Alcoholic Beverage Control Act of 1935. Const., Art. XX, § 22. Thus, its decision after an administrative hearing without prejudicial error will not be upset when supported by substantial evidence even though contradicted. Covert v. State Board of Equalization, 29 Cal.2d 125, 131, 173 P.2d 545. It must be sustained, provided it has committed no error of law, if the evidence is sufficient to support its findings of fact. Griswold v. Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control, 141 Cal.App.2d 807, 297 P.2d 762. As in other actions, all substantial conflicts must be resolved in favor of the findings of the Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control. Ibid.

[3] The evidence adduced is abundant to support the findings. Two officers saw Gilbert make the purchase; the evidence is conclusive that the boy was only fifteen years of age; there was testimony that the beverage purchased was "beer"; the youth testified that he indeed bought the "beer" from appellant; in fact, appellant made various admissions of his sale of the beverage.

[4] Appellant seeks to defend his actions on the ground that Gilbert had been in his store a week before the three-quart sale when he identified himself as being past 21 years. On that occasion he exhibited a driver's license which purportedly proved his majority. Appellant testified that he relied upon such prior exhibition of documentary proof in making the sale which has resulted in the revocation of his license. His theory is that this conduct brings him within the terms of Business and Professions Code section 25660 providing a defense when the vendor has been exhibited a "motor vehicle operator's license". To prevail under that section it was incumbent upon the merchant to demand documentary proof of the customer's majority "before furnishing any alcoholic beverage to a minor". The hearing officer and the Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control did not believe appellant's story. Therefore, his defense under section 25660 was not established.

[5] Finally, appellant contends that he is entitled to a writ of mandate for the reason that no proof was ever made that the "beer" he sold Gilbert Monson contained one half of one per cent or more of alcohol. Whenever the term "beer" is used without words of qualification, it signifies a malt liquor and an intoxicating beverage. See Buchanan v. State, 77 Ga.App. 435, 49 S.E. 2d 157, 158; Williams v. State, 73 Ga.App. 421, 36 S.E.2d 839, 840; State v. Schrader, 243 Iowa 978, 55 N.W.2d 232, 236; State v. Winter, Mont., 285 P.2d 149, 151. In the Williams case, supra, the court rejected the argument that the indictment was defective because it did not specify the variety of beer sold, and held that the term "beer" is in general usage to designate any and all malted liquors within the purview of the state liquor laws which declare that "beer" signifies "fermented beverages made wholly or in part from malt or any similar fermented beverage." The Montana liquor law includes beer in its definition of intoxicating liquors, without specifying the percentage of alcohol therein. The Winter case, supra, construing that statute, held that "beer" in its ordinary meaning, when used in connection with laws involving the sale of alcoholic beverages, implies a malt liquor and an intoxicating beverage. This malt liquor, under the generic name "beer," is used in both Europe and America as a common beverage. The word "beer," like the words "brandy," "whisky," "gin," and "rum," is held universally to be an intoxisuspend or revoke any specific liquor license if it shall determine for good cause that the granting or continuance of such license would be contrary to public welfare or morals, or that a person seeking or holding a license has violated any law prohibiting conduct involving moral turpitude. • • • cating liquor per se for the reason that it is within the common knowledge and ordinary understanding that it is an intoxicating liquor. Briffitt v. State, 58 Wis. 39, 16 N.W. 39. Therefore, when a person is accused under section 25658, supra, of having sold "beer," the court takes judicial notice that it means an intoxicant. In short, the Business and Professions Code, section 23006, defines "beer" as "any alcoholic beverage obtained by the fermentation of any infusion or decoction of barley, malt, hops, or any other similar product * * *." Such authorities should be conclusive that whenever merchandise is sold as "beer" it could not mean anything but an intoxicating beverage. Moreover, while appellant was on the witness stand in the municipal court he might have testified that Gilbert called for "root beer," "ginger beer" or for one of the other varieties of nonintoxicating beer, if such was a fact. Having sworn to tell the whole truth then, his contention now that it was not proved to be intoxicating must be regarded as so much bluster. It must now be presumed that if he knew the beer was nonintoxicating he would have so testified at his trial.

Due Process Denied?

[6, 7] Surely, appellant could not mean that he was denied the right of "due process of law." He was represented at the administrative hearing by a member of the bar who actively participated in the proceedings, cross-examined witnesses, introduced evidence and made use of all available facts or authorities to effectuate appellant's exoneration of the accusation. The attorney made no motion for a continuance to enable appellant to be present in person, but he offered in evidence the transcript of the proceedings of appellant's trial in the municipal court for the purpose of proving his innocence. He is in no position now to complain of his failure before the Department. A proceeding before an administrative agency to determine whether a license should be revoked is not a criminal or quasi-criminal prosecution. Murphy v. Board of Medical Examiners, 75 Cal.App.

2d 161, 166, 170 P.2d 510. As in any other civil action, a litigant may appear solely by his counsel to defend the charges against him. Having done so, his fortunes are linked with the ensuing judgment. In the absence of reversible error at the hearing, his litigation has become history. There is no statute that requires a party to an administrative hearing to be personally present. On the contrary, he may be present by his attorney. Government Code Annotated, §§ 11505, 11509.

Appellant's attorney had notice of the accusation, appeared at the time and place designated for the hearing and participated without ever registering an objection on the ground that the Department had no jurisdiction. Appellant does not claim that the attorney was not authorized to represent him.

Order denying alternative writ of mandate affirmed.

In action by crane owner against lessee thereof for rentals due, evidence supported findings of trial court that owner did not warrant crane's fitness for use for which lessee intended, that crane was reasonably fit for use intended, and that no repairs chargeable to the owner were made by the lessee.

2. Bailment Ⓒ14(1)

Where defendant leasing crane from owner inspected the same before taking it and owner did not know the purpose for which crane was to be used and lessee agreed to make all repairs, statutes providing that one who lets personal property must put it into condition for the purpose for which it is let and repair all deteriorations not the fault of the hirer, and that if owner fails to fulfill obligations the lessee, after giving notice, may expend any reasonable amount necessary to make good the owner's default and recover such amount from him, were not applicable. West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 1955, 1957.

3. Compromise and Settlement Ⓒ23(3)

In crane owner's action against lessee thereof for rentals allegedly due, evidence supported finding that payments made by lessee in money and materials were received on account rather than in full settlement.

4. Accord and Satisfaction Ⓒ25(4)

In crane owner's action against lessee thereof for rentals due, where lessee did not expressly plead accord and satisfaction and his only reference to the subject was a denial as to the amount due, issue of accord and satisfaction was not raised.

5. Accord and Satisfaction Ⓒ25(1)

Generally, one who relies on an accord and satisfaction must plead both, except that if a plaintiff, as a part of his case, proves a payment under circumstances which tend to show an accord and satisfaction, defendant may rely upon the facts thus shown as constituting an accord and satisfaction though not pleaded as such in the answer.

6. Bailment Ⓒ33

In crane owner's action against lessee thereof for rentals due, where lessee's answer and cross-complaint contained no reference to accord and satisfaction, but merely denied allegation as to amount due, court's finding that payments in money and materials were received by owner on account rather than in full settlement, was sufficient and court was not required to make specific finding on accord and satisfaction.

Wagener, Brailsford & Knox, Oakland, for appellant.

Oswald G. Ingold, Henry Poppic, Berkeley, for respondent.

BRAY, Justice.

Defendant appeals from a judgment for plaintiff for $3,300 and a denial of relief to defendant upon his cross-complaint.

Questions Presented.

1. Was there a warranty of the fitness of the crane?

2. Should the court have found expressly on accord and satisfaction?

Evidence.

Defendant rented a crane from plaintiff's assignor, Henry A. Tieslau, for a monthly rental of $825.¹ Defendant took possession of it on October, 18th, moving it to Mare Island. Defendant testified that it repeatedly broke down in use because of mechanical failures which defendant had to repair, and that he was able to use it on the intended job approximately 50 hours only. About December 12th defendant placed the crane in storage. Approximately 7½ months after the rental agreement was executed, the crane was returned to Tieslau. Plaintiff sued for 8 months' rental less a credit of $412.50, or $6,187.50. Defendant answered, alleging that the crane was not in a condition to perform the work for which it was hired, and that at the request of Tieslau, defendant expended $1,700 for repairs to the crane. Defendant cross-complained for that amount. The court found against defendant on his allegations that the crane was unfit and that he repaired it at Tieslau's request, or that defendant expended $1,700 or any other sum for repairs of the crane. It then found that the balance due plaintiff on said contract of hiring the crane was $3,300 and gave judgment for that amount. It further denied defendant any relief upon his cross-complaint.

1. The rental agreement provided for an option to purchase the crane, which option was never exercised.

[1] 1. Warranty.

This case is primarily a factual one, in which practically all the material testimony of defendant is denied by Tieslau. As to warranty, defendant testified that prior to the execution of the rental agreement he explained to Tieslau that he intended to use the crane as a dragline crane and told him the character of the work to be done. Tieslau testified that the crane was rigged for both dragline and regular work but that defendant did not tell him what the crane was to be used for. In fact the work was more or less secret. Tieslau testified that defendant inspected the crane on two occasions before ordering it, that the crane was in reasonably good condition (his son testified to the same effect concerning its condition) and that defendant had agreed to make all the main repairs and to do all maintenance work, and that the work claimed to have been done by defendant was "simply maintenance on the machine." He further testified that at no time had defendant notified him that the crane was not working properly or needed repairs, also that he had not been informed that the crane was placed in storage and was not thereafter being used.

Defendant's evidence was to the contrary, but it was for the court to resolve the conflict. The work at Mare Island stopped on December 10th because of flooding of the work area and its being under water, and could not thereafter be resumed.

Tieslau testified that the first time he knew that defendant claimed that the crane was not fit for the work or that defendant claimed to have made repairs chargeable to him was after suit filed; that at all times prior thereto defendant admitted owing the money but was in financial difficulties and wanted more time to pay. An employee of a collection agency testified to the same effect. Thus there is substantial evidence for the court's implied findings of no warranty, that the crane was reasonably fit, and that no repairs chargeable to Tieslau were made.

[2] Defendant contends that the court failed to find directly on the warranty and repair issue. Defendant's allegation of warranty was that the crane was not in a condition to perform the work for which it was hired; that upon learning of its condition defendant immediately notified Tieslau thereof and that Tieslau advised that he would make an adjustment. The court found this allegation to be untrue. Section 1955, Civil Code, which provides that one who lets personal property must put it into condition fit for the purpose for which it is let and repair all deteriorations not the fault of the hirer, and section 1957 providing that if the letter fails to fulfill the obligations as prescribed by section 1957, the hirer "after giving him notice to do so," may expend any reasonable amount necessary to make good the letter's default and recover such amount from him, are not applicable here, where the defendant inspected the crane before taking it, the letter did not know the purpose for which the crane was to be used and the hirer agreed to make all repairs. Moreover, under the circumstances here, section 1957 requires notice. The court found that none was given. See Baker v. Gibson, 14 Cal.2d 59, 65, 92 P.2d 796, cited by defendant, and Pugh-Miller Drilling Co. v. Main Oil Co., 1929, 98 Cal.App. 297, 300, 276 P. 1043, for requirement that notice must be given.

2. Accord and Satisfaction.

[3,4] Defendant testified that a payment of $100 and the delivery to Tieslau of certain materials was accepted by the latter in full settlement of Tieslau's claims. While admitting the receipt of this money and certain materials, Tieslau testified that they were received on account and not in full settlement. This issue the court resolved in Tieslau's favor by finding the amount due from defendant. Defendant contends the court should have made an express finding on accord and satisfaction. Defendant did not expressly plead it. His only reference in the answer and cross-complaint to this subject was a denial of plaintiff's allegation as to the amount due. This did not raise an issue of accord and satisfaction and hence the court was not required to find on it.

[5,6] While the general rule is that he who relies on an accord and satisfaction must plead both Berger v. Lane, 190 Cal. 443, 447, 213 P. 45, there is an exception to the rule. "This rule, however, we take it is subject to the exception that if a plaintiff, as a part of his case, proves a payment, and the circumstances under which it was made tend to show an accord and satisfaction, the defendant may rely upon the facts thus shown as constituting an accord and satisfaction though not pleaded as such in the answer." B. & W. Engineering Co. v. Beam, 23 Cal.App. 164, 177, 137 P. 624, 629. This exception, however, would not apply here, for two reasons: (1) the plaintiff did not prove an accord and satisfaction, and (2) the defendant did not prove one. The finding of the court on the allegations of the complaint and answer was a sufficient finding on the subject. As said in Golden Gate Building Materials Co. v. Fireman, 205 Cal. 174, 177, 270 P. 214, 215: "Under such conflicting evidence support is found for the decision of the trial court that there was no accord and satisfaction, but a finding to this effect was not required. If made, it would have been adverse to appellants and its omission was immaterial as the findings made fully determine the cause. [Citations.]"

The judgment is affirmed.

Plaintiffs and Appellants,

v.

W. R. SHADBURNE, Ira J. Edgecomb,
Defendants and Respondents.

Civ. 8835.

District Court of Appeal, Third District,
California.

Nov. 2, 1956.

Rehearing Denied Nov. 27, 1956.

Hearing Denied Dec. 24, 1956.

Suit was brought to prevent interference with ditch and for damages for crop losses and for punitive damages, and one of the defendants filed a cross-complaint and counterclaim for judgment for damages for trespass and to compel plaintiffs to compensate such defendant for the costs of maintenance of ditch at certain diversion point. The Superior Court, Siskiyou County, James M. Allen, J., entered judgment adverse to plaintiffs, and they appealed. The District Court of Appeal, McMurray, J. pro tem., held that where plaintiffs, in answer to cross-complaint and counterclaim, admitted that plaintiffs were the successors in interest to gold dredging companies, which had entered into a stipulation with that defendant for maintenance of the diversion point and to share maintenance costs at diversion point, and it appeared that plaintiffs had received water from the diversion point in accordance with judgment entered in action, in which gold dredging companies were parties, and which established rights to water in creek, plaintiffs were properly required to share the maintenance cost at diversion point.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Mortgages ⇨204

Beneficiary under trust deed could maintain an action to prevent the impairment of his security, if damage was such as to impair materially his security.

2. Trespass ⇨10

If permission granted by co-owner of realty to third parties to extend ditch was ineffective, the third parties were trespassers.

3. Trespass ⇨27

Where assignment of lease carried with it the right to possession of the realty, the possessor had sufficient interest to justify him in repelling by reasonable means a trespass by those who extended ditch over the realty.

4. Judgment ⇨681

Where plaintiffs, in answer to cross-complaint and counterclaim of one of the defendants to compel plaintiffs to compensate him for costs of maintenance of ditch at certain diversion point, admitted that plaintiffs were successors in interest to gold dredging companies, which had entered into a stipulation with that defendant for maintenance of diversion point and to share maintenance costs at diversion point, and it appeared that plaintiffs had received water from diversion point in accordance with judgment entered in action, in which gold dredging companies were parties, and which established rights to water in creek, plaintiffs were properly required to share maintenance cost at diversion point.

Mark M. Brawman, Yreka, for appellants.

Burton, Lee & Hennessy, Yreka, for respondents.

McMURRAY, Justice pro tem.

Plaintiffs Jensen, through their predecessors in interest in two gold dredging companies, had the right to maintain a dam and ditch at diversion point number 12 on Seiad Creek. The Jensens succeeded to this right when they purchased the property. In the winter of 1952-1953 storms destroyed Jensens' diversion works at point number 12 and required the construction of new facilities or the extension of the ditch upstream. Mr. Jensen obtained written permission to extend his ditch upstream toward diversion point number 10 from a certain Mr. Wigley, who was a co-owner of the property over which such extension was to be made. Before Mr. Wigley gave permission to the Jensens to extend the ditch over the property here involved he had leased that property to the Seven Oaks Lumber Company. This lease reserved to the lessor the right to use the premises for agricultural purposes. Subsequently, this lease was assigned by the lumber company to the Winkelman Company as security in certain transactions, and the Winkelman Company had gone into possession and employed Shadburne as its agent in actual possession. Shadburne, also, was a beneficiary of a deed of trust on this same property. By a superior court action in Siskiyou County, the plaintiffs' predecessor gold companies also had the right to take forty inches of water from diversion point number 10 on the creek. There was a stipulation in that action for judgment that the gold companies, in return for the right to take water at point number 10, would share one-half of the maintenance costs for the diversion works at point number 10 with Mr. Shadburne who was the predecessor in interest of Mr. Wigley.

Acting upon the permission given by Mr. Wigley, the Jensens extended their ditch up the creek to diversion point number 10. Defendant Shadburne then ordered the defendant Edgecomb to fill it up. This was done. The Jensens then brought suit to prevent Shadburne from interfering with the ditch and for damages for crop losses and for punitive damages.

Shadburne interposed defenses and a counterclaim. He alleged that the construction of the ditch was in violation of a judgment determining the water rights on the creek and as a counterclaim asked for damages for trespass. Shadburne asserted that he had agreed with plaintiffs' predecessor in interest to furnish forty inches of water at point number 10, and that they had agreed to share the maintenance costs at diversion point number 10. He asked that plaintiffs be compelled to compensate him for the costs of maintenance at diversion point number 10.

The trial court found that the Jensens had no right to change their diversion point to the injury of any other person, and that the extension of the ditch was a trespass on the lands in possession of Wigley's lessee and defendant Shadburne as beneficiary under the deed of trust. The court awarded Shadburne $50 damages which represented the cost of filling in the ditch. The court also determined that Shadburne was entitled to $125 as one-half of the cost of maintaining the works at diversion point number 10.

The appellants Jensen contend that they were not trespassers on the land of Wigley, and that, therefore, Shadburne had no right to fill up the ditch and further complain that the reservation in the lease by Wigley to the Seven Oaks Lumber Company of the right to use part of the property for agricultural purposes justified Wigley's action in giving the Jensens the right so to use such property. As far as the reservation by Wigley to use part of the land for agricultural purposes was concerned the trial court decided that this was intended to mean a reservation on the demised lands and not a reservation to transfer water to other lands. The trial court viewed the property here involved and its construction of this provision in the lease would seem to be logical and proper.

[1-3] Shadburne, as the beneficiary under a deed of trust, could maintain an action to prevent the impairment of his security, but in such case the damage must be such as to materially impair his security. Robinson v. Russell, 24 Cal. 467. This interest of Shadburne's would not seem to have been substantial in the eyes of the trial court, as the court assessed $50 as damages for the invasion of the property covered by the deed of trust, which would, therefore, indicate that no material impairment of the security had resulted. However, since Shadburne was employed as an agent of the Winkleman Company, the assignee of the Seven Oaks Lumber Company lease, it would appear that the trespass was committed by the Jensens, since if the permission granted was ineffective the Jensens were trespassers. (See Restatement of Torts, Sec. 164.) The fact that the assignment of the Winkleman Company carried with it the right to possession of the land is a sufficient interest to justify that possessor to repel a trespass by reasonable means. (Prosser on Torts, p. 131.) Here, the filling in of the ditch dug by the Jensens was such an act on the part of the lessee's assignee in possession.

[4] Appellants complain that the judgment in so far as the $125 award against them as their share of the maintenance cost at diversion point 10 is unsupported by the evidence, since it is apparent by the record that there was no showing of notice to the Jensens of the stipulation between their predecessors in interest and Shadburne as to the maintenance of the diversion works at point number 10 on Seiad Creek. Appellants' contention in this respect is not supportable. In their answer to the cross-complaint and counterclaim, the appellants admit that they are the successors in interest to the gold dredging companies which entered into the stipulation with Shadburne, and during the course of trial it appears that the Jensens have received water from point number 10 in accordance with the judgment entered in the action establishing the rights to water in Seiad Creek. Therefore, having admitted that they are successors in interest of the companies which by contract stipulation agreed to share in the cost of maintaining the diversion works and since the very basis for his action here is based upon another section of the same judgment, it appears that appellants are in the position of attempting to accept the benefits of a judgment or contract without undertaking the burdens imposed thereby.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

Ext. 439.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California.

Nov. 2, 1956.

Appellant, who had filed notice of appeal from order disallowing costs, made a motion in the District Court of Appeal for extension of time within which to file proposed settled statement on appeal. The District Court of Appeal, Doran, J., held that where appellant on October 10, 1955, filed notice of appeal from order disallowing costs, and thereafter appellant and respondent were unable to agree on settled statement of facts, and judge, who made order, was transferred, making it more difficult to settle statement, and negotiations for settlement of matter of costs were pending until April, 1956, when respondent advised appellant that negotiations would not be carried out, and due to urgencies or other legal affairs appellant was unable to proceed with appeal until July, 1956, making it impossible to proceed with appeal within prescribed time, District Court of Appeal would extend time within which appellant might prepare and file proposed settled statement to 30 days after filing of its opinion.

Motion granted.

DORAN, Justice.

It appearing from affidavits on file that on or about October 10, 1955, plaintiff and appellant herein filed a notice of appeal from an order disallowing costs to plaintiff, and that thereafter plaintiff and defendant were unable to agree upon a settled statement of facts, and that the judge who made the order in question was transferred to Pomona, California making it more difficult to settle said statement, and that negotiations for settlement of the matter of costs were pending until in April, 1956, when the defendant advised plaintiff that such negotiations would not be carried out, and that due to urgencies of other legal affairs plaintiff was unable to proceed with the appeal until in July, 1956, making it impossible to proceed with such appeal within the prescribed time, and it appearing that the case is one in which an extension should be granted;

It is therefore ordered that the time within which appellant may prepare and file his proposed settled statement on appeal is hereby extended to 30 days from and after the filing of this opinion.

Cr. 2651.

District Court of Appeal, Third District,

Nov. 5, 1956.

Prosecution for robbery in the first degree. The Superior Court, San Joaquin County, M. G. Woodward, J., entered judgment of conviction and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Peek, J., held that evidence sustained conviction.

Judgment affirmed.

Robbery \Rightarrow 24(1)

Evidence sustained conviction for robbery in the first degree.

Lewis F. Shearer, Sacramento, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., by Doris H. Maier, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

PEEK, Justice.

The defendant, Ezell Banks, appeals from a judgment entered upon the jury's verdict finding him guilty of three counts of robbery in the first degree. Upon his request, Mr. Lewis F. Shearer was appointed by this court to represent defendant on appeal. Mr. Shearer has now reported to the court that he has made a careful review of the record and finds no error, and that there was substantial evidence to support the findings of the jury. He also reports he finds no support for the comments contained in letters which have been filed as a part of the record in this case, and which this court has assumed to be the contentions made by defendant on appeal. In view of the manner in which the case comes before us, this court has made an independent study of the entire record, and it is our conclusion that there is no merit in the appeal.

Counts II and III, of which defendant was convicted, were based on the holdups of two liquor stores located in Stockton. In each instance the victims of the robberies positively identified defendant as one of the robbers who entered their respective establishments purportedly as customers and then forced the victims to surrender the money in the cash registers. There is further testimony that the gun used by defendant's companion in the robberies was similar to the one introduced in evidence. Defendant himself was not armed. The evidence in support of the first charge shows that although defendant did not personally participate in the robbery, he instigated it by sending two of his friends to commit the same, since he and the victim were co-workers, and hence the victim would have recognized him.

From the record before the court it would appear that it is defendant's position that he was convicted upon improper or insufficient evidence; that he was not ably represented by the public defender; and that the police were guilty of unlawful acts.

As previously stated, we have examined the entire record. The identification of the defendant by the victims of the liquor store robberies was positive, the defendant's connection with the robbery charged in the first count was more than ample, and lastly, the record contains no evidence, other than certain isolated comments by the defendant, relative to any mistreatment of him by police officers. There were no errors in the admission or exclusion of evidence, and the jury was fully and properly instructed. Under the facts and circumstances disclosed by the record we find no merit in the appeal.

The judgment is affirmed.

1. Licenses ⇨44(2)

The criterion of a "lease" or "license" is the presence or absence of a right of exclusive possession in the grantee, exclusive as to the landlord as well as to others, and when that is absent, the agreement spells a license rather than a lease.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Lease" and "License".

3. Licenses ⇨44(2)

Whether an agreement for the use of real estate is a "license" or a "lease", is dependent upon whether the contract gives exclusive possession of the premises against all the world, including the owner, in which case it is a lease, or whether it merely confers a privilege to occupy under the owner, in which case it is a license, and this is a question of law arising out of construction of the instrument.

Sheppard, Mullin, Richter, Balthis & Hampton, George R. Richter, Jr., and Edwin H. Franzen, Los Angeles, for respondents.

PER CURIAM.

Respondents' petition for rehearing presents arguments built upon the assumption that Nahas was a tenant or a co-tenant in possession of the parking lot, sidewalks, etc. They are misplaced. A mere right to use in common with others does not rise to that dignity.

[1,2] The criterion of lease or license is presence or absence of a right of exclusive possession in the grantee, exclusive as to the landlord as well as others. When that is absent the agreement spells a license rather than a lease. Moreover, the fact that the license is not terminable at will or is coupled with a lessee's interest, does not destroy its character or convert it into a lease. 1 Tiffany on Real Property (3rd Ed.) § 79, p. 117: "A tenancy involves an interest in the land passed to the tenant and a possession exclusive even of the landlord except as the lease permits his entry, and saving always the landlord's right to enter to demand rent or to make repairs. A mere permission to use land, dominion over it remaining in the owner and no interest in or exclusive possession of it being given, is but a license. * * * Such a person has not the possession of the land, this remaining in the licensor, and he has not, it seems, any interest in the land which he can assert as against a third person, that is, he has no rights in rem.

"The question whether an instrument is a lease, creating an estate in favor of another and the consequent relation of tenancy, or is merely a license, is one properly of the construction of the language used, as showing an intention to give possession vel non. That this is so has been quite often recognized."

[3] Kaiser Co. v. Reid, 30 Cal.2d 610, 619, 184 P.2d 879, 885: "As stated in Von Goerlitz v. Turner, 65 Cal.App.2d 425, at page 429, 150 P.2d 278, at page 280: 'The test * * * "whether an agreement for the use of real estate is a license or a lease is whether the contract gives exclusive possession of the premises against all the world, including the owner, in which case it is a lease, or whether it merely confers a privilege to occupy under the owner, in which case it is a license, and this is a question of law arising out of the construction of the instrument."' (Emphasis added.)"

This test has been accepted for many years in this state, as elsewhere. See Shaw v. Caldwell, 16 Cal.App. 1, 7, 115 P. 941; Covina Manor, Inc., v. Hatch, 133 Cal.App. 2d Supp. 790, 793, 284 P.2d 580; 51 C.J.S., Landlord and Tenant, § 6, p. 513; 35 C.J. § 10, p. 954; Tips v. United States, 5 Cir., 70 F.2d 525; Cluett v. Sheppard, 131 Ill. 636, 23 N.E. 589; Bowley v. Fuller, 121 Me. 22, 115 A. 466, 468, 24 A.L.R. 964; Thayer v. Brainerd, D.C.Mun.App., 47 A.2d 787; Mangum v. Milwood, 207 Ga. 501, 62 S.E. 2d 836, 837.

[4] Because a licensee has no interest in the land he cannot maintain an action in trespass or ejectment. At the most, he may maintain an action to enjoin or to redress a violation of his right to exercise the license. See Annotation in 139 A.L.R. 1204. The principle is thus stated in Bell Telephone Co. of Pennsylvania v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 155 Pa.Super. 286, 38 A.2d 732, 733: "It is true that a license does not confer a right of possession sufficient to support an action in trespass quare clausum fregit (Tiffany, Real Property, §§ 814, 829), or an action of ejectment. Union Petroleum Co. v. Bliven Petroleum Co., 72 Pa. 173. But a licensee may maintain an action of trespass in the nature of common-law case for any invasion or disturbance of the terms of the license whether by the licensor or by third parties."

[5] Treated as an action to enjoin interference with plaintiffs' license to use the parking lot and sidewalks the relief which was granted in the present instance was too broad.

The petition for rehearing is denied.

Where defendant has an attorney of his own choosing, any contention that conviction should be reversed on ground of attorney's gross incompetence will be dismissed because any error lies in the judgment of the defendant in selecting counsel.

5. Criminal Law \S 1035(1)

In prosecution for second degree burglary, defendant, who stated that he wished to waive his right to trial by jury and have cause tried by court, was unable to contend on appeal that he had been deprived of his right to a jury trial. West's Ann.Const. art. 1, \S 7; West's Ann.Pen. Code, \S 1042.

Lewis Garrett, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Elizabeth Miller, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

MOORE, Presiding Justice.

Convicted of burglary in the second degree, defendant appeals. He now contends that (1) the evidence was not of sufficient substantiality to support the judgment; (2) his conviction resulted from his having suffered prior convictions of four felonies; (3) he was denied representation by counsel; and (4) was denied trial by jury.

Mrs. Roberts operated a beer tavern in the 4200 block on South Broadway in the City of Los Angeles. Behind the beer parlor is a room in which beer was stored, which could only be entered from the outside. On the night of appellant's call, she had closed her shop at 11:45 p. m., locked the rear room with a padlock and left the premises for her dinner. Shortly after midnight, special officer Abrams approached the tavern, observed that the lock was gone, looked and saw appellant standing in the storeroom. He ordered appellant to come out and inquired as to his purpose in visiting the room. His reply was that he had entered to urinate. The officer looked for the lock, found it had been bent and was lying on the floor. He found no instrument on appellant's person that might have been used to pry the lock.

Mrs. Roberts returned while Abrams was conversing with appellant, and soon police officers arrived and took the latter away. She testified that she stored beer in the room and that it appeared not to have been disturbed by appellant. On the following day an officer found a long, black screw-driver stuck in the wall and the proprietress testified that it did not belong to her.

Insufficient Proof?

[1] Appellant contends there is insufficient evidence of felonious intent to support the judgment; that the evidence raised only a suspicion of felonious intent; that appellant's positive testimony as to his innocent intentions was uncontradicted and therefore should have been believed; that the State's failure to introduce evidence of fingerprints on the padlock raises the presumption that such evidence would have been adverse to the prosecution.

The established facts are that the prosecutrix locked her storeroom with a padlock at 11:45 p. m.; appellant was found inside the room shortly after midnight; the padlock was found bent, lying on the floor of the room. It was a reasonable inference that a stranger found alone in that room after midnight had entered the place for the purpose of committing some crime. It is not likely that another person could have in the brief space of time after Mrs. Roberts' departure and the arrival of appellant forced the padlock off the door and left the premises. Appellant was found there, inside the building. From the fact of his presence in the room, alone, after midnight and the broken lock, it was no strain upon the reasoning processes to deduce his felonious purpose. The trial court could reasonably have found that no other person had entered the same room after 11:45 p. m.; that appellant had, alone, effected a forcible entry for a criminal purpose. Why should he have chosen that storeroom if in quest of a urinal while numerous service stations and barrooms were available along the thoroughfares? If such was his need, he might, as a reasonable person have stopped on his way from Watts at 77th Street to Broadway at 43rd. His testimony that he arrived at Mrs. Roberts' tavern at 2:00 a. m. may have impressed the court with his lack of truthfulness in view of the contrary testimony that he arrived there "shortly after midnight."

Appellant invokes the decision in People v. Wilkins, 141 Cal.App.2d 557, 297 P.2d 42, in support of his argument that the evidence discloses at most a mere "suspicion" of guilt. In the Wilkins case the door to a pharmacy had been broken in order to effectuate the entry of a burglar. Officers investigating the attempted entry discovered defendants prowling about the alley in the vicinity of the drugstore. The court held that such evidence established beyond a reasonable doubt the fact of attempted burglary, but created only a "suspicion" that this defendant was the guilty party. The important distinction between that case and this is that here the defendant was actually discovered standing in the storeroom. His entry was established beyond peradventure of a doubt. All that remains is determining his felonious intent in making the entry. The circumstances detailed here surely create more than a suspicion of his wrongful purpose. A trial court is not compelled as a matter of law to believe a defendant's story that he entered a commercial establishment through a door with a broken padlock in the dead of night for the sole purpose of urinating.

In the instant matter, Daniels' identity is not in question. He was apprehended in the storeroom and did not question that he was there. While he denied having been motivated by a criminal intention, his denials were overcome in the mind of the court by his entry with use of force, after midnight, surrounded by gloom, without a satisfactory explanation for his presence. The trial court had to determine whether or not he spoke the truth and it chose to believe that the circumstances were more convincing of his guilt than the presumption of his innocence and his denials of guilt. Its conclusion is final, in the absence of prejudicial error at the trial, if substantial evidence supports the conviction. People v. Gutierrez, 35 Cal. 2d 721, 727, 221 P.2d 22; People v. Von Benson, 38 Cal.App.2d 431, 434, 101 P.2d 527.

[2] Appellant insists that the People's failure to introduce into evidence the fingerprints on the lock, or proof that it had no fingerprints, brings into play the presumption, Code of Civil Procedure, § 1963, subd. 5, that such failure is tantamount to proof that would have been adverse to the prosecution. The vice of such argument lies in the fact that there was no evidence that the lock had or could have had fingerprints. Also, it conflicts with the presumption that the officers did their duty and introduced all competent evidence available. The wilful suppression of material evidence that would have benefited a defendant accused of a felony is too serious a crime to charge against an officer on pure conjecture.

Deprived of the Right of Representation by Active Counsel?

[3, 4] Because appellant's counsel inadvertently suggested during the trial, in reply to the district attorney's inquiry, that the matter of the prior convictions be deferred to the time of sentence, appellant now urges that he "was unconstitutionally deprived of his right to representation by counsel at all stages of the proceeding." The prompt reply by the court to defendant's attorney that there had been no conviction fills appellant with a zeal to contend that he was not fairly represented. Such contention is much ado about nothing. Appellant's counsel attended sessions of the municipal court, cross examined adverse witnesses and assisted appellant to give his own testimony in an orderly, effective fashion. Where the record discloses a careful cross-examination by defendant's lawyer at the preliminary, the accused had adequate representation despite his contention on appeal that he did not have the benefit of a competent lawyer for his defense. People v. Hood, 141 Cal.App.2d 585, 297 P.2d 52. Furthermore, where an appellant contends for a reversal on the ground that a trial lawyer of his own choosing was guilty of gross incompetence, the contention will be dismissed for the reason that if there was any error it lay in the judgment of defendant in selecting counsel for his defense. People v. Stevens, 5 Cal.2d 92, 98, 53 P.2d 133.

People v. Chesser, 29 Cal.2d 815, 178 P.2d 761, is distinguished by its facts. At his arraignment, Chesser refused the assistance of counsel.

[5] Appellant's contention that he was deprived of a jury trial deserves little comment in the light of his own statement to the trial court that he "wished to waive his right to trial by jury and to have his cause tried by the court, sitting without a jury." He understood his waiver. There is nothing in the record to indicate that he did not know of the waiver and of the actual trial without a jury. It must be assumed that his counsel had advised him prior to the trial of the advantages of a jury trial and of the penalties that might be assessed in case he should be found guilty. He never complained of the services of his trial counsel or of the waiver of a jury trial until after a new attorney had been retained to prosecute this appeal.

In view of the record, the Constitution, Art. I, § 7, and the statute, Pen.Code, § 1042, no prejudicial error has been shown. People v. Pughsley, 74 Cal.App.2d 70, 71, 168 P.2d 27; People v. Voice, 68 Cal.App.2d 610, 612, 157 P.2d 436.

The PEOPLE of the State of California,
Plaintiff and Respondent,
v.

John D. WOODARD, Steve Mikolasik, Carl
St. Claire and Stewart Metz, Defendants,
Stewart Metz, Appellant.
Cr. 1118.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District,
California.
Oct. 20, 1956.

Defendant was convicted of conspiracy to commit subornation of perjury. The Superior Court of San Bernardino County, Carl B. Hilliard, J., entered judgment and order denying new trial and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Griffin, J., held that evidence as to whether a plan and agreement existed between defendants was sufficient to present question for jury.

Judgment and order affirmed.

1. Criminal Law ☞1170(2)

In prosecution for crime of conspiracy to commit subornation of perjury, excluding testimony of accused's character witness after he testified on cross-examination he had never discussed accused's reputation or heard it discussed was error but was not prejudicial, where accused produced several other witnesses who testified as to defendant's claimed good reputation and no witnesses were produced in opposition. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 182.

2. Conspiracy ☞23

The gist of conspiracy is the unlawful agreement to commit an offense and an overt act done in furtherance of the agreement. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 182.

3. Conspiracy ☞47

The existence of conspiracy may be established by direct evidence or by circumstantial evidence, which may be inferred from the acts or conduct of the defendant in mutually carrying out a common unlawful purpose. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 182.

4. Conspiracy ☞24

An explicit or formal agreement between the parties to alleged conspiracy is not necessary. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 182.

5. Conspiracy ☞41

When conspiracy is established, all members of the conspiracy are bound by all the acts of the members done in furtherance of the agreed plot. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 182.

6. Criminal Law ☞1144(13)

The District Court of Appeal must assume in support of judgment of conviction, the existence of every fact which the trier of facts could reasonably have deduced from the evidence, and then determine whether the facts justify the inference of guilt.

7. Conspiracy ☞48

In prosecution for conspiracy to commit subornation of perjury, evidence as to whether a plan and agreement existed between defendants to suborn perjury by procuring witness to testify falsely was sufficient to present question for jury. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 182.

8. Witnesses Ⓒ379(9)

In prosecution for crime of conspiracy to commit subornation of perjury, under the circumstances, the refusal to permit defendant to impeach testimony of witness by witness' testimony before Grand Jury was proper.

9. Witnesses Ⓒ291

Refusal of trial court to allow defendant's counsel to call prosecution's witness for further examination, after people had presented rebuttal testimony to cross-examination and rested their case, on ground witness had approached defendant's counsel during recess and said he wanted to correct his testimony, was not error where defendant's counsel had some knowledge of proposed corrections by witness before case was closed and there was other sufficient competent direct evidence before jury relating to the particular transaction.

10. Criminal Law Ⓒ719(1), 730(7)

In prosecution for conspiracy to commit subornation of perjury, if prosecuting attorney referred to defendant's previous arrests in argument to jury and said that defendant had failed to produce any evidence to effect that he had not been arrested in those places when in fact he had, such action was misconduct but was not prejudicial error, where after an objection was made to portion of prosecutor's argument court admonished jurors that they should consider the rumors that defendant had been subjected to previous arrests as not proved. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 182.

11. Criminal Law Ⓒ829(1)

In criminal prosecution, refusal of trial court to give defendant's requested instructions was not error where such instructions were adequately covered by other instructions given by the trial court.

James L. King and Harold King, San Bernardino, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., James L. Mamakos, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

GRIFFIN, Justice.

Defendants Stewart Metz, John D. Woodard, Steve Mikolasik and Carl St. Claire were indicted by the Grand Jury on June 22, 1955. In Counts I and II it was charged that Woodard and Mikolasik committed perjury, in violation of section 118 of the Penal Code. Count III charged Metz and St. Claire with subornation of perjury, in violation of section 127 of the Penal Code. In Count IV they were charged with bribery, Sec. 137, Penal Code. And in Count V Metz, St. Claire, Mikolasik and Woodard were charged with the crime of conspiracy to commit subornation of perjury, Sec. 182, Penal Code, in that between October 14, 1954 and January 25, 1955, they feloniously conspired to procure certain persons to be called as witnesses in a criminal action in the Municipal Court against defendant Mikolasik, wherein the people were prosecuting said defendant for the crime of violating Section I of a City Ordinance No. 536, of the City of San Bernardino, a misdemeanor, and of having administered an oath to them to testify falsely in said criminal action.

Four overt acts are alleged: (1) That defendant Woodard, at the request of defendant St. Claire, on January 17, 1955, transported, in his car, one Walter L. Dunn from the office of St. Claire to the office of the attorney for the defendant Mikolasik; (2) that defendant Metz, on January 19, 1955, did the same thing; (3) that defendant Metz, on January 22, 1955, paid money to Dunn; and (4) that St. Claire, on January 23, 1955, directed his employee, Dunn, to testify that he, Dunn, was, on October 14, 1954, a trusty in the City Jail, and to falsely testify that he visited the Brass Rail Cafe on October 14, 1954.

Defendants Metz and St. Claire went to trial only upon the fifth count and were allowed a separate trial from the other named defendants. It resulted in a conviction of both by a jury on that count, as charged. Motions for new trial were denied. They were sentenced to State's prison, execution of sentence was suspended, and probation was granted for two years on certain specified conditions, including the payment of a $1,000 fine. Defendant Metz alone appealed from the judgment and order denying a new trial.

The evidence shows that defendant Metz was a member of a firm which had been engaged in the business of owning and placing amusement-type and pinball machines in various business establishments. On October 14, 1954, this firm had a pinball machine located in the Brass Rail Cafe on West Third Street in San Bernardino. It had been there for about three months and was being operated under a license issued by the City. The net proceeds from its operations were divided equally between the said firm and the proprietor of the place. On that day two men, who were officers of the Riverside Police Department, entered the Brass Rail Cafe and played the pinball machine. Defendant Mikolasik was employed in the cafe at the time. The officers testified that they had put $4.00 into the pinball machine and had been paid off by Mikolasik in the sum of $4.00. They also testified there were no other persons present at the time except the parties indicated. Mikolasik was arrested upon a charge of violating a City ordinance prohibiting gambling, and the machine was impounded. On January 20, 1955, the case against Mikolasik came to trial in the Municipal Court and Attorney Krumm represented him.

Three witnesses testified for the defense in the Municipal Court, the said Mikolasik, John Woodard and Walter Dunn. They each testified that they were present in the Brass Rail Cafe when the two officers were in there on October 14, and that the $4.00 paid to the officers was a refund of the $4.00 put into the machine by them, and not a payoff on the machine; that the officers made some complaint about the machine and Mikolasik refunded their money (which they put into the machine) rather than have any trouble with them.

It appears that upon cross-examination of the witness Dunn it was established that he was confined in the City Jail of San Bernardino on October 14. The case was continued until five days later when Dunn again took the witness stand and testified that he had been a trusty in the City jail on October 14, and as such trusty was working outside of the jail in a garden around the Hall of Justice on which the jail was located; that he had changed his clothes, left his work, gone to the Brass Rail Cafe, and was present at the time the two officers were there. Thereafter Dunn was charged with the crime of perjury and ultimately entered a plea of guilty thereto in the Superior Court. As a result of this, defendants Metz and St. Claire were charged in Count V of this indictment with the crime of conspiracy to procure Dunn as a witness in the Municipal Court trial, and to therein testify falsely.

The testimony at the trial of this action may be thus summarized: Dunn said he had been a used-car salesman for St. Claire & Cramp Motor Unit & Service Station, of which defendant St. Claire was part owner; that this place of business was near the Brass Rail Cafe, of which defendant Mikolasik was one of the proprietors, and which was located in the west end of the city, nearly a mile from the city jail; that Mikolasik and St. Claire were quite close personal friends; that defendant Metz had a company account with St. Claire and obtained much of his gasoline at this station; and that one of St. Claire's pinball machines was located in that place of business. Defendant Woodard had been an employee of St. Claire and knew him pretty well.

One of the office employees of St. Claire, Lambith, testified that St. Claire had a desk near him; that a few days prior to the Municipal Court trial of Mikolasik, he answered the telephone and the voice stated it was Mr. Metz, which he recognized, and he asked for Carl (St. Claire); that he heard Carl say over the telephone something about the pending Municipal Court case and about witnesses, and heard him say: "If you want to buy witnesses you can get them for a dime a dozen"; that Carl told Metz he was going to appear as a witness and he would take care of it, and that he could get anything if he wanted to pay for it; that Carl hung up the telephone and said to Lambith that he did not think he should stick his neck out by testifying to anything that was not so. The conversation between Carl and the witness was admitted only as to defendant St. Claire. He further testified that several such conversations over the telephone were noted and on one occasion St. Claire assured Metz that he (Carl) would be a witness at the trial, and told the other party on the telephone not to worry because he would take care of it; that subsequently St. Claire told Lambith he (St. Claire) was going to be a witness at the trial but changed his mind and was not going to testify to something that was not so; that Walter Dunn needed the money and did not have anything to lose and he would have him go in his place; that he saw Metz in and around Carl's premises several times during the month of January, 1955; that on Wednesday, the day before the trial, he saw Metz there talking to Carl; that on the evening of January 19th he saw Dunn in the office with Carl and they were discussing the forthcoming trial to be held the next day and he heard him tell Dunn to go home and stay sober so he would be sure to be down there in the morning at 8 o'clock to go to attorney Krumm's office about the trial. Metz gave Dunn a ride to that office that morning but did not go with him to see the attorney. Lambith then testified that after Dunn testified he returned to the service station and St. Claire told him "he (Dunn) was pretty stupid if he could not remember that he was in jail at the time he was supposed to be in the Brass Rail", and Dunn said he did not remember being in jail at that time and St. Claire said he had made a "mess" of it and asked Dunn if he was a trusty at the time and discussed the possibility of leaving the jail grounds and going to the Brass Rail; that Dunn did not like the idea because he would probably get in deeper than he was if the chief found he left the jail grounds when he was supposed to be there; that Carl assured him there was nothing else he could say and told Dunn to go and so testify; that Carl called someone on the telephone and outlined this proposed testimony of Dunn to that person; that during the next three days there was considerable discussion between Dunn and Carl in reference to this testimony; and that on the morning of the next hearing (January 25th) Dunn and St. Claire had breakfast together.

Dunn then testified that Metz and St. Claire were discussing his proposed testimony while on the lot and St. Claire called him over, introduced him to Metz, and said: "That was the story they were going to use and they wanted me to go down there * * * and do a good job" of it, and if I did, "I would get my money; * * * This is the man who will pay you one hundred if you appear as a witness at the Mikolasik case * * *"; that he told St. Claire he did not even know anything about the Brass Rail since he had not been there for several years, and did not know Mikolasik; that St. Claire replied: "You don't need to. You will find out when you get down town"; that Metz drove him to the attorney's office; that the attorney asked him if he was a trusty at that time and he answered in the affirmative and stated that he could verify it by the city gardener; that he was taken to the garden by this attorney; that the day before the trial he saw St. Claire and Metz on a lot and he stopped Metz and asked: "Well, when do I get some of the money for appearing as a witness in the Mikolasik case" because his room rent was due; that Metz reached in his pocket and handed him a twenty-dollar bill and said "This will hold you over until this other trial"; that he paid his room rent at that time (this fact was corroborated by the hotel clerk); that after the trial he (Dunn) returned to the lot and St. Claire would not speak to him; that Metz came by and he asked him for the rest of his money and Metz said: "Hell, I don't even know you"; that he did not see Metz again, and St. Claire ordered Dunn off of the lot.

The attorney for Mikolasik, in the Municipal Court, testified he was requested by Metz to represent Mikolasik and was paid by Metz for this service; that Mikolasik came to his office and told him that St. Claire, Woodard and Dunn were in the Brass Rail at the time; that immediately after this conversation Metz came to his office and asked his opinion concerning the outcome of the case and he told him the chances were favorable in view of the testimony of the supporting witnesses who would testify that Mikolasik made no payoff but only refunded the money to the officers; that a conference was later had between him, Dunn, Woodard, St. Claire and Mikolasik in his office and in substance they all said they were there on that occasion; that they went to the Municipal Court and so testified.

Mikolasik testified that when he was arrested he called Metz and told him about the facts and later he went to see the attorney employed by Metz and was there told that Woodard, St. Claire and Dunn would be witnesses. Mikolasik did testify that Dunn was there at the time. He also stated that after the trial Dunn came to the Brass Rail and demanded $20.

[1] St. Claire testified at the Mikolasik trial that he was at the Brass Rail at the time, saw Dunn and Woodard there, but did not hear the conversation in reference to the claimed payoff. He denied generally the claimed conversations with Metz and Dunn and produced several witnesses from his office who testified that they heard no such conversations. He denied generally the testimony of Dunn and others which would implicate him in the charge. He said Lambith had been discharged by him on several occasions and this accounted for his testimony in the instant case. Metz denied promising anything to Woodard or Dunn for testifying as a witness. He admitted driving Dunn to the attorney's office, denied the conversation regarding him paying Dunn $100 for testifying, admitted Dunn approached him at the lot and said something about doing Metz a favor and that he told Dunn he "didn't do him a favor, he wasn't on trial", that "You went down there and perjured yourself, you better be worried about yourself, not me"; and that Metz drove away. He then said that it was not his practice to hire an attorney for operators of pinball machines for alleged payoffs but this being the first machine confiscated in some time, he felt obligated to provide legal counsel. Defendant Metz produced a considerable number of character witnesses of some prominence in the city, and among them was one who had known defendant Metz for about ten years, both in a professional capacity and on a social basis. He testified he knew his reputation in the community to be good. On cross-examination he testified he had not specifically discussed his reputation with persons in the community for truth, honesty and integrity. Thereupon the prosecution moved to strike his entire testimony and the court erroneously granted the motion. Since defendant produced several other witnesses who testified as to defendant's claimed good reputation and the people produced no witnesses in opposition, defendant may not now claim prejudicial error as a result of the ruling. People v. Hoffman, 199 Cal. 155, 160, 248 P. 504.

The next point claimed is that the evidence did not establish that there was an agreement or understanding between two or more people to do an unlawful act, and that there was no overt act done by this defendant in furtherance of such agreement. It is claimed that the evidence produced against defendant Metz comes almost entirely from the witness Dunn, an admitted perjurer, and since the extra-judicial statements of one of the alleged conspirators is not sufficient to prove the agreement against the co-conspirator, there was no sufficient evidence to establish the claimed unlawful agreement insofar as it affected defendant Metz, citing such authority as People v. Black, 45 Cal.App.2d 87, 113 P.2d 746; People v. Doble, 203 Cal. 510, 265 P.

184; and People v. Bucchierre, 57 Cal. App.2d 153, 134 P.2d 505.

[2-5] It is well settled that the gist of conspiracy is the unlawful agreement to commit an offense and an overt act done in furtherance of the agreement; that its existence may be established by circumstantial as well as by direct evidence, which may be inferred from the acts or conduct of the defendant in mutually carrying out a common unlawful purpose. An explicit or formal agreement between the parties is not necessary, and when established, all the members of the conspiracy are bound by all acts of the members done in furtherance of the agreed plot. People v. Griffin, 98 Cal.App.2d 1, 219 P.2d 519; People v. Daener, 96 Cal.App.2d 827, 216 P.2d 511; People v. Sica, 112 Cal.App.2d 574, 247 P.2d 72; People v. Frankfort, 114 Cal.App.2d 680, 251 P.2d 401.

[6,7] We must assume in support of the judgment the existence of every fact which the trier of facts could reasonably have deduced from the evidence, and then determine whether the facts justify the inference of guilt. People v. Frankfort, supra. Applying these principles, it is clear that the jury was amply warranted in drawing the inference that a plan and agreement existed between the defendant Metz and the codefendant St. Claire to suborn perjury by procuring Dunn to testify falsely. The evidence is sufficient to support the charge.

[8] It is next argued that the trial court erred in refusing to allow the defendant Metz to impeach the testimony of Dunn by his testimony taken before the Grand Jury. After Dunn testified at this trial that he testified falsely at the Municipal Court trial, i. e., that he was present at the Brass Rail on October 14th, and was confronted with the record showing he was then confined in the City Jail, he was asked on cross-examination if he did not honestly believe he was telling the truth until he was confronted with the jail record. He was then asked if he did not testify before the Grand Jury that he did not realize that he had not been at the Brass Rail until he was "trapped" by being confronted with the record. The trial court refused to admit his testimony before the Grand Jury in this respect on the ground it was not proper impeachment. No doubt Dunn knew on each occasion whether he was at the Brass Rail on that occasion and the fact that he was "trapped" would not affect his knowledge of the true facts. The ruling was proper.

[9] At the trial one Haynes testified he had a conversation with his employer, St. Claire, in which he asked St. Claire if it was true that Dunn was going to get $100 for testifying in the Brass Rail trial, and he replied in the affirmative and that the S. & A. Novelty Company, with which defendant Metz was associated, was going to pay him. He was fully cross-examined on this testimony. After the people had presented rebuttal testimony and rested their case, counsel for defendant asked permission to recall the witness for further testimony under the authority of People v. Brady, 56 Cal.App. 777, 206 P. 668; and People v. Renwick, 31 Cal.App. 774, 161 P. 1002. The court refused and counsel approached the bench beyond the hearing of the jury, and made an offer of proof to the effect that the witness approached counsel for defendant in the hall during a recess at about that stage of the proceedings and said he wanted to resume the stand and correct his testimony in certain respects, saying that "I want to testify I didn't know whether he made any such statement or not". The request might well have been granted. However, from the showing made it indicates that counsel for defendant had some information as to this recanting witness' intended testimony some time before the case was closed. The trial judge concluded that it was improper to allow the witness to again testify as defendant's witness at that stage of the proceedings. On a motion for new trial the witness' affidavit was offered in support of it. He there stated, contrary to his testimony at the trial and the offer of proof, that he did not have the conversation with St. Claire regarding the payment of $100 to the witness in the Mikolasik case. The trial judge fully considered the motion and affidavit and concluded he did not have much faith or trust respecting the witness and his change of testimony, and denied the motion. Since there was other sufficient competent direct evidence before the jury relating to this particular transaction we perceive no prejudicial error in the ruling.

[10] It is next claimed that the prosecuting attorney was guilty of prejudicial misconduct in his argument to the jury. The character witnesses of defendant were asked, on cross-examination, if they had ever heard of defendant's previous arrests in Los Angeles and in Berkeley and they answered in the negative. No complaint is made to this questioning but it is claimed that the prosecuting attorney referred to these arrests in his argument to the jury and said that defendant had failed to produce any evidence to the effect that he had not been arrested in those places. Assuming the truth of this statement, misconduct was apparent. People v. Stennett, 51 Cal.App. 370, 197 P. 372. However, the closing argument was not reported due to failure of the recording equipment. It does appear from the reporter's transcript that an objection was made to some portion of the prosecutor's argument and the court admonished the jurors that the questions asked of the various character witnesses were proper but they were not to be concerned with the truth or falsity of the alleged rumors or reports, and they should not consider them as having been proved. Under the circumstances it cannot be held that prejudicial error resulted.

[11] Lastly, the defendant offered 49 instructions and 18 of them were given.

Among those refused as covered were two (No. III and No. IV) touching upon the subject of the indictment being a mere accusation and not evidence of guilt. The claim is that they were not covered by other instructions. We see no merit to this. While not specifically covered, in effect, the jury was sufficiently informed on that subject. Refused instruction No. IX related to the question of proof necessary in a criminal action as compared to that in a civil action. This was sufficiently covered by other instructions, particularly one given in the language of CALJIC 21, on reasonable doubt, presumption of innocence, and burden of proof. Defendant's refused instruction No. IV defined a criminal conspiracy and contained a statement that it was not unlawful for two or more persons to agree to do something that can lawfully be done by one person, and that the jury could not consider acts or declarations of others made outside of the presence of the defendant until, independent of such declarations and acts, a conspiracy had been shown to exist, citing People v. Doble, supra.

Defendant's given instruction No. XXXIII, in the language of CALJIC 935 reiterates this principle together with the other instructions given on the subject. It was sufficiently covered. No error appears as to given instruction No. XXIII pertaining to the consideration of the testimony of the defendant as compared to other witnesses. This was sufficiently covered by defendant's given instruction No. XIII and other instructions in the language of CALJIC 52 pertaining to the credibility of witnesses generally.

Civ. 21767.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 2, California.

Nov. 1, 1956.

Occupant of first automobile brought action against driver of second automobile for injuries sustained in intersectional collision, and husband of occupant brought action for loss of consortium. The driver of the second automobile brought a cross-action against the driver of the first automobile and her husband for personal injuries and property damage, and the driver of the first automobile and her husband countered with a cross-action against the driver of the second automobile for damage to first automobile. The cross-complaint of the driver of the first automobile and her husband was dismissed at the outset of the trial, and the count of the occupant's husband for loss of consortium was dismissed by stipulation during the trial. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Ellsworth Meyer, J., entered judgment adverse to the driver of the second automobile, an order granting the occupant of the first automobile a new trial on question of damages, and an order denying motion of driver of second automobile for new trial, and she appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Fox, J., held that where negligence of driver of second automobile was plainly spelled out, and there was no evidence tending to show contributory negligence on part of occupant of first automobile, and occupant of first automobile, who sustained a fracture of the pelvis and right clavicle, incurred total special damages, consisting of medical, hospital, and similar expenses, amounting to $1,920.76, and jury returned a verdict for only $2,000, Superior Court did not abuse its discretion in granting new trial on issue of damages alone.

Judgment and order granting a new trial on issue only of damages affirmed, and purported appeal from order denying motion of driver of second automobile for new trial dismissed.

1. Appeal and Error ⇨996

The District Court of Appeal on appeal cannot reevaluate the evidence and the credibility of the witnesses and draw inferences contrary to those of the trier of the facts.

FOX, Justice.

This action for damages arose out of a collision between two automobiles at an intersection. The drivers of the respective vehicles were Mrs. Helen Stremel and Eleanor Baldwin. Riding in the Stremel car was Mrs. Henrietta Uhl, who, with her husband, initiated the present proceedings by filing an action against defendant Baldwin comprising two counts. The first cause of action was for recovery of damages for personal injuries sustained by Mrs. Uhl, the second was for loss of consortium suffered by Mr. Uhl. This latter count was dismissed by stipulation during the trial. Further references to plaintiff hereinafter relate only to Mrs. Uhl.

Thereafter, defendant Baldwin filed a cross action against Mrs. Stremel and her husband on which she sought recovery for personal injuries and property damage caused by the accident. The Stremels countered with a cross action against defendant Baldwin for damage to their car. The Stremel cross-complaint was dismissed at the outset of the trial.

The action was tried before a jury, resulting in a verdict of $2,000.00 in favor of Mrs. Uhl as against defendant Baldwin. The jury also found against defendant Baldwin on her cross-complaint against the Stremels. Judgment was entered accordingly. Both Mrs. Uhl and Baldwin moved for a new trial. Mrs. Uhl's motion was granted on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence and the court ordered a new trial on the sole issue of damages. Defendant Baldwin's motions were denied.

Defendant Baldwin (hereinafter called defendant) appeals from the judgment in favor of the Stremels and Mrs. Uhl (hereinafter called plaintiff) and from the order granting plaintiff a limited new trial. The purported appeal from the order denying her own motions for a new trial, a nonappealable order, must be dismissed.

Facts.

The accident occurred at about 2:30 p. m. on April 27, 1954, at the intersection of 164th Street and Wilton Place, in the city of Torrance. The day was clear. Plaintiff was a passenger in a car being driven by Mrs. Stremel. They were traveling east on 164th Street and were approaching the intersection of Wilton Place just prior to the accident. At the same time, defendant was traveling north on Wilton Place. The intersection was uncontrolled by traffic signals or signs of any kind. The field of view for a person traveling east along 164th Street and looking south on Wilton was virtually the same as that of one traveling north on Wilton who looked to the west on 164th Street. In this connection, the testimony was that an eastbound traveler on 164th Street who was within 25 feet of the intersection could see to the end of the block in looking south on Wilton. Similarly, a driver northbound on Wilton who was within 25 feet of the intersection had a view to the west along 164th Street extending almost to Arlington Avenue, the next parallel thoroughfare.

Prior to entering the intersection, Mrs. Stremel testified she was traveling about 25 miles an hour. When she reached the intersection, she testified she looked south on Wilton with an unobstructed view but saw no approaching vehicle. At that time her application of the brakes had reduced the speed of her car to between 15 and 20 miles per hour. She continued to slow down up to the time her car was struck in the intersection, at which time her speed was about 10 miles per hour. She testified the accident took place a little north of the center line of 164th Street, stating, "I swerved." Mrs. Stremel informed the investigating officer that she did not see the other car until the moment of impact. After the accident her car moved 158 feet to the east before coming to rest.

Defendant was traveling about 20 to 25 miles per hour along Wilton. She saw no cars on 164th Street as she approached it. When she reached the intersection she testified she slowed down to about 15 miles per hour. When she was two or three car-lengths from the intersection, she again looked to see whether there were any cars on 164th Street. Although there was nothing to interfere with her view of eastbound traffic, defendant testified she did not see Mrs. Stremel's car. As a result of retrograde amnesia induced by head injuries sustained in the accident, defendant testified her last recollection was of proceeding into the intersection after not seeing any cross traffic on 164th Street. A witness situated at a point on Wilton Place some 300 feet south of the intersection testified she saw defendant's car slow down to about 10 miles per hour as it approached the intersection. This witness did not see the collision, but testified when defendant's car reached the intersection she did not observe any car enter the intersection from 164th Street.

The testimony of a police officer indicated that the point of impact occurred on the eastern half of the intersection. The photographs of the vehicles plainly disclose that the front of defendant's car crashed into the right side of the Stremel vehicle. There were no skid marks from either vehicle leading to the point of impact; there were some brush marks left by defendant's vehicle in its turning movement after the collision.

Plaintiff Uhl was riding to the right of the driver in the Stremel car. She did not see defendant's car prior to the impact. It is undisputed that she was not engaged in any joint or common enterprise with Mrs. Stremel and that she was merely an occupant of the car with no right of management or control of the vehicle.

Plaintiff's Injuries and Special Damages.

Plaintiff was hospitalized for seven weeks following the accident, during which time she was confined to her bed for five weeks. She sustained a fracture of the pelvis and the right clavicle, which required traction and the wearing of harness. Her right side was badly bruised and her back contused between the shoulder blades. She could not do housework for two months after her return from the hospital. The total special damages, consisting of medical, hospital and similar expenses, amounted to $1,920.76.

The Appeal from the Judgment.

[1] Defendant contends that the judgment in favor of plaintiff and adverse to defendant on her cross-complaint against the Stremels is not supported by the evidence. She argues that the evidence discloses that (1) Mrs. Stremel did not look before entering the intersection, or, having looked, was negligent in failing to see the northbound car, and (2) that Mrs. Stremel violated defendant's right of way, thus establishing Mrs. Stremel's negligence as the only negligence in the case. To adopt this theory and to reach defendant's conclusion, this court would be compelled to re-evaluate the evidence and the credibility of the witnesses and draw inferences contrary to those of the trier of the facts. That is not within the province of a reviewing court.

[2-4] It is fundamental that if there be evidence of facts supporting an inference favorable to the judgment, a reviewing court is without power to substitute its own deductions for those of the jury. It may reasonably be inferred from the evidence that, assuming that Mrs. Stremel was negligent, plaintiff was equally guilty of negligence which was a contributive and proximate cause of the accident. Defendant testified that though she was driving a mere fifteen miles an hour at the intersection, though she looked left on 164th Street in the direction of the Stremel vehicle, though her windshield was clear and her view unobstructed, she failed to see the vehicle with which she collided seconds later. The jury may well have concluded that defendant's testimony that she looked for cross traffic before entering the intersection was either unworthy of belief or that she was negligent in failing to see the approach of the Stremel car which must have been in her line of vision under the existing circumstances. Powell v. Bartmess, 139 Cal.App.2d 394, 400, 294 P.2d 150; Huetter v. Andrews, 91 Cal.App.2d 142, 146, 204 P.2d 655; Berlin v. Violett, 129 Cal.App. 337, 340, 18 P.2d 737. The inference is almost irresistible that defendant drove into the intersection oblivious of approaching traffic, for the front of her car smashed almost broadside into the Stremel vehicle when the latter had already crossed into the east half of Wilton Place. Defendant's contention that she had the right of way, even if true, does not of itself absolve her of the necessity of using reasonable care in traversing an intersection. In Powell v. Bartmess, supra, 139 Cal. App.2d at page 401, 294 P.2d at page 154, this court discussed the same question in language apposite to this situation: "But even if it be granted, as plaintiff urges, that having entered the intersection first, she had the right of way, that fact alone does not exculpate her from negligence as a matter of law since a fact question concerning her conduct in the circumstances would still remain. [Citations.] As was said in Donat v. Dillon, supra (192 Cal. 426 [429], 221 P. [193] 194): 'Assuming, therefore, that the defendant had the right of way, he was required to proceed across the intersection in a careful and prudent manner, ever watchful of the direction in which danger was most likely to be apprehended.' In Allin v. Snively, supra (100 Cal.App.2d 411 [414], 224 P.2d [113] 115), this court remarked: 'Under traffic conditions prevailing upon the highways of California ordinary care frequently requires the operator of an automobile who has the right of way to yield in order to avoid disastrous consequences although he may have entered an intersection first and therefore legally be entitled to the right of way. It may be negligence as a matter of fact for him to proceed into the path of a fast moving car.'" It being essentially a question of fact for the jury whether or not defendant was negligent in the manner in which she proceeded across the intersection, and there being substantial evidence to support its implied finding that she did not use the requisite care, we may not disturb the finding that her contributory negligence disentitled her to prevail in her action against Mrs. Stremel.

[5, 6] Defendant suggests that the jury was "bound to apply" the presumption that she was exercising due care because of testimony that she suffered from loss of memory as a result of the accident. The jury was instructed on this phase of the case and defendant does not complain of the insufficiency of the instruction. However, this rebuttable presumption, assuming it to have been applicable in the present context, constituted merely one item of evidence, Code Civ.Proc., sec. 1957, to be weighed by the jury with the other direct, physical and circumstantial evidence. From the facts recounted above, it clearly appears that the circumstances and inferences pointing to defendant's negligence far outbalanced any presumption of care on her part and the jury was entitled to find accordingly. Scott v. Burke, 39 Cal.2d 388, 397-398, 247 P.2d 313; Halstead v. Paul, 129 Cal.App.2d 339, 341, 277 P.2d 43.

[7-9] So far as concerns the judgment in favor of plaintiff that is fully sustained by the evidence already set forth which reflects defendant's negligence, and by the complete absence of any contributory negligence on plaintiff's part. In her brief, defendant has charged Mrs. Stremel with the commission of various acts of negligence. Conceding, arguendo, that there was such negligence, the evidence plainly shows that such negligence concurred with that of defendant in proximately causing the accident. The rule is well established that where plaintiff is injured by the concurring negligence of two drivers, plaintiff, as a passenger in one of the vehicles who was herself free from negligence, may recover from the negligent driver of the other car. Kelley v. Hodge Transportation System, 197 Cal. 598, 605, 242 P. 76; Hughes v. Quackenbush, 1 Cal.App.2d 349, 356, 37 P.2d 99; Fishman v. Silva, 116 Cal.App. 1, 7, 2 P.2d 473; Evans v. Mitchell, 2 Cal. App.2d 702, 707, 38 P.2d 437. Plaintiff did not own the car, she did not exercise any control or management over the automobile, nor is it asserted she was engaged in any joint enterprise with Mrs. Stremel. Therefore the latter's negligence may not be imputed to plaintiff, who may recover unless it be shown that she was herself guilty of negligence. Kelley v. Hodges Transportation System, supra, 197 Cal. at page 604, 242 P. at page 78; Thompson v. Fitzgerald, 205 Cal. 563, 568, 271 P. 1072. Under no possible construction of the evidence can it be held that plaintiff was guilty of independent negligence. She violated no duty of care owed to herself or others "[nor is it] shown that she neglected to do anything that a reasonable person in her situation should have done or that she did anything that could be regarded as negligence on her part under the circumstances of the collision." Kelley v. Hodge Transportation System, supra, 197 Cal. at page 604, 242 P. at page 78. The judgment in favor of plaintiff is abundantly supported by the evidence of defendant's negligence, by the lack of contributory negligence on her part, and by the fact that any negligence on the part of Mrs. Stremel proximately causing the accident could not be imputed to her.

New Trial Limited to Damages Only.

Defendant's final contention is that the trial court abused its discretion in granting plaintiff a new trial on the sole issue of damages. Plaintiff was awarded judgment for $2,000, which fully covered the amount of her special damages but allowed only $79.24 general damages, despite injuries which put plaintiff in traction for five weeks. That the general damages awarded are disproportionately low is patent and the obvious inadequacy is the basis for the new trial order. We cannot conclude, contrary to the trial judge, that the jury compromised the question of liability by its inadequate award of general damages.

[10, 11] The rule is that the granting of a new trial limited to the issue of damages appropriately rests in the discretion of the trial court and its determination will not be reversed in the absence of an abuse of discretion. Black v. Kiefer, 127 Cal.App.2d 122, 124, 273 P.2d 537. An abuse of discretion is shown when the record discloses that the damages are inadequate, the issue of liability close, and there are other circumstances indicating that the verdict was probably the result of a compromise on liability issue. Leipert v. Honold, 39 Cal.2d

In the light of the record in this case, it would be entirely unwarranted to hold that the issue of liability was close with respect to plaintiff. On the contrary, so strongly do the circumstances proclaim negligence on the part of defendant that we are satisfied that the court soundly exercised its discretion in the premises. The facts show that despite excellent visibility, each driver entered the intersection, according to their testimony, without seeing the other car, without sounding their horns, and from the absence of any skid marks, without sudden resort to the brakes to avert the collision. The record shows that the Stremel car had already crossed into the east half of Wilton Place and that it was struck in the side by the front of defendant's car. Accepting defendant's testimony that she looked but did not see the Stremel car despite her clear view, and from the physical fact that her car ran into the Stremel vehicle, the conclusion is almost inescapable that she was negligent in traversing the intersection. Linn v. Roby, 129 Cal.App.2d 448, 452, 277 P.2d 67.

[12] The jury advisedly arrived at such a determination by its judgment adverse to her in her cross-complaint against Mrs. Stremel. Plaintiff, as we have seen, was not in the remotest degree guilty of independent negligence as a mere rider in the Stremel car. She was the innocent victim of the culpable negligence of two drivers who crossed an uncontrolled intersection seemingly without taking the most elementary precautions to avert or avoid the hazards of cross traffic. Under such circumstances, where defendant's negligence is plainly spelled out and there is no evidence tending to show contributory negligence on the part of plaintiff, liability is established and no abuse of discretion is shown in granting a new trial on the issue of damages alone. Patterson v. Rowe, 113 Cal.App.2d 119, 247 P.2d 949; Linn v. Roby, supra.

The judgment and the order granting plaintiff Uhl a new trial on the issue only of damages are affirmed. The purported appeal from the order denying the motions of defendant Baldwin for a new trial is dismissed.

McMAHAN'S OF LONG BEACH, a California Corporation, Plaintiff and Appellant,

v.

McMAHAN SERVICE CORPORATION, a California Corporation, et al., Defendants,

McMahan Service Corporation, a California Corporation, Respondent.

Civ. 21846.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 2, California.

Nov. 2, 1956.

Action to enjoin defendants from using plaintiff's trade-name. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Joe Raycraft, J., granted defendants' motion to dismiss action for lack of prosecution and denied plaintiff's motion to strike order, entered subsequent to judgment, awarding defendants costs in the action. Plaintiff appealed from denial of its motion. The District Court of Appeal, Fox, J., held that where action was dismissed as to defendants for lack of prosecution, under the statute the defendants were entitled to necessary costs of the action, notwithstanding fact that defendants did not demand costs either in their notice of motion to dismiss or in their supporting affidavits.

Order affirmed.

1. Trade-Marks and Trade-Names and Unfair Competition ⇨101

Where action to enjoin defendants from using plaintiff's trade-name was dismissed as to defendants for lack of prosecution, under the statute the defendants were entitled to necessary costs of the action, even though defendants did not demand costs either in notice of motion to dismiss or in their supporting affidavit. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 1032 and subds. (a-c).

2. Costs ⇨199

Where trial judge discovered that order of dismissal did not expressly award costs allowed by statute as "of course" to defendants upon judgment of dismissal entered in their favor, he correctly concluded such omission was an inadvertent error and properly proceeded to rectify such inadvertence by subsequent nunc pro tunc order. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. §§ 581d, 1032 and subds. (a-c).

3. Costs ⇨48

Under statute allowing costs as of course to defendant who procures favorable judgment in special proceedings and in enumerated classes of action, "or as to whom the action is dismissed", defendant is entitled to his costs as a matter of right on dismissal of action. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 1032 and subd. (b).

FOX, Justice.

In July, 1952, plaintiff brought this action to enjoin defendants from using plaintiff's trade name, or any simulation thereof, and for damages. The trial court issued a temporary injunction. An appeal was taken but it was later dismissed.

The case not having been brought to trial, the defendants, in March, 1955, moved to dismiss the action for lack of prosecution. Neither the notice of motion nor the affidavit made any reference to costs. The motion was granted on March 23d without an appearance in opposition. The minute order, which was entered on March 25th, did not expressly award costs to defendants. A formal judgment of dismissal, dated March 24th, contained a provision in longhand that defendants have judgment for their costs. This appears to have been written in under the direction of the trial judge. The judgment and defendants' memorandum of costs were filed on March 25th.

On April 20, 1955, the trial court, on its own motion, made a minute order amending the March 23, 1955, minute order nunc pro tunc by adding thereto the following: "Defendants are given judgment for their costs * * *."

In January, 1956, plaintiff noticed a motion¹ to strike the minute order of April 20, 1955, on the ground that it was "invalid and void on its face and was in excess of the jurisdiction of the court." This motion was denied on February 2d. It is from this order that plaintiff appeals.²

It is plaintiff's position that its suit was in equity; that therefore the award of costs was discretionary under section 1032 (c), Code of Civil Procedure;³ that since defendants did not demand costs either in their notice of motion to dismiss or in their supporting affidavit, the court had no authority to award defendants their costs; and that the court had no jurisdiction to amend its order of March 23, 1955, by an ex parte order on April 20th.

[1] Defendant, McMahan Service Corporation, argues that it was entitled to its costs as "of course" under the express language of section 1032(b), Code of Civil Procedure; that the failure to expressly provide therefor in the order of March 23d was a clerical error and that the court had jurisdiction, sua sponte, to correct it.

We have concluded that the position of the defendant is sound and that the order must be affirmed.

Section 1032, Code of Civil Procedure, provides that "In the superior court, except as otherwise expressly provided, costs are allowed of course: * * * (b) To the defendant upon a judgment in his favor in special proceedings and in the actions mentioned in subdivision (a) of this section, or as to whom the action is dismissed." (Emphasis added.)

Thus we have express statutory authority for the award of costs to a defendant

1. Although Russell C. Black was also a defendant, the notice of motion was addressed to defendant McMahan Service Corporation and its attorneys only. Black is therefore not involved in this appeal.

2. In view of the conclusion we have reached, it is unnecessary to determine whether the order of April 20, 1955, is appealable.

3. The material portions of section 1032, Code of Civil Procedure, read:

"In the superior court, except as otherwise expressly provided, costs are allowed of course:

"(a) To plaintiff upon a judgment in his favor: in an action for the recovery of real property; in an action to recover the possession of personal property; in an action for the recovery of money or damages; in a special proceeding; in an action which involves the title or possession of real estate or the legality of a tax, impost, assessment, toll, or municipal fine.

"(b) To the defendant upon a judgment in his favor in special proceedings and in the actions mentioned in subdivision (a) of this section, or as to whom the action is dismissed. When there are several defendants in any action mentioned in subdivision (a) of this section, not united in interest, and making separate defenses by separate answers, and plaintiff fails to recover judgment against all, the court must award costs to such of the defendants as have judgment in their favor. [Italics added.]

"(c) In other actions than those mentioned in this section costs may be allowed or not, and, if allowed, may be apportioned between the parties, on the same or adverse sides, in the discretion of the court. * * *"

upon the dismissal of the action. No qualifications or conditions are imposed. He is entitled to his costs as a matter of right. It therefore follows that upon the dismissal of this action defendant was entitled to its costs as "of course," i. e., as a matter of right under the above code section. On this point 13 Cal.Jur.2d, section 17, page 237, says: "A successful defendant who recovers a judgment in his favor in the superior court is entitled to recover his costs as a matter of course * * * (3) where the action is dismissed as to the defendant." In 16 Cal.Jur.2d, section 3, page 147, it is stated that "* * * when the defendant's motion to dismiss is granted, the defendant is entitled to recover his necessary costs * * *." Consequently it was not necessary for defendant to expressly ask for costs in its notice of motion to dismiss or for the court to expressly award costs in the order of dismissal. The omission, therefore, of the award of costs was clearly an inadvertence or clerical error and the ex parte order of April 20th was merely to correct the same and clarify the record, see In re Estate of Goldberg, 10 Cal.2d 709, 715-716, 76 P.2d 508; Scribner v. Bertmann, 129 Cal.App.2d 204, 210-212, 276 P.2d 697; Freeman on Judgments, Vol. 1 (5th Ed.), p. 302, and it in nowise constituted a discretionary judicial act initially awarding costs to defendants.

[2] The judge undoubtedly considered that the order of dismissal carried with it costs for defendants because when a formal judgment of dismissal⁴ was presented for his signature a day or so later he directed the court clerk to add in longhand that defendants were awarded their costs. So, when the trial judge discovered that the order of dismissal did not expressly award costs allowed as "of course" to defendants by statute he correctly concluded such an omission was an inadvertent error and proceeded to rectify such inadvertence by the nunc pro tunc order of April 20th. Harman v. Cabaniss, 207 Cal. 60, 276 P. 569; Scribner v. Bertmann, supra, 129 Cal. App.2d at page 211, 276 P.2d at page 701. See Coffee v. Johnson, Co.Ct., 24 N.Y.S.2d 588, 589.

[3] Plaintiff argues that the italicized language quoted above from subdivision (b) of section 1032 authorizes costs as "of course" to a defendant only upon dismissal as to him in one of the classes of cases mentioned in subdivision (a) of that section. Obviously the language is not so limited. The italicized language was added in 1933. Stats.1933, ch. 744, sec. 191, p. 1901. Prior to the time when this language was incorporated into the statute, a defendant as to whom an action of the class mentioned in subdivision (a) was dismissed was entitled to his costs as "of course." Spinks v. Superior Court, 26 Cal.App. 793, 148 P. 798; Spreckels v. Spreckels, 172 Cal. 789, 158 P. 543. This naturally follows because a dismissal of an action with prejudice is in fact a judgment in defendant's favor, carrying with it the right to recover costs. Fisher v. Eckert, 94 Cal. App.2d 890, 894, 212 P.2d 64.

Thus the state of the law prior to 1933 was precisely that which plaintiff now urges upon us. By the addition in 1933⁵ of what would otherwise be unnecessary and superfluous language, it is reasonable to presume that the Legislature intended to enlarge the right to an award of costs to a defendant upon dismissal of the action because there is no good reason why such a defendant should not be entitled to his costs. This is sound policy and conforms to simple justice as between the parties. So, to effectuate this, the Legislature has established an additional category in which

4. By the provisions of section 581d, Code of Civil Procedure, the order of dismissal by the court upon its entry in the minutes constituted an effective judgment. The subsequent formal judgment was but a memorial thereof. E. Clemens Horst Co. v. Federal etc., Co., 22 Cal. App.2d 548, 550, 71 P.2d 599; Darling- ton v. Butler, 3 Cal.App. 448, 452, 86 P. 194.

5. In that year sections 1022, 1024 and 1026, Code of Civil Procedure, among others, were consolidated into the present section 1032, Code of Civil Procedure.

costs are awarded as a matter of right upon dismissal without regard to whether the action is legal or equitable. Tonini v. Ericcsen, 218 Cal. 39, 41, 21 P.2d 565.

It is apparent from the foregoing that subdivision (c) of section 1032 is not here applicable since dismissals are specifically provided for and governed by subdivision (b) of said section. Merlino v. Fresno Macaroni Mfg. Co., 74 Cal.App.2d 120, 168 P.2d 182, relied on by plaintiff, lends no support for its position. That case does not deal with the instant problem nor does it remotely bear upon it.

The order of February 2, 1956 (designated "judgment" in the notice of appeal) is affirmed.

HAROLD S. KARAGERIS, Plaintiff, Cross-Defendant, Appellant and Respondent,
v.

William KARAGERIS, Defendant, Cross-Complainant, Respondent and Appellant.
Civ. 8849.

District Court of Appeal, Third District,
California.
Nov. 1, 1956.

Action by a wife for divorce. Defendant husband filed a cross-complaint for divorce. From so much of a judgment of the Superior Court, Butte County, Dudley G. McGregor, J., granting each party a divorce, as declared certain property separate property of one or the other party, and other property community property to be divided between them equally by cash award of half of net value thereof to plaintiff, both parties appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Van Dyke, P. J., held that neither plaintiff nor community had any claims to real and personal property purchased by defendant soon after his marriage with his separate funds, commingled with his brother's funds held in trust by defendant as brother's share of profits from defendant's operation of brother's store.

Judgment affirmed.

VAN DYKE, Presiding Justice.

Harikleia and William Karageris were husband and wife. They married February 1, 1945. In November of 1952 she sued William for divorce. He answered and cross-complained. Each alleged as to the other the infliction of extreme cruelty, and the trial court found the allegations of both in this respect to be true and granted a divorce to each. Both have appealed, but neither challenges the propriety of the interlocutory decree of divorce. Each challenges, however, that part of the judgment which declares certain property described in the decree to be the separate property of one or the other and declares what property constituted community. The trial court found certain described property to be community and divided it between them equally through the device of a cash award to Harikleia of one-half the net value.

William Karageris had been for years employed in a men's clothing store in Oroville owned by his brother Peter. Since 1926 William had operated the store for Peter under a power of attorney. Peter had returned to Greece, his native land, where he remained. William drew a salary of $100 per month from the store. From time to time William sent funds to Peter derived from the profits of the business. But from 1939 through 1944, because of currency restrictions due to war, no money was sent. After 1944 William resumed sending money to Peter. As of January 1, 1951 William bought the store from Peter for the sum of $15,000. The court found the purchase was made with community funds and that the store business, consisting of stock on hand, furniture and fixtures, good will and store income accumulated after the purchase, was the sole community property owned by the parties. The court fixed the total value of this property at $49,364.09. From the total valuation the court deducted certain living expenses and litigation costs of the parties, thus reducing the net value to $34,211.88, and then directed that William pay one-half of that sum to Harikleia, whereupon the full title to the community property would be in him. There was evidence that from 1926, when Peter went to Greece, until 1939 the store was run by William with the assistance of a brother-in-law under an arrangement whereby, in addition to a salary, William and the brother-in-law were entitled each to one-third of the profits, the balance of the profits belonging to Peter. This arrangement ended in 1939, and William thereafter ran the store alone. When he resumed remittances to Peter in 1945, from 1945 through 1950 he sent various sums totaling approximately $21,000. The total accumulations of store profit, however, exceeded that sum, although the proof was not certain as to just what profits came into the hands of William during the years 1939 to 1944, inclusive. The account books covering that period were lost. It was shown, however, that William had not fully accounted for and paid over to Peter the profits of the store which came into his hands. The trial court made a finding that from 1939 through 1950 William retained the net income from the store and held the same for the account of Peter, save and except the sum of $21,000 paid by William to Peter from January 1, 1945 to December 31, 1950; that the balance of the store income approximated $27,810.55; that it was no longer owed by William to Peter, and that William acquired title to this balance of store income on January 1, 1951 at the same time that he acquired title to the Karageris store. The court made no allocation of the store profits William had not turned over to Peter, except as is reflected in the findings as to separate property of William. Neither did the court find specifically how or for what consideration William obtained title to Peter's funds. It is clear from the testimony of William, which is undisputed, that, during the years he received profits of the store for Peter's account, he commingled the money so received with his own and invested and reinvested the funds along with his own funds in the various properties which he owned at the time of the decree and which were declared to be his separate property. It also fairly appears that the commingling was so thorough that William would be unable at this time to follow the trust funds and segregate the interest of Peter, or show what trust funds went into the purchase of what properties.

It is the position of Harikleia, on appeal, that the store income from 1939 through 1950 which was retained by William is community property; further that any assets acquired with such store income are likewise community property, and she asks that the judgment be reversed and the cause remanded to the trial court for the purpose of ascertaining the amount of the store income acquired by William, the investments made by him of these funds and for a 50-50 division of these assets as community property. Harikleia relies on the finding of the court that William acquired title to the funds he held for Peter and of the properties in which he had invested those funds as of January 1, 1951 at the time he purchased the store. Harikleia argues that these properties held in trust for Peter by William were acquired by William "either as a part of the purchase of the store business as of January 1, 1951", or through misappropriation by William. She argues that in either case the whole is community property.

A review of the record has led us to the conclusion that the finding of the trial court that William acquired title from Peter to the trust funds and property involved, has no support in the record. First, as to misappropriation, there is no specific finding that William ever misappropriated the property of Peter. In fact, the finding is to the contrary, for the finding that William acquired the trust property from Peter cannot be construed as a holding by the trial court that the acquisition was by misappropriation. Peter's money came into William's hands as Peter's personal property.

[1-4] It is stated in 73 C.J.S., Property, § 15(4) as follows:

"Generally, no one can be divested of his property in invitum, where there is not clear warrant of law therefor * * *. Ordinarily, the owner of personal property cannot be divested of title without his consent * * *. The possession of a property right acquired secretly or by false assertions or unknowingly surrendered by the owner does not deprive him of ownership.

"A person cannot acquire property by his own crime. Title to personal property fraudulently or feloniously obtained does not pass to a wrongdoer, where the wrongful act is a crime at common law; and where property has been obtained from the owner by such act, his unqualified ownership is not changed, and he may peaceably take it in whose hands he may find it. So, a thief can acquire no title to stolen property, * * *." See, also Lightfoot v. Davis, 198 N.Y. 261, 91 N.E. 582, 29 L.R.A., N.S., 119, and Kemp v. Ene-mark, 194 Cal. 748, 752-753, 230 P. 441.

[5] If William has, in fact, misappropriated the trust funds of his brother, he has not gained title by his tortious acts and is still accountable to Peter for every dollar of store income which came into his hands and was not remitted by him, whether he now has the trust funds in the form received or has transmuted the funds into other forms of property, real or personal. Peter can follow those funds if he chooses into whatever form of property they have been invested. Furthermore, if in making such investments William has commingled his own separate property and can no longer identify and segregate from his own that which belongs to Peter, equity will yet make Peter whole by an appropriate decree. Harikleia is not interested in such assets if William holds by misappropriation. Kemp v. Enemark, supra.

[6] Discarding misappropriation as a possible source of title, we examine the record to see what evidence of acquisition through lawful means can be found to support the trial court's finding that William in January of 1951 acquired the property of Peter. We find none. The best that counsel for Harikleia can say as to how William acquired, if he did acquire, the property of Peter, is that it was either by purchase or by misappropriation. It appears in the record that within a few months after William's marriage he purchased real and personal property at a cost of over $40,000. William testified this was money of himself and money belonging to Peter that was used in the purchase of these properties, and there is no evidence to the contrary. He took title to the properties in his own name, and these same properties are still held by him. Peter may have claims to this property, but Harikleia and the community have none, since it clearly appears William took his separate funds commingled with Peter's funds to make the purchases. The trial court was not obliged to settle affairs between William and Peter and in this litigation could not have done so. We assume it made no effort in that direction. What it was concerned with was to ascertain what property was separate, so far as the community was concerned, and what property was community. Concerning the $40,000 worth of property purchased by William within a few months of his marriage to Harikleia, her counsel say in her brief: "The testimony showed conclusively that these purchases were paid for 'out of the pot', and that William was using Peter's money in these investments. * * * It is significant that the defendant below (respondent here) made no attempt to explain his acquisitions of the accumulated store income and made no attempt to segregate the assets of William which he had admittedly acquired with these funds." We think it unnecessary to relate in detail the evidence touching upon the handling by William of the trust funds belonging to Peter. It is enough to say that nothing in this record will support the trial court's finding that William ever acquired the trust funds for which he was accountable to his brother.

William has appealed and by his appeal challenges the trial court's holding that the Karageris store was community property. However, he states in his brief that: "When the plaintiff appealed from the judgment of the trial court the defendant filed a cross appeal upon grounds that had been pressed seriously in the trial of the case. However the defendant would not have taken an appeal from the judgment if plaintiff had not appealed, and he takes the position now that if the appellate court does not feel that the judgment should be reversed for the alleged errors claimed by the plaintiff, he is content to let the judgment stand rather than have the burden of a retrial of the case upon a reversal because of the errors claimed by the defendant." Since what this court has heretofore said necessitates an affirmance of the judgment, so far as is concerned the appeal of Harikleia, we think it unnecessary to discuss the merits of William's attack upon the court's holding that the store was community property, further than to say that our review of the record has convinced us the holding is sustained by the record.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed as against the attacks made by both appellants, Harikleia to recover her costs on appeal.

The CITY OF LOS ANGELES, a municipal corporation, Plaintiff and Appellant,

v.

BELRIDGE OIL COMPANY, a California corporation, Defendant and Respondent.*

Civ. 21778.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Oct. 31, 1956.

Rehearing Denied Nov. 26, 1956.

Hearing Granted Dec. 24, 1956.

Suit by city to collect business license tax from oil company. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Joseph W. Vickers, J., entered judgment fixing tax in accordance with certain formula, and city appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Ashburn, J., held that Los Angeles tax on businesses engaged in selling at wholesale in city may constitutionally be measured by gross receipts attributable wholly or partly to sales activities within city, and only those gross receipts should be excluded which are not attributable in any measure to sales activities within city, and that ordinance did not countenance use of formula by which gross receipts attributable to sources within as against without city were purportedly determined by reference to ordinance provision that gross receipts should be determined by allocation upon basis of payroll, value and situs of tangible property, general expenses, or by reference to any of these or other factors, or by such other method of allocation as is fairly calculated to determine gross receipts derived from or attributable to sources within city.

Judgment reversed with instructions.

1. Licenses ⇐7(9)

Los Angeles tax on businesses engaged in selling at wholesale in city may constitutionally be measured by gross receipts attributable wholly or partly to sales activities within that city, and only those gross receipts should be excluded which are not attributable in any measure to sales activity within that city.

* Opinion vacated 309 P.2d 417.

2. Licenses ⇐7(8)

Fact that all gross income of oil company, whose total gross receipts attributable to selling in City of Los Angeles were subject to Los Angeles business license tax, would be taxable again by Kern County, in which all of its productive operations were located, would not impair right of Los Angeles to so measure its tax.

3. Licenses ⇐29

Ordinance, under which Los Angeles imposed tax on business engaged in selling at wholesale in city, did not countenance use of formula by which gross receipts attributable to sources within as against without city were purportedly determined by reference to ordinance provision that such gross receipts should be determined by allocation upon basis of payroll, value and situs of tangible property, general expenses, or by reference to any of these or other factors, or by such other method of allocation as is fairly calculated to determine gross receipts derived from or attributable to sources within city.

ASHBURN, Justice.

The problem here presented is the extent of liability of defendant for a tax under § 21.166 of the City of Los Angeles License Tax Ordinance No. 77000. On a first trial of the case it was held that defendant was not within the terms of the said section and hence not liable for the tax. The Supreme Court reversed in City of Los Angeles v. Belridge Oil Co., 42 Cal.2d 823, 271 P.2d 5. It was a general reversal. Upon re-trial plaintiff contended that the tax is to be measured by all gross receipts of defendant which are attributable wholly or in part to selling activities conducted within the city of Los Angeles; defendant asserted and now asserts that an apportionment of gross income is necessary as a result of the Supreme Court decision even though the entire amount is partially attributable to Los Angeles activities, and that it should be made according to a certain formula which was worked out at the trial.

Upon the former appeal the Supreme Court was confronted first with a question of construction of the ordinance. Section 21.166 provides: "Every person manufacturing and selling any goods, wares or merchandise at wholesale, or selling goods, wares or merchandise at wholesale, and not otherwise specifically licensed by other provisions of this Article, shall pay for each calendar year, or portion thereof, the sum of $8.00 for the first $20,000, or less, of gross receipts, and, in addition * * *." All the facts had been stipulated in the lower court. It appeared that: "Defendant company is engaged in the production and sale of crude oil and natural gas. All of its wells are located in Kern County which is the scene of all productive operations. The field office of the defendant is located in Kern County while the main office is situated in the city of Los Angeles. Its various products which are marketed under long-term contracts, are delivered to the purchasers directly at the field plants and never enter the territorial limits of the city of Los Angeles." 42 Cal.2d at page 825, 271 P.2d at page 7. Also: "Negotiations for the sale of defendant's products are conducted in part at the main office, in part at the offices of purchasers and in part by mail, telegraph or telephone communications between the defendant's main office in Los Angeles and the customer. Defendant company signs all contracts at its main office." 42 Cal.2d at page 826, 271 P.2d at page 7. The stipulation itself says: "Substantially all said sales are made pursuant to the provisions of long-term contracts. All said contracts contain provisions for fixing the prices at which such substances are sold. * * * The contracts above-mentioned were negotiated and signed in behalf of defendant solely by its president, vice presidents and secretary. Approximately 15 per cent of the negotiation of said contracts occurred at the head office, approximately 15 per cent thereof occurred in San Francisco, and approximately 70 per cent thereof occurred by telephonic, telegraphic and mail communication between Los Angeles and San Francisco. Said contracts were signed by defendant in Los Angeles and by the buyers in San Francisco."

In solving this question of ordinance construction in favor of plaintiff the court said: "Thus all businesses which are engaged in selling goods, wares or merchandise at wholesale in the City of Los Angeles and which are not licensed by other sections of the ordinance come within section 21.166. This is true regardless of whether they are engaged in 'manufacturing and selling' or merely 'selling.' The important thing is that they are engaged in selling within the City of Los Angeles. If they are so engaged, all gross receipts attributable to selling in the City of Los Angeles are subject to the business license tax provided for by section 21.166. The fact that the goods sold are produced in remote areas is unimportant. * * * The important thing is that the taxpayer is engaged in selling goods at wholesale in the City of Los Angeles. * * * The fact that an organization is engaged in selling in the city is sufficient and it is of no import that selling is but a small part of the total effort or that selling is not difficult for the instant company. * * * The purpose of the section was to place a business license tax on those activities which took place within the City of Los Angeles regardless of their relationship to activities outside the city." (Emphasis added.) 42 Cal.2d at pages 828-829, 271 P.2d at page 9.

The court then addressed itself to defendant's second contention, namely, "that even if section 21.166 is applicable, the city cannot constitutionally tax the total gross receipts of the company since such would be an attempt to impose a tax on business carried on outside the city." 42 Cal.2d at page 831, 271 P.2d at page 10. It said: "This argument is based on the ground that since the total gross receipts include the proceeds of products produced and delivered outside the city the effect would be to allow a city to tax transactions occurring outside its boundaries. This argument seems to lose sight of the nature of section 21.166.

"The business license tax here sought to be collected is a privilege tax, exacted for the privilege of engaging in the activity of 'selling.' When this activity takes place within the city, the rate of tax may be measured by the gross receipts derived therefrom. Union Pac. R. Co. v. City of Los Angeles, 53 Cal.App.2d 825, 830, 128 P.2d 408. As stated by this court in Martin Ship Service Co. v. City of Los Angeles, 34 Cal.2d 793, 796, 215 P.2d 24, 26, 'In view of the recent decisions of the United States Supreme Court in Memphis Natural Gas Co. v. Stone, 335 U.S. 80, 68 S.Ct. 1475 [92 L.Ed.1832], and Central Greyhound Lines, Inc. [of New York] v. Mealey, 334 U.S. 653, 68 S.Ct. 1260 [92 L.Ed. 1633], the city may clearly tax plaintiffs' local activities and the gross receipts therefrom.' In the case at bar it is true that some of these gross receipts are attributable to extraterritorial elements such as the production and delivery of the goods. However there is no constitutional objection to resorting to extraterritorial elements in determining the rate of tax. Great Atlantic & Pac. Tea Co. v. Grosjean, 301 U.S. 412, 57 S.Ct. 772, 81 L.Ed. 1193 [112 A.L.R. 293]; Maxwell v. Bugbee, 250 U.S. 525, 40 S.Ct. 2, 63 L. Ed. 1124; Cedar Hill Cemetery Corp. v. District of Columbia, 75 U.S.App.D.C. 84, 124 F.2d 286. The activity being taxed here is the activity of selling and such activity can be taxed by the city even though the goods never enter its territorial limits. Keystone Metal Co. v. City of Pittsburgh, supra, 374 Pa. 323, 97 A.2d 797.

"In the instant case we can find no objection, constitutional or otherwise, to the imposition of a business license tax on the privilege of engaging in selling activities within the city. Likewise there is no objection to basing the rate of such tax on the gross receipts attributable to such selling activities, even though various extra-territorial events contribute to such gross receipts." 42 Cal.2d at page 831, 271 P.2d at page 10. It is well to emphasize at this point the fact that the court here holds as a matter of constitutional law that the license tax for doing business within the city may be constitutionally measured by the gross receipts "derived therefrom" or "attributable to such selling activities".

Next follows in the opinion a limitation upon the general proposition, so phrased that when applied to the facts developed at the re-trial it gave rise to the controversy presented on this appeal: "There is, however, one important limitation which should be pointed out and that is this; even though the city can tax the activity of selling it can only base the tax on such selling activities as are carried out within its territorial limits. For this reason it is only those gross receipts which are attributable to selling activities within the city which should form the basis for the rate of tax. Gross receipts attributable to selling activities conducted outside the city should not be included. Such a construction necessarily follows from the fact that the business license tax is on the privilege of engaging in selling activities in the City of Los Angeles and as such should only be based upon such activities. * * * To allow a city to levy a license tax based upon gross receipts attributable to selling activities outside the city would be an unreasonable discrimination and a denial of equal protection of the law. See Ferran v. City of Palo Alto, 50 Cal.App.2d 374, 122 P.2d 965. If such taxation were allowed it would unjustly discriminate against those firms whose selling activities in Los Angeles compose but a small fraction of the total sales effort and whose gross receipts are in large part attributable to selling activities in other areas." 42 Cal.2d at pages

831-832, 271 P.2d at page 10. Again at page 833 of 42 Cal.2d at page 11 of 271 P.2d: "In the instant case a just and reasonable construction requires that the measure of the tax be limited to those gross receipts attributable to selling activities within the City of Los Angeles."

The parties stipulated at the second trial, "that all of the gross receipts of defendant are attributable in part to its selling activities within the City of Los Angeles and in part to its selling activities without the City." The crux of the present controversy lies in the application of the stipulated facts to these two sentences of the opinion: "For this reason it is only those gross receipts which are attributable to selling activities within the city which should form the basis for the rate of tax. Gross receipts attributable to selling activities conducted outside the city should not be included." 42 Cal.2d at page 832, 271 P.2d at page 10. They seem to assume that sales activities within and outside the city of Los Angeles may be separately identified and the gross receipts thus allocated in accordance with the principles previously announced. There were no findings of fact in the record because the appeal arose upon a summary judgment. The stipulation of facts then before the court did not clarify the matter but left open the possibility of separate identification of proceeds of sales made within the city and those made outside its territory.

The word "attributable" is not a term of art, nor is it used in any such sense in the Supreme Court opinion. Webster's New International Dictionary defines the noun "attribute" as including the following connotations: "1. That which is attributed; as: * * * A quality considered as belonging to, or inherent in, a person or thing. * * * 4. Logic. Any quality or characteristic which may be predicated of some subject; specif., such a quality or characteristic as belongs to the subject essentially or necessarily." The idea of immediate relationship, cause and effect, "fiscal relation," as appellant phrases it, is expressed by the word "attributable" in the opinion; it seems to be the equivalent of the word "derived" in the phrase "gross receipts derived therefrom" as used on page 831 of 42 Cal.2d, on page 10 of 271 P.2d.

[1] It seems a fair interpretation of the opinion that the language just quoted from page 832 of 42 Cal.2d, page 10 of 271 P.2d means that the Los Angeles tax may be measured by gross receipts attributable wholly or partly to sales activities within that city, and that only those gross receipts should be excluded which are not attributable in any measure to sales activities within that city. The court is here engaged in a discussion of constitutional law, the phrasing of a constitutional limitation upon the constitutional principle just announced, namely, that the city of Los Angeles may measure its business license tax by the entire gross receipts derived from or attributable to sales activities within the city; and there is no basis for inferring an intent to qualify or limit beyond the necessities of constitutional exegesis.

[2] The argument that this would make all gross income taxable again by Kern County does not impair the view just expressed, for Mr. Justice Carter, the author of the Belridge opinion, also wrote Fox Bakersfield Theatre Corp. v. City of Bakersfield, 36 Cal.2d 136, 140, 141, 222 P.2d 879, 882, wherein it is said: "Taxation, other than of property, upon the same activity or incident for the same purpose by the same taxing agency, more than once in the same period, sometimes called double taxation, standing alone, is not forbidden by the constitutions, state or federal. * * * Our constitution provides that 'all property' in the state except as otherwise provided 'shall be taxed in proportion to its value'. Cal.Const., art. XIII, sec. 1. And under that provision it has been held that there could be no double taxation of property. * * * 'The mere fact that the state has imposed one excise under one act does not prevent the state from imposing another excise upon the same privilege for the same period. Article XIII, section 1, of the State Constitution, has no application, because that section applies only to property taxes.' We think the Supreme Court, by its general reversal, left open as a factual question the problem of whether any portion of defendant's sales were not attributable to Los Angeles selling activities, and if so, how much.

When counsel came to applying the opinion to the facts they reached certain stipulations: "Oral stipulation in open court that the delivery of the goods to a purchaser by the defendant is one of the elements of a selling business and is included in the selling activities of the defendant.

"Oral stipulation in open court that all of the gross receipts of defendant are attributable in part to its selling activities within the City of Los Angeles and in part to its selling activities without the City.

[3] "Oral stipulation in open court that subject to the reservation that the plaintiff, the City of Los Angeles, does not agree that allocation, as required by the Court in its oral opinion of November 16, 1955, is necessary for determining the amount of tax due to the City from the defendant, and without foreclosing any right of the City of Los Angeles to maintain on appeal the position which it has maintained in this Court that there should be no allocation of receipts for purposes of determining the amount of the tax and that the measure of the tax should be defendant's entire gross receipts, the parties hereto stipulate as follows: (a) On the basis of all the stipulated facts, not more than 20% of defendant's total gross receipts for the years 1948 and 1949 are attributable to defendant's business in the City of Los Angeles under any method of allocation which is fairly calculated to determine the defendant's gross receipts derived from or attributable to sources within the City of Los Angeles and to determine the defendant's gross receipts derived from or attributable to sources outside the City of Los Angeles." Sub-paragraph (b) is a repetition of (a) except for the substitution of the words "selling activities" for the word "business" which appears in (a). Subparagraph (d) reads: "Based upon the foregoing stipulations, it is agreed that, after allowing credit for all payments made by the defendant to the plaintiff as license taxes for the years 1949 and 1950, there remains due and owing to the City of Los Angeles the sum of $536.43, including both principal and penalties." The court adopted this formula and rendered judgment against defendants for $536.43. The stipulation as to the formula to be applied if allocation be found necessary was reached at a conference in chambers after the trial judge had ruled as follows: "Reading from Section 21.190, subsection (d)—and doing so without regard to whether or not that section applies to our instant case in so far as its application is concerned but only for the purpose of considering the matter of how an apportionment should be made—that section provides that, 'Such gross receipts shall be determined by an allocation upon the basis of payroll, value and situs of tangible property, general expenses, or by reference to any of these or other factors, or by such other method of allocation as is fairly calculated to determine the gross receipts derived from or attributable to sources within this city.' That seems a proper method of apportionment and a proper principle to follow." The stipulation was adequately protected by the express reservation of the contention that there was and is no room for any such allocation. We find in the Supreme Court opinion no basis, either in the words or the reasoning, for the application of the formula which was adopted below.

We conclude that the judgment is erroneous. It is reversed with instructions to enter judgment for plaintiff computed in accordance with § 21.166 for the years 1949 and 1950.

Civ. 21547.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California.

Nov. 2, 1956.

Hearing Granted Dec. 24, 1956.

Action to establish trust in real property standing in decedent's name at time of death. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, John Gee Clark, J., entered judgment for plaintiff, and administrator appealed. The District Court of Appeal, White, P. J., held that stipulation of former administrator that action to impress trust should be tried after expiration of statutory five-year period was, under the circumstances, in excess of authority of such administrator and his attorney and was not effective to except action from operation of statute requiring dismissal of actions not brought to trial within five-years after filing unless parties have stipulated for extension.

Judgment reversed with directions to dismiss action.

1. Appeal and Error ⇨105, 870(2)

An appeal does not lie from an order denying motion to dismiss, but, on appeal from judgment, court may review such order. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., §§ 956, 963.

2. Dismissal and Nonsuit ⇨60(2)

Where statute providing that actions shall be dismissed unless brought to trial within five years after plaintiff filed action except where parties have stipulated that time may be extended is applicable, action must be dismissed if not brought to trial within five years after complaint is filed. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 583.

* Opinion vacated 311 P.2d 489.

3. Dismissal and Nonsuit ⇨50, 60(1)

Certain conditions may except an action from applicability of statute requiring dismissal of actions not brought to trial within five years after filing unless parties have stipulated for extension, and defendant may waive his rights to a dismissal under that statute. West's Ann.Code Civ. Proc., § 583.

4. Courts ⇨50

One of the reasons for creation of Law and Motion Department was to save time in trial departments and to make it unnecessary to have parties and witnesses present in court room during argument and decision of such motions as one to dismiss for failure to bring action to trial within five years. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 583.

5. Dismissal and Nonsuit ⇨63

Where intervenor moved for dismissal of action against administrator of estate of decedent for failure to bring action to trial within five years, it was not required that administrator move for dismissal upon same ground, authorities, and arguments as urged in intervenor's motion. West's Ann. Code Civ.Proc., § 583.

6. Dismissal and Nonsuit ⇨50

In action against administrator of estate of decedent to establish trust in real property standing in decedent's name at time of death, administrator's right to dismissal was not waived by proceeding with defense, after denial of intervenor's motion to dismiss for failure to bring action to trial within five years. West's Ann.Code Civ. Proc., § 583.

7. Appeal and Error ⇨870(2)

Upon appeal from judgment for plaintiff in action against administrator of decedent's estate to establish trust in real property standing in decedent's name at time of death, court's failure to dismiss action on intervenor's motion to dismiss for failure to bring action to trial within five years would be reviewed. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 583.

8. Dismissal and Nonsuit ⇨60(6)

Five year period within which an action may be tried may be extended by written stipulation of parties. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 583.

9. Dismissal and Nonsuit ⇨60(6)

Action against administrator of estate of decedent to establish trust in real property standing in decedent's name at time of death did not concern a creditor's claim and statute providing that no claim which is barred by statute of limitations shall be approved by administrator did not apply to administrator's stipulation to extend five year period allowed by statute to bring action to trial. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 583; West's Ann.Prob.Code, § 708.

10. Dismissal and Nonsuit ⇨60(1)

Courts prefer decisions on merits over decisions on technicalities, and statute requiring dismissal of actions not brought to trial within five years after filing unless parties stipulated for extension, like other statutes of limitation, operates regardless of merits or demerits of action. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 583.

11. Limitation of Actions ⇨1

Statutes of limitation are intended to run against those who are neglectful of their rights, and who fail to use reasonable and proper diligence in enforcement thereof.

12. Dismissal and Nonsuit ⇨60(1)

Statute requiring dismissal of actions not brought to trial within five years after filing unless parties have stipulated for extension, was enacted as matter of public policy to fix time within which plaintiff should be required to bring an action to trial. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 583.

13. Executors and Administrators ⇨75

An administrator's power to deal with property of an estate is limited, and his first duty is to preserve estate's assets for creditors and heirs of decedent.

14. Executors and Administrators ⇨59

Until it has been decided contra by a court of competent jurisdiction, property possessed by decedent is presumed to have been his.

15. Executors and Administrators ⇨453(1)

An administrator who has a defense is not authorized to default in an action involving either property of the estate or property claimed to have been held in trust by decedent.

16. Executors and Administrators ⇨450

If administrator merely fails to defend an action involving property of estate or property claimed to have been held in trust by decedent, court wherein action is pending may presume that administrator is doing his duty and that he is defaulting in good faith in order to save estate expense of useless litigation.

17. Executors and Administrators ⇨457

If administrator fails to defend action involving property of estate or property claimed to have been held in trust by decedent, heirs may seek to enforce repayment by administrator and may object to his accounting for that purpose.

18. Executors and Administrators ⇨433

Where statute requiring dismissal of actions not brought to trial within five years after filing unless parties have stipulated for extension provided absolute defense to action to establish trust in real property standing in name of decedent at time of death, it was duty of administrator to use that defense. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 583.

19. Executors and Administrators ⇨433

An administrator has no authority to favor a plaintiff at expense of creditors and heirs by stipulation that action should be tried after expiration of statutory five year period. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 583.

20. Executors and Administrators ⇨433

Where stipulation of administrator's predecessor that action to impress trust against real property in name of decedent at time of death should be tried after expiration of statutory five-year period was filed five years and almost six months after filing of complaint under the circumstances, stipulation was in excess of authority of administrator's predecessor and was not effective to except action from operation of statute requiring dismissal of actions not brought to trial within five years after filing unless parties have stipulated for extension. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 583.

Wm. H. Neblett, Harry W. Dudley, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Leonard D. Nasatir, Los Angeles, for respondent.

WHITE, Presiding Justice.

Defendant, William H. Neblett, Administrator of the Estate of Eddie Will Sellers, Sr., Deceased, has appealed from the judgment for plaintiff in her action to establish a trust in certain real property standing in decedent's name at the time of his death.

The first ground urged by appellant for reversal is that Section 583 of the Code of Civil Procedure required that the court dismiss the action before trial and its failure to do so was prejudicial error. Respondent contends that said section is not applicable to the instant action for two reasons: (1) defendant made no motion to dismiss before or at the time of trial; and (2) the written stipulation of plaintiff's attorney and the attorney for the former administrator, then the defendant in the instant action, was filed before trial.

October 19, 1949, the complaint was filed naming as defendant Bessie Sellers, Administratrix of the Estate of Eddie Will Sellers, Deceased. Mrs. Sellers was such administratrix from July 12, 1949 until June 4, 1954, when she was removed by court order. Harry Aides was appointed August 4, 1954, and served as such administrator until April 29, 1955, when he resigned with the approval of the court.

Section 583 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that any action "shall be dismissed * * * by the court upon its own motion, unless such action is brought to trial within five years after the plaintiff has filed his action, except where the parties have filed a stipulation in writing that the time may be extended. * * *"

October 19, 1954, the five year period from the filing of the complaint expired.

October 21, 1954, Bessie Sellers filed her complaint in intervention alleging that she, the surviving spouse of decedent, and their minor son, as his heirs, are the real parties in interest, denying some of the allegations of the complaint, and praying that plaintiff take nothing.

April 4, 1955, when the case was called for trial, a written stipulation signed by the then attorney for plaintiff and the attorney for Harry Aides, who was then the administrator and the defendant herein, was filed. That stipulation provides that the trial "be continued until May 23, 1955, or as soon thereafter as may be convenient to the court". On the same day when the continuance was being considered, the court declined to rule on the written objections of the intervenor, Bessie Sellers, and stated that the trial would be continued to May 3, 1955, which would allow sufficient time for a motion to dismiss under Section 583 to be made in the Law and Motion Department.

April 15, 1955, notice of motion to dismiss for failure to bring the action to trial within five years, supporting affidavit and points and authorities were served and filed by intervenor.

April 28, 1955, the motion was denied.

April 29, 1955, William H. Neblett was appointed to succeed Harry Aides as administrator and substituted as defendant in this action.

May 3, 1955, the cause was called for trial and on motion of plaintiff it was then continued to May 26, and the actual trial was commenced May 27th,

[1] An appeal does not lie from an order denying motion to dismiss. Code Civ. Proc., § 963; Parker v. Owen, 83 Cal.App. 2d 474, 189 P.2d 81; Eistrat v. Humiston, 129 Cal.App.2d 463, 464, 277 P.2d 463; Obergfell v. Obergfell, 134 Cal.App.2d 541, 545, 286 P.2d 462. On appeal from the judgment, however, the court may review such an order as one "which substantially affects the rights of a party." Code Civ. Proc., § 956.

[2] There is no question but that any action to which said section 583 is applicable must be dismissed if not brought to trial within five years after the complaint is filed. Anderson v. Superior Court, 187 Cal. 95, 97, 200 P. 963; Pacific Greyhound Lines v. Superior Court, 28 Cal.2d 61, 63, 168 P.2d 665.

[3] Certain conditions, none of which have been shown to exist in the instant action, may except an action from the application of section 583, Christin v. Superior Court, 9 Cal.2d 526, 530, 71 P.2d 205, 112 A.L.R. 1153; and defendant may waive his rights to a dismissal under the terms of the section.

[4-7] One of the reasons for the creation of the Law and Motion Department was to save time in the trial departments and to make it unnecessary to have the parties and witnesses present in the court room during the argument and decision of such motions as the one made by intervenor in the instant action. The trial judge has before him the record of the making and disposition of such motions. It is not required or expected that motions disposed of before trial shall be repeated at the trial. Nor was it required that defendant, himself, move for dismissal upon the same ground, authorities and arguments as urged in intervenor's motion. The manner in which the expiration of said five year period is brought to the attention of the court is immaterial. When the court becomes aware of the facts it must, if they come within the purview of the statute, dismiss the action. Smith v. Bear Valley, etc. Co., 26 Cal.2d 590, 601, 160 P.2d 1, and cases there cited; Hunt v. United Artists, 79 Cal.App.2d 619, 626, 180 P.2d 460. In the instant action, defendant's right to a dismissal was not waived by his proceeding with the defense, and the court's failure to dismiss will be reviewed upon this appeal.

[8] Said five year period within which an action may be tried may be extended by the written stipulation of the parties. Code Civ.Proc., § 583; Rio Vista Mining Co. v. Superior Court, 187 Cal. 1, 2, 200 P. 616.

In the instant action when the trial was to commence on April 4, 1955, five years and almost six months after the filing of the complaint, the intervenor objected. The stipulation relied upon by respondent to extend the five year period was filed on that day—whether before or after intervenor's objections is not shown by the record on appeal. However, if an effective stipulation was filed first, the motion to dismiss was properly denied; and, if an effective stipulation was filed after the motion to dismiss was made, the motion was waived and it was proper to proceed with the trial. Rio Vista Mining Co. v. Superior Court, 187 Cal. 1, 5, 200 P. 616; Koehler v. Peckham, 11 Cal.App.2d 481, 483, 54 P.2d 500.

At that time, appellant was the attorney of record for intervenor and not yet a party to the action. The stipulation was not signed by appellant or by his client. It is contended by appellant that Harry Aides, his predecessor as administrator and as defendant in this action, had no power to waive the rights of the beneficiaries of decedent's estate under section 583, and that consequently the stipulation signed by him was of no force or effect and did not relieve the court of its duty to dismiss the instant action.

[9] It is conceded by respondent that an administrator has no power to waive a statute of limitations with respect to any creditor's claim filed against an estate, Probate Code, section 708. The instant action does not concern a creditor's claim and section 708 of the Probate Code cannot be applied to the facts now engaging our attention.

In Bryson v. Hill, 107 Cal.App. 158, 290 P. 52, defendant executor failed to plead the bar of the statute of limitations in an action to establish a trust in personal property possessed by decedent at the time of his death. Judgment for defendant was affirmed on appeal, and, 107 Cal.App. at page 160, 290 P. at page 53, the court said: "And, while the bar of the statute was not pleaded by the defendant executor, it could not be waived by him * * *." See Reay v. Heazelton, 128 Cal. 335, 60 P. 977, and Vrooman v. Li Po Tai, 113 Cal. 302, 306, 45 P. 470. As said in Jacobson v. Mead, 12 Cal.App. 2d 75, 80, 55 P.2d 285, 287, "'The personal privilege of waiving the statute of limitations expired with the decedent and was not transmitted to the administrator or any other person to be exercised for the benefit of barred claimants to the prejudice of creditors.'"

Respondent urges that section 583 of the Code of Civil Procedure is not a statute of limitations, and that the rule laid down in the cases hereinbefore discussed is inapplicable to the instant action.

[10-12] Courts prefer decisions on the merits over decisions on technicalities. Section 583, like other statutes of limitation, operates regardless of the merits or demerits of an action. City of Los Angeles v. Superior Court, 185 Cal. 405, 414, 197 P. 79; Bell v. Solomons, 162 Cal. 105, 121 P. 377; Superior Oil Co. v. Superior Court, 6 Cal.2d 113, 117-119, 56 P.2d 950. Statutes of limitation are "intended to run against those who are neglectful of their rights, and who fail to use reasonable and proper diligence in the enforcement thereof." Neff v. New York Life Ins. Co., 30 Cal.2d 165, 169, 180 P.2d 900, 903, 171 A.L.R. 563. In our opinion, Section 583 was also enacted as a matter of public policy to fix the time within which plaintiff should be required to bring an action to trial.

[13-20] An administrator's power to deal with the property of an estate is limited. His first duty is to preserve the estate's assets for the creditors and heirs of decedent. Until it has been decided contra by a court of competent jurisdiction, the property possessed by decedent is presumed to have been his. An administrator who has a defense is not authorized to default in an action involving either the property of the estate or property claimed to have been held in trust by decedent. If the administrator merely fails to defend such an action, the court wherein it is pending may presume that he is doing his duty and that he is defaulting in good faith in order to save the estate expense of useless litigation. Then the heirs may seek to enforce repayment by the administrator and may object to his accounting for that purpose. In re Estate of McSweeney, 123 Cal.App.2d 787, 793, 268 P.2d 107. Not so, in the instant action. Here section 583 provided the estate with an absolute defense against plaintiff's action and it was the duty of the administrator to use that defense. In re Estate of Sidebotham, 138 Cal.App.2d 412, 416, 291 P.2d 965. The stipulation of the administrator that the action should be tried after the expiration of the statutory five year period was an attempt to waive the rights of decedent's creditors and heirs. Both the plaintiff and the court are charged with knowledge that an administrator has no authority to so favor a plaintiff at the expense of the creditors and heirs. Therefore, under the facts of the instant action, we are persuaded that the stipulation relied upon by respondent was in excess of the authority of the administrator and/or his attorney. The stipulation was not effective and did not except the action from the operation of section 583 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The action should have been dismissed before trial.

Having decided that the action should have been dismissed before trial, discussion of the numerous other specifications of error becomes unnecessary.

The judgment is reversed with directions to the court below to dismiss the action.

WHITE, Presiding Justice.

Respondents move to dismiss the appeal herein upon the ground that the notice of appeal from the order dismissing appellant's fourth amended complaint was filed more than 60 days after the entry of such order.

The record reflects that on November 8, 1955, the court granted the motions of respondents, Walter M. Briggs and Civic Center Auto Parks, a corporation, sued herein as Civic Center Auto Park, Inc., to dismiss appellant's fourth amended complaint and sustained without leave to amend, the demurrer of said respondents.

On the same date the court granted the motion of the remaining respondents "to strike fourth amended complaint and/or to dismiss action", and also sustained, without leave to amend, the demurrer of said last-named respondents. The foregoing order was entered November 10, 1955.

On November 22, 1955 the court signed and filed its "Judgment of Dismissal" which recited that the foregoing motions and demurrers having come on regularly for hearing on November 8, 1955, and "the court having sustained said demurrers without leave to amend and having granted said motions by order duly made. Now Therefore, It Is Ordered, Adjudged and Decreed that plaintiff's Fourth Amended Complaint be, and the same is hereby stricken and the action dismissed" as to all respondents. This judgment was entered on November 28, 1955. On January 19, 1956, there was filed in the Office of the County Clerk of Los Angeles County, appellant's notice of appeal "from the judgment and order filed November 22, 1955 and entered November 28, 1955 sustaining the demurrers in the above-entitled action without leave to amend and striking the last amended complaint from the files".

* Opinion vacated 311 P.2d 8.

It is respondents' contention that the foregoing order of the trial court dismissing appellant's fourth amended complaint was a final judgment and that time for appeal therefrom expired 60 days after November 10, 1955, the date of the entry of the order of dismissal in the minutes of the court, or on the 9th day of January, 1956. Appellant argues that the final action in this case was the signing and filing of the formal judgment of dismissal and that until such formal judgment was signed the order upon which it was based was interlocutory in character and that no appeal lies from such an order.

Rule 2 of Rules on Appeal provides that notice of appeal shall be filed within 60 days after the entry of judgment unless the time is extended, as provided in Rule 3. Rule 2 also provides that the "date of entry" of an appealable order which is entered in the minutes shall be the date of its entry in the permanent minutes, unless such minute order as entered expressly directs that a written order be prepared, signed and filed.

Respondents rely on the provisions of Section 581d of the Code of Civil Procedure which provides in part as follows:

"All dismissals ordered by the court shall be entered upon the minutes thereof or in the docket in the justice court, as the case may be, and such orders when so entered shall constitute judgments and be effective for all purposes, * * *."

We are satisfied that the rule for dismissals under Section 581d of the Code of Civil Procedure does not apply to the instant case wherein the ruling of the court was a final judgment on the pleadings of the relative rights of the parties insofar as this action is concerned. We are also persuaded that the case of Wood, Curtis & Co. v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 152 Cal. 344, at page 347, 92 P. 868, is directly in point and the opinion in that case discusses at length why Section 581 et seq. of the Code of Civil Procedure do not apply to or embrace a court's action on the sustaining of a demurrer without leave to amend, and it repeatedly speaks of those sections as "special provisions", making it clear that they are exceptional. Also, at 2 Cal.Jur., pp. 402-403, in discussing dismissals under Section 581 et seq. of the Code of Civil Procedure, where minute orders are treated for purposes of appeal the same as final judgments, it is said: "This rule does not, however, apply to a judgment on a demurrer, though the judgment declares that the action be dismissed, for whether a judgment on demurrer declares that the plaintiff take nothing, or that the action abate, or that the action be dismissed, it is a final judgment on the pleadings of the relative rights of the parties so far as the particular action is concerned, and, therefore, no appeal lies from such a judgment until it is entered in the judgment-book." Citing Wood, Curtis & Co. v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., supra.

Where as here, a formal judgment was contemplated by the parties and later signed by the judge it is prima facie the decision or judgment of the court rather than a minute order, and satisfies the requirements of Rule 2 of Rules on Appeal. Since such formal judgment was signed and filed November 22, 1955 and entered in the "Judgment Book" as provided by Section 668 of the Code of Civil Procedure on November 28, 1955, it is manifest that the notice of appeal filed January 19, 1956 was timely.

Appellant's request to supplement his opening brief to set forth additional grounds why the court below erred in sustaining the demurrer to the fourth amended complaint without leave to amend, and entering a judgment of dismissal as to the fourth amended complaint, and to amend the prayer of said opening brief is granted, and appellant may have 30 days from and after the filing of this opinion within which so to do.

The motion to dismiss the appeal is denied.

3. Mandamus ⇨1, 168(4)

Mandamus is an extraordinary remedy which is equitable in nature and the necessity of issuing the writ should be clearly established.

4. Mandamus ⇨7, 10, 168(2)

The granting of a writ of mandate is discretionary and will be granted only where necessary to protect a substantial right and only when it is shown that some substantial damage will be suffered by the petitioner if said writ is denied, and thus a petitioner upon application must show that as a result of a failure to grant such writ, he will suffer some substantial damage.

5. Mandamus ⇨12

Mandamus lies only to enforce performance of an act which the law enjoins.

6. Mandamus ⇨122

Mandate is available in California against an unincorporated association.

7. Mandamus ⇨154(4)

Although expulsion from a union would ordinarily seriously affect a workman's livelihood and injury from such course of conduct for all intents and purposes, would be irreparable and mandamus would quite properly lie, such fact does not mean that right should be extended to include right to examine all and every book, record, document and account of a union over a nine-year period and such right should especially not be extended to include such examination in absence of any pleading in reference to the necessity for it.

8. Mandamus ⇨164(4)

Affirmative allegations of an answer to mandamus if not demurrable, are to be taken as true, unless they are countervailed by proof presented by the petitioner.

9. Labor Relations ⇨100

Member of union is not entitled to inspect books of the labor union on ground union has attributes of partnership and therefore, because partner has right to have access to and inspect books of partnership, union member has right to inspect books of union, as a labor union is not a partnership. West's Ann. Corporation Code, § 15019.

10. Associations ⇨7

Statute authorizing shareholder of corporation to inspect records of such corporation has no application to unincorporated associations. West's Ann. Corporation Code, § 3003.

11. Mandamus ⇨13, 15, 154(4)

Where union member, who sought inspection of books of account, records, papers and documents of the union, merely sought such inspection to harass and annoy union, and therefore came into court with unclean hands, and also had failed to exhaust remedies within union itself to obtain such inspection, and in addition failed to allege any serious necessity for such inspection, writ of mandate permitting such inspection would not lie.

Alexander H. Schullman, Abe Mutchnik, Los Angeles, for appellants.

Harry W. Dudley, Los Angeles, for respondents.

Elmer H. V. Hoffman, Los Angeles, amicus curiae.

FOURT, Justice.

This is an appeal from a judgment wherein it was directed that a writ of mandate issue in favor of respondent Russell W. Mooney to permit him and/or his agent "to inspect all books of account, records, papers and documents of said (appellant) Union from July 1, 1947, to the date of this judgment, and to permit said (respondent Mooney) and/or his said agent to make copies of all or any part of said books of account, records, papers and documents, * * *."

Respondent Mooney is a member of the appellant Union in good standing. The appellant Union is a local subsidiary of the Hotel and Restaurant Employees and Bartenders International Union, A. F. L., with headquarters in Cincinnati, Ohio.

Mooney filed a petition for a writ of mandate on July 21, 1955, and prayed for an order substantially like the one which was granted. The petition set forth that he was entitled to examine the items in question "by virtue of * * * membership in said Union".

The Union filed an answer and a demurrer to the petition, simultaneously, on August 23, 1955. In the answer it was set forth that "at all times, monthly and quarterly reports setting forth the monthly records from the books and records of the Union showing statement of receipts and disbursements and statement of financial condition, and quarterly and audit report is prepared by a certified public accountant, and that both the monthly and quarterly reports are read at the meetings of the membership of the respondent union and then posted, available for the inspection of the general membership. Respondents further allege that such monthly and quarterly reports at all times have been read at all such meetings of the membership and have been available and now are available to petitioners, and that in fact petitioner Russell W. Mooney has read and made copies, as respondents are informed and believe, and therefore allege, of the monthly and quarterly report within the last twelve months of the respondent union."

It was further set forth that respondents had failed to exhaust their internal remedies within the International, that respondents were on a "fishing expedition", and that respondents came into court with "unclean hands". In this connection, appellants allege: "That petitioner Russell W. Mooney has for many years harassed, vexed, annoyed and sued the respondent union, Local No. 284 at great cost to the union, has publicly defamed the local and its officers without in fact, as required by the Constitution of the International, 'Exhibit D' hereof, filing any charges against any officers or taking any action within the Union or the International; that the present petition is but an additional factor to expose the respondent union local to great expense in defending the action, without any purpose whatsoever consistent with the right of membership. That in addition, petitioner Russell W. Mooney has engaged in assault and battery with a member of the respondent union based upon petitioner's action previously filed, as set forth above in Superior Court; and that all these things have been done for the purpose of damaging, affecting, injuring and harassing the union and preventing its operation in the ordinary course of business; and that therefore, petitioners came into court with unclean hands and their petition should be denied."

The matter was submitted to the trial judge without argument on August 24, 1955, and on the same day the judge issued an order that the demurrer be overruled and that the writ be granted. Findings of fact and conclusions of law were filed on September 6, 1955. In the findings the judge found, among other things, that the reports to the general meetings alleged were not sufficient to preclude a member from inspecting the books of account, records, papers and documents of said Union and "that it is not true that the quarterly financial reports and monthly reports mentioned in paragraph III and IV of the answer herein set forth sufficient detail with respect to the financial business of respondent Union so as to properly advise each and every member of respondent Union."

The findings then set forth, in effect, that respondents had exhausted their internal remedies within the Local and International by stating, "* * * but that there are no internal remedies provided by respondent Union or its said parent organization for the purpose of affording a member of respondent Union an inspection of the books of accounts, records, papers and/or documents of respondent Union."

Thereafter, it was found that it was not true that respondents were on a "fishing expedition", or that they had come into court with unclean hands.

[1] Appellants first contend that the constitution of the International and the bylaws of the Local constitute a contract between the Union and the respondents, and exactly define the rights and powers in reference to the examination of the books, etc., of the Local. The articles and the constitution and the bylaws of the International and Local do constitute a contract between the members and the unincorporated association and are binding upon the respondents. De Mille v. American Fed. of Radio Artists, 31 Cal.2d 139, 146, 187 P.2d 769, 175 A.L.R. 382. The constitution and bylaws must of necessity be read together to determine their meaning and force. The documents in question appear to us to be clear and unambiguous and spell out the rights and duties of the respective parties. It was appropriately said in Sass v. Hank, 108 Cal.App.2d 207, 215, 238 P.2d 652, 657:

[2] "The language of a contract must control its interpretation when its diction is clear, reasonable and explicit and is in harmony with the general purpose of the agreement. Civil Code, secs. 1638, 1641. It is the function of a court to follow this rule and not to make a new contract or to rewrite or alter by construction what has been agreed to by the contracting parties."

And in Cousins Inv. Co. v. Hastings Clothing Co., 45 Cal.App.2d 141, 147, 113 P.2d 878, 881, the court stated:

"Moreover, as set forth in 12 American Jurisprudence, page 749: 'A court is not at liberty to revise an agreement while professing to construe it. Nor does it have the right to make a contract for the parties—that is, a contract different from that actually entered into by them. Neither abstract justice nor the rule of liberal construction justifies the creation of a contract for the parties which they did not make themselves or the imposition upon one party to a contract of an obligation not assumed. Courts cannot make for the parties better agreements than they themselves have been satisfied to make or rewrite contracts because they operate harshly or inequitably as to one of the parties.'"

[3] Appellants then contend that the respondents made no showing of any equitable right to the relief sought, their being no pleading or proof of any necessity or imminent, irreparable damage. Mandamus is an extraordinary remedy which is equitable in nature and the necessity of issuing the writ should be clearly established. In Ault v. Council of City of San Rafael, 17 Cal.2d 415, at page 417, 110 P.2d 379, at page 380, the court said:

[4] "The granting of a writ of mandate is discretionary and it will be granted only where necessary to protect a substantial right and only when it is shown that some substantial damage will be suffered by the petitioner if said writ is denied. [Citing cases.] It therefore follows that a petitioner upon application must show that as a result of a failure to grant such writ, he will suffer some substantial damage."

[5] Further, the cases are clear to the effect that mandamus lies only to enforce the performance of an act which the law enjoins. Bollotin v. Workman Service Co., 128 Cal.App.2d 339, 275 P.2d 599; Noble v. California Prune & Apricot Growers Association, 98 Cal.App. 230, 276 P. 636.

Cal. Rep. 301-302 P.2d—69

In 137 A.L.R. 311, 312, the general rule with reference to the use of mandamus against unincorporated associations or its officers is stated as follows:

"As a general proposition the proper function of mandamus is to compel inferior or subordinate tribunals and all others exercising public authority to do their duty. It is not available as a remedy between individuals to enforce purely private rights, and as a general rule, will not lie to compel the performance of purely contractual obligations. 34 Am.Jur. 879, Mandamus, § 91.

"Specifically, as to unincorporated associations, it has been held generally, although not universally, that mandamus will not lie against an unincorporated association or its officers, and will not be awarded to regulate the internal affairs of the association or to review the decisions of its self-created tribunal, at least in the absence of statutory authorization."

The rule in California is set forth clearly in Cason v. Glass Bottle Blowers Ass'n, 37 Cal.2d 134, 140, 231 P.2d 6, 9, 21 A.L.R.2d 1387, where it is said:

[6] "It is clear that mandate is available in this state against an unincorporated association. [Citing cases.]"

In six of the cases cited the problem dealt with the expulsion of a member; in one the question was in reference to the removal of an officer of the union from his office and damages for the unexpired term; and one was with reference to an out-of-state applicant seeking membership where the court held that to prevail he must show that he is entitled to membership and that he is being arbitrarily kept out. There is, however, a marked difference between the cases just referred to and the case at hand.

[7] Expulsion from a union would ordinarily seriously affect a workingman's very livelihood and the injury from such a course of conduct, for all intents and purposes, would be irreparable and mandamus quite properly should lie. However, that does not mean that the right should be extended to include the right to examine all and every book, record, document and account of a union over a nine-year period. And certainly the right should not be extended in the absence of any pleading in reference to the necessity therefor.

[8] Appellants also contend that respondents come into this case with "unclean hands". The allegations of appellants in their answer in this connection were in no way controverted, and the rule is that affirmative allegations of an answer, if not demurrable, are to be taken as true, unless they are countervailed by proof presented by the petitioner. Loveland v. City of Oakland, 69 Cal.App.2d 399, 404, 159 P.2d 70; Vanderbush v. Board of Public Works, 62 Cal.App. 771, 775, 217 P. 785; Friedland v. Superior Court, 67 Cal.App.2d 619, 623, 155 P.2d 90. As said in Brown v. Superior Court, 10 Cal.App.2d 365, 368, 52 P.2d 256, 258:

"The application for the writ [of mandate] having been submitted on the petition and the answer thereto, we must accept the allegations in the answer as true."

Appellants also assert that the respondents have a further source of remedy within the International itself, and therefore their resort to the courts is premature. The respondent appealed to the General President of the International, and received a reply to the effect that he could inspect the quarterly financial reports of the Local at any time, and that with regard to any other records of the Local Union, those were the property of the Local and inspection of them was subject to the policy of the Local Union. The court's finding in this connection apparently failed to take into consideration the sections of the constitution set forth below.¹ There was no showing whatsoever in this case that respondents sought to take their grievance to the General Executive Board as is required by the constitution. The Supreme Court recently stated in Holderby v. International Union, etc., Engrs., 45 Cal.2d 843, at page 846, 291 P.2d 463, at page 466:

"It is the general and well established jurisdictional rule that a plaintiff who seeks judicial relief against an organization of which he is a member must first invoke and exhaust the remedies provided by that organization applicable to his grievance. [Citing cases.] This rule is analogous to the rule requiring the exhaustion of administrative remedies as a condition precedent to resorting to the courts (see 2 Cal.Jur.2d 304), and to the rule requiring the parties to a contract for arbitration of disputes to exhaust those remedies before seeking judicial relief. [Citing cases.] Such rules are based on a practical approach to the solution of internal problems, complaints and grievances that arise between parties functioning pursuant to special and complex agreements or other arrangements. They make possible the settlement of such matters by simple, expeditious and inexpensive procedures, and

1. Article XX, Sec. 20. "Obligation to Exhaust Remedies. Every member or affiliate of the International Union feeling aggrieved by any action taken or failure to act by the International Union, its officers, or any subordinate affiliate of the International Union, or the officers or members thereof, with respect to any matter or thing relating to or affecting the affairs of such International Union or affiliate or with respect to the trial of charges or appeals therefrom, shall be required to exhaust all remedies of appeal and protest permitted such member or affiliate under the terms of this Constitution before resorting to any court or other tribunal."

Article XX, Sec. 12. " * * * Decisions of the General President may be appealed to the General Executive Board, and Decisions of the General Executive Board may be appealed to the Convention."

Article XX, Sec. 13. " * * * A member shall be deemed to have exhausted his remedies of appeal, in accordance with the requirements of Section 20 hereof, following an appeal to the General Executive Board."

by persons who, generally, are familiar therewith. Such internal remedies are designed not only to promote the settlement of grievances but also to promote more harmonious relationships, and the courts look with favor upon them."

[9] The respondents admit that there is no statute in this state giving the member of an unincorporated association the right to inspect its books and records. They do, however, contend that because an incorporated association partakes of some of the attributes of a partnership, and a partner has a right to have access to and inspect the books of the partnership, Corporations Code, § 15019, therefore, a member of an unincorporated association should have the same right. A complete answer to such contention is made in the cases cited by respondents. In Deeney v. Hotel & Office Employees' Union, etc., 57 Cal.App.Supp.2d 1023, 1026-1027, 134 P.2d 328, 330, the court said:

"* * * labor unions not being organized to carry on a business for profit do not constitute partnerships. Civ.Code, section 2400. Also see Brower v. Crimmins, 67 Misc. 68, 121 N.Y.S. 648.

"A contention somewhat similar to the one here made by defendants was advanced in the comparatively recent New York case of People v. Herbert, 162 Misc. 817, 295 N.Y.S. 251, 253. The defendants in that case had been indicted for the embezzlement of funds of a certain union. They set up the defense that they were not subject to prosecution by reason of the fact that the union was a partnership and that they, being members of that partnership, had title to the funds of the union jointly with all of the members. The court held that the contention was unsound. Said the court:

"It may be conceded that partnerships and labor unions have some characteristics in common. Thus, they are both unincorporated associations; and their members have a peculiarly distinctive form of joint title to their respective property, although in neither case is the title that of joint tenants or of tenants in common.

"But there are at the same time certain important differences between them. The purpose of a partnership is essentially to enable its members, as principals, to conduct a lawful business, trade, or profession. Such business, trade, or profession is to be carried on for the pecuniary gain of the partners. No one may become a partner without the consent of all the partners. In our state, this rule is a statutory one, for the Partnership Law, § 40, subd. 7, provides that: "No person can become a member of a partnership without the consent of all the partners."

"This principle of personal selection of one's partners is substantially the doctrine of delectus personarum. Sugarman, Law of Partnership, § 22. The number of members in a partnership is invariably small.

"On the other hand, a labor union is a combination of working men formed, not for the conduct of a lawful business, trade or profession for the pecuniary gain of its members; but for the purpose of securing, by united action, the most favorable wages and conditions of labor, and of otherwise improving their economic and social status.

* * * It is well known that the membership of labor unions in many instances runs into the thousands; their members are widely scattered and have not the facilities and opportunities for daily collaboration which partners have. Furthermore, the principle of personal selection which is an indispensable one in the case of a partnership does not apply to a labor union, for it is not required that one may become a member thereof only with the consent of all the other members."

In 5 Cal.Jur.2d 499, in the article on "Associations and Clubs", there is language appropriate to the point, where it is said:

"In the case of unincorporated nonprofit associations the statute provides that the members are not personally liable on certain types of contracts. These are debts or liabilities contracted or incurred by the association in the acquisition of land or leases or the purchase, leasing, designing, planning, architectural supervision, erection, construction, repair, or furnishing of buildings or other structures, to be used for the purpose of the organization. (Corp. Code Sec. 21100.) However, the members may assume a personal liability, by a written contract, note, or memorandum which specifically identifies the contract assumed and is signed by the assuming party or by his agent. (Corp. Code Sec. 21101.)

"The rule is declared by statute that no presumption or inference exists that a member of a nonprofit association has consented or agreed to the incurring of any obligation by the association, from the fact of joining or being a member of the association or signing its bylaws. (Corp. Code Sec. 21102.)"

And on page 493 (5 Cal.Jur.2d) it is said:

"In any case, the property of an association is in fact the property of its members, owned beneficially by them in equal shares and devoted to their common use. The interest of each member is subject to the right of the trustees, governing committee, or other board of control, to make such use or disposition of the property as the laws of the organization provide, and the members have no severable or individual interest therein."

Here there is no showing whatsoever that as a member of the appellant Union, respondents are personally liable to anyone upon any contract or otherwise.

[10] Respondents would have the court apply the rules of section 3003 of the Corporations Code, which has to do with corporations, to unincorporated associations. That section makes no mention of unincorporated associations and we have no doubt that if the Legislature had intended to include such groups under the rules therein set forth, it would have said so.

[11] For the reasons herein set forth we are of the opinion that the writ of mandate should not lie under the facts and circumstances as are present in this case.

The judgment is reversed and the cause remanded with directions to the court below to deny the writ of mandate prayed for.

Orville SPRINGER, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

SOUTHERN PACIFIC COMPANY, a corporation, Defendant and Appellant.

Civ. 8734.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Nov. 5, 1956.

Suit under Federal Employers' Liability Act for personal injuries sustained by employee. From a judgment of the Superior Court, Sacramento County, John Quincy Brown, J., for the employee, the employer appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Peek, J., held that where complaint alleged general damages as well as special damages for loss of earnings and for future medical expense but the amounts of these items were left blank, answer denied special and general damages, and during trial no question was raised concerning the medical proof offered showing employee might develop traumatic arthritis and ankylosis of the knee joint, employer for the first time on appeal could not complain that such evidence lacked the necessary degree of certainty.

Judgment and orders affirmed.

1. Master and Servant §286(17)

In action under Federal Employers' Liability Act for personal injuries sustained when employee fell from ladder on which he was standing in order to rivet sheets on employer's box car, question of whether employer railroad had reasonably complied with all of its duties in providing employee with safe appliances and equipment and with a safe place to work, was for the jury. Federal Employers' Liability Act, 45 U.S.C.A. § 51 et seq.

2. Master and Servant ⇨90, 96(1)

The Federal Employers' Liability Act does not make the employer the insurer of the safety of his employees, but employer is liable for its negligence which is in whole or in part the cause of the injury. Federal Employers' Liability Act, 45 U.S.C.A. § 51 et seq.

3. Master and Servant ⇨228(1) Negligence ⇨101

Under Federal Employers' Liability Act, unless conduct of employee was the sole and proximate cause of his injuries, employee's contributory negligence would not bar recovery but is merely a ground for diminishing the amount of recovery. Federal Employers' Liability Act, 45 U.S.C.A. § 51 et seq.

4. Appeal and Error ⇨204(7)

Where complaint alleged general and special damages for loss of earnings and for future medical expenses sustained when employee fell from ladder but the amounts of these items were left blank, employer's answer merely denied the same, and during trial no question was raised by employer to medical evidence that employee might develop traumatic arthritis and ankylosis of the knee joint, employer could not complain for the first time on appeal that such evidence lacked the necessary degree of certainty.

PEEK, Justice.

This is an appeal by defendant from certain orders and the judgment rendered at the conclusion of the trial of an action brought by plaintiff under the provisions of the Federal Employers' Liability Act, 45 U.S.C.A. § 51 et seq. The action arose out of an injury suffered by plaintiff when he fell from a ladder while doing repair work on a box car in defendant's Sacramento shops. Following a verdict in plaintiff's favor, defendant moved for a judgment notwithstanding the verdict, which was denied. After the entry of judgment, defendant renewed its motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict and moved for a new trial. Both motions were denied and defendant appealed. We have concluded the trial court was correct, and the judgment must be sustained.

Plaintiff's complaint contained three causes of action: First, that " * * * plaintiff was required to and was engaged in standing on a ladder riveting sheets on defendant's box car; that due to and as a direct and proximate result of negligence of defendant in said matters plaintiff was caused to fall * * *;" second, that " * * * at said time and place defendant was negligent in failing to provide plaintiff with safe appliances and equipment with which to perform his work and duties * * *;" and third, that " * * * at said time and place defendant negligently failed to provide plaintiff a safe place in which to work * * *" As to each count, plaintiff alleged general damages as well as special damages for loss of earnings and for future medical expense. The amounts of these items were left blank. At the time of trial plaintiff inserted the amount of special damages claimed for lost earnings, but in both the body of the complaint and in the prayer, he left blank the amount sought for future medical expense. Defendant's answer denied generally the allegations of the complaint.

On appeal defendant contends (1) that there was no substantial evidence of negligence under any of the three causes of action set forth; (2) that at least one of the three causes was improperly submitted to the jury; and (3) that it was prejudicially improper for the court to instruct the jury that it could return a verdict including damages for future medical expense.

The record, viewed in the light most favorable to plaintiff, discloses that for some days prior to the accident plaintiff, with three other employees, had been engaged in repairing one of defendant's box cars, and in particular in riveting steel side plates, 42 to 45 inches wide, on said car. The flooring of the car at the end where plaintiff was working had been removed. In order to carry out his duties as a riveter, he had placed two "grain boards" lengthwise on the exposed steel frame of the car. These boards were approximately seven feet long and from 18 to 24 inches wide. In order to reach the top row of rivets on the steel plate which was then being put in place, plaintiff had placed a ladder on the two grain boards. At the base of the ladder there were prongs to hold it securely on the boards. The crew with which plaintiff was working consisted of one man to heat the rivets, another one to place the rivets in the plates and a third man to hold the rivets in place while plaintiff riveted them from the inside of the car. Plaintiff, as the riveter, worked alone in the car, and the remaining members of the crew worked on the outside. The speed at which plaintiff worked was controlled by the speed at which the rivets were inserted from the outside. By placing the grain boards lengthwise of the car it was easier for him to keep pace with the crew since it was necessary to move the ladder only as he progressed along the top row of rivets, whereas had the grain boards been placed crosswise, it would have been necessary to move them as well as the ladder each time his position was changed. Plaintiff was approximately five feet, 10 inches tall and weighed 210 to 215 pounds. At the time of the accident he was using a riveting gun weighing 45 to 50 pounds, to which was attached a 50-foot hose of undisclosed weight. Plaintiff had worked continually as a riveter for approximately five or six months and for nearly a year before had worked intermittently in this same capacity. He had not been instructed how to rivet or how to place the grain boards in any particular fashion while riveting from the inside of a car. One Gorman who bucked the rivets from the outside of the car and alternated with plaintiff in that job and in driving the rivets, testified he likewise had received no instruction in these matters. However, at the time of his employment plaintiff had received and read a pamphlet entitled, "Safe Working Methods for the Guidance of Employees in Maintenance and Equipment Department." It was therein set forth in part that ladders should be securely placed to prevent slipping or falling, and when used on concrete, metal, tile or other hard surfaces, the same should be secured by chains or ropes to prevent slipping and should not be placed in any precarious position when used. One of defendant's witnesses testified that there were times when a "standee" could not be used, and when such an occasion arose another employee would hold the ladder.

Both plaintiff and Gorman testified that for at least a week prior to the accident plaintiff had riveted from a ladder set on grain boards, placed lengthwise on the underframe; that it was necessary to follow this practice in order to reach the rivets along the top of the plate and to keep pace with other members of the gang outside the car. James Kirby, who had left defendant's employ approximately nine months before the accident, and who had been a welder for defendant, testified that in defendant's shop he had observed riveting from a ladder placed on grain boards lengthwise in a car. Frank Miller, the foreman directly in charge of plaintiff's crew, testified in his deposition that it would be necessary to use a ladder to drive the top rivets. At the trial, when his attention was directed to his former testimony he said, "Yes, he was working in an unsafe manner. If I replied in that way I made that statement as referring to our safety rules." Another member of plaintiff's riveting gang at the time of the accident, Albert Sylve, testified that in order to drive certain rivets, a ladder was necessary. The record further developed that it was the duty of the foreman, Miller, to see that the riveting job was properly set up. He testified that three weeks prior to the accident he had observed plaintiff riveting from a ladder and had requested him to get a "standee." Miller's testimony in this regard was corroborated by the witness Goodnight, a lead workman. A standee as referred to by Miller is a four-legged wooden platform approximately eight feet long by 20 inches wide with legs tapering to approximately a three-foot spread at the bottom, and is from four to six feet high. The foreman testified further that on the morning of the accident he saw plaintiff two or three times prior to the injury and the last occasion was approximately 15 minutes to one-half hour before the accident. He observed the two grain boards placed lengthwise on the under-frame but he did not see any standee in the car. A further witness for defendant, Harry J. Hitke, general foreman, together with Miller testified that the custom and practice in defendant's shop at the time of the accident was to rivet from standees and never from ladders.

In support of its first contention, that there was no substantial evidence of any negligence on its part under any cause of action which was a proximate cause of plaintiff's injury, defendant argues that the plaintiff was not required to use a ladder for riveting; that it had provided plaintiff with reasonably safe appliances and equipment; and that defendant is not liable for the dangers inherent in the repair of a box car or resulting from plaintiff's arrangement of his equipment; and that plaintiff's conduct was the sole and proximate cause of the injury.

[1-3] Despite the conflicts, it cannot be said that there was not sufficiently substantial evidence on each of the three causes to justify submitting each to the jury. Necessarily, therefore, this court cannot hold as a matter of law that the defendant railroad had reasonably complied with all of its duties in providing plaintiff with safe appliances and equipment and with a safe place in which to work, or that the injuries were caused solely by plaintiff's conduct. The province of this court in reviewing the evidence on appeal is the same as under the federal rule, Waddell v. Chicago & E. I. R. Co., 7 Cir., 142 F.2d 309, and while it is true that the act does not make the employer the insurer of the safety of his employees, nevertheless he is liable for his negligence which must be in whole or in part the cause of the injury. Ellis v. Union Pacific R. Co., 329 U.S. 649, 67 S.Ct. 598, 91 L.Ed. 572. Under this rule the contributory negligence of an employee is merely a ground for diminishing the amount of recovery. Hence, even assuming that the acts of plaintiff contributed to the accident, unless it could be said as a matter of law that such acts were the sole and proximate cause of his injuries, his contributory negligence would not bar a recovery. But as we have previously noted, there was ample evidence from which the jury could infer that plaintiff's duties compelled him to use the equipment as he did, and that the defendant, having knowledge of the conditions existing where plaintiff was working, did not exercise due care under the circumstances.

What has heretofore been said concerning defendant's first contention is likewise decisive of its second. It is defendant's argument that this case must be reversed because "* * *" at least one of the several counts was improperly submitted to the jury." The essence of defendant's contention in this regard as stated is: "Assuming that it [this court] found only one cause of action unsubstantiated, the controlling federal rule requires a reversal." Whether we agree with the cases cited and relied upon by defendant becomes immaterial since, as we have heretofore concluded, each cause was amply supported, and hence any further discussion concerning this contention would be wholly academic in that it would of necessity be predicated upon an assumption not borne out by the record that at least one cause was not substantiated by the evidence.

[4] It is defendant's final contention that "[i]t was prejudicially improper to instruct that the jury could return a verdict including damages for future medical expenses, because they were misleadingly pleaded, not proved as to necessity or amount, and there was no trial of the issue." Again we find no error in this regard. It is true that the complaint provided generally for the recovery of medical expense but left a blank for the insertion of the amount thereof, as well as a blank for the amount of alleged earnings lost. At the time of trial plaintiff inserted the amount of special damages claimed for loss of earnings, but left blank both in the body of the complaint and in the prayer the amount of alleged future expense. At the conclusion of the trial the court instructed the jury in part as follows:

"* * * you shall determine each of the items of claimed detriment which I now am about to mention, provided that you find it to have been suffered by him, and as a proximate result of the concurring negligence of the plaintiff and the defendant.

"The reasonable value, not exceeding the cost to said plaintiff, of the examinations, attention and care by physicians and surgeons reasonably certain to be required, and to be given in his future treatment, if any; and including in such care X-ray pictures, if any, reasonably necessary.

"The reasonable value not exceeding the cost to said plaintiff of the services of nurses, attendants and hospital accommodations, and care, reasonably certain to be required or to be given in his future treatment, if any." (Emphasis added.)

At the outset it is difficult to understand why this particular form of pleading was followed by plaintiff since, if future medical expense was anticipated, the exact amount thereof could not have been known beforehand. However, as previously noted, plaintiff's complaint alleged that further treatment would be necessary in an amount not then ascertainable and that when it was so ascertained, such amount would be inserted in the complaint. The prayer also left a blank for insertion of such amount. Defendant did not question the propriety of such allegations but merely answered denying the same and praying that plaintiff take nothing. On the issues so joined, the cause proceeded to trial. During the course of the examination of an orthopedic surgeon called by plaintiff, it was disclosed that plaintiff's condition might become worse and that traumatic arthritis might develop. The doctor called by defendant testified that plaintiff might develop an ankylosis of the knee joint. No question was raised by defendant when either of the doctors called so testified.

Thus, since it appears that from the outset defendant was advised that plaintiff would claim future damages as a proximate result of his injury and since evidence was introduced in support thereof, it cannot now for the first time on appeal complain that such evidence lacks the necessary degree of certainty. McDonald v. Standard Gas Engine Co., 8 Cal.App.2d 464, "* * * none of the evidence quoted was objected to. No ruling was asked of or made by the trial court." Defendants introduced no evidence rebutting the above excerpts. Under these circumstances we think the provisions of section 3283 of the Civil Code were complied with." McDonald v. Standard Gas Engine Co., supra, 8 Cal.App.2d at page 477, 47 P.2d at page 783. This rule has also been followed in the federal courts. See Reading Co. v. Geary, 4 Cir., 47 F.2d 142, 79 A.L.R. 226.

Hearing Granted Dec. 24, 1956.

Action by attorney to recover attorney's fees from his client's insurer, which refused to defend action although obligated to do so under policy. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Philip H. Richards, J., entered judgment awarding attorney a fee of $175, with interest at rate of six per cent, and attorney appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Ashburn, J., held that record disclosed trial judge did not abuse his discretion in fixing the attorney's fee at $175, and that error in judgment which carried only six per cent interest instead of the statutory seven per cent orally awarded by the court, would be corrected.

Judgment affirmed as modified.

Fox, J., dissented.

1. Attorney and Client ⇨140

The nature of litigation, its importance and difficulty, the time consumed, attorney's overhead expense, the skill required and employed, attention given, attorney's professional standing, success or failure of his efforts, contingent character of his compensation, the agreed fee and his age and experience are elements properly considered in fixing reasonable attorney fee.

2. Appeal and Error ⇨1013

It is not the province of a reviewing court to reweigh evidence except to the extent of determining whether there was an abuse of discretion in the trial judge's assessment of the value of attorney's services.

* Opinion vacated 310 P.2d 961.

3. Attorney and Client ⇨140

One of the most important elements that goes into the make-up of a quantum meruit award for attorney's services is the value of the issue litigated.

4. Attorney and Client ⇨141

In action by attorney to recover his fees from his client's insurer, which, although obligated to defend action in which the fees were incurred, refused to do so, record disclosed trial judge did not abuse his discretion in fixing attorney's fee at $175.

ASHBURN, Justice.

Plaintiff-appellant challenges upon this appeal an award of attorney fees made to cover services rendered by his attorney in defense of an action brought against him, one which defendant National Automobile and Casualty Insurance Company was obligated to defend under a policy issued by it and which it mistakenly refused to defend. The award is in the sum of $175 which appellant's counsel brands as "a plain and palpable abuse of discretion" and "such an unreasonable and arbitrary decision as to shock the conscience."

Plaintiff's minor son set fire to his classroom, causing damage in the amount of $255.16. The property belonged to the Los Angeles City School District of Los Angeles County and it sued this plaintiff, Irving Arenson, under § 16074, Education Code, which, so far as pertinent, provides: "Any pupil who wilfully cuts, defaces, or otherwise injures in any way any property, real or personal, belonging to a school district is liable to suspension or expulsion, and the parent or guardian shall be liable for all damages so caused by the pupil. * * *". The district alleged the boy's tort to have been wilful. Arenson was covered (as it was ultimately determined) by a comprehensive insurance policy issued by defendant herein. He demanded that the insurance company defend the action but it refused. Arenson then hired an attorney who defended the case for him on a quantum meruit basis.

The attorney immediately conceived the statute to be unconstitutional as an unreasonable and arbitrary classification of boys attending public school as distinguished from all other boys; he fought the case through on that basis. After judgment had been rendered in the municipal court for $255.16 and costs, he took an appeal to the appellate department of the Los Angeles superior court. That department reversed the judgment, saying: "We regard the statute here involved, Education Code section 16074, as valid. But the evidence is not sufficient to show that the damage complained of was caused by any act of defendants' child. It was error to admit evidence of statements made by that child the next day after the damage occurred. He was not a defendant to the action, these statements were not a part of the res gestae, and they were inadmissible hearsay." For some reason, which does not satisfactorily appear,¹ counsel stipulated to an amendment of the settled statement on appeal and upon that basis the school district obtained a rehearing and reargument of the case. Thereupon the appellate department affirmed the judgment saying, in part: "As now before us the record shows facts, established by stipulation of the parties, from which the trial court could infer that injury to the school property was caused by a fire that had been started by the wilful act of the defendants' son acting jointly with another pupil of the school. With such a record the error committed in receiving the hearsay statement from the police officer is without prejudice. * * * We entertain no doubt about the constitutionality of section 16074 of the Education Code." That ended the case and fixed the date for termination of the services to be compensated through the award which is now under discussion.

Plaintiff thereupon sued defendant insurance company seeking a judgment that it was obligated to pay the municipal court judgment, plus an attorney fee of $2,000. The superior court held that the defense of the school district's claim against plaintiff was not covered by the policy. The district court of appeal affirmed 276 P.2d 140, but the Supreme Court reversed the judgment in Arenson v. Nat. Automobile & Cas. Ins. Co., 286 P.2d 816, 45 Cal.2d 81. The opinion concluded with this statement: "Plaintiff is entitled to recover the principal amount of the judgment against him with interest together with court costs and attorneys' fees properly incurred by him

1. The attorney testified, at the trial which led to the judgment now under review, with respect to the reason for the change of the record: "Because of the fact that that would have meant a retrial of the action and there wasn't any question with respect to what the facts could or would establish. County Counsel and counsel for the defendants entered into a stipulation to amend the then record on appeal in certain respects, so that a petition for re-hearing could be filed before the Appellate Department of the Superior Court based upon the facts as they would have been developed had we gone back for a re-trial and re-corrected these errors and then presented the matter again to the Court so that we could get a decision that would be determinative of the problem from the standpoint of the actual legal liability, because either the section was not constitutional or because under the facts they could not recover and not merely have procedural errors that could be corrected. Those procedural errors were eliminated."

Upon retrial the court had before it the records of the municipal court and the appellate department of the superior court and the testimony of the attorney. He detailed his services, which were centered upon the constitutional point raised by him, and valued them at $2,152.50. As above indicated, the trial judge appraised those services at $175, which sum includes the appeal to the appellate department.

[1] The elements properly considered in fixing a reasonable attorney fee are summarized in 6 Cal.Jur.2d § 181, p. 379: "What constitutes a reasonable fee in a particular case depends on various factors, such as the nature of the litigation; its importance to the parties; its difficulty; the time consumed; the overhead expense of the attorney; the skill required, the skill employed, and the attention given; the attorney's standing in the profession; the success or failure of the attorney's efforts; the contingent character of any compensation due for his services; the fee agreed upon by the parties; and the attorney's age and experience in the type of work for which he claims compensation." Of course the trial judge is not bound by the expert testimony. In Theisen v. Keough, 115 Cal. App. 353, 362, 1 P.2d 1015, 1019, it is said: "It is too well settled to require citation that the value of attorney's services is a matter with which a judge must necessarily be familiar. When the court is informed of the nature and extent of such services, its own experience furnishes it with every element necessary to fix their value. Spencer v. Collins, 156 Cal. 298, at page 307, 104 P. 320, 20 Ann.Cas. 49."

[2-4] It is not the province of a reviewing court to reweigh the evidence except to the extent of determining whether there was an abuse of discretion in the trial judge's assessment of the value of the services in question. "One of the most important elements that goes to the make-up of a quantum meruit award is the value of the issue litigated. * * * The judge needs only the approximate value of the land in order to estimate the effect the element of value should have in fixing a reasonable fee." United States v. Preston, 9 Cir., 202 F.2d 740, 741. The amount for which Arenson was sued was $255.16, plus costs. So far as disclosed by this record he was interested in one thing, relief from that asserted obligation. If it had been paid without contest by the insurance company that would have been satisfactory to him. Indeed, his lawyer wrote the company warning it that large attorney fees would be incurred unless the claim was paid or settled: "This letter is intended to put you on notice of the fact that the reasonable amount of attorneys fees incurred and to be incurred by the Arenson's in the defense of the action against them will be much greater than the total amount of the claim, in order that you may prefer to settle or satisfy the claim of the Los Angeles School District rather than to expose yourself to the additional claim which will be made against you for the services yet to be rendered to Mr. and Mrs. Arenson in said action, and the costs, fees and expenses, including attorneys fees, which will necessarily be incurred by them." There is nothing to show or suggest that the client was interested in establishing any point of constitutional law or that the insurance company, which was supposed to carry the burden ultimately, was interested in any elaborate litigation. The point was raised and nurtured by Arenson's counsel. The fact that the expense was to be paid by the insurer afforded no justification for incurring costs or rendering services out of proportion to the amount involved in the litigation. 45 C.J.S., Insurance, § 934, p. 1062, speaking of an insurer's refusal to defend, says: "Accordingly in such a case insured may employ an attorney to defend the suit, and should use reasonable care and diligence in conducting the defense, being under a duty to conduct it in such a manner as to make the loss as small as he reasonably can". This language also appears in 36 C.J. § 104, p. 1113, and is quoted by the court in Aetna Life Ins. Co. v.

Heiden, 184 Ark. 291, 42 S.W.2d 392, 394. Southern Ry. News Co. v. Fidelity & Casualty Co., Ky., 83 S.W. 620, 622: "Appellant [plaintiff-insured], after having notified appellee that the liability had been incurred by reason of the injury, was bound to make the loss as small as possible, so far as it reasonably could, although appellee did not avail itself of the provision in the policy to personally conduct the defense to the suit."

The terse comments of the appellate department of the superior court indicate how serious the judges thought the constitutional point raised by Arenson's attorney. The case was reversed in that department on the ground, among others, that the evidence was insufficient to sustain the finding of liability. The record was then changed by stipulation in such manner that it resulted in a holding that the evidence was legally sufficient and Arenson was liable. The judge at the trial below well could have viewed this as unnecessary, ill-advised and not beneficial to the attorney's client or the insurance company. Counsel testified that he had repeatedly billed his client, Arenson, for the amount now claimed, but also said he knew his financial condition and did not expect to get that amount from him. Any services which may have been rendered to the end of punishing the insurance company cannot be compensated, and it cannot be said upon this record that the trial judge was not warranted in rejecting a large part of the attorney's services upon that theory. We do not find any abuse of discretion in the fixing of the attorney fee in this case.

[5] Appellant complains of the quashing of a subpoena duces tecum which he had caused to be served on defendant requiring it to produce its files of actions pending in the municipal court in the years 1951 to 1955, inclusive, in which it had employed counsel for or on behalf of the defendant or had itself defended, together with its records of the services rendered by counsel, the bills and statements submitted by such counsel, the ledger, cash disbursement book, or other record showing the amounts paid by defendant for the services so rendered. The court held these matters to be immaterial. The argument is that they would have thrown light upon the value of the services now under consideration. Manifestly, they would not have been admissible. The ruling is correct.

[6] A small mistake crept into the judgment however. The court orally awarded interest at the statutory rate of seven per cent per annum, but the judgment as signed carries interest at six per cent. Appellant computes the difference to be $8.18 and the findings and judgment should be corrected accordingly.

The conclusions of law are amended by substituting the phrase, "with interest thereon at the rate of 7% per annum, from May 14, 1953, amounting to $51.38," for the phrase, "with interest thereon at the rate of 6% per annum, from May 14, 1953, amounting to $43.20." The judgment is modified by substituting the sum of $496.54 in place of $488.36.

As thus modified the judgment is affirmed.

MOORE, P. J., concurs.

FOX, Justice.

I dissent.

In my view of the record, an award of $175 to plaintiff as attorney's fee for the trial and subsequent appeal of the municipal court case places an unconscionably low value on the services of capable legal counsel.

Condemnation action instituted by school district. After action was dismissed by school district, the Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Bayard Rhone, J., entered judgment denying award of attorney's fees, and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Moore, P. J., held that where school district dismissed condemnation action because state highway department was going to condemn portion of land for highway purposes, there was an abandonment of action within statute requiring condemner to pay attorney's fees where action is abandoned.

Reversed in part.

1. Costs ☞172

Ordinarily, fees paid to attorneys are not recoverable from the opposing party as costs, damages or otherwise, in absence of an express statutory or contractual authority.

2. Eminent Domain ☞166, 171

An action to condemn property is an exercise by a public body of its sovereign power to force the sale of land, and once the action is commenced, the property owner is entitled to defend in order to insure payment of a fair price for his premises.

3. Eminent Domain ☞246(3)

Where school district dismissed condemnation action on ground that state highway department was going to condemn a portion of the same land for highway purposes, there was an "abandonment of proceeding" within statute requiring condemner to pay landowners' attorney's fees where action is abandoned. West's Ann. Code Civ.Proc., § 1255a.

Appeal from a judgment denying defendant an award of attorney's fees upon the dismissal of a condemnation action by the condemner.

Respondent sued appellants to condemn certain premises for the purpose of constructing a school building thereon. After answer by appellants and the setting of a date for trial, respondent dismissed the action for reasons stated in the affidavit of John B. Anson, Deputy County Counsel, one of the attorneys for the school district.

The affidavit stated, in substance, that the action was dismissed on the motion of the "Board of Education of the Torrance Unified School District" upon its being advised by the State Division of Highways that the state planned to condemn a strip of land running through the middle of subject property for use as a portion of a through highway. Since such a use would be paramount to that contemplated by the school district, and the presence of a highway bisecting the property would render it wholly unsuitable for school purposes, respondent determined it to be impractical and fiscally unwise to pursue its proceedings under eminent domain. Subsequent to the dismissal, the state did in fact institute its action to condemn a strip through the same premises. Appellants moved the trial court to tax costs of the action and attorneys' fees against respondent. The court ordered respondent to pay costs but left each party to bear the expense of his own attorney's fees.

The sole issue presented here is: Did the dismissal of the action by respondent constitute an "abandonment of the proceedings" within the meaning of Code of Civil Procedure section 1255a, thereby entitling appellants to an award of "their costs and disbursements, which shall include all necessary expenses incurred in preparing for trial and reasonable attorney fees"?

[1] Ordinarily, fees paid to attorneys are not recoverable from the opposing party as costs, damages or otherwise, in the absence of express statutory or contractual authority. LeFave v. Dimond, 46 Cal.2d —, 299 P.2d 858. Therefore, appellants may recover fees only in the event the dismissal was an "abandonment of the proceedings." Respondent contends that (1) the section should be so construed as to provide for an award to defendants of their attorneys' reasonable charges only when the action is instituted and dismissed in bad faith; (2) the district terminated the action only upon discovery that the property would no longer be desirable for school purposes; (3) no circumstances indicate a bad faith intent to injure the property owners. Such theory finds some support in the apparent purpose of the section. At one time, certain instrumentalities possessing the power of eminent domain were abusing the privilege by bringing successive actions to condemn parcels of land with no intention of prosecuting to a conclusion. Thereby they "expensed" the property owner into submission to whatever terms should be offered. To defeat this practice, the Legislature provided that the condemner should stand the expense of litigation begun and then abandoned. City of Los Angeles v. Abbott, 217 Cal. 184, 200, 17 P.2d 993; Whittier Union High School District v. Beck, 45 Cal. App.2d 736, 739, 114 P.2d 731; City of Sacramento v. Swanston, 29 Cal.App. 212, 222, 155 P. 101; Pacific Gas & Electric Co. v. Chubb, 24 Cal.App. 265, 270, 141 P. 36. No facts here indicate any such evil practice on the part of respondent.

The strongest case for this proposition is Whittier Union High School District v. Beck, supra. There the action was dismissed after the condemner had purchased the subject property by contract during the pendency of the suit. The court disallowed recovery of fees, commenting that "plaintiff's good faith in the instant case was shown when the property was actually purchased." [45 Cal.App.2d 739, 114 P.2d 733.]

However, when the Legislature promulgated the section it could well have used words such as "in bad faith" or "without just cause" if that was truly meant to be the test. Had that been done, the statute would have codified general American case law that a condemner who institutes and dismisses his action in bad faith is liable for resultant damages to the property owner. (Eminent Domain, 18 Am.Jur. § 371, p. 1014; note, 121 A.L.R. 12, 84 et seq.) Instead, it was provided that attorney fees should be paid by the condemner whenever the action should be "abandoned." "Abandonment includes the intention to abandon, and the external act by which such intention is carried into effect. * * * The characteristic element of abandonment is the voluntary relinquishment * * * the intentional relinquishment of a known right." City of Los Angeles v. Abbott, 129 Cal.App. 144, 148-149, 18 P.2d 785, 787.

Applying this definition, or one essentially similar, it has been held that when the plaintiff instrumentality discontinues its action under the duress of an injunction, the action has not been "abandoned" and thus the defendant is not entitled to recover attorneys' fees under section 1255a. City of Los Angeles v. Agardy, 1 Cal.2d 76, 79, 33 P.2d 834; City of Los Angeles v. Abbott, supra, 217 Cal. 184, 197, 17 P.2d 993; City of Los Angeles v. Abbott, supra, 129 Cal.App. 144, 18 P.2d 785. The rationale of those decisions is that the dismissal in each instance was involuntary.

Here, the board of education was not prevented by external force from carrying on the action. The litigation was terminated by dismissal because of threatened action by the State Division of Highways which would have destroyed or impaired the worth of the land for the use intended by respondent at the outset. In this sense, the dismissal was "voluntary"; in other words, entered after due deliberation by respondent as to the profitability of proceeding. It was a voluntary relinquishment of the known right to continue the suit, and thus was abandonment of the action. A dismissal of a suit is not involuntary merely because taken pursuant to a compelling reason. The decision by the board to discontinue its efforts to condemn the premises may have been quite wise under the circumstances, but this fact does not put the hapless property owner to the burden of his defense. To argue that this action was not "abandoned" because it had lost its value would be tantamount to contending that property is not abandoned which is discarded because of its worthlessness to its owner.

[2] An action to condemn property is not of the same nature as ordinary civil litigation. Here there is no defendant alleged to have perpetrated some wrong upon the plaintiff. Rather, it is the exercise by a public body of its sovereign power to force the sale of land. Once the action is commenced, the property owner is entitled to defend in order to insure payment of a fair price for his premises. Many factors might intervene between the institution of the proceeding and its fruition, any one of which might cause the condemner to re-evaluate the desirability of the subject property for its contemplated use. Such intervention would not be the fault of the defendant nor would it render the plaintiff unable to continue its action. Section 1255a equitably provides that should the plaintiff elect to change its mind and abandon the action, the innocent property owner must be reimbursed the costs of defense thrust upon him.

[3] A further factor here reinforces the conclusion that appellants are entitled to recover their lawyers' fees incurred on account of the condemnation proceedings. The record indicates that the State had resolved to direct a freeway over the subject property one month before the filing of this action. If the board was aware of this resolution at the time of instituting these proceedings, its action was tantamount to bad faith. But even if unaware of such resolution, respondent was in a better position than appellant property owners to acquire information of the state plan. One branch of a government is more likely to be aware of the activities of another than are merely private citizens. United States v. National Exchange Bank, 270 U.S. 527, 46 S.Ct. 388, 70 L.Ed. 717.

Nothing in this opinion is intended to be inconsistent with the holding in Whittier Union High School District v. Beck, supra, 45 Cal.App.2d 736, 114 P.2d 731, to the effect that an action has not been "abandoned" when discontinued because of the purchase of the property by the condemner. Under circumstances like those therein described, there is no property to condemn, no defendant property owner to be forced to sell. The condemner had become owner of the object of its litigation through the voluntary sale of the property to the plaintiff by the defendant.

The judgment is reversed insofar as it denies defendants recovery of their reasonable attorneys' fees incurred on account of the condemnatory proceedings. The trial court is directed to determine the amount of such fees and to tax the same as costs in favor of defendants.

Defendants appeal from a judgment on a jury verdict in favor of plaintiff in the sum of $9000. The sole question raised is that three instructions (two on res ipsa loquitur, and one on the duty of a common carrier) were erroneous.

Facts.

Plaintiff was a passenger on a Key System bus going south on Washington Street, Oakland. The bus stopped at the near side of 12th Street because of railroad tracks. Plaintiff stood up to ring the bell to indicate that he desired to get off the bus on the far side of that street. He testified that the bus started with such a jerk that he lost his grip on the handle of the seat, was thrown to the floor on his back and was injured.

In his deposition the bus operator, Brown, corroborated plaintiff as to the position of the bus when plaintiff fell. Brown stated that he had stopped on the near side of 12th Street for the tracks and that just as the bus was crossing them he heard plaintiff fall. At the trial he testified that after stopping for the tracks, the bus proceeded across them to the far side of 12th Street, discharged two passengers and had started up when he first learned that plaintiff "was down" on the floor; that plaintiff then accused him of being "rough in the handling of the coach." In his deposition he testified that he did not stop on the far side of 12th Street as there were no passengers to get off. Brown at no time denied that the bus had jerked. The nearest he came to doing so was his statement "as I approached the intersection at 12th and Washington I stopped for the tracks, then I gradually crossed the tracks and stopped at the coach stop on the other side of the tracks. Q. Yes. A. And I gradually moved in." (Emphasis added.)

1. Res Ipsa Loquitur.

[1,2] Defendants admit the propriety of giving instructions on this subject, but claim that those given were erroneous. Instruction 1 on this subject commences: "From the happening of the accident involved in this case as established by the evidence there arises an inference that the proximate cause of the occurrence was some breach of duty required by law on the part of the defendants." (Emphasis added.) Defendants contend that the italicized portion of this instruction took from the jury the right to determine whether there was any unusual motion on the part of the vehicle, the operator thereof having testified to gradually crossing the tracks, which they claim in effect was testimony that there was no "unusual motion" of the vehicle when plaintiff fell. Ordinarily the res ipsa loquitur instruction commences with some such statement as "If, and only in the event, you should find that there was an accidental occurrence as claimed by the plaintiff * * *" (See BAJI p. 319.) However, if the evidence establishes without contradiction that an accident happened in the manner justifying the instruction, with resulting injury to plaintiff, the form used here may be proper. (See BAJI p. 321.) Here the evidence established without question that the motion of the bus caused plaintiff's fall. Defendants contend that to justify the above portion of the instruction, the evidence must be uncontradicted that the movement of the bus must be "unusual" because it was stated in McIntosh v. Los Angeles Ry. Corp., 1936, 7 Cal.2d 90, 95, 59 P.2d 959, that passengers must assume the risks from ordinary movements of the vehicle. In the later case of Mudrick v. Market Street Ry. Co., 1938, 11 Cal.2d 724, at page 733, 81 P.2d 950, at page 955, 118 A.L.R. 533, the Supreme Court pointed out that there was no question in the McIntosh case involving the res ipsa loquitur rule. In holding in the Mudrick case that the movement of the vehicle causing the injury does not have to be "unusual" to justify the application of the doctrine the court quoted with approval from Steele v. Pacific Elec. Ry. Co., 168 Cal. 375, 143 P. 718, "if injury 'came from the movement of the car by those in charge of it * * * the law then presumes prima facie, that the particular thing thus shown to have caused the injury was due to the defendant's negligence, and the burden is thrown upon the defendant to disprove the prima facie case thus made'", pointing out that both that case and Wyatt v. Pacific Elec.

Ry. Co., 156 Cal. 170, 103 P. 892, were authority for the proposition that the movement of the vehicle did not have to be "unusual." In Jorgensen v. East Bay Transit Co., 1941, 46 Cal.App.2d 189, 115 P.2d 556, there is language that would seem to conflict with the rule above stated. However, the language is based upon McIntosh v. Los Angeles Ry. Corp., supra, 7 Cal.2d 90, 59 P.2d 959, which the Supreme Court said in Mudrick v. Market Street Ry. Co., 11 Cal.2d 724, 81 P.2d 950, supra, was not a res ipsa case, and did not conflict with the above stated rule.

[3] In Hardin v. San Jose City Lines, Inc., 41 Cal.2d 432, 260 P.2d 63, the court criticized the use of similar language to that used in the instruction in question here, for the reason that "there was evidence from which it might be reasonably inferred that no accident in fact occurred * * *." 41 Cal.2d at page 435, 260 P.2d at page 64. Such is not the situation in our case. It is significant that in the Hardin case the court did not hold that the giving of the erroneous instruction was prejudicial, saying, 41 Cal.2d at page 436, 260 P.2d at page 65: "The erroneous assumption contained in the res ipsa loquitur instruction is indirect and inferential * * *" and that there were other instructions telling the jury there was a dispute as to whether an accident had occurred. In our case, had there been a question as to whether plaintiff's injury was caused by the movement of the vehicle, the giving of the instruction would still not have been prejudicial. In other instructions the jury were instructed that if the testimony of any witness was contrary to the physical facts such testimony must be disregarded, that defendants contended that the accident was an unavoidable one, that defendants' liability must be determined in the light of defendants' duty as stated by the court, that in order to impose liability on defendants their breach of duty must have been a proximate cause of plaintiff's injury, that if the evidence shows that the injury was caused by defendants' act in operating its coach there is an inference of breach of duty which imposed on defendants the burden of showing that they did exercise the utmost care and diligence, and that if defendants exercised the care required or if any failure of defendants to exercise such care was not a proximate cause of the accident, the verdict must be for defendants.

Defendants find no fault with the balance of the res ipsa loquitur instruction above mentioned nor with the second instruction on the doctrine, other than their claim that both instructions were erroneously premised by the introduction above quoted.

2. Duty of a Common Carrier.

[4] The court instructed that defendants owed plaintiff the duty of exercising the utmost care in the operation of their motor coach. Then followed the criticized portion of the instruction: "It involves such constant supervision and observation over and of its passengers as will insure accurate information to its employees as to the condition and position of the passengers. The condition and position of the passengers are facts which must be considered by the defendants in operating their motor coach in accordance with the care required under the law." Defendants contend that this portion was argumentative and stated in effect that the Key System was an insurer of its passengers. We make no such interpretation. The word "insure" in the phrase "as will insure accurate information to its employees" in no wise contains the element of insurance of the passengers. Obviously the word "insure" as used here connotes the meaning "provide." The court did instruct that the Key System "were not the guarantors" of plaintiff's safety and that "they did not warrant such safety in the sense of a guarantee."

The judgment is affirmed.

The PEOPLE of the State of California,
Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Joe VERA, Defendant and Appellant.

Cr. 5479.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 3, California.

Nov. 7, 1956.

Prosecution for assault on a nine and a half year old child by inflicting injury to her body by use of a garden hose. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Charles W. Fricke, J., entered judgment of conviction and denied defendant's motion for new trial, and he appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Vallée, J., held that where cross-examination of witness for State was in part an attempt to show that her testimony that defendant had caused injury to victim of his alleged assault was of recent fabrication, testimony of other witnesses as to prior conversations with the witness was admissible for sole purpose of refuting inferences of subsequent fabrication and to show a prior state of mind consistent with that shown by witness when testifying at trial of defendant.

Judgment and order denying new trial affirmed.

1. Witnesses ⇨395

Where the opposition has assailed the testimony of a witness as being of recent fabrication, an exception to the hearsay rule allows the admission of evidence of statements or conduct prior to the claimed fabrication and consistent with the testimony of the witness at the trial.

2. Witnesses ⇨395

Where cross-examination of witness for State was in part an attempt to show that her testimony that defendant had caused injury to victim of his alleged assault was of recent fabrication, testimony of other witnesses as to prior conversations with the witness was admissible for sole purpose of refuting inferences of subsequent fabrication and to show a prior state of mind consistent with that shown by witness when testifying at trial of defendant.

David C. Marcus, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Clarence A. Linn, Asst. Atty. Gen., and Raymond M. Momboisse, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

VALLÉE, Justice.

By information defendant was charged in Count I with having assaulted Celia Sanchez by inflicting injury upon her right leg by use of a stick; in Count II with having assaulted her by inflicting injury to her left arm by jumping on it; in Count III with having assaulted her by inflicting injury to her legs, back, and other parts of her body by use of a garden hose; in Count IV with having assaulted her by knocking out her teeth; and in Count V with having committed acts denounced by section 288 of the Penal Code upon her. In the counts charging assault it was alleged it was by force likely to produce great bodily injury. At the first trial of the charges the jury disagreed. At the second trial with a jury defendant was acquitted of the offenses charged in counts I, II, IV, and V and convicted of the offense charged in Count III. He appeals from the judgment and the order denying his motion for a new trial.

Defendant is the husband of Trinidad Vera. Celia and Jessie Sanchez are Trinidad's children by a prior marriage. Celia was 9½ and Jessie 12 years of age at the times in question. Defendant, Trinidad, Celia, Jessie, and six children of defendant and Trinidad lived together in Norwalk.

Prior to the present prosecution Trinidad had been convicted by a jury of having assaulted Celia by inflicting injury to various parts of her body by use of a garden hose. At the trial of that charge Celia and Jessie testified it was their mother, Trinidad, who had beaten Celia with a rubber hose. Defendant also so testified at that trial. After Trinidad had been convicted of that and other offenses, defendant was charged with the offenses noted above.

At the trial of the present case Trinidad testified against defendant. On direct examination she testified that on one occasion in 1954 defendant had hit Celia on the head and on the side of the shoulders with a long stick; he had hit Celia "a lot of times" on the back and "all over the body" with a rubber hose; on more than one occasion he had twisted Celia's arm. She also testified that at the time she was arrested she told the police she was the only one who had hit Celia, that she had beaten her with a rubber hose for two or three months before her arrest; she had knocked Celia's teeth out, causing her to bleed, and had opened a wound in her scalp with the rubber hose; she had burned her with an iron, broken her arm, and bitten her nails off. She also had told the police at that time that defendant had not done any of these things—that she alone "had been responsible for all the beatings." She testified at the trial of the present case that she had lied to the police at that time. She had been confined about eight months in a state institution for women at the time she testified at the latter trial.

On cross-examination Trinidad testified she heard defendant testify against her at her preliminary hearing; she "wasn't mad" at him after she heard him testify; during the trial of the case against her she had not said that if she ever got her hands on defendant she would kill him; she asked "to come in to testify against him"; about two weeks before she testified an officer told her she did not have to testify against him if she did not want to; she wanted to testify against him. Trinidad further testified that the first time after her arrest she told anybody that defendant had been inflicting injuries on Celia was at her preliminary hearing; she told the policewoman who took her there.

On redirect examination Trinidad testified this was not the first time she ever told any one defendant had struck Celia; at her preliminary hearing she told Officers Uttke and Barner that defendant "had also hit Celia"; she talked to a public defender before her preliminary hearing; she had no objection to the public defender disclosing any information she related to him. Whereupon the following occurred:

"Q. By Mr. Busch: Mrs. Vera, this conversation that you had with Josephine Uttke and Mrs., or Miss Barner, on April 28, 1954, was that before Joe Vera testified against you at the preliminary hearing? A. To be honest, I don't remember whether it was before or after.

"Q. Do you recall whether or not your preliminary hearing was on May 6th, 1954? A. I know it was in May, but I don't remember the date.

"Q. And was the conversation that you had with your lawyer, was that before Mr. Vera testified against you in the preliminary, or testified in the preliminary hearing? A. No, because I talked to him before.

"Q. You talked to the lawyer before Mr. Vera testified? A. Yes.

"Mr. Marcus: Your Honor, may my objection be noted to this entire line of interrogation at this time?

"The Court: So far as relates to subject matter as to statements made in the past on the same subject matter, I think it all comes within the rule as to, let's call it rehabilitation. If there is any additional objection, why you can introduce it as we go along.

"Go ahead. * * *

"Q. By Mr. Busch: Did you have a conversation with your attorney, the Public Defender, before the preliminary, wherein you discussed whether or not Joe Vera hit Celia? A. Yes.

"Q. And did you have a conversation with your attorney before the preliminary hearing wherein it was discussed whether or not Celia had ever complained to you that Joe Vera had molested her? A. Yes."

On recross-examination Trinidad testified that at her preliminary hearing she told the public defender defendant "had committed the act upon Celia"; she realized then "that the promise Mr. Vera had made me to get me an attorney had turned me down."

As part of the People's case in chief, after Trinidad had testified, Josephine Uttke, a deputy sheriff, over objection, was permitted to testify that when Trinidad saw defendant in the courtroom before her preliminary hearing she said, "'You know, he's responsible for most of this.' And I said, 'What do you mean by that?' She said, 'He tried to molest her.' And, when she told me about it, which is referring to Celia, she said, 'Since then, he has been very mean to her, and he has beat her up as much as I have.' And I said, 'Well, you think he's responsible for this, too?' And she said, 'Yes, I do.'" In the presence of Sergeant Barner, another deputy sheriff, Trinidad said, "'My husband Joe is responsible as much for this as I am. He tried to molest the girl, and she told me it, and since then, he has been very mean and vicious to her, and he has beat her up as much as I have.'"

Sergeant Barner, also over objection, testified, "I asked Mrs. Vera what it was she wanted to talk to me about, and she told me that she hadn't told us the whole truth, that Joe was responsible for part of Celia's injuries. I asked her was [sic] he had done, and she said, well, he had mistreated Celia the same as she had, and I asked her how it had come about. She said that Celia had told her that Joe had molested her, and after that Joe had started whipping her and using the hose on her. I asked her why she hadn't told us that before. She said because she was afraid of him, and because he had told her that, due to his previous record, it would go harder on him. I told her to be sure that she told her attorney about that, and that was about the sum and substance of the conversation, because right after that her Public Defender wanted to talk to her."

The deputy public defender who represented Trinidad at her preliminary hearing testified, over objection, that prior to that hearing Trinidad told him defendant had struck Celia with a rubber hose, injuring her eye, breaking her nose, and knocking out two of her upper incisors, and "she also said that about a week prior to her arrest that she had the feeling that Joe was concerned about the possibility of Celia's condition being discovered, and told her at that time that if any arrest were made, that she should take the full responsibility, that because of his prior record things would be much hotter for him than for her if he were arrested; and that if it should occur he would get a lawyer for her, and see that she was taken care of."

The only assignment of error is that the court erred in permitting Trinidad to testify to her conversations with Officers Uttke and Barner and the public defender and in permitting them to testify to those conversations.

We are compelled to hold the court did not err in admitting the testimony. The precise question was decided adversely to defendant's contention by the Supreme Court in the recent case of People v. Walsh, 47 Cal.2d 36, 301 P.2d 247, a prosecution for bribery. The court declared, 47 Cal.2d at page 40, 301 P.2d at page 250:

"The defendants next urge that the court committed prejudicial error in admitting certain evidence claimed to be self-serving and hearsay. The contention arises out of attempts by the prosecution to rehabilitate their witnesses Stubblefield and Griffin. On cross-examination of these witnesses the defendants attempted to show that their testimony might have been fabricated and that they might have been biased and prejudiced towards the defendants. On redirect examination of the witness Stubblefield, the prosecution was allowed, over objection, to introduce certain prior consistent statements of the witness for rehabilitating his testimony. The court at that time instructed the jury that the evidence was being admitted not to prove the truth of the statements but for the limited purpose of refuting any suggestions or inferences that the witness had 'fabricated' his testimony at the trial or that his testimony had been actuated by bias or ulterior motives. The rehabilitating evidence showed that Stubblefield had placed an endorsement on the back of the $125 check before he cashed it, reading 'paid Vince Walsh $125.00 for fixing job 38 & Pacific, San Pedro job.' Also evidence was introduced to the effect that Stubblefield had, on a prior occasion, told his general contractor that he had paid the inspector $125 to clear the job.

"Likewise there was an attempt on cross-examination to impeach the testimony of the prosecution's witness Griffin and to show a recent fabrication on his part. As rehabilitating evidence, after such cross-examination, the prosecution introduced a check stub made out by Griffin at the time he wrote the $50 check with the notation thereon 'L. A. City Inst. Pay-off $50.00', and he was allowed to explain that 'Inst.' meant 'Inspector.' Also, a store clerk who had cashed the check testified that Griffin had remarked at the time that it was for the purpose of a pay-off. Again, the jury was admonished by the court that this evidence was admitted for the limited purpose of 'refuting the suggestions or inferences, if any, that this witness had beforehand or at the trial fabricated his testimony, or that his testimony was actuated by bias or ulterior motives, and it is introduced and received into evidence to prove the state of mind of this witness on a date prior to this trial for the purpose of determining whether his state of mind at that time was the same as disclosed at this trial, and to prove that his testimony at this trial was not a fabrication.'

"At the conclusion of the trial the court instructed the jury again as to the limited purposes for which rehabilitating evidence had been admitted, using substantially the same language as above set forth and as approved in People v. Weatherford, 78 Cal.App. 2d 669, 697, 178 P.2d 816.

"It is the rule generally and in this state that where the opposition has assailed the testimony of a witness as being of recent fabrication, an exception to the hearsay rule allows the admission of evidence of statements or conduct prior to the claimed fabrication and consistent with the testimony of the witness at the trial, 'not to prove the facts of the case, but as tending to show that the witness has not been controlled by motives of interest, and that he has not fabricated something for the purposes of the case.' People v. Kynette, 15 Cal.2d 731, 753-754, 104 P.2d 794, 806; see also Sweazey v. Valley Transport, Inc., 6 Wash.2d 324, 107 P.2d 567, 111 P.2d 1010 [140 A.L.R. 1]; 140 A.L.R. 93.

"The defendants contend that the court improperly applied the 'prior consistent statement' rule; that an express limitation upon the use of this exception to the hearsay rule is that such prior remarks must have been made 'prior to the time the motive of interest existed', People v. Kynette, supra, 15 Cal.2d 731, 754, 104 P.2d 794, 806; Mason v. Vestal, 88 Cal. 396, 398, 26 P. 213 [22 Am.St.Rep. 310]; Barkly v. Copeland, 74 Cal. 1, 5, 15 P. 307 [5 Am.St.Rep. 413]; that it is evident that these witnesses were as much biased and prejudiced at the time they made the prior statements as they were during the trial, and that the jury was confused and misled by the instructions of the court that the evidence was admissible to refute inferences that the witnesses had 'at this trial' fabricated their testimony or that 'at this trial' their testimony was actuated by bias or ulterior motives. * *

"[47 Cal.2d at page 43, 301 P.2d at page 251.] With reference to the questioned rulings and instructions it is to be noted that it is not necessary that the party desiring to impeach should expressly state that he seeks to prove a fabrication of recent date. It is sufficient if the record indicates a purpose to prove a recent fabrication. Davis v. Tanner, 88 Cal.App. 67, 78-79, 262 P. 1106; Griffin v. Boston, 188 Mass. 475, 74 N.E. 687; Baber v. Broadway & S. A. R. Co., 9 Misc. 20, 29 N.Y.S. 40; Sweazey v. Valley Transport, Inc., supra, 6 Wash.2d 324, 107 P.2d 567; 111 P.2d 1010 [140 A.L.R. 1]; 140 A.L.R. 152 and cases collected at pages 153-154. In the present case inferences of fabrication since the alleged bribes could be fairly drawn by the jurors in addition to those which would tend merely to impeach the witnesses' general reputations or otherwise cast doubt upon their testimony. We find no error in admitting evidence of prior consistent statements for the limited purpose of refuting inferences of subsequent fabrication and to show a prior state of mind consistent with that shown by the witnesses when testifying."

[1,2] The cross-examination of Trinidad was in part an attempt to show that her testimony that defendant had caused the injuries to Celia was of recent fabrication brought about by the fact that defendant had testified against her at her preliminary hearing and at the trial of the charges against her. Thus, under the rule "that where the opposition has assailed the testimony of a witness as being of recent fabrication, an exception to the hearsay rule allows the admission of evidence of statements or conduct prior to the claimed fabrication and consistent with the testimony of the witness at the trial" as applied by the Supreme Court in Walsh, the testimony of Officers Uttke and Barner and of the public defender as to the conversations with Trinidad before her preliminary hearing were admissible for the sole purpose "of refuting inferences of subsequent fabrication and to show a prior state of mind consistent with that shown" by her when testifying at the trial of defendant.

The judgment and the order denying a new trial are affirmed.

PARKER WOOD, J., concurs.

SHINN, Presiding Justice.

I concur in the judgment. It is well settled that where the circumstances are such as to reasonably support a claim that the testimony of a witness at the trial is a recent fabrication evidence that the witness previously made statements substantially corresponding with his testimony may be received to meet the claim of recent fabrication. There is a vast difference between a claim of recent fabrication and the usual cross-examination, the invariable purpose of which is, of course, to discover any untruth in the testimony. If no facts are brought out to indicate that the testimony may be of recent invention, and not merely untruthful, the rule has no application. I can think of no more dangerous or unsupportable rule of evidence than one that would permit the testimony of a witness to be bolstered by evidence that he had previously made statements consistent with his testimony for the sole reason that he had been cross-examined with the hope of proving the falsity of his testimony. I do not believe that it will ever become the law in California that the testimony of every prosecuting witness whose veracity is challenged can be fortified by evidence that on a former occasion he wrote down in a diary, or on a calendar or some scrap of paper his unsworn version of the occurrence. Such an extraordinary departure from the fundamental rules of evidence would open the way to the unlimited manufacture of evidence. No justification for it can be found in the mere fact that the witness was cross-examined, not as to facts of recent occurrence which might have influenced his testimony, but only as to testimony given in the course of his direct examination.

It is clear to me that the majority opinion does not impliedly endorse the proposition that rehabilitating evidence may be received when there is in evidence no circumstance or event of recent occurrence, such as a desire for revenge, self-interest or pressure, which might have caused the witness to give testimony he would not have given otherwise. But I would point out that the opinion should be carefully read in the light of all the facts of the present case, as they are stated, for an understanding of the reasons for affirmation of the judgment.

In the Matter of the ESTATE of Dorothy DUNCAN, also known as Dorothy Duncan Pidge, Deceased

Jacques B. SNYDER, Contestant and Appellant,

v.

MOTION PICTURE RELIEF FUND, Inc., Legatee and Respondent,

Charles Goldring, Petitioner and Respondent.
Civ. 21891.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 2, California.
Nov. 2, 1956.

Proceeding to determine heirship and construe will. From adverse judgment of the Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Clyde C. Triplett, J., heir appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Moore, P. J., held that where testatrix' holographic will contained a residuary clause providing that whatever money is left "I would like to help, perhaps a secretary," at a designated charity, such residuary clause would be construed as a gift to named charity and phrase "perhaps a secretary" as merely precatory words.

Affirmed.

1. Wills ⇨675

Precatory words in a will suffice to create a binding trust only when it clearly appears that the testator intends to impose an imperative obligation and to exclude the exercise of discretion by the person to whom they are addressed.

2. Trusts ⇨172

Precatory words restrict discretion of one who is admittedly a trustee only when they are of such a nature that they show intent to impose an imperative obligation and to exclude the exercise of discretion.

3. Wills ⇨675

Where testatrix' holographic will contained a residuary clause providing that whatever money is left "I would like to help, perhaps a secretary," at a designated charity, clause would be construed as a gift to the named charity and the phrase "perhaps a secretary" as merely precatory. West's Ann.Prob.Code, § 102.

4. Charities ⇨31

Gifts to charity are highly favored and bequests for such purpose will be liberally construed in order to effectuate the intent of the testator.

5. Wills ⇨448, 449

Whenever a disputed word or phrase in a will may be given either of two meanings, that should be given which will prevent intestacy, total or partial. West's Ann.Prob.Code, § 102.

Willard R. Decker, Azusa, and Robert S. Dickerman, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Alpern & Vallier, by Robert Vallier, Los Angeles, for Motion Picture Relief Fund, Inc., respondent.

MOORE, Presiding Justice.

From a judgment determining heirship, Jacques Snyder appeals.

In her lifetime, decedent executed a holographic will. After making a number of bequests of $100 each and of treasured possessions of adornment, she closed with a residuary clause in the following words:

"If, after everything is paid up—that is, my debts—whatever money is left I would like to help, perhaps a secretary, at the Motion Picture Relief Fund."

After an order for partial distribution had been made, the executor petitioned for a determination of heirship. He alleged that the Motion Picture Relief Fund is incorporated and is licensed as a charitable nonprofit organization and prayed the court to determine and declare the rights of all persons to decedent's estate and to whom distribution should be made. Jacques B. Snyder, legatee of his grandfather's portrait, filed his "statement of claim of interest in estate."

After trial, the court found upon substantial evidence that decedent left but one living relative, to wit, the same Jacques B. Snyder, her first cousin; that at the time testatrix drew her will there existed the Motion Picture Relief Fund, Inc. which provides health and welfare services, assistance and benefits to indigent persons employed or formerly employed in motion picture industry who are in need thereof; that a person is so employed, irrespective of his occupation, if he contributes substantially to the making of film; secretaries who meet this test form a clearly identifiable class of persons eligible for relief from the Fund; that the Fund relies upon voluntary contributions and bequests in order to carry on its work, although this is not a condition for receiving or qualifying for its benefits; that testatrix was a secretary and was so employed for approximately 22 years; that the rights of persons or organizations claiming an interest in the residue of decedent's estate have not heretofore been determined by any judgment; that the only parties claiming an interest therein are the said Fund, Snyder and the executor, as trustee for secretaries as a class who are members of the Fund.

The court thereupon concluded that the testatrix intended to bequeath the entire residuum of her estate to Motion Picture Relief Fund, Inc.; that the words "perhaps a secretary" are precatory only and are to be disregarded; that their omission leaves the testatrix' intent unimpaired; that the residual bequest to the Fund is valid and it is entitled to distribution of the full balance of the net distributable estate pursuant thereto, free and clear of any obligation as to the use of the proceeds, funds and property thereof except for the charitable purposes of the Fund; that Snyder is not entitled to share in the estate of decedent except as the legatee of the portrait of his grandfather; that the entire estate is fully disposed of by decedent's will and there is no intestacy from which heirs at law might otherwise take.

Construction of the Will Appellant's argument is a simple one: The language "perhaps a secretary" is not precatory but is a mandate that the beneficiary be a secretary employed "at the Motion Picture Relief Fund"; therefore, the trust is not sustainable as a private trust since the beneficiary is unidentified, nor as a charitable trust since the beneficiary is in the singular rather than the requisite "indefinite number of persons". In re Estate of Huebner, 127 Cal.App. 244, 246, 15 P.2d 758, 759. However, this chain of reasoning must fail because of our construction of the will.

The language does not indicate a desire to aid a secretary employed at the Fund, but rather an inclination to provide further funds for use in carrying out the charitable purposes of the organization in extending relief to employees of the motion picture industry who are now in need. The testatrix expressly desired that her money "help * * * at the Motion Picture Relief Fund." To construe a secretary rather than the Fund as the primary beneficiary would pervert the plain meaning of the testament. The main portion of the sentence is the gift to the Fund. "[P]erhaps a secretary" was only a parenthetical expression enclosed in commas and not necessary to the sense of the sentence. When the circumstances surrounding the bequest are considered, it seems clear that the testatrix intended the Fund to have the benefit of her moneys but hoped that the needy persons who would receive the benefit of her sums would be secretaries, undoubtedly because she, herself, had been a secretary.

[1-3] The question is whether the testatrix intended her request relative to a "secretary" to be more than mere hope or desire. It has been held that precatory words in a will suffice to create a binding trust only when it clearly appears that the testator intends to impose an imperative obligation and to exclude the exercise of discretion by the person to whom they are addressed. In re Estate of Hood, 57 Cal. App.2d 782, 785, 135 P.2d 383. Similarly, precatory words restrict the discretion of one who is admittedly a trustee only when they are of such a nature. We are not convinced that the trial court erred in determining that the primary intent of the testatrix was to further the work of the Fund without imposing binding restrictions upon its use of the bequeathed sums.

[4,5] Gifts to charity are highly favored. Bequests for such purpose will be liberally construed in order to effectuate the intent of the testator. In re Estate of Davison, 96 Cal.App.2d 263, 270, 215 P.2d 504; In re Estate of Yule, 57 Cal.App.2d 652, 654, 135 P.2d 386. Whenever a disputed word or phrase may be given either of two meanings, that should be given which will prevent intestacy, total or partial. Prob.Code, § 102; In re Estate of Farely, 214 Cal. 199, 206, 4 P.2d 948; In re Estate of Gracey, 200 Cal. 482, 492, 253 P. 921. Since the wording "perhaps a secretary" may be construed as merely pre-atory, and thereby validate the trust without entanglement in the rule of the Huebner case, supra, the foregoing rules of construction suggest that interpretation.

Judgment affirmed.

Will Annexed, of the Estate of Daniel L.
Ernst, deceased, substituted in place of Daniel L. Ernst, Defendant and Appellant.*

Civ. 21523.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 2, California.

Oct. 29, 1956.

Hearing Granted Dec. 24, 1956.

Action wherein the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Leon T. David, J., rendered judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Ashburn, J., held that extrinsic evidence sustained finding that parties to ambiguous deed had intended grant to include title to one-half of vacated streets adjoining described premises.

Affirmed.

1. Boundaries ⇨20(1)

Civil Code section, making transfer of land bounded by highway effective to pass title to center thereof, applies even where street has been vacated prior to transfer. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1112.

2. Boundaries ⇨20(1)

Evidence ⇨461(4)

Fact that deed expressly conveyed vacated alley while remaining silent as to vacated streets adjoining property conveyed did not clearly evince intention not to convey half of street; but such circumstance did raise an ambiguity in deed, in the resolution of which extrinsic evidence could properly be considered. West's Ann.Civ. Code, § 1112.

3. Deeds ⇨109

Extrinsic evidence may be received in aid of interpretation of an ambiguous deed.

4. Boundaries ⇨37(4)

Extrinsic evidence sustained finding that parties to ambiguous deed had intended grant to include title to one-half of vacated streets adjoining described premises. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1112.

5. Easements ⇨17(4)

When one lays out tract of land into lots and streets and sells lots by reference to map which exhibits lots and streets as they lie with relation to each other, purchasers of such lots have a private easement, in streets adjoining their respective lots and all other streets in tract, for ingress and egress and for any use proper to private way; and such private easement is entirely independent of fact of dedication to public use, and is a private appurtenance to lots, of which owners cannot be divested except by due process of law; and a subsequent deed for one of such lots, referring to map for description, carries such appurtenance as incident to lot. West's Ann.Civ. Code, § 1104.

6. Easements ⇨15

Civil Code section, giving transferee benefit of certain easements attached to property, is rule of general application, not confined to street-bounded lots of subdivision. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1104.

7. Appeal and Error ⇨790(2)

Motion for new trial is independent of and collateral to appeal from judgment, and power of trial judge to entertain and pass upon motion is not affected by such an appeal; but if motion is granted pending appeal, judgment is vacated, and appeal becomes moot and should be dismissed. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 662.

8. Appeal and Error ⇨438

Where original judgment was entered on April 20, and new trial motion was argued and submitted on May 31, appeal from original judgment taken thereafter, but prior to ruling on motion, did not deprive trial judge of jurisdiction to deny motion and make revised findings and judgment. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 662.

9. Action ⇨2

A "cause of action" is the right to enforce an existing obligation; and remedy is not of essence, but when obligation is established an appropriate remedy flows as an incident thereto.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Cause of Action".

10. Pleading ⇨248(17)

When basic facts are the same, shifting from one theory of liability to another is not substitution of new cause of action; and amendment substituting allegation of fee (in vacated street lying between lands of parties) for original averment of easement constituted merely a shifting of theories, and allowing same was not improper. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 580.

11. Equity ⇨39(1)

A court of equity which has taken jurisdiction of cause has duty to hold it for purpose of administering complete relief, and an obligation to make such an award.

12. Judgment ⇨251(1)

When chancellor sees that plaintiff seeking declaratory relief has proved himself owner of fee, it is his duty to render judgment accordingly, even though plaintiff's attorney has mistakenly alleged ownership to be of an easement.

13. Equity ⇨39(1)

Court of equity has power to do complete justice based upon record before it.

14. Statutes ⇨265

Statute should not be construed as an attempt to divest existing rights unless an intention so to do plainly appears. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 812.

15. Easements \S 26(1)

Civil Code section extinguishing private easements upon vacation or abandonment of street was not intended to divest existing rights. West's Ann.Civ.Code, \S 812.

ASHBURN, Justice.

Defendant ¹ appeals from a judgment declaring plaintiffs ² to be the owners of half of certain vacated streets adjoining subdivision lots sold to Mr. Neff and conveyed by lot and map reference, the deed having been made subsequent to the street vacation.

In the year 1902 one Benjamin Hiss caused to be recorded a subdivision map of "Second Addition to Hermosa Beach." He was then the owner of the entire property. One block, designated as 72, contained 12 lots (Nos. 1-12, inclusive) lying on the north side of Pier Avenue. On the west side they were bounded by Bard Street and on the north by Oak Street. Through the center of the block ran an east-west alley which separated the north tier of lots (1-6) from the south tier (7-12). The lots immediately adjoining Bard Street were numbers 1 and 12, each being 80 feet on Bard Street; the alley, 20 feet wide, lay between them. Lots 1 to 6 were bounded on the north by Oak Street.

In 1916 Hiss procured the vacation of Bard Street from a point located 100 feet north of Pier Avenue to its junction with Oak Street; also the vacation of Oak Street and the said alley. This left the block bounded on the west and north by the vacated portions of streets. Hiss owned the lots surrounding the vacated streets on the west and north. Indeed he still owned the entire tract and of course the title to the vacated portions of streets and the alley reverted to him upon vacation.

In 1927 he erected a permanent building upon lots 1, 2, 3, 10, 11 and 12, and a portion of the vacated alley. His interest in all the property passed to California Bank in 1932 and it, while still the owner of the entire tract, sold and conveyed to plaintiff Neff a portion thereof which was described in the deed "as Lots 1 to 12, inclusive, in Block 72, of the Second Addition to Hermosa Beach, as per map recorded in Book 3, Pages 11 and 12 of Maps, in the Office of the County Recorder of said County; also the vacated alley lying between the southerly lines of said Lots 1 to 6, inclusive, and the northerly lines of said lots 7 to 12, inclusive. * * * also subject * * * to other matters of record." The bank later conveyed to Ernst's predecessor in interest the lots surrounding the vacated streets, describing them by lot numbers and reference to the map; the deed also included a Parcel 2: "Also Oak Street, vacated, lying West of the West line of West Railroad Drive and that part of Bard Street, vacated, lying North of a line distant 100 feet North of the North line of Pier Avenue, formerly Santa Fe Avenue." Defendant Ernst acquired the same property under the same description in 1946.

In 1953 he began constructing and thereafter pursued to completion a substantial brick building extending over the vacated portion of Bard Street, its easterly line being not more than two or three feet from the westerly wall of plaintiff's building. The Ernst building and brick wall extended north to Oak Street (vacated), and defendant also built along the south line of Oak Street (vacated) a brick wall six feet high, thus blocking plaintiff's entrance to his property throughout the entire length of the vacated portions of Bard and Oak Streets. The new building overlaps plaintiff's for a distance of 21' 9" and renders unusable three garages on the west side thereof, making it impossible to open the doors.

1. During the progress of this action defendant-appellant Daniel L. Ernst died; Clement L. Ernst, his administrator with the will annexed, has been substituted as defendant-appellant. However, for convenience, Daniel L. Ernst will be indicated by the use of the word defendant or appellant herein.

2. The original purchaser and grantee is Dennis S. Neff; he later placed the property in joint tenancy with his wife; the word plaintiff will refer to Mr. Neff unless otherwise indicated by the text.

By revised findings and judgment the court decreed that plaintiffs are the owners of one-half the width of each of the vacated streets, and that plaintiffs and defendant are each "vested with a private right-of-way for purposes of ingress, egress and ordinary incidents of travel, over that area of Bard Street owned by the other, in and to which the public easement has been vacated." Also that plaintiffs are vested with an easement over the vacated portion of Bard Street "for the passage of the natural flow of surface water from the plaintiffs' premises." It is further adjudged that defendant's building had been constructed and maintained "wrongfully, unlawfully, and wilfully upon the property of plaintiff", and that "defendant is ordered forthwith to commence and diligently accomplish the removal and abatement of the said walls and structures and to complete the said removal within sixty days from notice of entry of judgment." Plaintiffs also were awarded other appropriate injunctive relief.

[1] Appellant, relying upon the concluding phrase of Civil Code, § 1112, claims error in the holding that plaintiffs' title extends to the middle of the vacated streets. The section reads: "A transfer of land, bounded by a highway, passes the title of the person whose estate is transferred to the soil of the highway in front to the center thereof, unless a different intent appears from the grant." It is established law in this state that this rule applies although the street has been vacated prior to the sale in question. Anderson v. Citizens' Sav. & Trust Co., 185 Cal. 386, 393, 197 P. 113; Pinsky v. Sloat, 130 Cal.App.2d

579, 585, 279 P.2d 584. In the Anderson case it is said: "By such a description a street is created as between the grantor and the grantee, regardless of whether or not there is an existing dedication as between the grantor and the public. This is the settled law of this state. * * * It may well be—in fact it is certain that it would be—that in such a case the grantor would reserve an easement over the fee in the street for its use for street purposes appurtenant to other nearby property which he might retain, and to which the use of the street as such would be of value." 185 Cal. at page 393, 197 P. at page 117. Also: "We hold, then, that in the absence of any circumstances showing clearly that the parties intended otherwise, the deed by Martin to Lempertz, describing the lot by reference to the map of the tract operated to convey as a part of the lot the fee in Martin to the center line of the streets, which the map showed as bounding the lots, although such streets had been previously abandoned as public streets." 185 Cal. at page 396, 197 P. at page 118. It is also pointed out that the ultimate question is the "intent of the parties as expressed in the deed * * and the rule which we have been discussing and which we have adopted is after all but a rule of construction, to be followed if, as is usually the case, there is nothing which points plainly and certainly to a contrary intention, but not to be followed if there is." 185 Cal. at page 397, 197 P. at page 118. Again it is said that the grantor's "intention in this respect is to be ascertained by what she said in the deed as construed in the light of the circumstances under which it was made and her conduct with reference to it * * *." 185 Cal. at page 397, 197 P. at page 118. A strong presumption exists to the effect that the parties to such a description intend the grantee's title to extend to the center of the street, Brown v. Bachelder, 214 Cal. 753, 755, 7 P.2d 1027; Allan v. City & County of San Francisco, 7 Cal.2d 642, 649, 61 P.2d 1175; Machado v. Title Guarantee and T. Co., 15 Cal.2d 180, 183, 99 P.2d 245, and a clear showing is necessary to the establishment of a contrary intention. Anderson v. Citizens Sav. & Trust Co., supra, 185 Cal. 386, at pages 393, 396, 397, 197 P. 113, at pages 116, 118; Pinsky v. Sloat, supra, 130 Cal.App.2d 579, at pages 583, 585, 279 P.2d 584, at pages 586, 588; McIntire v. Wasson, 125 Cal.App.2d 371, 377, 270 P. 2d 32; 11 C.J.S., Boundaries, § 35, p. 583.

[2-4] Appellant argues that such showing exists at bar because the grant to Neff expressly conveys the vacated alley and is silent with respect to vacated portions of adjoining streets. This circumstance raises an ambiguity in the deed, certainly not a clear showing of intention. (As to what constitutes an ambiguity in a written instrument, see Beneficial Fire & Cas. Ins. Co. v. Kurt Hitke Co., 46 Cal.2d 517, 297 P.2d 428. This is clearly a case in which extrinsic evidence is properly considered in arriving at the intent of the parties to the deed, for it is well-settled that such proof may be received in aid of the interpretation of an ambiguous deed. Anderson v. Citizens Sav. etc. Co., supra, 185 Cal. 386, 397, 197 P. 113; People v. Ocean Shore Railroad, 32 Cal.2d 406, 414, 196 P.2d 570, 6 A.L.R.2d 1179; Hay v. Allen, 112 Cal. App.2d 676, 682, 247 P.2d 94; 15 Cal.Jur. 2d § 122, p. 522, § 126, p. 527, § 157, p. 560; 8 Am.Jur. § 37, p. 775; 11 C.J.S., Boundaries, § 105, p. 699. The Pinsky case, supra, is not to the contrary; the language there used concerning parol evidence was related to a deed which was found to be "complete, clear, definite, certain, and unambiguous." 185 Cal. at page 589, 279 P.2d at page 591. The record before us discloses circumstances persuasive of the correctness of the trial judge's finding.

The building on the Neff land was constructed by Hiss in 1927, when he owned the entire tract. Although Bard Street had been vacated opposite the portion which he devoted to the three garages, he placed the building right on the line. Bard Street, though vacated, was an oiled road and was used just as if it were a public street. Hiss, his successor Neff, and their tenants, used that vacated street over the years for ingress and egress to the garages and to the northerly portion of the Neff property (lots 1 to 6). The garage doors would not open without crossing the east line of Bard Street and the garages could not be used without the aid of that road for ingress and egress. The northerly lots could not be used conveniently without the same access to a roadway. The California Bank, as successor to Hiss, was charged with knowledge of these physical conditions. It is difficult to conceive of its intending that the purchaser of lots 1 and 12 would not have, in the future as in the past, the full use of the adjoining roadway which, to all appearances, was a public street. It would seem that plaintiffs, if advised that any such problem ever would arise, would have declined to consummate the deal. The evidence amply sustains the court's finding: "That it was the intention of the grantor, California Bank, and of the grantee, plaintiff, as determined from the terms of the said grant to which Paragraph 1 refers, that the title of the plaintiff Dennis S. Neff should include the fee title in and to the adjacent portions of Bard Street and of Oak Street (including the area in and to which the public easement was vacated). * * *."

The map to which the Neff deed referred did not show any vacation of Bard and Oak Streets; it was the one which dedicated them to public use. Arguments built upon the assumption that the deed reference carried constructive notice to the grantee that the disputed portions of these streets had been vacated, are misplaced and need no further comment.

[5] So far as concerns the adjudication that plaintiffs and defendant each have an easement to use for street purposes the half of the vacated road belonging to the other, the law seems also clear. It is stated in Danielson v. Sykes, 157 Cal. 686, 689-690, 109 P. 87, 88, 28 L.R.A., N.S., 1024, as follows: "It is a thoroughly established proposition in this state that, when one lays out a tract of land into lots and streets and sells the lots by reference to a map which exhibits the lots and streets as they lie with relation to each other, the purchasers of such lots have a private easement in the streets opposite their respective lots, for ingress and egress and for any use proper to a private way, and that this private easement is entirely independent of the fact of dedication to public use, and is a private appurtenance to the lots, of which the owners cannot be divested except by due process of law. * * * A subsequent deed for one of the lots, referring to the map for the description, carries such appurtenance as incident to the lot." Moreover, this easement extends to all streets in the tract. 157 Cal. at page 691, 109 P. 87. To the same effect are Fristoe v. Drapeau, 35 Cal.2d 5, 9, 215 P.2d 729; Hocking v. Title Ins. & Trust Co., 37 Cal.2d 644, 650, 234 P.2d 625, 40 A.L.R.2d 1238; Day v. Robison, 131 Cal.App.2d 622, 625, 281 P. 2d 13. The trial court's ruling in this respect was correct.

[6] The application to the present situation of the Danielson rule, which is confined to conveyances of lots bounded by public highways, renders unnecessary to a correct decision of this appeal a discussion of arguments about necessity or convenience requisite to an easement under § 1104, Civil Code,² which is a rule of general application, not confined to street-bounded lots of a subdivision.

It is argued that the court was without jurisdiction to make revised findings and judgment. The original judgment was entered on April 20, 1955; defendant made a motion for new trial which was argued and submitted on May 31, 1955. The original judgment declared title to all of vacated portions of Bard Street and Oak Street to be in the defendant subject to an easement in plaintiffs to use the entire vacated portion of Bard Street for ingress and egress as an appurtenance to their land. Upon the argument of the motion defendant's counsel urged, among other things, that there was error in the findings and judgment because the deed to Neff carried title to the middle of the vacated street and therefore the finding of title in defendant subject to an easement in plaintiffs was contrary to law. This question was discussed by counsel for both parties and the court submitted the matter in order to consider the effect of the Anderson and Pinsky cases, supra. This was on May 31, 1955. Before a ruling on the motion was made defendant appealed from the judgment on June 6, 1955. On June 9th the trial judge denied the motion for new trial, ordered the complaint amended to conform to the proof, and made revised findings and judgment to the effect that Neff's title extends to the middle of the vacated street and carries with it an easement to use the entire street for ordinary travel purposes. Appellant says that his appeal of June 6th transferred the entire cause to the Supreme Court and that the action of June 9th was wholly without jurisdiction and void. His counsel relies upon Wagner v. Shapona, 123 Cal.App.2d 451, 464, 267 P.2d 378, which supports his contention. No petition for hearing was filed in that case and we are unable to accept its ruling for reasons presently stated.

[7, 8] It long has been the law of this state that a motion for new trial is independent of and collateral to an appeal from the judgment, and that the power of the trial judge to entertain and pass upon the motion is not affected by such an appeal. If the motion is granted pending the appeal the judgment is vacated, the appeal becomes moot and should be dismissed. 1 Hayne on New Trial and Appeal, § 2, pp. 14-16; San Jose Safe-Deposit Bank of Savings v. Bk. of Madera, 121 Cal. 543, 545, 54 P. 85; Hatfield v. Levy Brothers,

2. Civ.Code, § 1104: "A transfer of real property passes all easements attached thereto, and creates in favor thereof an easement to use other real property of the person whose estate is transferred in the same manner and to the same extent as such property was obviously and permanently used by the person whose estate is transferred, for the benefit thereof, at the time when the transfer was agreed upon or completed."

18 Cal.2d 798, 807-808, 117 P.2d 841. In Re Estate of Waters, 181 Cal. 584, 588, 185 P. 951, 953, the Supreme Court, in denying a rehearing, said: "[W]e are entirely satisfied that in no case does the fact that an appeal has been taken from a judgment operate to divest the trial court of power to entertain and determine a motion for a new trial in the matter in which the judgment was given. The amendments of 1915 have in no respect changed our established law in this regard." The addition of power to vacate or modify which was conferred by § 662, Code of Civil Procedure,³ has not changed the rule. This court so held in Rutledge v. Rutledge, 119 Cal.App.2d 114, 117, 259 P.2d 79, 81, saying, through Mr. Justice McComb:

"Since the adoption of section 662 of the Code of Civil Procedure in 1929, the trial court has been authorized upon the denying of a motion for a new trial to amend its findings of fact, conclusions of law and enter a new and different judgment. (California Machinery [& Supply] Co. v. University City Syndicate, Inc., 3 Cal.App.2d 425, 426 [1], 428 [3], 39 P.2d 853; Spier v. Lang, 4 Cal.2d 711, 714, 53 P.2d 138.)

"The taking of an appeal from the original judgment does not deprive the trial court of the power thus conferred. Since the original judgment is non-appealable, the amended judgment is the one from which an appeal may be taken."

See also, Rutledge v. Rutledge, 119 Cal. App.2d 112, 259 P.2d 78. The same ruling was made in Free v. Furr, 140 Cal.App.2d 378, 295 P.2d 134, and hearing was denied by the Supreme Court. The contrary ruling of the Wagner case, supra, rests upon certain decisions which do not involve the effect of an appeal upon a motion for a new trial. Therefore it is not persuasive. We reiterate the holding in the Rutledge case, supra, which means that the court did not act without jurisdiction in the present instance.

It is also contended that the order of June 9th directing amendments to the complaint to conform to the proof is erroneous because (1) the amendments do not in fact conform to the proof, (2) they substitute a new cause of action, and (3) inject new issues and new findings upon which defendant has never had a trial, thus depriving him of due process of law.

It appears that the original complaint asserted no claim that plaintiffs owned the fee to one-half of the vacated streets, but alleged an appurtenant easement to use the same; the original findings uphold the easement and state that Ernst owns the vacated portions of the streets; the judgment reflects the same view, enjoins interference with the exercise of plaintiffs' rights as dominant tenant and orders removal of defendant's building and other obstructions. The amendments to the complaint which were ordered by the court aver that title of plaintiffs extends to the center of the vacated streets. The revised findings and judgment find and decree that to be a fact; an easement to use the whole of the vacated streets is also adjudicated and protected by appropriate injunction.

[9-12] Certain fundamentals should be here recognized. A cause of action is the right to enforce an existing obligation; the remedy is not of the essence; when the obligation is established an appropriate remedy flows as an incident thereto. Frost v. Witter, 132 Cal. 421, 426, 64 P. 705; Klopstock v. Superior Court, 17 Cal.

3. Code Civ.Proc. § 662: "In ruling on such motion, in a cause tried without a jury, the court may, on such terms as may be just, change or add to the findings, modify the judgment, in whole or in part, vacate the judgment, in whole or in part, and grant a new trial on all or part of the issues, or, in lieu of granting a new trial, may vacate and set aside the findings and judgment and reopen the case for further proceedings and the introduction of additional evidence with the same effect as if the case had been reopened after the submission thereof and before findings had been filed or judgment rendered. Any judgment thereafter entered shall be subject to the provisions of sections 657 and 659 of this code."

2d 13, 20, 108 P.2d 906, 135 A.L.R. 318; Smith v. Los Angeles Bookbinders Union, 133 Cal.App.2d 486, 495, 284 P.2d 194, 199. In the last cited case it is said: "When the basic facts are the same a shifting from one theory of liability to another is not the substitution of a new cause of action. Oberkotter v. Woolman, 187 Cal. 500, 504, 202 P. 669; Wennerholm v. Stanford Univ. Sch. of Med., 20 Cal.2d 713, 718, 128 P. 2d 522, 141 A.L.R. 1358; Barr v. Carroll, 128 Cal.App.2d 23, 33-34, 274 P.2d 717." Plaintiffs' cause of action at bar was the enforcement of rights growing out of their deed, whether those rights spell an easement or a fee title, or both. Their original averment of an easement and later alleging a fee was merely a shifting of theories which, as shown by the quotation from the Smith case, supra, is not improper. Section 580, Code of Civil Procedure, provides that the relief in a default case cannot exceed the demand of the complaint; "but in any other case, the Court may grant him any relief consistent with the case made by the complaint and embraced within the issue." A court of equity which has taken jurisdiction of a cause has a duty to hold it for the purpose of administering complete relief, and an obligation to make such an award. Walsh v. Majors, 4 Cal. 2d 384, 398, 49 P.2d 598; Newport v. Hatton, 195 Cal. 132, 153, 231 P. 987. When the chancellor sees that plaintiff has proved himself the owner of a fee it is his duty to render such a judgment, even though plaintiff's attorney has mistakenly alleged it to be an easement. The amendments at bar did not introduce a new cause of action and the relief granted did not go beyond the province of the equity court.

Moreover, the claim that the judgment is based upon issues not tried, and that it does not actually conform to the proof, is not well grounded. The deeds which begot this controversy were received in evidence without objection and most of the surrounding circumstances were proved in the same manner. The facts were fully canvassed, and it makes little real difference whether plaintiffs own the fee to one-half of the street subject to a right of user for street purposes by defendant, or whether Ernst, the defendant, has the fee title to the whole street but is subject to a right of plaintiffs to use the entire strip for street purposes. The amendments do conform to the proof because they aver the correct legal effect of the deeds when read in the light of competent extrinsic evidence.

[13] The proof discloses that the normal flow of surface waters over the Neff land is to the northwest; that that corner is the low spot in which the waters tend to congregate; that defendant's wall prevents their normal flow onto his land. The judgment declares that plaintiffs have an easement to maintain such normal flow (which is sound, see LeBrun v. Richards, 210 Cal. 308, 313, 291 P. 825, 72 A.L.R. 336), and enjoins further obstruction thereof, which is but an exercise of the power of a court of equity to do complete justice based upon the record before it.

[14, 15] Appellant also relies upon § 812, Civil Code, which is set forth in the margin.⁴ This enactment appears not to have been construed by the courts. Its terms preclude application at bar, for it expressly excepts "a private easement neces-

4. Civ.Code, § 812: "The vacation or abandonment, pursuant to law, of streets and highways shall extinguish all private easements therein claimed by reason of the purchase of any lot by reference to a map or plat upon which such streets or highways are shown, other than a private easement necessary for the purpose of ingress and egress to any such lot from or to a public street or highway, except as to any person claiming such easement who, within two years from the effective date of such vacation or abandonment or within two years from the date of the enactment of this section, whichever is later, shall have recorded in the office of the recorder of the county in which such vacated or abandoned streets or highways are located a verified notice of his claim to such easement over all or any part of any such street or highway which is particularly described in such notice. Nothing in this section shall be construed to create any such private easement, nor sary for the purpose of ingress and egress to any such lot from or to a public street or highway". Moreover, plaintiffs' right to a fee title vested in 1938 and § 812 was enacted in 1949. It is not to be construed as an attempt to divest existing rights unless an intention so to do plainly appears, and we cannot say that such is the case here. 23 Cal.Jur. § 26, p. 629; Aetna Cas. & Surety Co. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 30 Cal.2d 388, 393, 182 P.2d 159.

The foregoing discussion adequately disposes of other points made by counsel.

The appeal from the judgment entered on April 20, 1955 is dismissed. The revised judgment entered on June 10, 1955 is affirmed.

v.

F. Britton McCONNELL, Insurance Commissioner of the State of California, Successor to John R. Maloney, Respondent. *

Civ. 21267.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 3, California.

Nov. 1, 1956.

Rehearing Denied Nov. 27, 1956.

Hearing Granted Dec. 24, 1956.

Mandamus proceeding was brought by bail agents against the Insurance Commissioner to compel the Insurance Commissioner to vacate his order of revocation of licenses of two of the agents and the suspension of the licenses of the other two agents. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Bayard Rhone, J., entered judgment adverse to the bail agents, and they appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Shinn, P. J., held that the Insurance Commissioner should not have revoked licenses of bail agents to act as insurance agents and broker and life agent, because of their violations of duty as bail agents, where there was no finding that they had engaged in a fraudulent practice or had conducted their business in a dishonest manner, and violations of their statutory duties as bail agents had no connection with their duties as insurance agents, and that licenses of bail agents as bail agents should not have been revoked, but should merely have been suspended.

Judgment affirmed in part and reversed in part.

1. Mandamus ☞174

In mandamus proceeding by bail agents against the Insurance Commissioner to compel the Insurance Commissioner to vacate his order of revocation of licenses of two of the brokers and the suspension of the licenses of the other two brokers, trial court was required to exercise its independent judgment in deciding the factual issues. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 1094.5 and subd. (c).

2. Appeal and Error ☞757(3)

Where appellants contended on appeal that evidence was not sufficient to sustain finding of trial court that a certain arrangement existed, but appellants in their briefs did not set forth the substance of the evidence tending to prove or disprove the existence of such an arrangement, the District Court of Appeal would not consider the claim of insufficiency of the evidence to support the finding and would not make an independent study of the record to inform itself as to the merits of the objection of the insufficiency of the evidence. ☞ way subordinate to any such private easement."

3. Licenses ⇨38

Hearsay evidence alone is insufficient to support revocation of a license. West's Ann.Gov.Code, § 11513(c).

4. Bail ⇨60

In proceeding before Insurance Commissioner for revocation of licenses of two of the brokers and the suspension of the licenses of the other two brokers, hearsay testimony, which helped to explain the conduct of the bail agents and the parties with whom they were dealing, was properly received. West's Ann.Gov.Code, § 11513(c).

5. Mandamus ⇨168(4)

In mandamus proceeding by bail agents against the Insurance Commissioner to compel the Insurance Commissioner to vacate his order of revocation of licenses of two of the brokers and the suspension of the licenses of the other two brokers, evidence sustained findings that bail agents violated the Administrative Code.

6. Mandamus ⇨168(3)

In mandamus proceeding by bail agents against the Insurance Commissioner to compel the Insurance Commissioner to vacate his order of revocation of licenses of two of the brokers and the suspension of the licenses of the other two brokers, trial court properly excluded evidence of the good reputation and character of the bail agents, where the bail agents were not accused of being persons of bad character or of having dealt dishonestly with clients.

7. Mandamus ⇨176

Where an administrative board has found the commission by a licensee of two or more offenses, which would justify disciplinary action, and has made a single order of suspension or revocation for multiple offenses, and court has determined the finding of guilt as to one or more of the charges to be contrary to the weight of the evidence, the matter will be referred to the board for reconsideration. West's Ann.Code Civ. Proc., § 1094.5(e).

8. Insurance ⇨12

The Insurance Commissioner should not have revoked licenses of bail agents to act as insurance agent and broker and life agent, because of their violations of duty as bail agents, where there was no finding that they had engaged in a fraudulent practice or had conducted their business in a dishonest manner, and violations of their statutory duties as bail agents had no connection with their duties as insurance agents. West's Ann.Insurance Code, § 1731(d, e, g, i, j).

9. Bail ⇨60

Where bail agents, whose licenses had been revoked because of violations of the Administrative Code, were not guilty of any fraudulent practices and did not conduct their business in a dishonest manner, their licenses should not have been revoked, but should have merely been suspended.

Bernard C. Brennan, William E. Cornell, and Blase A. Bonpane, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Lee B. Stanton, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

SHINN, Presiding Justice.

August M. Nardoni was a duly licensed bail agent, insurance agent, insurance broker and life agent under the rules and regulations of the insurance Code and insurance laws of the state. Brazell Nardoni was a licensed bail agent and insurance agent. The two were partners in the bail bond business in Los Angeles; August conducted a separate business as insurance agent, insurance broker and life agent and Brazell conducted a separate business as insurance agent only. Frank E. Alexander and Charles A. Archambault were licensed as bail agents and were employees of the Nardonis. Separate accusations were filed against the four charging separate violations of the Insurance Code and the California Administrative Code. The accused answered; the four proceedings were consolidated for hearing and a hearing was duly had before the Department of Insurance and evidence was taken before a hearing officer; the matter was submitted; the hearing officer issued his proposed decision; it was adopted by the Insurance Commissioner and pursuant thereto all licenses held by August M. Nardoni and all those held by Brazell Nardoni were revoked; the licenses held by Frank E. Alexander and Charles A. Archambault were suspended for three months. The licensees petitioned for reconsideration which was denied and they petitioned the superior court for a writ of mandate; an alternative writ was issued; the Insurance Commissioner answered; trial was had and findings and judgment were entered in favor of the commissioner. The findings of the court were that all the findings of the hearing officer as adopted by the commissioner were justified and supported by the weight of the evidence. The court's findings of violations and the principal code sections are set out in the margin.^{1, 2} The conclusions of the court were to the general effect that

1. "That the respondent Insurance Commissioner rightfully and properly found and determined, and the court now finds:
 - "(A) That petitioner August Nardoni has violated the following provisions of Title 10 of the California Administrative Code:

"(1) Section 2077, in that he recommended attorneys at law to various persons;

"(2) Section 2078, in that he indirectly assisted in the preparation of a petition for and the securing of writs of habeas corpus by furnishing facilities to attorneys in his bailbond office for the preparation of such documents;

"(3) Section 2079, in that he solicited and negotiated for bail with persons whom the arrestee had not specifically authorized and designated in writing;

"(4) Section 2091, in that he had some arrangement with one Frank E. Vargas, a member of the Los Angeles Police Department, to furnish information relative to the arrest or incarceration of any person in jail;

"(5) Section 2101, in that he failed to set forth on his records the correct information as to the source from which notice or knowledge leading to the solicitation or negotiation of bail was received;

"(6) Section 2073, in that he permitted persons to solicit or negotiate with respect to execution of bail at a time when he knew such persons were not licensed by the Department of Insurance to transact bail;

"(7) Section 2100, in that undertakings of bail were issued prior to obtaining a full and complete written application therefor;

"(8) Sections 2086 and 2087, in that he failed to file with the Department of Insurance a complete listing of all persons in his employ, setting forth the residence address, date of employment, the duties, basis of compensation, and the date and reason for termination of such employment.

"(B) That petitioner Brazell Nardoni has violated the provisions of Title 10 of the California Administrative Code:

"(1) Section 2077, in that he recommended attorneys at law to various persons;

"(2) Section 2078, in that he indirectly assisted in the preparation of a petition for and the securing of writs of habeas corpus by furnishing facilities to attorneys in his bail bond office for the preparation of such documents;

"(C) That petitioner Frank Earl Alexander has violated the provisions of Title 10 of the California Administrative Code as follows:

"Section 2101, in that he failed to set forth on his records the correct information as to the source from which notice the facts found justified the order of the commissioner as to each of the petitioners and that they had been accorded in all respects a fair hearing. Judgment was entered denying the petition for peremptory writ of mandate. The petitioners appeal.

The trial court received in evidence the entire record of the proceedings before the Insurance Commissioner which included the testimony of several witnesses in addition to the stipulation. The findings of the court recite that petitioners made a motion and offer to introduce into evidence at the trial oral testimony concerning their general reputation and character and that the motion and offer were denied. Appellants did not testify at any time.

In the hearing before the hearing officer all parties executed a stipulation consisting of 60 pages with 55 exhibits attached. The or knowledge leading to the solicitation or negotiation of bail was received.

"(D) That petitioner Charles August Archambault has violated the following provisions of Title 10 of the California Administrative Code:

"(1) Section 2079, in that he solicited and negotiated for bail with persons whom the arrestee had not specifically authorized and designated in writing;

"(2) Section 2101, in that he failed to set forth on his records the correct information as to the source from which notice or knowledge leading to the solicitation or negotiation of bail was received."

2. "California Administrative Code—Title 10

"2073. No bail agent or bail permittee shall directly or indirectly permit any person on his behalf to solicit or negotiate in respect to execution or delivery of a bail bond or to execute or deliver a bail bond unless such person be licensed as provided in Article 1, Chapter 7, Part 2, Division 1 of the Insurance Code of the State of California. The fact that services are rendered gratuitously or otherwise shall not affect the application of this rule.

"2077. No bail agent, bail permittee, or bail solicitor shall in any manner directly or indirectly suggest to any person the name of, or recommend, any attorney or attorneys at law. Nothing contained in this rule shall prevent a bail licensee from following any procedure prescribed by the local Bar Association or the State Bar of California.

"2078. No bail agent, bail permittee, or bail solicitor, shall prepare or make a petition for a writ of habeas corpus for, or on behalf of, an arrestee or in any manner directly or indirectly assist in the preparation of a petition for, or otherwise aid in the securing of a writ of habeas corpus. Nothing contained in this rule shall prevent the posting of bail in connection with a writ of habeas corpus when done by a licensed agent or licensed permittee.

"2079. No bail agent, bail permittee, or bail solicitor shall solicit or negotiate for a bail bond except with: (a) The arrestee. (b) The arrestee's attorney at law. (c) An adult member of the arrestee's family at the arrestee's residence address. (d) Such other person as the arrestee shall specifically authorize and designate in writing.

"2091. No bail agent, bail permittee, or bail solicitor shall for any purpose, directly or indirectly, enter into an arrangement of any kind with a law enforcement officer, newspaper employee, messenger service or any of its employees, a trusty in a jail, any other person incarcerated in a jail, or with any other persons to inform or notify any licensee directly or indirectly of the fact of an arrest, or the arrest of any person, his name or address, his personal or legal representative, his friend or relative, or any other information relating thereto.

"2100. No bail bond shall be issued except upon a full and complete written application therefor.

"2101. Every application for a bail bond shall be signed by the licensee accepting same and shall have endorsed thereon or attached thereto a statement, in a form approved by the Department of Insurance, setting forth full information as to the source from which notice or knowledge leading to the solicitation or negotiation of bail was received. Full information shall include: (a) Full name of the person supplying the information. (b) The address of such person. (c) Connection or relation of such person to the arrestee. (d) Where the application is received direct from the arrestee a statement of the manner in which the arrestee communicated with the bondsman. (e) Where the arrestee is one who has been previously bailed, a statement of the date, the charge, the bond number covering the previous arrest. (f) The date and the time at which the application or information leading to the application was received."

stipulation read in part "Where it is stipulated that if called a person would testify to certain facts, such stipulation is in lieu of actual testimony and is to be considered admitted without objection unless an objection on specified grounds is expressly reserved for the particular testimony in writing. * * * All facts recited herein as stipulations are agreed to be true and correct, and may be used in lieu of evidence, and are to be considered proven by competent evidence." It was also stipulated that exhibits No. 1 through No. 55 were offered in evidence and were to be considered admitted without objection in the absence of a written objection upon some ground other than lack of foundation. When we refer to testimony of the witnesses at the hearing we will be speaking in terms of the stipulation.

The points on appeal are (a) the court should have found that the commissioner's findings were not supported by the weight of the evidence within the meaning of section 1094.5 of the Code of Civil Procedure; (b) the findings of the commissioner are not supported by the evidence; (c) the penalty imposed is excessive; (d) the court erred in refusing to hear oral testimony as to the good character and reputation of petitioners; and (e) as a matter of law the order of the commissioner and the judgment of the court should be vacated and the licenses restored.

[1] The trial court was required to exercise its independent judgment in deciding the factual issues. Code Civ.Proc. § 1094.5, subd. c; Moran v. State Board of Medical Examiners, 32 Cal.2d 301, 196 P.2d 20; Hohreiter v. Garrison, 81 Cal.App.2d 384, 184 P.2d 323; 2 Cal.Jur.2d, § 231, p. 385. It did so, and not only found expressly that the commissioner's findings were supported by the weight of the evidence but made its own findings which conformed in all respects to those of the commissioner.

[2] We consider first appellants' argument as to the insufficiency of the evidence to justify the material findings. It is said

"It is submitted that the most serious finding and decision of respondent and the trial court with reference to the character, integrity and honesty of appellants was based on the so-called 'arrangement' or conspiracy between appellants August Maurice Nardoni and Brazell Nardoni, and a police officer named Frank Vargas." As previously noted, the court found that the Nardonis had an arrangement with Vargas, a member of the Los Angeles Police Department, under which they were furnished information relative to arrests. In their briefs appellants have not set forth the substance of the evidence tending to prove or disprove the existence of such an arrangement. In the absence of such a statement the court will not consider a claim of insufficiency of the evidence to support a finding. It will not make an independent study of the record to inform itself as to the merits of the objection of insufficiency of the evidence. Goldring v. Goldring, 94 Cal.App.2d 643, 211 P.2d 342. However, we have deemed it necessary to familiarize ourselves with the evidence contained in the stipulation in order to give consideration to the contention that the findings of the court were improperly based upon hearsay evidence.

It is argued by appellants that the testimony of certain witnesses (as set out in the stipulation) which was relied upon as tending to prove the existence of the alleged arrangement with Vargas, and some of the other charges, was hearsay evidence, that it was improperly admitted over the objections of appellants and that their motions to strike the evidence should have been granted. The admission of the evidence over objection is not urged as error which furnishes an independent ground for reversal. It is said in the brief "It is further submitted that if the objections had been sustained and motions to strike granted as set forth in Exhibit A (the written objections) there would have been no substantial evidence warranting the penalty imposed by respondent." Although not required to do so, respondent in his brief states a summary of the evidence tending to prove that the Nardonis were receiving from Vargas information respecting arrests which he had made and that they acted upon that information in contacting relatives of the persons arrested and arranging for their release on bail. The facts stipulated leave no room for doubt that the Nardonis and Vargas worked together in this manner on several different occasions. It was a reasonable inference that this was under a prearranged plan.

[3] Appellants say correctly that hearsay evidence alone is insufficient to support the revocation of a license, citing Walker v. City of San Gabriel, 20 Cal.2d 879, 129 P.2d 349, 142 A.L.R. 1383 and Kinney v. Sacramento City Employees' Retirement System, 77 Cal.App.2d 779, 176 P.2d 775. Section 11513(c) of the Government Code provides in part "Hearsay evidence may be used for the purpose of supplementing or explaining any direct evidence but shall not be sufficient in itself to support a finding unless it would be admissible over objection in civil actions." But as we have said, appellants make no statement of the direct or the circumstantial evidence bearing on the question of the existence of a forbidden arrangement between the Nardonis and Vargas which was in addition to the claimed hearsay evidence. Nor do they argue the evidence bearing upon the other findings. They say only that such other evidence was unsubstantial. The reason for the omission of the statement of the material evidence is plain. Such a statement would have demonstrated its sufficiency to justify the principal findings of the court. This is true not only with respect to the Nardonis but also with respect to appellants Frank Earl Alexander and Charles August Archambault. The contention that the findings were based substantially upon hearsay evidence is clearly disproved by the record. Facts which were competent, relevant and material were established by the stipulation which, with reasonable inferences deducible therefrom, were sufficient of themselves to justify the court's findings.

[4, 5] We may add that while some of the testimony objected to was of hearsay character it was, in our opinion, properly received. It helped to explain conduct of appellants and the parties with whom they were dealing which constituted circumstantial evidence respecting the manner in which appellants were transacting their business. It consisted of statements of witnesses in the nature of verbal acts contemporaneous with their meetings with appellants and did not purport to establish, by mere assertion, any material fact. Moreover, we are convinced from a study of the record that the findings of the court were based upon sufficient evidence entirely apart from the evidence to which objection was made.

In the court trial appellants made a motion and offer to introduce oral evidence of their good reputation and character. The motion was denied and the ruling is assigned as error. It is stated by appellants Nardoni that they have been in the bail bond business at Los Angeles for more than 30 years during which they have rendered valuable service to the courts, attorneys and the public and have held a reputation for honesty and trustworthiness in the community. They urged these facts in their petition for reconsideration by which they sought a reduction of the penalty through an order placing them on probation.

[6] We detect no error in the rejection of the offer of proof. Evidence of good reputation is admissible upon the trial of an issue of fact because it may tend to prove that an accused of good character would not have committed the acts with which he is charged. Appellants no doubt realized that such evidence would have no tendency to prove them guiltless of the acts constituting the numerous violations, all of which were admitted by the stipulation. People v. Green, 217 Cal. 176, 183, 17 P.2d 730. Therefore, they urged the claim of good character and reputation only in their petition for reconsideration of the penalty. It would have been a proper matter for the commissioner to consider in determining what the penalty should be. But none of the appellants was accused of being a person of bad character nor of having dealt dishonestly with his clients. The record does not disclose that their character or reputation was assailed or made an issue. And if, as they claim, they had a clear record as licensees that fact would necessarily have been known to the commissioner. In the light of the record, evidence of good character and reputation was not admissible in the court trial for any purpose. It was not the duty of the court to prescribe a penalty nor would the good character and reputation of appellants have furnished justification for the court's interfering with the penalty imposed by the commissioner.

Under section 1094.5(e), Code of Civil Procedure, the court may render judgment annulling orders such as the one before us or may remand the case for further consideration but "the judgment shall not limit or control in any way the discretion legally vested in the respondent."

[7] It is settled that where an administrative board has found the commission by a licensee of two or more offenses which would justify disciplinary action, and has made a single order of suspension or revocation for multiple offenses, and the court has determined the finding of guilt as to one or more of the charges to be contrary to the weight of the evidence, the matter will be referred to the board for reconsideration. Cooper v. State Board of Medical Examiners, 35 Cal.2d 242, 217 P.2d 630, 18 A.L.R.2d 593; Stoumen v. Reilly, 37 Cal.2d 713, 234 P.2d 969; Jones v. Maloney, 106 Cal.App.2d 80, 234 P.2d 666; Garfield v. Board of Medical Examiners, 99 Cal. App.2d 219, 221 P.2d 705.

[8] All the accusations related to violations of duty by appellants as bail agents. The stipulated facts established the guilt of appellants of those violations. They tacitly concede as much. All the evidence related to those violations. But as we have seen, the order of the commissioner revoked not only the licenses of the Nardonis to act as bail agents but also the license of August M. Nardoni to act as an Insurance Agent and Broker and a Life Agent and the license of Brazell Nardoni to act as an Insurance Agent.

We have concluded that the revocation of the licenses, other than the bail agent licenses, was unwarranted. The bail bond business is peculiar to itself. It is governed by regulations which cover every small detail of negotiation for and the issuance of bail bonds. These could not have the slightest application to other branches of the insurance business. Of the more serious faults sought to be prevented we mention the forbidden arrangements with police officers and others respecting information as to arrests, the recommendation to arrestees and others of attorneys, and participation in the preparation of petitions for writs of habeas corpus. These, and all the minor irregularities constituting violations found in the Administrative Code quoted above, are not evils to be found in the general insurance business.

Section 1731 of the Insurance Code specifies the grounds for disciplinary action against insurance agents, brokers, solicitors, life agents, surplus line brokers and motor club agents. The commissioner found that the Nardonis were subject to disciplinary action under section 1731(d), (e), (g), (i) and (j) of the Insurance Code.³

The court adopted a finding of the commissioner reading: "That by virtue of the violations of petitioners August Nardoni and Brazell Nardoni as hereinabove determined, the licenses of petitioner August

3. "(d) Such person has engaged in a fraudulent practice or act or conducted his business in a dishonest manner.

"(e) Such person has shown incompetency or untrustworthiness in the conduct of his business or has by commission of a wrongful act or practice in the course of his business exposed the public or those dealing with him to the danger of loss.

"(g) Such person has failed to perform a duty expressly enjoined upon him by a provision of this code, or has com-Nardoni to act as an Insurance Agent and Broker and to act as a Life Agent, and the license of petitioner Brazell Nardoni to act as an Insurance Agent are subject to disciplinary action by virtue of the provisions of section 1731 of the Insurance Code."

There was no finding that either of the Nardonis had engaged in a fraudulent practice or had conducted his business in a dishonest manner. There was no inherent dishonesty in their transgressions as bail agents. They were not shown to have been incompetent or untrustworthy with respect to their clients. As to section 1731 (g) they were guilty of violations of their duties as bail agents but these violations were of duties that could have no connection with the duties of insurance agents. Section 1731 must be given reasonable application. As to paragraph (g) of that section which was applied by the commissioner and the court it is to be noted that the acts and omissions which were relied upon were those particularly set forth as violations of the Administrative Code and not the Insurance Code. With respect to paragraphs (i) and (j) of the section we think they should not be held applicable to acts or omissions of employees of a bail agent with respect to violations of the stringent and technical requirements of the Administrative Code applicable to such employees. The violations charged against Alexander and Archambault consisted of the failure to keep proper records as to the identity of persons with whom they negotiated for bail bonds and as to Archambault that he negotiated for bonds with persons who had not been authorized in writing by the arrestees to negotiate. These acts were not in violation of the Insurance Code.

Our conclusion is that there was no proof and no finding of facts which would justify the revocation of the licenses of the Nardonis other than their licenses as bail agents.

The order of the commissioner must be reversed insofar as it revokes the licenses of August M. Nardoni to act as Insurance Agent and Broker and as Life Agent, and the license of Brazell Nardoni to act as Insurance Agent. We think it should also be reversed insofar as it revokes the licenses of the Nardonis as bail agents, but as to the penalty only.

[9] We are convinced from the severity of the order of the commissioner that there was a belief, the equivalent of an implied finding, that the Nardonis are of such evil character as to be unqualified to engage in any branch of the insurance business, however far it may be removed from the bail bond business. And we do not doubt that the assumed total lack of qualifications to act as Insurance Agent, Broker or Life Agent must have influenced the commissioner to impose the maximum penalty of revocation. As to the Nardonis there should be a reconsideration of the penalty to be imposed for their violations of duty as bail agents.

Some expression of commendation is due appellants and their counsel for the manner in which they expedited the proceedings before the hearing officer. By stipulating the facts and admitting the mistakes of appellants, what would have been a long drawn out series of sessions was avoided. Appellants stated that they threw themselves on the mercy of the commissioner. They asked only for leniency. The penalty meted out to the Nardonis could not have been greater if they had been guilty of dishonesty. It seems to us that the ends of justice would have been better served by suspending their licenses as bail agents and placing them on probation.

The judgment is reversed with directions that a writ issue commanding the mitted an act expressly forbidden by such a provision.

commissioner to vacate his order of revocation of the licenses of the Nardonis and to proceed further only as to the penalty to be imposed for their violations as bail agents, as heretofore found by the commissioner and the court. As to appellants Alexander and Archambault, the judgment is affirmed. Each party shall bear his own costs on appeal.

Alpha C. ROGERS, as Administratrix of the Estate of George W. Rogers, Deceased, Defendant and Respondent. *

Civ. 21612.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 2, California.

Nov. 2, 1956.

Rehearing Denied Nov. 26, 1956.

Hearing Granted Dec. 24, 1956.

Action against administratrix of estate of decedent allegedly responsible for personal injuries and property damages sustained by plaintiffs in automobile accident. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Walter R. Evans, J., entered judgment sustaining, without leave to amend, defendant's demurrer to plaintiffs' second amended complaint, and plaintiffs appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Ashburn, J., held that where original complaint against estate was filed before appointment of administratrix of estate, and was never served upon anyone, and, though claim against estate was subsequently properly presented, and rejected, amended complaint was not filed until more than three months after rejection of claim, and administratrix promptly demurred on ground that suit was too late because not brought within three months after rejection, demurrer was properly sustained without leave to amend.

Judgment affirmed.

Moore, P. J., dissented.

1. Limitation of Actions ⇐180(3)

Where second amended complaint against administratrix of estate of deceased tort-feasor was filed on April 4, 1955, some 7½ months after rejection of claims against estate, and affirmatively disclosed that fact, giving dates of appointment of administratrix, presentation of claims and rejection of same, complaint presented claim which on its face was barred by three months' limitation provision of probate code. West's Ann.Prob.Code, §§ 707, 714.

2. Limitation of Actions ⇐177(2)

If there was any excuse for plaintiffs' failure to sue within three months after rejection of their claims against estate, it was incumbent upon them to allege it in complaint against administratrix of estate of deceased tort-feasor filed more than three months after rejection of claims. A party to an action must be a living, natural person, or some legal entity recognized by the law.

5. Executors and Administrators ⇐438(1)

Where original complaint against estate of deceased tort-feasor purported to sue John Doe and Jane Doe, as administrator and/or administratrix of estate of certain person, deceased, though no personal representative was appointed for nearly one year thereafter, and complaint was never served upon anyone, complaint was nullity.

* Opinion vacated 317 P.2d 17.

6. Executors and Administrators ⇨431(2)

No cause of action against estate of deceased tort-feasor existed at time of filing of original complaint, which was filed nearly one year prior to appointment of personal representative of estate, because presentation and rejection of claim against estate is essence of an accrued cause of action.

7. Abatement and Revival ⇨81

Where administratrix had properly demurred to first amended complaint on ground of failure to file seasonable claim against estate, and second amended complaint showed on its face that claim had been rejected more than three months prior to filing of complaint, and that it was therefore barred by three months' limitation provision of probate code, and administratrix promptly demurred and raised point of abatement on account of prematurity by general demurrer and attached memorandum of authorities, administratrix properly and without delay raised question of prematurity at first opportunity. West's Ann. Prob.Code, §§ 707, 714.

8. Abatement and Revival ⇨20

Rule that plea in abatement based upon prematurity of action cannot prevail if ground for abatement has ceased to exist before presentation of that plea, does not apply when ground of abatement is prematurity of action in sense that cause has not yet accrued, and plea is made promptly and before trial.

9. Limitation of Actions ⇨180(3), 189

Where original complaint against estate of alleged tort-feasor was filed before appointment of administratrix of estate, and was never served upon anyone, and, though claim against estate was subsequently properly presented, and rejected, amended complaint was not filed until more than three months after rejection of claim, and administratrix promptly demurred on ground that suit was too late because not brought within three months after rejection, demurrer was properly sustained without leave to amend.

Gray, Glass & Allen, Gardena, for appellants.

Ball, Hunt & Hart, Long Beach, for respondent.

ASHBURN, Justice.

Appeal from judgment for defendant entered upon sustaining without leave to amend her demurrer to plaintiffs' second amended complaint. Defendant is administratrix of the estate of George W. Rogers, deceased, and is sued as such. The action is based upon alleged negligence of decedent in driving his automobile. Plaintiff Radar sues for personal injuries and plaintiffs Henry seek recovery of damages to their automobile ambulance which was being driven by Radar at the time of the accident.

The allegations of the second amended complaint, plus judicial notice of the contents of the file in this case, disclose the following situation. The accident occurred on December 15, 1952, and Rogers died the same day. The original complaint was filed on March 11, 1953. The second amended complaint alleges appointment of defendant as administratrix on March 10, 1954, the fact of her qualifying and acting in such capacity, the presentation of claims against the estate by the respective plaintiffs on August 12, 1954, and their rejection on August 20, 1954. The original complaint was filed a year before any personal representative of Rogers' estate was appointed; it made no averment that any such appointment had been made, and named as defendants "John Doe and Jane Doe, as Administrator and/or Administratrix of the Estate of George Rogers, Deceased, and Doe's One To Ten." The only allegation concerning a personal representative is "that the defendants John Doe and Jane Doe are sued herein as Administrator and/or Administratrix of the Estate of George Rogers, deceased, for the reason that the true name of the administrator and/or administratrix is unknown to the plaintiffs at this time." Of course there was no allegation of presentation or rejection of claims on behalf of plaintiffs. Appellants' opening brief says: "A copy of the summons and complaint was not served at that time for the reason that there was no representative of said estate to be served." Respondent's brief confirms this fact.

A first amended complaint was filed on February 21, 1955. It named as defendants, "Alpha C. Rogers, as Administratrix of the Estate of George W. Rogers, Deceased; Doe One through Doe Ten," and alleged the appointment and qualification of Alpha C. Rogers, as administratrix, and her acting in that capacity. As appears from the later (second amended) complaint, plaintiffs had presented claims on August 12, 1954, which were rejected on August 20, 1954. But the first amended complaint contains no allegation on the subject. This pleading was filed more than three months after the rejection of the claims, i. e., six months and one day. Defendant promptly demurred, generally and specially, raising the point that there was no averment concerning presentation of claims. The demurrer was sustained with ten days to amend. The second amended complaint was filed on April 4, 1955, some seven and one-half months after rejection of the claims. It affirmatively discloses that fact, giving the dates of appointment of administratrix, presentation of claims and rejection of same. Defendant, on April 13, 1955, demurred to this complaint and raised the point that the suit was too late because not brought within three months after rejection of claims. The demurrer was sustained without leave to amend, and hence the judgment from which the instant appeal is taken.

[1,2] The second amended complaint presents a claim which on its face is barred by § 707 and § 714, Probate Code. If there was any excuse for plaintiffs' failure to sue within three months after rejection of their claims it was incumbent upon them to allege it. Bass v. Berry, 51 Cal. 264, 265; Sullivan v. Shannon, 25 Cal.App.2d 422, 427-428, 77 P.2d 498; 16 Cal.Jur. § 215,

p. 621. The demurrer was properly sustained, but the question whether leave to amend should have been denied requires that cognizance be taken of the filing and contents of the preceding complaints, especially because of appellants' reliance upon Security-First Nat. Bank v. Bennett, 17 Cal.App.2d 641, 62 P.2d 798, and Bemmerly v. Woodward, 124 Cal. 568, 57 P. 561.

[3] Those cases hold that presentation of a claim which has been filed within the statutory period, but after suit brought, may be alleged in a supplemental complaint, and that objection to this mode of procedure raises a question of prematurity of action which is a matter of abatement, a plea that is waived unless interposed at the earliest opportunity. The Bemmerly opinion adds this significant statement which is pertinent at bar: "If, however, the time for the presentation of claims had wholly elapsed before or after suit brought, and the claim had not been presented, it would have been a different matter. Then the claims would be forever barred, and it would be both the privilege and the duty of the executrix to urge the point. And she would be entitled, as matter of right, to file a supplemental answer, if the defense had accrued after the issues had been made up." 124 Cal. at page 575, 57 P. at page 564. Likewise it should be said here that failure to sue within the statutory time forever bars the claim and it is the duty of the administratrix to urge the point.

Appellants, in order to bring themselves within the doctrine of the cases holding that a plea of premature action sounds in abatement and must be promptly raised, are forced into reliance upon the original complaint, because both the first and second amended complaints were filed more than three months after rejection of their claims.

It should be recognized that the original complaint in this case was no complaint at all, a complete nullity. It purports to sue "John Doe and Jane Doe, as Administratrix and/or Administratrix of the Estate of George Rogers, deceased." It is not alleged that there is any such personal representative in existence. The complaint merely says: "[T]hat the defendants John Doe and Jane Doe are sued herein as Administrator and/or Administratrix of the Estate of George Rogers, deceased, for the reason that the true name of the administrator and/or administratrix is unknown to the plaintiffs at this time." This complaint was filed on March 11, 1953, and it appears that no personal representative was in existence until Alpha C. Rogers was appointed administratrix on March 10, 1954.

[4,5] It is fundamental that a party to an action must be a living, natural person, or some legal entity recognized by the law. In Tanner v. Best's Estate, 40 Cal. App.2d 442, 445, 104 P.2d 1084, 1086, this court held that an action against "Estate of John L. Best" would not support a judgment in favor of plaintiff for the reason that an estate is not a cognizable entity which can be sued. At pages 444-445 of 40 Cal.App.2d, at page 1086 of 104 P.2d it is said: "It is fundamental that before an action can be instituted in the superior court there must be a party plaintiff and a party defendant. Code Civ.Proc., title III, part 2, § 367 et seq. In the case at bar there is no defendant before the court. * * * While Attorney Ball was named as a defendant there is nothing to indicate that he had any interest in the estate and he emphasized that fact by filing his disclaimer in the action which left as a defendant only the 'Estate of John L. Best'. We thus have a civil action with a real plaintiff asserting a real cause but without a defendant against whom a judgment could be entered. * * * But we find no provision of said code authorizing the prosecution of an ex parte action for establishing personal property rights as against the possible claims of others. The 'estate' of a decedent is not an entity known to the law. It is neither a natural nor an artificial person. It is merely a name to indicate the sum total of the assets and liabilities of a decedent, or of an incompetent, or of a bankrupt. 11 Cal.Jur. 79. In order for a civil action to be prosecuted, there must be some existing entity aimed at by the processes of the law, and against whom the court's judgment will operate." At page 446 of 40 Cal.App.2d, at page 1087 of 104 P.2d: "Although the evidence presented on behalf of plaintiff is impressive, we find it impossible to invoke the support of section 4½ of article VI of the Constitution because we have not before us the parties who are entitled to resist the demands of plaintiff. The judgment is reversed with instructions to dismiss as to 'The Estate of John L. Best, sometimes known as John L. Bender'." This case was followed in Estate of Bright v. Western Airlines, 104 Cal.App.2d 827, 828-829; 232 P.2d 523, and cited with apparent approval in Johnston v. Long, 30 Cal.2d 54, 63, 181 P.2d 645. See also, 2 Witkin California Procedure, p. 1002, § 25; 67 C.J.S., Parties, p. 946, § 30; 39 Am.Jur. § 4, p. 852; Mortimore v. Bashore, 317 Ill. 535, 148 N.E. 317, 319; McPherson v. First & Citizens Nat. Bank, 240 N.C. 1, 81 S.E.2d 386, 397; Cutler v. Winfield, 241 N.C. 555, 85 S.E.2d 913, 915; St. Paul Typothetae v. St. Paul Bookbinders' Union, No. 37, 94 Minn. 351, 102 N.W. 725, 726. The original complaint at bar not only failed to name any existing entity as defendant, but it was never served upon anyone.

[6] The Supreme Court in Bank of Italy Nat. Trust & Sav. Ass'n v. Bentley, 217 Cal. 644, 658, 20 P.2d 940, 945, after ruling that the holder of a trust deed note must first exhaust the security before resorting to the personal liability of the trustor, said: "Plaintiff contends that under the circumstances this action must be deemed one to 'keep the obligation of the note alive' until it could sell under the deed of trust. * * * Moreover, it is elementary that under our system there is no such thing as filing an action to keep an obligation alive, unless at the time of filing the complaint a cause of action existed." No cause of action existed at the time of filing the original complaint in the case at bar, because presentation and rejection of a claim against a decedent's estate is of the essence of an accrued cause of action. Burke v. Maguire, 154 Cal. 456, 462-463, 98 P. 21; Morrison v. Land, 169 Cal. 580, 585, 147 P. 259; Tropico Land & Improvement Co. v. Lambourn, 170 Cal. 33, 41, 148 P. 206; Estate of Wilcox, 68 Cal.App.2d 780, 785, 158 P.2d 32. When the cause of action came into being plaintiffs waited too long before asserting it.

If the matter be viewed from the standpoint of abatement on account of prematurity of the action the result is the same. Kelley v. Upshaw, 39 Cal.2d 179, at page 187, 246 P.2d 23, at page 27, in discussing this subject, says: "Thus, although a timely plea in abatement, properly proved, requires judgment for the defendant, it is an objection which may be waived if not seasonably urged." (Emphasis added.) Various authorities, such as Fireman's Fund Indem. Co. v. Knorr, 117 Cal.App.2d 761, 256 P.2d 1005, deal with a situation in which the defendant has failed to promptly raise the point that the action was premature in whole or in part. That case is clearly distinguishable from the situation at bar. Although the plaintiff did not know it, letters of administration upon Knorr's estate had been granted four days before his suit was filed; thus there was a real defendant who was sued under a fictitious name. After suit filed, but within the statutory period, plaintiff presented a claim against the estate, it was rejected and those facts were set forth in an amended complaint. This brings the case within the same category as Security-First Nat. Bank v. Bennett, supra, 17 Cal.App.2d 641, 62 P.2d 798, and Bemmerly v. Woodward, supra, 124 Cal. 568, 57 P. 561. When this amended complaint was filed defendant administrator answered without suggesting any matter of abatement. That was first brought forth by way of amended answer which was presented at the opening of the trial on May 24, 1951; the amended complaint having been filed on October 31, 1950, this delay was held to constitute a waiver of the claim of prematurity.

[7] The instant record shows that the original complaint was never served; that therefore the first knowledge of plaintiffs' claim that the administratrix had was when it was presented to her on August 12, 1954. She promptly rejected it and when the first amended complaint was filed on February 21, 1955, she appeared by demurrer and raised the point of failure to file a seasonable claim, both by general and special demurrer. When the second amended complaint was filed on April 4, 1955, it showed on its face that the claim had been rejected on August 20, 1954, and was therefore barred by § 714, Probate Code. The administratrix promptly demurred and raised the point by general demurrer and attached memorandum of authorities. A general demurrer is sufficient for the purpose according to Burke v. Maguire, supra, 154 Cal. 456, 463, 98 P. 21. But if the rule be deemed modified by Kelley v. Upshaw, supra, 39 Cal.2d 179, 246 P.2d 23, to the extent of requiring a special plea, the demurrer at bar fulfilled that prerequisite. There was no delay whatever on the part of the administratrix; she raised the question of prematurity at the first opportunity and persisted in that position. Under the Kelley v. Upshaw case she was entitled to the judgment which she received.

[8] It is suggested that a plea in abatement based upon prematurity of the action cannot prevail if the ground for abatement has ceased to exist before presentation of that plea. While that seems to be true of other grounds of abatement, such as failure to file a fictitious firm name certificate, Rudneck v. Southern California M. & R. Co., 184 Cal. 274, 281-282, 193 P. 775, that rule does not apply when the ground of abatement is prematurity of action in the sense that the cause has not yet accrued and the plea is made promptly and before trial. 1 C.J.S., Abatement and Revival, § 85, p. 126, says: "If the objection shows not merely that the action was prematurely brought, but that there was no right of action at all, it is a matter in bar and not in abatement." Turney v. Shattuck, 96

Cal.App. 590, 596, 274 P. 442, 445: "Furthermore, since a supplemental pleading is proper only in aid of the case made by the original complaint, relief cannot be granted upon a supplemental complaint, where the proof shows that the plaintiff had no cause of action when his original complaint was filed. 'If a party has no cause of action at the time of the institution of his action he cannot maintain it by filing a supplemental complaint founded on matters which have subsequently occurred.'" (Wittenbrock v. Bellmer, 57 Cal. 12; Gordon v. San Diego, 108 Cal. 264 [41 P. 301]; Hill v. Den, 121 Cal. 42 [53 P. 642].)" (See also, 2 Witkin on California Procedure, § 615, p. 1631.) Kelley v. Upshaw, supra, 39 Cal.2d 179, at page 187, 246 P.2d 23, at page 27, while emphasizing the necessity of a prompt plea of prematurity, makes it clear that "a timely plea in abatement, properly proved, requires judgment for the defendant". That is the situation at bar.

[9] It would be a strange doctrine that would enable a claimant to wait more than three months after rejection of his claim and then, after bringing a belated suit, to successfully contend that the defect in his complaint was cured because, forsooth, he had brought an action against some non-existent entity prior to the time that he ever had or asserted a claim.

Judgment affirmed.

FOX, J., concurs.

MOORE, Presiding Justice.

I dissent. It must be remembered in this case that a claim was properly filed against the estate within the six months allowed by the Probate Code, and was rejected. The only possible ground for dismissing this action is that a "suit" was not on file within three months of the rejection of the claim as is required by Probate Code section 714.

Actually, a "suit" was on file against "John Doe and Jane Doe, as Administrator and/or Administratrix of the Estate of George Rogers, Deceased, and Doe's One

To Ten." To be sure, the suit was premature: premature because no administrator had yet been appointed to represent the decedent; premature because no claim had yet been filed against the estate. But appellants' cause of action had arisen. Their right to freedom from interference with their bodily well-being had been wrongfully invaded by decedent tort-feasor. The question is whether the law must apply in this case harshly to prevent redress for their injuries.

The majority fails to meet the point that a plea that a suit is premature is dilatory and in abatement. Kelley v. Upshaw, 39 Cal.2d 179, 186, 246 P.2d 23; Bollinger v. National Fire Ins. Co., 25 Cal.2d 399, 405-406, 154 P.2d 399; Seches v. Bard, 215 Cal. 79, 81-82, 8 P.2d 835; Verbeck v. Clymer, 202 Cal. 557, 562, 261 P. 1017; Kazanteno v. California-Western States Life Ins. Co., 137 Cal.App.2d 361, 377, 290 P.2d 332; Archibald v. Iacopi, 120 Cal.App.2d 666, 669, 262 P.2d 40; Fireman's Fund Indemnity Co. v. Knorr, 117 Cal.App.2d 761, 256 P.2d 1005; Mears v. Jeffry, 80 Cal.App.2d 610, 615-616, 182 P.2d 294; Green v. Sherritt, 17 Cal.App. 2d 732, 737, 62 P.2d 769; California Thorn Cordage, Inc., v. Diller, 121 Cal.App. 542, 547, 9 P.2d 594; Abatement and Revival, 1 Cal.Jur.2d § 6, p. 32. One cardinal rule of law relative to matter in abatement is that it must yet exist at the time the plea is raised. Archibald v. Iacopi, supra, 120 Cal.App.2d 666, 669, 262 P.2d 40; Buhrmeister v. Buhrmeister, 10 Cal.App. 392, 396, 102 P. 221; Schlueter v. Nelson, 74 Idaho 396, 263 P.2d 386, 388; Gradeless v. Gradeless, 114 Ind.App. 10, 49 N.E.2d 398, 400; Larsen & Son v. Retail Merchants' Mut. Ins. Co., 212 Iowa 943, 237 N.W. 468, 469-470; Shreveport Long Leaf Lumber Co. v. Garson Bros., 152 La. 343, 93 So. 117, 118; Marine Production Co. v. Shell Oil Co., Tex.Civ.App., 146 S.W.2d 1024; 1 C.J.S., Abatement and Revival, §§ 85 and 86, pp. 125-127; Abatement and Revival, 1 Cal.Jur.2d § 5, p. 32. The cited cases deal with abatement because of prematurity rather than abatement on other grounds. The distinguishing by the majority of Rudneck v. Southern California M. & R. Co., 184 Cal. 274, 281-282, 193 P. 775, whether valid or not, does not apply to these cases. Here, at the time respondents first raised their plea in abatement, the administratrix had been appointed, the claim had been filed and rejected, and thus the grounds for abatement had evaporated.

Cases cited by the majority to the effect that a premature complaint is a nullity and cannot be supplemented, Wittenbrock v. Bellmer, 57 Cal. 12; Gordon v. San Diego, 108 Cal. 264, 41 P. 301, etc., are clearly inconsistent with the proposition that prematurity is only matter in abatement. If the suit were a complete "nullity," the defect could not even be waived. Kelley v. Upshaw, supra, 39 Cal.2d 179, 186, 246 P.2d 23; Fireman's Fund Indemnity Co. v. Knorr, supra, 117 Cal.App.2d 761, 256 P.2d 1005, and other recent decisions establish beyond argument that the present rule is that prematurity is indeed only matter in abatement.

The majority cite Tanner v. Best's Estate, 40 Cal.App.2d 442, 445, 104 P.2d 1084 and other cases holding that a suit by or against an "estate" is a nullity. Such is definitely a sound and appropriate conclusion. A suit against an "estate" is tantamount to suing a brick or a locomotive. The distinction lies in the fact that Radar sued the "Administrator and/or Administratrix" of the Rogers estate.

Of course, it was undoubtedly poor practice for appellants' attorneys to file this lawsuit prematurely. However, neither the law nor this court exists for the purpose of giving lawyers marks for their efforts. The goal is justice for the litigants within the law. The Probate Code imposes certain restrictions upon suits against estates in order to promote expedition in administration and militate against fraud. Admittedly, these considerations may and must take precedence over some valid claims. However, when the spirit and purpose of the code are clearly complied with, and law exists which will justify a holding that the letter of the law has also been fulfilled, a court should not go out of its way to bar a just claim. All requirements of notice to the administratrix of the existence of the claim were here fully met. The only question is whether a "suit" had been filed within three months of rejection of the claim. Can any detriment to administration of the estate result from the fact that the "suit" was premature rather than actually filed for the first time during the three months following the rejection of the claim? Not one iota. The majority makes much of the fact that the original complaint here was not served, but this is wholly beside the point. Section 714 merely requires that suit be "filed" and not that the complaint be served within three months of the rejection of the claim. Because a suit was on file at the time his demand was rejected, as required by the code, his valid claim should be tried on its merits.

Therefore, inasmuch as the grounds of prematurity had evaporated by the time the plea was presented, the plea should not have been entertained. The judgment should be reversed.
